"I treated her as kindly as I could, for I loved her dearly at that time."

"Well, sir," said the governor, "go home and court her now just as you did then, and love her as when you married her. Do this in the fear of the Lord for one year, and then tell me the result." The governor then said, "Let us pray."

They bowed in prayer, and separated.

When a year had passed away, Squire W. again called to see the governor, and grasping his hand said:

"I have called, sir, to thank you for the good advice you gave, and tell you that my wife and I are as happy as when first we were married. I can not be grateful enough for your good counsel."

"I am glad to hear it, Mr. W.," replied the governor, "and hope you will continue to court your wife as long as you live."

The result was that Squire W. and his wife lived happily together to the end of their life. Let those who are thinking of separation in these days go and do likewise. —Sel.

"Yes," said the Colonel, "I was on a jury in California once. It was a murder trial. I didn't want the fellow hung, and so stuck out against the other eleven for nine days, locked up in the jury room, when they gave in, and we brought in a verdict of 'Not guilty.' And then I was the maddest man in the State." "Why, what were you mad about Colonel?" "'Cause the mob had hung the prisoner the first day we were locked up!"

Milk and Infectious Diseases.

An outbreak of typhoid fever in St. Pancras, London, has been traced to the milk supply directly, and indirectly to a sycamore tree. During August there were 223 cases of the epidemic within a limited area. The sanitary officer conducting an investigation began by making a map of the district showing the distribution of houses where there had been sickness. He was able at once to discard two theories of infection, namely, the condition of the Regent's Canal and contaminated water from the mains, and speedily to find an adequate cause in the milk supply. Out of 431 persons attacked during the summer, 368 were known to obtain milk from one dealer and the remaining 63 might have done so indirectly. Houses supplied by other dealers escaped; and in families which depended upon the fatal milk-cart, those who drank milk were attacked, while those who preferred beer did not have the fever.

The dealer obtained milk from five farms, but the houses in St. Pancras in which the fever had occurred had been supplied mainly from the same farm. This was in St. Albans; and as direct evidence that this was the source of infection, the sanitary officer ascertained that certain porters in the dealer's employ were attacked after drinking the milk, that there were additional cases on the farm itself, and that houses in St. Albans supplied with the same milk were also infected. The investigation having been narrowed down to a single farm, the water supply naturally fell under suspicion. The milk cans and pails were found to be washed every day in a dairy with water obtained from a well adjoining a cesspool. A sycamore tree stood between them, and its roots probably gave opportunity for the percolation of leakage from one into the other. This was the most satisfactory explanation which the sanitary inspector could give of the outbreak of the fever.

It is by no means certain, however, that the milk was not infected by the prevalence of the disease at the farm. A dairyman in Dundee, for example, who kept his supply of milk in a room where his little boy lay prostrated with scarlet fever introduced the disease in various households, until there were seventeen cases and four deaths. Instances are constantly arising where infectious disease is directly communicated by means of milk that has been directly exposed to contamination in dairies or farm-houses. It is possible, therefore, that the sycamore tree had less to do with the spread of contagion than the inspector supposed. The relative situation of the cesspool and the well, however, naturally suggested the final step in his series of ingenious deductions.—Tribune.

The advance agent warns people of coming theatrical attractions in seaon for them to leave the town.

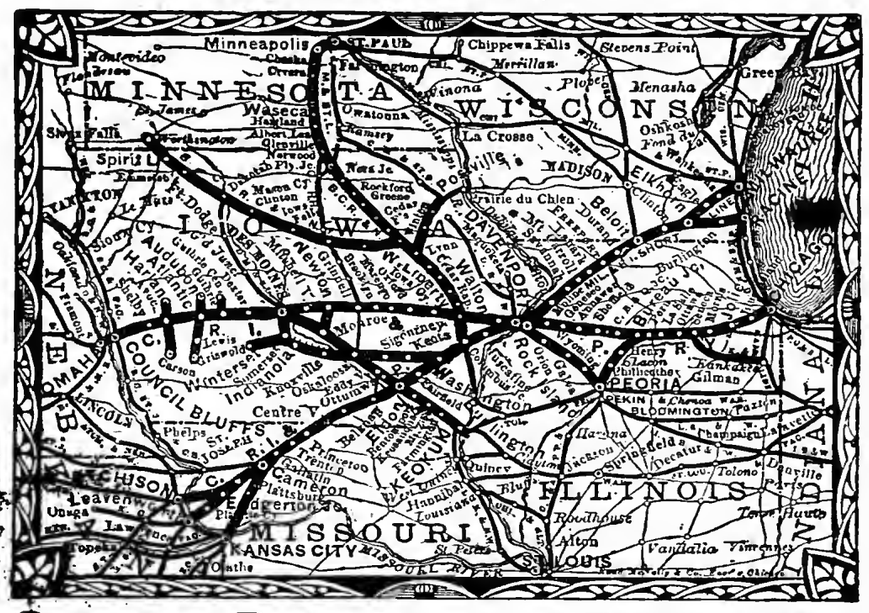
A Chinese restaurant has been opened in Paris in which patrons may be served with such Oriental delicacies as bird's-nest soup, smoked sharks' fin, dried cuttle-fish, salted rat, and eggs that have been purposely kept till they have become opaque and unsuitable for hatching purposes. It is said that the last-named dish requires that the eggs shall be covered with a mixture of cinders, chalk, lye, soda, powdered licorice root, and oil, and left by themselves for several months. The edible bird's-nests are built by a species of swallow. They are boiled in chicken broth or in milk of almonds. The experiment of the Chinese restaurateur is in its beginning as yet.

How to Cook an Old Hen.

Prof. W. Mattieu Williams gives as in Knowledge his practical experience with elderly poultry, as follows:

I may mention an experiment that I have made lately. I killed a superannuated hen more than six years old, but otherwise in very good condition. Cooked in the ordinary way she would have been uneatably tough. Instead of being thus cooked, she was gently stewed about four hours. I cannot guarantee to the maintenance of the theoretical temperature, having suspicion of some simmering. After this she was left in the water until it cooled, and on the following day was roasted in the usual manner, i. e., in a roasting oven. The result was excellent; as tender as a full grown chicken roasted in the ordinary way, and of quite equal flavor, in spite of the very good broth obtained by the preliminary stewing. This surprised me. I anticipated the softening of the tendons and ligaments, but supposed that the extraction of the juices would have spoiled the flavor. It must have diluted it, and that so much remained was probably due to the fact that an old fowl is more fully flavored than a young chicken. The usual farm house method of cooking old hens is to stew them simply; the rule in the Midlands being one hour in the pot for every year of age. The feature of the above experiment was the supplementary roasting. As the laying season is now coming to an end, old hens will soon be a drug in the market, and those among my readers who have not a hen roost of their own will oblige their poulterers by ordering a hen that is warranted to be four years old and upward. If he deals fairly, he will supply a specimen upon which they may repeat my experiment, very cheaply. It offers the double economy of utilizing a nearly waste produce and obtaining chicken broth and roast fowl simultaneously.

One of the great advantages of stewing is that it affords a means of obtaining a savory and very wholesome dish at a minimum of cost. A small piece of meat may be stewed with a large quantity of vegetables, the juice of the meat savoring the whole. Besides this, it costs far less fuel than roasting.



The wife of the French or Swiss landed proprietor, i. e., the peasant, cooks the family dinner with less than a tenth of the expenditure of fuel used in England for the preparation of an inferior meal. A little charcoal under her bainmarie does it all. The economy of time corresponds to the economy of fuel, for the mixture of viands required for the stew once put in, the pot is left to itself until dinner time, or at most an occasional stirring of fresh charcoal into the embers is all that is demanded.

Birds' Eyes.

The eye of the bird is quite different from that of the mammals. Owing to the manner in which birds procure their food the eye must be capable of acting as a telescope or microscope at will. This is especially necessary in swift flying birds, where the change has to be made with great rapidity. The eye is surrounded externally with a circle of flat, bony plates, which can compress it at will or suffer it to expand when the pressure is taken off; and there is also inside the eye a curious organ, called the "pecten," or comb, which aids mechanically in producing the requisite change of form. When next a chicken, or duck, or pheasant is to be cooked, ask for the head, and, with the aid of a pen knife and a pair of scissors, these structures can easily be shown.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

Christmas—A. Turner & Co.
Farm for Sale—John Rowe.
Bakery—John Montgomery.
Markdale House—Mrs. Rutledge.
Berkshire Boar—Chas. Littlejohns.

The Standard.

MARKDALE DEC. 6, 1883.

RAILWAY EXTENSION.

From Durham to Meaford via Markdale.

A scheme to extend the G. B. & W. Railway to the Georgian Bay.

At a meeting of the council of the town of Meaford held on Monday evening the 26th ult., Mr. McMullen M. P, was present, and an interesting discussion took place in reference to the above railway extension. Mr. McMullen is a member of the board comprising the G. B. & W. Railway and is strongly in favor of having that line extended to Meaford or some point on the Georgian Bay. The Mayor and council are favorable to the project and are taking steps to that end. The scheme is no doubt in its infancy, but is looked upon, we believe, with general favor. The distance is some 39 miles, and we believe there are no seriors, engineering difficulties to contend with so that the cost of building a road through this section would be moderate. There is a great amount of timber of various kinds in Glenelg and Euphrasia townships which is now almost worthless, which would find a ready market at paying prices in the event of this extension being made. We expect to be in a position to give further particulars next week, and in the mean time invite ratepayers to give expression to their views throug the columns of the STANDARD.

HARD TIMES.

What is the cause of hard times? the only explanation at all worth anything for a general financial embarrassment is what explains the same trouble with an individual, extravagance in living and speculation. If people would only live within their means, and would not try to make rich by speculation instead of by production there would be no hard times, much less a panic, there could be none. Some think that hard times must come about every five years, why should it, as a general thing people bring the hard times upon themselves, they picture out for themselves abundant crops and high prices for their produce, and make calculations accordingly, should their expectations not be realized, there is a pinch, debts have been contracted with a hope of abundant crops and when pay day comes there is a deficit. Live within your means and hard times will never come.

CHANGE IN BUSINESS.

Mr. Wilson Benson, of the Belfast House (wholesale liquor and grocery establishment) has sold his business together with stand and buildings for $3,000 cash. Mr. Thos. McNea, the purchaser, took possession on Tuesday last, and is making preparations to move into that portion of the premises occupied recently by Geo, Grant as furniture store. The business will be carried on as heretofore, but on a larger scale. We wish him success in his new business.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR,—I very much concur with your remarks on "too much government" in your last issue. It is but just to say that in the Grey County Council the feeling is pretty general, the deputy-reeves nearly all of them falling into line. More than once there has been an attempt to reach the ear of the Government, with no success; other counties, I presume, holding opposite views, strongly support the present system. Wherever the cause for perpetrating the present system exists it is a certainty that Grey is not to blame. But the world was not created in a day and the reforms to meet advanced thought in municipal matters requires time to develop. The duty of the hour is perseverance until the necessary changes be made. Whilst in the subject of municipal matters allow me to state briefly that the present year has not been a very propitious one for Artemesia. The excessive freshets have cause the council to dip deeper in the treasury than for many years past. Bridges have had to be built and repaired involving an expenditure of nearly $1000 over and above the ordinary outlay. This necessitated extra taxation to extent of one mill in the dollar, not much to be sure, but when to be paid by frozen crops the burthen is considerable. And I presume could the council have forseen the frost they would have rather borrowed the amount for one year than have collected the extra tax, but as it is it is to be hoped it will be borne patiently. As the time for election draws nigh, topics general and local are being mentioned, one regarding myself is noteworthy, viz: that I am too penuious, too careful of the funds, that enough is not spent on the roads, and such like. A view of this kind is rather absurd in the face of the fact that the reeve has only one vote in the council and am only responsible to that amount, but aside from this, is not this policy a correct one? If it were our own money we could do as we liked with it, but it is not and that makes the difference, or should do so. And, therefore, that council is the wisest and most prudent who husbands the ratepayers money. Even with the most careful policy, as represented by the Artemesia council, we are not on either hand annually with a cry of excessive taxation. As a rule those who say we ought to spend more money than we do they are comparatively few in number, and of those some have important axes to grind. The bulk of the ratepayers are satisfied with the principle of economy. Intelligent ratepayers taking in the whole ground of what is being done are satisfied that notwithstanding the no-expenditure cry, solid improvements are yearly made. It is within say four years that increase of statute labor was obtained by the advanced assessments, amounting to perhaps twenty-five per cent. in previous years. This certainly is equal to money, at least it is so to industrious farmers who are careful to employ every possible day to farm purposes. And not only this but in nearly every road division the council has placed a scraper which increases the value of statute labor very materially, so that personal experience testifies that our roads have improved proportionately. Now why should money be taken from the treasury to accomplish what, that kind of labor can amply do? I can see no reason for it at all. The township of Artemesia is heavily handicapped with a railroad tax, it being about fifty per cent. of all taxes exclusive of school rates, this year amounting to $2,800 approximately and is to continue for at least seven years more. The railroad has benefitted the township to that extent no doubt, but even this is not a preventation of frosts, freshets or drouths, and many are of the opinion that no increase of importance should be added, until that score be wiped out and from the general knowledge possessed of the township I am obliged to concur with these views. There are one or two objects which would be very desirable to obtain and if done would certainly add to the importance of the township. The chief these is the improvement of our leading roads to the principal villages and railroad stations. The worst roads are generally found within three miles each side of a village or railroad. Perhaps the worst in the township is found east of Flesherton station, and the council is constantly pressed as individuals to take up the scheme. The cost of those requirements and their localized positions are very important points to get over. To take such a large sum from the treasury all at once would not be entertaining, and yet in view of the large percentage of taxes paid by the village of Flesherton annually, entitles it to very generous consideration. So it is believed by many, it is proper to say that she pays about one-seventh of all the taxes, or thereabouts except school taxes. It is said that a sum of $2,500 would if expended economically make deviations to shun hills, which are such enormous impediments to travel and competition, and say they this alone would almost compensate for another railroad. This may be an exaggeration, but he must be dull indeed if he cannot see an immense advantage to the village and the township, to some parts more than others it is true if carried out, and in addition outlying townships would seek a competive market which then could be fairly started. But how can these results be obtained? I know of only two methods, first by application by petition of that part of the ratepayers desiring it to the County Council to pass a by-law to impose the rate, after a proper vote having been taken, or else for the council, if possible, to borrow the sum required for those extra and important improvements, paying the interest on it only until the railroad by-law lapses. the instalments on the principal coming in afterwards. Something similar to the Markdale School Section debentures one following after the other sums are paid. The payments on a sum of $500 might be in five or ten years. if the latter the first payment with interest would be $800, each year thereafter would lessen the interest until paid. Supposing then this to be the sum all things being equal, we would pay on an average less taxes by $1,200 than we do now. A scheme like this looks feasible but then be it remembered no one is pledged in any sence to carry it out, and are here mentioned to elicit a full and free discussion on the day of nomination. There is another question of importance and that is what is known as the Valley Road. The writer has been sorely berated for views entertained and for the actions of the council herein. With many more I fully appreciate the importance of leading roads, and I am not sure this road is not one of the number, but circumstances exist which unless removed would according to the opinion of sound judges pronounced hindrances to the scheme. To be of material benefit to Artemesia, it should be an outlet to Euphrasia, or that portion of it known as the Valley. But notwithstanding the road in Artemesia is established conditionally to those township's line, Euphrasia refuses to take it beyond. And yet we are pressed to lay out cash to make the said road. If once beyond hundreds of dollars would not see it completed. The gentlemen most interested charges us with everything bad because the council cannot see its way clear to expend the people's money for his benefit. The road would accommodate but two or three families, every one of which have other outlets to market. Now if the Euphrasia council open a road on their side much of the argument would be in favor of gradually making this road until the soundest policy is to pass it for future consideration, or else repeal that portion of the by-law having referred to extension of the road beyond the 8th concession or to the limit of Mr. Hogg's property. It is to be hoped then points may be carefully considered and freely discussed for men elected as councillors should know the wishes of the people and should be prepared to carry out what the majority approve of. If any scheme be devised those most interested should explain its benefits and gain the assent of ratepayers, or otherwise pro or con. If anything further on township matters need be mentioned the new licensing system merits a brief notice. It is difficult to see how the Crooks' Act and the McCarthy Act are to work together, two sets of commissioners, two sets of inspectors, two licenses, one cannot now forsee the conclusion of the matter. I think no council could be accessory to fleece the inn keeper entirely; that allusions will occur between the diverse authority of the Dominion and Ontario Governments, are readily conceived, and strong to partizanship for either until the question be judicially settled would be extremely unwise. Whatever the result it is evident it will prove to be a subject requiring tact, ability and firmness to administer. Regard the county it may be said that the county valuation will be of immense importance, and will require careful digest and comparison. It is understood the gentlemen have accomplished their work, and without examination of their report would expect it to be fairly done. Since the last session of the county council it is learned that Owen Sound has threatened a writ to compel the county to built a bridge over the Potawottamie river. If this be urged and enforced then the whole question of bridge building is opened up, and every township in the county will claim pay for all township line bridges for the past eighty years, entailing a cost of thousands of dollars. Any persons therefore the township of Artemesia selects for her reeve and deputy should be no dolts or men void of experience or influence. Thanking you for so much space for these rambling remarks,

I am yours,

DR. CHRISTOE.

Euphrasia Dec. 1st, 1883.

To the Editor of the Standard.

The all absorbing topic at present is the proposed railway extension from Durham via Markdale and Rocklyn to Meaford. This township is yet, in a great measure without railway accommodation and I think this is our opportunity. There is perhaps no township in this county with as much timber to spare as this. I believe we could dispose of enough timber of different kinds to pay a bonus of $5,000 per mile through the township, had we a market for it which market would be created by said railway extension. The bonus question may be said to be a thing of the past, and well it may in respect to securing competing lines, which competition has in many instances been destroyed by amalgamations and huge monopolies, but we can fear nothing of this kind, it is not a competing line we would expect, but simply railway facilties. The township of Euphrasia should be deeply interested in this question as it is one of vital importance, and I am of opinion she will not allow this opportunity to pass without an earnest effort to secure the desired object.

A RATEPAYER.

MARRIAGES.

DEADMAN—MCKENZIE—By Rev. A. Wilson, on the 29th ult., Mr. John Deadman, of Vaughan, township, to Miss Elizabeth, second daughter of Mr. Donald McKenzie of Artemesia.

READ—KING—On the 29th ult., at the P. M. Parsonage, by J. S. Corcoran, John E. Read, of Collingwood township, to Miss Amanda King, of Markale.

PAUL—GORDON—On the 5th inst., at the Markdale House, by Rev. J. S. Corcoran, Mr. W. T. Paul, to Ruth Gordon, all of Osprey

DEATHS.

RUTLEDGE.—At St. Thomas, on the 27th ult, Thomas, brother of the late Alex. and Edward Rutledge, of this village, aged 81 years.

Credit Sale Register.

Parties getting their sale bills printed at this office will have a notice under this head free of charge.

WEDNESDAY DEC. 12th.—Mrs. Chadwick lot 12, con. 4 Euphrasia, near Kimberly, will sell by public auction on her premises on the abave date a quantity of farm stock, implements, &c., will be disposed of, sale to commence at 12 o'clock. Having rented her farm the sale will be without reserve, terms 12 months on approved paper. W. J. Shepherdson, auctioneer.

BERKSHIRE BOAR.

An early spring pig for service at his pen, two miles south of Markdale. Terms, 75 cents at time of service, otherwise $1.

CHAS. LITTLEJOHNS.

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 20, con. 12, Artemesia, containing 100 acres, 80 acres cleared, fenced and under cultivation balance hardwood bush, frame house and frame barn, young orchard bearing, soil clay loam, for further particulars apply to JOHN ROWE on the premises, or by letter to Vandeleur P. O. 169-tf.

MARKDALE HOUSE,

MARKDALE, - - ONT.

MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKER,

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand,

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms, 169-90.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.00; Spring $0.60 to $1 00; Barley, 45 to60; Peas, 65; Oats, 30c Butter, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 35c; Hay, $8 .00 ; Pork, 5.00 to 5.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 20c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

BOAR PIG.

The thoroughbred boar CHESTER WHITE, will be for service at his pen, Markdale, forwith; a fine boar six months old. Terms—$1, at time of service.

168-71 WM. DOUGLASS.

NOTICE.

The undersigned will be at the bank at Markdale from the 20th to the 23rd December for the purpose of collecting sale notes, as they become due at the above date. Those interested will please be prompt and save further trouble and costs.

JOHN FORD.

Annan P. O., November 8th, 1883 166-69

ESTRAY.

Came to the premises of the subscriber, lot East half 27, con. 7 Holland, about the 12th October last, four head of two year old cattle, one bull, one steer and two heifers, color mostly red. The owner is requested to prove property, pay expences, and take them away. Unless claimed by Nov. 30th, will be offered for sale.

GEO. WATT.

Holland November 13th 1883 166-69

TEACHER WANTED.

For School Section No. 17, Euphrasia, a male or female holding third class certificate. Duties to commence January 2, 1884. Apply stating salary to

JOS. MANAREY,
Sec-Trustee, Rocklyn P.O.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are cleared and under ultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.

Oct. 16. 1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale. For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to

162-72 WM. MITTRE,
Markdale P. O.

NOTHING

Can be lost by sending for free specimens of the great farm and garden Journal of America.

The Rural New-Yorker.

It costs more to publish than any other of its class. It presents over 500 original engravings annually, of cattle, grain, fruits, etc. It has over 600 contributors—among them the best writers in the world. It owns experiment grounds of 82 acres worked in the interest of its subscribers.

A New Era in the agriculture and horticulture of America.

A $4 Weekly for $2 a Year.

It is original throughout. It is pure in tone and admits no ambiguous advertisements. It is a farm, garden, religious, news, home, and literary paper all in one.

THE RURAL NEW-YORKER is for the north, south, east and west. It has become the leading rural paper by real worth, perseverence and enterprise—by its devotion to the true interests of all who till the land whether for pleasure or profit. It is printed upon fine tinted paper, 16 pages weekly, each page 11½x16½ inches. It combines the best features of the daily and weekly press with all that can instruct, elevate, and interest the rural home.

Its Free Seed Distributions have introduced or disseminated many of the most valuable seeds and plants now known. Among them may be mentioned the Beauty of Hebron, White Elephant, and Blush Potatoes, the Cuthbert Raspberry, Clawson, Fultze-Clawson, Surprise, Black-bearded Centennial wheats, and a hundred others.

The new varieties of seeds offered in the Rural's Free Seed Distribution are alone worth more at retail prices than the yearly price of the Journal. Specimen copies will furnish all details with original engravings.

WHY NOT send for free specimens and then judge for yourself?

34 PARK ROW, N. Y.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
Toronto, Ont.

161-75

Until the whole of our immense stock is disposed of.

Having concluded to give up the General Busines and deal only in

BANKRUPT :-: STOCK

we will offer our large stock at

Greatly : REDUCED : Prices

This is no humbug or catch-penny advertisement, but a genuine bona fide sale for cash. All goods marked down at and below wholesale cost in order to make speedy clearance.

WE MEAN BUSINESS.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clochs, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personally, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Two weeks from next Tuesday will be Christmas.

Wm. Condy, is gone to Kimberly to run a hotel.

The Gymnasium club is well patronized. Lots of fun.

The Lodge of Sons of Temperance is, beg pardon, it isn't.

What about the skating rink. Fetch along your ice Bob.

The Methodists are prepairing for their annual Christmas tea.

The Wiarton Echo advocates the division of Bruce into two counties.

Geo. Grant, & Co. have quite a number of hands employed and are very buisy.

The Flesherton Advance has improved in tone very much recently, stick to that brother.

Mr. David Ware, Calkensville, Mich., will accept thanks for $1. for Standard, for 1884.

An interesting letter from Mr. J. L. Browne has been crowded out of this issue, will appear in next.

The next sittings of division court, No. 5, will be held in Flesherton, on Thursday January 24th, 1884.

Lambert, the young man who shot his father in Holland township was sent last week to the Asylum at Toronto.

Mr. W. A. Brown, the jeweller is kept very buisy watch repairing, he is an excellent mechanic and is determined to give satisfaction.

The Last Time.—Positively this is the last notice given those indebted to A. McIntyre. Call at once and settle, otherwise costs will be incurred.

Should the railway be extended from Durham to Meaford via Markdale, this place would be by far the most convenient and central place for the county town.

Just received this week new goods in Watches X L N T stamped, also necklets and other lines. Call and see goods and get prices. W. A. Brown, jeweller.

Mr. & Mrs. W. J. McFarland, left this morning by train to attend the golden wedding of Mr. John Mitchell of Alliston, Mr. Mc's uncle, which takes place to-day Thursday.

The anniversary services of the Walters Falls Methodist church, will be held in that place on Sunday the 23rd inst., when Rev. W. Casson, of Markdale, will preach morning and evening. The annual tea meeting will be held on Christmas day when a number of reverend and other gentlemen will give addresses. Good music will also be provided. Tea served at 5 p. m. Tickets 25 cents.

Accidnt.—On Saterday last, Mr. Jas. Brown, working at Harrison's factory, had the misfortune to cut off two fingers of his laft hand with a surface planer.— O. S. Times.

Sleighing has been tolerable good this week and our streets have been literally black with teams hauling wood and grain to market, business has consequeutly been exceedingly brisk.

The office and plant of the Algoma Pioneer at Sault Ste. Marie was destroyed by fire on last Friday morning. Mr. Bigging's loss will amount to $2,800, no insurance.

Social.—The ladies association of the Presbyterian church, Orange Valley, on Wednesday the 12th inst., a good programme is being prepared. Doors open at 7 o'clock, admission 15 cents.

Trimble & Wright have concluded to go out of the general business and deal only in bankrupt stocks. See their advertisement and call and be convinced. They mean what they say.

Strayed or stolen.—A dark grey and white coley dog, white ring around his neck, short stubby tail. The finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving at the Revere hotel, P. J. McCasey.

A Turner & Co. are now opening a large stock of Christmas goods. Toys staple and fancy stationery, &c., &c. Read their advertisement in this paper and then call and examine his attractive holiday goods.

Bon Fire of Bibles.—A mob attacked a theatre in Wexford, Ireland last Sunday where evangelical services were being held, many were seriously injured and the mob burned all the Bibles and Hymn books they could find.

Taxes.—All who have not paid their taxes in Ward No. 2. Artemesia, are hereby notified to meet the under signed at Bryans hotel, Markdale, on Tuesday the 11th Dec., and settle the same and oblige S. J. Coleman, Collector.

Dentistry.—T. F. Brown, L. D. S., of Woodstock, will be in Markdale on and after the 15th November for two weeks, filling, extracting, plate work &c satisfactory done. Charge moderate office at W. A. Brown's Jewellry Store.

We regret to say, owing to a number of the publishers of this county holding aloof, the meeting for the porpose of forming a publishers association which was to have taken place in Markdale on the 7th December is adjourned indefinitely.

An old Gentleman up west stepped on the train to say good-bye and k.——s. his better half on her leaving to visit friends in Markdale. The train moved off while he was in the coach and carried him to the next station, 8 miles. He was none the worse.

Miss Bell, the Toronto girl who made such an exhibition of herself in Guelph about 10 days since, was found guilty on Monday of attempting to sell a livery vehicle, having disguised herself by appearing in male attire, she however was liberated owing to her former, good conduct and character. It's not after a woman wears the breeches before she is married.

Fire.—About 2 o'clock on Friday morning last a fire broke out Mr. R. Wrightman's storehouse in the rear of his drug store, on Poulett-street. The Fire Brigad was promptly on the spot and soon succeeded in extinguishing the flames. There was a large quantity of whiskey, oil, etc., etc. in the building, which was partly destroyed. Mr. Wrightman attributes the fire to the work of an incendiary, as it was not possible for the fire to originate in any other way. The total loss is about $900, partly covered by insurance.— O. S. Advertisor.

For first class axe handles go to Finnerty's shop, Elizabeth st., opposite the bank, Markdale. You can bring your own timber and have them made to order, or you can get them all ready made at the shop. Sign of the Big Axe Handle. 169-72

Stage Change.—Mr. Hanna of Flesherton has purchased the Durham and Flesherton stage fine, and employed Mr. W. J. Strain as driver. Mr. Strain is a steady, obliging young man, and no doubt will give good satisfaction, and soon become a general favorite with the travelling public.

Mr. Thos. Hagan met with an accident the other day that will lay him up for a while. He was getting out of his waggon at his own house when he fell, breaking both bones of his legs between the knee and the ankle. He is now doing well under Dr. McWilliam's care.—Dundalk Herald.

Mr. Joe. T. Clark, left Durham on Tuesday last, after serving an apprenticeship of nearly four years in this office. His presence will be missed among the boys and young men of the town, with whom he was a general favorite. As a compositor he has few equals, either for speed or accuracy, and will no doubt, do credit to any office in which he may be employed. —Grey Review.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, $5,000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

Liberal Conservative Association.—The annual meeting of the East Grey Liberal Conservative Association, for the purpose of electing officers, and transacting other important business, will be held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Friday, December the 14th, 1883, at 2 o'clock p. m. sharp. It is important that all sections of the riding be fully represented, as business affecting all parts of the riding will be discussed.

Settling Up.—The season of the year when all accounts should be settled, and how desirable it is that each and all make a determined effort to that end, true there are very many who are unable to pay all their accounts in full, yet there are none who may not have their affairs put in a shape so they will know how they stand and thus save the unpleasant duty, when pay day does arrive, of going over many years accounts with a view to a final settlement.

Our gymnasium club, organized a little over a month ago, is we are glad to say in a flourishing state, and we are doubly pleased to see that the young men of Markdale can find something profitable to engage themselves evenings. As there is a repugnance to practicing before strangers or non-members until they are prepared to give an entertainment, they have passed a rule that none other than members be allowed in the hall, which, henceforth will be strictly adhered to. We commend their action.

In Winter Quarters.—Our Owen Sound fleet has had a fairly successful season, and we have fortunately not been called upon to record any such dire disasters as some past seasons have been marked with. The following craft are now being laid up here for the winter, and will all have more or less repairs done during the period between the closing and the opening of navigation :—The Campana, Frances Smith, Magnet, Africa, Meteor, Pratt, schooner Bentley, tug Robb, steamer Neff, and schooner Jane Woodruff are all laid up for the season. The Enterprise, City of Owen Sound, and schooners Tilly Hamilton and Lady McDonald are still out, but will winter here.— Advertisor.

1883 CHRISTMAS. 1884

SANTA CLAUS

HEAD QUARTERS

MEDICAL HALL.

We desire to inform our numerous Friends and Patrons that we have received and are opening our Annual stock of Christmas Goods, Fancy Goods, Toys Books, and Chrismas Cards. Our stock of Christmas Goods this season is Larger, Cheaper and Better assorted than that of any previous season. Call and examine. Satisfaction guaranted. Liberal discount to purchasers of Lots for Christmas trees.

A. TURNER & CO.

Embezzlement.—Mr. Griffith, harness maker, having lately missed several small sums of money, his suspicions fell on a man named May who was working for him. He got a friend from Port Elgin to purchase some harness, previously marking the money. Afterwards missing some of it, he had May arrested, and fifty cents of the marked money was found on him. He was brought before the Police Magistrate on Wednesday, but as Mr. Griffith did not care to push matters, was admitted to bail to appear for sentence if called on.—O. S. Times.

All of our readers who are interested in farm matters of any kind are asked to read on another page the announcement of the leading American country journal, the Rural New-Yorker. It is the first to have established an Experiment Farm; the first to originate and distribute rare and new kinds of seeds and plants free among its subscribers. It has probably done more to create the present interest in experiment stations and an improved agriculture than all the rest put together. It is original from beginning to end. It presented over 500 original illustrations yearly of fruits, cattle, grains, house plans, etc., and combines in practice the true interests of the farm, garden, and household with the editorial labor of a rural journal. Its present Free Seed Distribution comprises eight kinds of seeds, most of which are not offered for sale. These, according to the prices which seedsmen charge for novelties, are worth more than the yearly subscription price of the paper. It is a weekly of sixteen pages, ptinted on fine paper. It has over 600 contributors, among them the most distinguished agricultural writers of America, Canada, and England. Our readers can lose nothing by sending for free specimens to the Rural New Yorker, 34 Park Row, New York. They will be cheerfully and promptly forwarded.

MONTHLY FAIRS.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.
Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.
Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.
Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.
Shelburne—Wednesday before Orangeville.
Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.
Mount Forest—Third Wednesday in each month.
Priceville—Monday before Durham.
Durham—Third Tuesday in each month.
Hanover—Monday before Durham.

B B B
Burdock BLOOD Bitters

Burdock Healing Ointment should be used in connection with Burdock Blood Bitters for curing Ulcers, Abscesses, Fevers, Sores, &c. Price 25 cents per box. T. MILBURN & CO., Sole Agents, Toronto.

LIGHT! LIGHT!!

REFINED COAL OIL

18cts a gallon in two barrel lots and upwards.

HEAD LIGHT OIL

25cts. a gallon by the barrel.

TEAS

At Wholesale Rates.

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

THOS. MATHEWS,

Harness Establishment

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!

IN CONNECTION.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER I.

"Wanted, a Governess; must be young." I cut out the advertisement thus headed eagerly from the Times. I was eighteen, and my youth had been the great obstacle to my getting an engagement; now here was some delightful advertiser who considered it an advantage. I wrote to the address given, enclosing my photograph and the list of my qualifications. Within a week I was travelling down to Geldham, Norfolk, engaged to teach "one little girl, aged six," at a salary of thirty-five pounds a year. The correspondence had been carried on by my future pupil's father, who said he would meet me at the station at Beaconsburgh, the market-town nearest to Geldham.

It was about five o'clock on an afternoon in early August that I sat, trembling with excitement and fright, at the window of the railway-carriage, as the train steamed slowly into Beaconsburgh station. I looked out on to the platform. There were very few people on it, and there was no one who appeared at all like the gentleman I had pictured to myself as my future employer. There were two or three red-faced men who gave one the impression of being farmers, and at one end there were two young men engaged in securing a large mastiff, which was bounidng about in great excitement at sight of the train. I got out and spoke to the station-master.

"There is Mr. Rayner himself, ma'm,' said he pointing towards the two young men with the dog.

One of them was now looking about, as if in search of somebody; and I walked timidly towards him. He seemed puzzled as his eyes fell upon me; then suddenly he raised his hat.

"Miss Christie?" he said interrogatively, growing very red.

"Yes," said I, bowing and blushing too.

"Will you come and show me which is your luggage."

I was surprised and rather confused to find Mr Rayner so much younger and less self-possessed than I had expected. I followed him and pointed out my boxes.

"The dog-cart is waiting outside," said he; "let me carry your bag."

I followed him through the station. Three or four big dogs began jumping up upon him and upon me as we came out.

"Down, Rover! Down, Luke! Get down, Tray!" said he, raising his voice.

I had noticed what a very pleasant rich voice he had when he first spoke to me, and now I remember how particular he had been in his letters about my music; so I concluded that Mr. Rayner sang. He helped me into the dog-cart, carefully wrapped me up with a rug, and then, instead of getting in himself, patted the neck of the brown mare, who turned her head and put her nose into her master's hand. I was trying to get over my bewilderment. Of course I might have expected that the father of my six-year-old would not be the middle-aged gray-haired man I had pictured to myself; but for him to be a man who did not look more than three or four and twenty was a surprise; and to find him so shy and deferential did not seem quite right, considering our respective positions. He was big and broad, and rather massive, had dark hair and mustache, grey eyes, and a kind simplicity of expression, which perhaps, I thought, with his habit of blushing, made him look younger than he was. He left the mare and stood by me again.

"I am afraid you will find the country dull. You will miss the gaiety of London."

"I haven't led a very gay life," said I; "I don't think poor people are very gay anywhere."

"But you have not been shut up in a schoolroom before. I can't think how you will stand it. I always hated schoolrooms; and it's a fact that I was never in a school without being told that I was a disgrace to it."

Mr. Rayner did not seem much distressed as he made this confession.

"I date say you were great at cricket, or rowing, or—or—fighting," I hazarded, feeling that some rejoinder was expected.

"No, I wasn't. I remember giving a boy a black eye once for calling me a dunce. He was quite right, you know. And I remember being surprised that I hurt him so much; for I generally get the worst of it in a fight. They used to say it took a good deal to rouse me: and I didn't do much harm when I was roused," he added, laughing.

"I hope your daughter does not share her father's dislike of school routine," I broke out anxiously.

He started and looked up at me, coloring vividly, and then said, with some amusement in his tones—

"Did you take me for Mr. Rayner?" The next moment he seemed sorry for my evident confusion, and added, looking away, "My name is Reade. Mrs. Rayner sent her brougham for you; but a waggon ran into it and took one of the wheels off; so I put my cart at your disposal. I hope you don't mind driving in a thing like this?"

"Oh, no!" I said.

"That was Mr. Rayner on the platform with me," he went on. "His dog rushed out just as the train came up, and he asked me to see to your luggage while he held him. I don't know why he is so long."

As he spoke, Mr. Rayner came out of the station, letting his mastiff lose at the door. I saw in a moment that he was a few years older than my companion, and that, while they both wore round hats and Norfolk jackets, he bore the impress of town breeding as clearly as Mr. Reade did that of the country. He was slight, well made, with delicate features and a dark golden beard and mustache. He came up, raising his hat, and shook hands with me.

"You have been marvelling at the barbarism of Norfolk manners, Miss Christie, and asking 'When is the next train back to London?' But I have been warned by my wife not to make my reappearance without a certain parcel from the 'Stores' which has been due at this station about ten days, but has, for some unaccountable reason, failed to turn up hitherto. By-the-way, I hope my sprightly young friend has been entertaining you well?"

"Miss Christie took me for you, Mr. Rayner," said Mr. Reade, shyly, reddening again.

"And has now to suffer the awful disappointment of finding that Mr. Rayner is an old fogy after all. Miss Christie, forgive my gray hairs. You will find me a great deal more trustworthy than any of these gay, deceiving Norfolk lads. Now, Laurence, my boy, if you want us to get home before the mist rises, we had better start."

Mr. Rayner sprang up behind; Mr. Reade got up in front by my side, and took the reins; and off we started, with the five dogs bounding, barking, and growling along the road as we went. We had to drive right through Beaconsburgh; up a long hill to the market-place, which was lively and busy, as it was market-day; down another long hill, lined with the dreary old houses of the elite of a provincial town; past a tan-yard, over a small bridge crowded with cattle returning from market, and then along two miles of straight, willow-bordered road over a marsh. The scenery was not particularly pretty; but I had never lived in the country, and everything was new and interesting to me. Mr. Rayner was occupied at the back with letters and papers, and Mr. Reade listened to my comments with flattering interest and appreciation.

"How beautifully green everything is!" I remarked presently.

"Yes, rather too green," Mr. Reade rejoined, ruefully. "We have had a wet summer, and now we are going to have a wet autumn, I believe, and this place will be nothing but a swamp."

"Don't set Miss Christie against the place, Laurence," said Mr. Rayner rather sharply.

We passed through a low-lying village—some of the houses which were flooded in winter, Mr. Reade told me—up a hill, down a hill, and up another sloping road, at the side of which stretched the marsh again.

"There is the Alders, Miss Christie," said he, pointing with his whip to a pretty red house, half covered with ivy and surrounded by trees, which stood below the road, on the borders of the marsh.

"Here, Laurence, I'll get down and take the short cut," said Mr. Rayner.

There was a foot-path which led from this point of the road straight to the house through a couple of fields and a plantation. After Mr. Rayner had alighted, Mr. Reade and I drove on by the road.

"What a lovely place!" I cried enthusiastically.

My companion remained silent.

"And, oh, what a beautiful pond! I do believe it has water-lilies!" I exclaimed, turning round half breathless at such a glorious discovery.

"I wouldn't have that stagnant water near my house for my children to play about for something!" said he, in an energetic growl which surprised me.

I said no more until we drove slowly down the sloping carriage drive through the trees which led to the house; then again my admiration broke out.

"Oh, how delightfully cool it looks, with the ivy all over it to keep out the hot sun."

"Yes, and to keep in the cold moisture, Miss Christie. The ivy hasn't been cut for the last five years; and it ought to be torn down altogether to make the place fit to live in. It is no better than a pest-house!" he went on, getting more and more excited. "I wouldn't let a laborer live in it!"

"A laborer won't have a chance until my lease is up, Laurence," said Mr. Rayner, dryly, coming out of a path among the trees. And the two men exchanged looks which showed that at the bottom of their hearts they were not friends.

But then it was not likely that Mr. Rayner would care to hear his beautiful home called a pest-house.

We drove slowly down to the hall door, which was open, and a gaunt, untidy-looking servant came out and carried in my boxes. Mr. Reade helped me down and stood by me, apparently examining the harness, while I looked in an ecstasy of admiration at the dark red house thickly covered with ivy, and at the gray stone portico, the pillars of which were stained with picturesque patches of green, while the capitals were overgrown with soft bronze and brown moss. Then he seized a moment, when Mr. Rayner was speaking to the servant, to stoop and say to me quickly—

"Don't let them put you near Mrs. Rayner's room."

I could not answer, could not ask why, for the next moment he was calling out good-bye to Mr. Rayner, and, raising his hat to me, was walking by the side of the dog-cart up the steep drive that led through the garden to the road. I was sorry he was gone. I wanted to ask what he meant by his strange warning, and to thank him for his kindness. A distressing sense of loneliness came over me. Mr. Rayner who had grown grave and silent and deeply occupied with his letters during the last part of the drive, had gone into the house forgetting to invite me in; the servant had disappeared with my last box. Instead of following her, I stood watching the dog cart and its owner out of sight, until a harsh woman's voice startled me.

"Won't you come in? I'm to show you to your room."

It was the gaunt servant who addressed me. I turned, blushing, and followed her into a long low hall, dark, cool, and old-fashioned, such as the outside of the house had prepared me for; up an oak-lined staircase; through a few of those short and inconvenient passages which abound in old houses that have been added to from time to time; to a corner-room, shabby, dark, and bare-looking, where my boxes were already installed. I sat down on one of these, the only friendly things I had about me, and began to cry. Somebody might, at least, have come to the door to meet me! I thought of Mr. Reade's words, and began to wonder with a new sense of dread what Mrs. Rayner was like. Was she an invalid? Was she—mad? If not, why had she left the correspondence about her child's governess entirely to her husband? My tears dried slowly as I went on puzzling myself uselessly about this mystery which must be so very soon solved; and I was scarcely ready when the servant returned to tell me that tea was waiting for me. But my curiosity was only to be sharpened. Tea was prepared for me alone, the servant saying that Mr. Rayner was busy, and had had his taken into the study. Not a word about Mrs. Rayner—no sign of the pupil! So great were my anxiety and curiosity that I forgot how hungry I was, and in a few minutes I had finished my tea, and was standing by the window looking out into the garden.

It was not yet seven o'clock and a bright summer evening. A light breeze had sprung up and was swaying the tops of the trees that grew thickly round the house. On the side of the dining-room a mossy lawn stretched from the roots of the trees right up to the French windows. I opened one of these and went out. I had never been in such a beautiful garden before. The grass was soft and springy and well kept; there were no stiff beds of geraniums and verbenas, but under the trees and against the house, and wherever there was a spare corner, grew clumps of Scotch and monthly roses, Canterbury bells, prince's feather, and such simple flowers. The house was built on the very border of the marsh, at the bottom of a hill which sloped down, covered with trees, toward the back of the house. I made my way round to the front of the moss-grown portico—from here one caught glimpses of the marsh through the thick trees. I followed a grass-path cut through them, facing the front of the house, until I came to the pond which had excited my admiration from the dog-cart. Here the vegetation grew unchecked. The water was half covered with smooth green duckweed and water-lilies, and the reeds and rushes, which grew tall and thick round the margin, and encroached much upon the little sheet of water. The path I had followed was continued through the trees, within a few feet of the pond, to the outer edge of the little wood which enclosed the house and garden; there a few rough steps over the fence connected it with the foot-path along the borders of the marsh, which joined the road at the descent of the hill. This was the short cut by which Mr. Rayner had reached the house before us that afternoon.

I had turned back towards the garden, and was close to the pond, when I heard a low crooning sound which seemed to come out of the ground at my feet. Looking about I saw sitting among the reeds, at the very edge of the water—so close to it that her little shoes kept slipping in the moist yielding earth—a tiny, elfish-looking child, about two years old, in a dirty white frock and pinafore, with a small, pale wrinkled face, and thin red straight hair, who rocked herself to and fro and went on with her monotonous chant without seeming at all disturbed by the appearance of a stranger. She only stared at me, without altering her position, when I told her that she must not sit so near the water, or she would fall in and be drowned; but, when I stooped to lift her up, she proved her humanity by screaming loudly and reproaching me in baby language too indistinct for me to understand. I supposed her to be the child of the garedner or of some neighboring cottager, and, not quite knowing what to do with her, I carried her, still screaming, to the house, where I met the servant whom I had already seen.

"I found this child sitting with her feet nearly in the pond!" I said, tragically.

"Oh, yes, miss, there's no keeeping her away from the pond! She's there pretty nearly all day by herself. Come now, Mona, it's time for you to go to bed. Dirty little girl, look at your pinafore!"

She took the child from me, thankful to have been spared the trouble of hunting and catching the little wild thing, and carried her off leaving me wondering whether my pupil would be as eerie a creature as her sister. As there was nothing to invite me to stay indoors, I went out again, this time to explore the side of the house which faced the marsh. Here the grass grew untrimmed and rank up to the very walls; and, as I made my way through it, my feet sank from time to time into little unseen pools and swamps, which wetted them up to the ankels after a few steps. However, I went on as carefully as I could, past a tangle of shrubs, yew-trees, and straggling briars, until, pushing aside the low-hanging branches of a barberry-tree, I found myself within a few feet of a window so heavily shaded by gnarled and notted ivy that for a few moments I did not notice a woman's face staring at me intently through the glass. As soon as I caught sight of the sunken face and large lustreless gray eyes, I knew by her likeness to the child at the pond, that this was Mrs. Rayner. I retreated in as leisurely a way as I could, trying to look as if I had not seen her; for there was something in the eager, hopeless stare of her eyes as mine met them which made me feel like a spy.

I crept back into the house and up to my room, unpacked my boxes, and sat down to write to my mother an account of my journey and arrival. I did not tell her quite all that I had seen, or all the strange impressions this first evening had made upon me. I felt very anxious to communicate them to somebody; but my mother was a gentle, nervous woman, whom I had already, young as I was, learned to lead, rather than be led by; I knew that the least suggestion of mystery would cause her an agony of doubt and anxiety about her child which I could not allay by letter; so I contented myself with a description of the picturesque beauty of the place and of Mr. Rayner's kindness. I had to finish this by candle-light, and, when I had ended, I rose and went to the window to give one more look at the scene under a new aspect. My window, I afterwards found, was over the one at which I had seen Mrs. Rayner's face; it was high enough from the ground for me to have, through the gaps between the trees, a good view of the marsh and the hills beyond.

A low cry of admiration burst from me as I looked out. Over all the wide expanse of marsh, which seemed to stretch for miles on either hand, lay a white mist, rising only a few feet from the ground, but so thick as to look like a silver lake in the moonlight; a range of hills two or three miles off seemed to mark the opposite shore. The mist was dense under my window, too, on the very grass that I had waded through a couple of hours before. As I looked out and tried to imagine little fairy boats in the elder which rose here and there out of the mist-hidden marsh, a shiver passed over me; and I drew in my head with a sudden change of thought.

"How cold it is! Mr. and Mrs. Rayner must be devoted admirers of the picturesque to live in a house that must be so very damp."

CHAPTER II.

I was down in the dining-room next morning, with the unfailing punctuality of a newcomer, at the sound of the breakfast bell, before any one else was there. Mr. Rayner came in in a few minutes, handsome, cheerful, but rather preoccupied; and I was listening to his bright small-talk with the polite stranger's smile, when I discovered, without having heard any sound, that Mrs. Rayner was in the room. She had glided in like a ghost, and, without more interest in the life around her that a ghost might show, she was standing at the table, waiting. I was thankful to see that there was no trace in her eyes now of the steadfast eager gaze which had discomposed me on the night before, nothing but the dimpest indifference to me in the grey eyes which she held out her hand when her husband introduced me.

"She must have been pretty ten years ago," I thought, as I looked at her thin face, with the fair faded complexion and dull gray eyes. There was a gentleness about her which would have been grace still, if she had taken any pains to set off by a little womanly coquetry her slim girl-like figure, small thin hands, and the masses of long brown hair which were carelessly and unbecomingly dragged away from her forehead and twisted up on her head.

Then the door opened, and the servants came into prayers, with the elfish baby and a pretty delicate-looking child, blue-eyed and fair-haired, who was presented to me before breakfast as Haldee, my pupil.

Nobody talked during the meal but Mr. Rayner, and the only other noticeable thing was the improper behaviour of the baby, who kept throwing bits of bread at her father when he was not looking, and aimed a blow with a spoon at him when he passed her chair to cut himself some cold meat. He saw it and laughed at her.

"It is the most extraordinary thing, Miss Christie," said he; "but that child hates me."

I thought he spoke in fun; but, before I had been long at the Alders, I found that it was true that this most unpleasant baby's strongest feeling was dislike of her father, though there seemed to be no reason for it, since he never did anything harsher than laugh at her. She would not even take sweets from his hand.

"You do not know what primitive people you have come among, Miss Christie," said Mr. Rayner, during breakfast. "We dine here at half-past one. If we were to suggest late dinner, we should have to prepare our own food, like excommunicated persons. It is hard, as it is, to keep our modest staff of three servants. They say the place is damp, which, being interpreted, means that it is too far for their 'young men' in the town to come and see them. Were you not surprised at the wording of my advertisement?"

"Yes, Mr. Rayner."

"My wife was afraid was afraid it would frighten off many desirable young ladies by its ogreish abruptness. The fact is, the lady who has just left us, quite a typical instructress of forty, with prominent teeth and glasses, nearly frightened our lives out. She wouldn't talk, and my wife wants a cheerful companion; and she said she was dying of rheumatism, and threatened to prosecute me for decoying her to such a damp place. So we registered a solemn vow that we would have nothing to do with hoar antiquity again."

"How could she say anything against such a lovely place?" said I.

"Well, now, Miss Christie, I grant she had a show of reason on her side. I have sometimes thought the place damp myself; but my wife has got attached to it; haven't you, Lola?"

"Yes," said she, without a sign or feeling or interest.

"And so we remain," he went on. "A lady's wishes must be considered; and there are special reasons why they should be in this case. You must know, Miss Christie, that I am a penniless wretch, dependent on my wife, am I not, Lola?" He turned playfully to her.

"Not quite that," said she, gently, but with no more warmth than before.

"Practically I am," he persisted. "She was an heiress, I a ruined spendthrift, when she married me. Yet she trusted me, and the only condition she would allow her friends to make was that I should settle in the country—out of the reach of temptation, you see, Miss Christie."

He spoke with some feeling, and looked affectionately at his wife at the end of his unexpectedly frank confession; but she remained as impassive as ever.

I could not help feeling rather sorry for Mr. Rayner. He was always kind and attentive to his wife; but, whether he was in a bright mood, and tried to make her smile, or silent, and needing to be roused out of his gravity, she was always the same, limp, nerveless, apathetic, speaking when necessary in a low, soft voice, slowly, with many pauses. She had a habit of letting the last words of a sentence die away upon her lips, and then, after a few moments, as if by an effort, she would say them aloud. I soon grew quite afraid of her, started if I met her unexpectedly, and felt more restrained in her presence than if she had been one of those brilliant satirical women who take the color out of the rest of their sex. Anxious to shake off this strange diffidence, which was beginning to cast a shadow over my life, I offered to read to her when my short hours of study with my pupil was over.

She accepted my offer, and I went into the drawing-room, that very afternoon and read her some chapters of Adam Bede, while she sat in a rocking chair with a piece of embroidery making slow progress in the thin white fingers. I stopped at the end of each chapter, waiting for the comment which never came, and rather hoping for some little compliment upon my reading, an accomplishment I took pride in. But she only said "Thank you" very gently, and, when I asked her if I should go on, "Yes, if it will not tire you."

Presently I found out that she was not listening, except for a few minutes at a time, but that she was sitting with her hands in her lap listlessly playing with her embroidery, while her eyes were fixed on the garden outside, with a deep sadness in them which contrasted strangely with her usual apathetic indifference in all things. Still I read on, pretending not to notice her mood, until such a heavy despairing sigh broke from her pale lips that my heart beat fast for pity, and I involuntarily stopped short in my reading, and raised my eyes, with tears in them, to hers. She started, and, turning towards me, seemed to hold my eyes for a moment fixed on her by the fascination of a gaze which seemed anxious to penetrate to the deepest recesses of my thoughts. A little color came to her cheeks; I could see her breast heaving through the muslin gown she wore; she half stretched out one hand towards me, and in another moment I believe she would have called me to her side, when a voice from behind her chair startled us both.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The man who does not play a horn is not necessarily untoot-heard.

IS A SNAIL'S BITE DEADLY?

An Extraordinary Case in New Jersey.—A Physician Who is Puzzled.

Henry Reynolds, the 7-year-old son of Mr J. Reynolds, of 112 North Seventh street, Williamsburgh, died last Sunday morning from a cause which mystifies the doctors who have attended him. The boy's death, following that of his sister Lizzie, 20 months old, who died last Tuesday, together with the sickness of his other sister Mary and of his brother Willie, who both exhibit the same symptoms as those which marked the fatal sickness that brought death to him and his baby sister, have alarmed the neighborhood, and created not a little discussion among the physicians of the vicinity. The house is a three-story brick building with a basement. It is one of the oldest structures in the block. Mr. Reynolds and his family reside in the basement, whose floor is only two feet below the line of the street, but there is no cellar. Everything about the house is in good order and clean. Mr. Reynolds has his name on the basement door.

"There is my boy," he said to a reporter yesterday as he pointed to the coffin in the clean, well-furnished front basement, "and there are my two children," he continued entering the back basement, and pointing to a bed in which they lay, and over which his wife stood crying. About the room was seated a number of men and women discussing the cause of the death and sickness of the children.

"About four months ago we moved into this,' Mr. Reynolds continued. "There is no cellar under it, and the landlord put down a new floor and boarded up that side of the room," pointing to a wall opposite the door. "He did that to keep out the snails and other creepers that infested the place. But it didn't keep them out, for see here, see how they come out of these cracks."

The reporter noticed marks, glistening dots, about the thirty-second of an inch long, on the boards. These dots he traced from the cracks in the boards across the ceilings. On the white ceiling these dots glistened.

"Now look at that hat,' said Mr. Reynolds, showing a black felt hat. About the rim, on the top and sides of the hat were streaks about an eighth of an inch wide, which looked as if they had been made by some thick, dark colored liquid.

"When my baby was taken sick," said Mr. Reynolds, "a sore spot appeared on the back of her head, and one night while sitting up with her I noticed an animal about an inch in length crawling up the boards to the ceiling, and then I thought that maybe one of those things had bitten my child and poisoned it. That was about four weeks ago. The sore grew larger until she died. A week after the sore was noticed on the baby, Willie, who lies there dying, was taken sick, and a sore like that on the baby showed itself on his forehead. Willie is 3 years old. Then Mary who is in the bed with him, took sick the other day, but no sore has yet appeared. She took sick after Henry, who is in that coffin there, was stricken down. A week ago to-day he was in the street playing, and he came to his mother holding up the little finger of his left hand, saying that it pained him very much. There was a slight bruise on the finger. Dr. Lang attended the baby who was first stricken down, and when the others were taken sick I called in Dr. Murphy, who summoned Dr. Dugan. Dr. Sweeney is now attending the two children who are sick. Two children—I had six—are yet free from the complaint, whatever it is. I kept telling the doctors that I thought my children were dying from the bites of some poisonous animals, and the other day, after the death of Lizzie, Dr. Murphy asked me to catch some of them for him. Not until after midnight did they show themselves. I caught some of them. They are of a grayish color, about an inch long when crawling, but are able to stretch themselves out twice that length, and to contract themselves into a ball. They have two small horns on their heads. I gave what I caught to Dr. Murphy."

Dr. Murphy, when questioned about the death and sickness of the children said:

"The case is a very remarkable one. The things given me by Mr. Reynolds were common garden snails. I do not know that they will bite people, or that their bites is poisonous. When I first called I thought the sickness might be the result of sewer gas; but, as the parents and the other children did not manifest any symptoms and, as I never knew sores such as they had to break out as a result of breathing sewer gas, I was at fault. A brown scab covered the sore. When this scab was pressed, a thin fluid came from its margin. This fluid gave forth a sickening odor. Another strange thing is the places where the sores broke out.—New York Times.

Malapropos.

Talking of dinner parties, a gentleman not long since was dining with a friend, and was asked to take down a certain lady. Now there were two ladies present, one a widow, whose husband had not died in the odor of sanctity, the other a married woman, whose husband had gone to Ceylon. The unfortunate thought he had the married lady on his arm, but it was the widow, and turning to her with his most fascinating smile, he said,

"Nice day this has been."

"Do you think so? It has been so awfully hot!" replied she.

"Do you call this hot?" said he, archly. "Why, it is nothing compared to the place your husband has gone to."—Harper's Magazine.

The Archbishop of Canterbury lately preached a sermon which has excited great attention, and in some quarters surprise. He dwelt in trenchant language on the want of sympathy between classes, and openly asserted his dread of what would be the result of the hate engendered among the lower by the indifference of the higher. It appears that his language had special reference to the indifference shown to the state of the poor around them by the rich city people who go up to London to do business from points within a radius of thirty miles of the metropolis, and show not the slightest interest in the affairs of the parishes in which they live. Clergymen holding livings in such places give ample confirmation to the primate's words.

LADIES' COLUMN.

A Gymnasium for Girls.

There is a swell gymnasium for women, writes Clara Belle from New York, and I suppose men would laugh at the exercises, just as they heartlessly do when a girl attempts to throw a ball. The exercises consist largely of calisthenics—wheeling, dumb-bells, percussion, and the like. The dumb-bell exercises are vigorous and graceful. As a piano gives the measure and a drum the particular emphasis, the gymnasts perform difficult figures with unison and precision. The solid phalanx, a novel movement, is formed by double circles of girls advancing toward the centre until a close body is formed, the girls being united in the smallest conceivable space, and there performing gymnastic posturings. Such a lump of active loveliness would make a man's eyes glisten: but no masculine gaze is permitted. The percussion exercise is odd. The rows of performers are divided into groups of two, and each one of the two percussed the other on arms, legs, breast, and back with quick, decisive strokes to the music. Indian-club swinging is a snapping, seam-opening sort of exercise, and only a few of the girls are adepts at it. At a class exercise I saw seven of these fair athletes lightly dancing around the room. Stopping for a moment to take full breath they then swung the clubs with remarkable strength and ease. Running jumps are only possible to a few. I have, however, seen the bar raised to a height of four feet, and lightly cleared. Others easily made their way through the air by the means of suspended rings. The woman professor in charge of the gymnasium teaches the pupils how to walk. There is a style of walking sanctioned by fashion, the same as there are rules in dress. Instead of assuming a languid, willowy movement and inclining the body forward, which used to be the style, the New York girls are going to the other extreme by imitating the walk of our English cousins. This form of Anglomania is confined to the adoption of the erect position, throwing the shoulders well back. But we are sensible to stop short of the long strides and bobbing up-and-down peculiar to the English. The use of the low heeled walking shoe has considerable to do with this unaffected, sensible style. With the French heel it was only possible to walk in a constrained way of walking on eggs. Another characteristic motion was the rolling from one side to the other, which was doubtless necessary to relieve the pressure on the foot as much as possible. The aim now is to march like diminutive grenadiers.

Awkward London Ladies.

"In former days," says a correspondent of The St. James' Gazette, "deportment was a part of every young lady's education; it was even considered a most important part; but it is quite clear that we have now changed all that. In my rambles about the west-end of London I rarely see a woman with a graceful walk, or one who seems conscious that there is such a thing as grace of movement. Of course the dressmakers are against them; but that does not account for everything. To see a lady enter a brougham is sometimes to see something almost hideous. And yet formerly the art of getting in and out of a carriage was a part of school-girl teaching, an old yellow chariot being sometimes dragged out for the purpose two or three times a week. Of course this is a free country, and ladies may do as they please; but in this particular they are not so pleasing to others as they might be."

FEMININE SPARKLES.

Boss of the bawl—girl babies.

A New York woman keep a coach dog to match her freckles.

New York ladies now take lessons in fencing. They hope to make themselves more killing than ever.

A young man who proposed to his girl and was met with the reply that she "couldn't see it," is now more than ever convinced that love is blind.

"I've got this thing down fine now, Mildred," said Amy to the Boston high school girl. "Don't say 'got it down fine,' Amy, there's a dear; say 'reduced it to extreme tenuity.'"

There are two colored women lawyers in the United States, and when one of them gets to talking the court hears more black's tone that it ever dreamed could be utilized in practice.

A Maine woman offered her husband at auction and no one bid. Then she put up a billy goat, and $12 was offered. Ever since, in talking with the former, she puts this and that together.

"The dynamite party!" exclaimed Mrs. Shoddy, who was reading over the papers. "Dear me, Augustus, we'll have to give one right away before those Smiths hears of it. I wonder what it's like?"

The following beautiful description of a sunset in Georgia is from the Macon Telegraph: "The rosy heels of the day, as he rakes down the western turnpike, have been greatly admired by the ladies lately."

I threw you a kiss, my pretty Louise.
I threw you a kiss at the door.
But your father's stern boot did the business for me,
For I couldn't turn round to throw more.

A woman who is kissed by mistake in the dark always screams and makes a great row about it, but one can wager she is provoked in another way when the man commences to offer excuses and says he wouldn't have done it if he had known whom it was.

An Indianapolis woman is suing for divorce because her husband muzzled her with a base ball mask, and yet if base-ball masks were fashionable she would have worried the life out of him in her endeavors to persuade him to buy her one. This is a world of queer contraries.

A trade circular, under the title, "What will the Coming Girl Wear?" contains a description of the articles like to constitute the wardrobe of the future. It is a description sufficient to convince anybody that what the coming girl will chiefly wear is a hole in the pocketbook of the man who supports her.

Miss Edith (aged 6)—Mamma, they say the Gibbses have come into a whole lot of money. Ella Stanford says they are real common and vulgar, but I think we had better be very nice to them, as there are two boys in the family about my age, and when I grow up something might come out of it, you know.

Oh, horror! it is reported that an English nobleman is about to take steps to get a divorce from his American wife. After all the trouble that the dear creatures have been to secure titled spouses, it is really too bad if they are going to lose them through the vulgar instrumentality of the divorce court.

"I was to be married you know," said Blooms to his friend Clark, "but I guess it's off, you know, for g-good." "How is that?" asked Clark. "This way," replied Blooms. "She s-said she'd marry me, you know, when all impediments were r-removed." "Yes." "Well, I asked her last night if they were not all—aw—r-removed, you know, and she said 'no'—I s-still s-stutter!"

Miss Upper Ten, an ultra fashionable young lady, was called to be with a sister who was dangerously ill in a western city. "What can she do for anyone ill and perhaps dying?" inquired a neighboring acquaintance who had heard of her departure. "She might give information as to which side they'll be most likely to wear harps on this season," said one of the company dryly.

At an inn in the neighborhood of Paris a dog lay stretched at full length in the middle of the hearth. Four travellers were seated around the fire. They were soon joined by the landlord. "What a fine dog! Is it yours, sir?" he said, addressing the first traveller. "No, sir." "Splendid creature! I suppose it is yours?" he asked the second. "No." "What a beautiful head! You must have given a good price for it?" he said turning to the third. "It isn't mine." "A magnificent animal!" continued the innkeeper, speaking to the fourth traveller, "you must be very fond of it!" "The dog doesn't belong to me, landlord," "What!" suddenly exclaimed our stupefied panegyrist. And giving the unlucky dog a tremendous kick, he said: "Get out, you dirty brute!"

A GHOST STORY.

Remarkable Incident a a Hallowe'en Gathering—Dread Fulfillment of a Promise.

An incident of a rather peculiar nature occured in Montreal on last Hallowe'en which has given rise to considerable conjecture and surmise. The facts, as obtained from one of the participants by a representative of the Gazette, briefly stated are to the effect that seven young ladies, all of Montreal, at a Hallowe'en gathering ten years ago agreed to meet again on the same evening ten years after; the stipulation was "dead or alive," the young lady who made use of that expression reminding the other six of their agreement a short time after by sending them each an invitation for Oct. 31, 1883. This lady was evidently the originator of the little reunion, and laughingly promised to be present, even if dead, and it were at all possible for her to do so. About four years ago this lady died very suddenly. She is described as having been of a quiet, religious disposition, and very tall.

The remainder of the ten years rolled by, and the time for the reunion came. Accordingly, on All-Hallow eve the six met at the house of two of their number, who were sisters, for tea: but, according to the original agreement, a chair was left vacant for the missing one. This chair was draped in black, while in front of it were some withered flowers, gathered from the grave of the deceased. Nothing remarkable occurred during the repast, save that the young lady next to the empty chair spoke of a strange nervous sensation, but this was not thought of at the time. After tea they started to the parlor, immediately adjoining, the young lady last mentioned leading the way, and carrying in her hand the bunch of withered flowers. The parlor was quite dark, saving the light which streamed in from the dining-room as she opened the door. At that moment she cried: — "Look! look!" and pointed into the parlor, where three or four of them saw distinctly a tall white figure standing at the door leading from the parlor to the hall. She who had first seen it retreated quickly, and was just leaving the dining-room by the door from that room to the hall when she again saw the figure, and her cry brought three of the others to the door, and all saw it glide quickly along the hall from the parlor door to the door leading to the street, which seemed to open of itself and close after the figure had passed through.

Only one of the six failed to see the figure at all, she having in both cases been too late, consequently she was very dubious, and believed the apparition to be merely some kind of a practical joke, and at once went and inspected the door of exit, but this was always kept locked and fatched from within, and was found to be still secure, so the trick theory was apparently out of the question as a solution of the mystery.

Our informant saw the figure twice, and describes it as being "just the right height"—that is to say, very tall, and wholly draped in white; no hands nor feet were to be seen; and the face was concealed; it seemed to glide rather than walk, and moved very quickly; it did not touch the door at all and did not appear to pass through it, but the door seemed to open of itself and close behind the figure. The sensation produced by the figure was, if it were chuckling to itself on having kept the promise to be present, and laughing at the scare produced—at least our young lady informant states such to have been her sensations in so far as she had any apart from the dominant sense of fear.

Such is the story, and we give it for what it is worth without attempting to offer either explanation or comment.

Two --y do it.

The Christian at Work has an article entitled "How to Make a Wife Insane." We have not read it, presuming the method given to be, of course, either to come into the house with mud on your boots, or to forget to bring home your wife's bonnet for her from the milliner's on Saturday night.

Neuralgia Treated by the Tuning Fork.

Dr. Rasori applies the tuning fork, while vibrating, over the course of the painful nerve. The sitting usually lasts about half an hour, and the patient is generally relieved without further treatment. He records his method in the Cinn. Lan. and Clin.

Motors for Sewing-Machines.

Mr. Watkins, a Clerkenwell, England, manufacturer, has lately completed an invention for driving sewing machines, and which can be applied equally well to every kind of machine. It is contained in a box about 15 inches cube, which supports the machine, and is itself supported by legs like those of the ordinary table, but with no crank, treadle, flywheel, or strap. The box contains a length of steel tape, which is wound up to serve as a coiled spring for use, and is prevented from releasing itself by the usual rachet and click arrangement of clocks. The chief merit of the invention is in a method of compensating the action of this tape in such a way as to make it drive the machine as fast and with as much power at the termination of the run as at the commencement. In Mr. Watkins' spring motor there is a contrivance which causes the tape, as it is wound, to form itself what he calls a "parabolic spiral"—an arrangement by which as it unfolds it compensates its own action and drives the machine steadily throughout its run. The box contains also, a drum on which the chain is wound, a series of multiplying wheels, an instantaneous brake, which is worked from the immediate vicinity of the needle above, a flywheel, and the connections with the sewing machine. The contrivance can be stopped instantaneously by the brake, or gradually by the regulator; and the action is so completely under control that, although when at full speed the needle attains a rate of between 900 and 1,000 stitches a minute, it can be set to work so slowly that the machine scarcely moves. The power of the motor is such that the thickness of the material sewn is of little importance, for the speed of the needle is but slightly reduced by passing through ten or twelve layers of unbleached calico or two of leather. The inventor claims that the apparatus can be applied to any existing machine at moderate cost, and that the working parts are calculated to last for years with reasonable treatment.

The Manufacture of Beads.

Beads are largely made in Venice, where glass-making has always been the principal industry. It is said that the invention of beads dates from the thirteenth century, and is due to two Venetians, Motti and Imbriani, who were urged to make experiments by the celebrated Venetian traveller, Marco Polo. Under the Venetian Republic, and for some years after its fall, says our Consul at Venice, the exportation of beads had not reached the importance it has now attained. This was, perhaps, owing to the smallness of the furnaces, and to the difficulty and length of the technical processes required for the composition of the paste.

The Morelli, however, who in 1670 were the principal bead manufacturers, had four ships at sea, carrying beads to the East on their own account; they had became so rich that in 1686 they entered the rank of the Venetian nobility on payment of the sum of 100,000 ducats to the Republic. Since 1815 this industry has become so important as to give, at the present time, employment to about 15,000 persons. The traffic is carried on with all the world, but the principal exportation of beads is to the ports of Asia and Africa. An extraordinary stimulus was given to this industry a few years ago by the prevailing taste for beads for trimming ladies' dresses. A great extension of the manufacture took place, and labor was paid so high that all who could do so, gave up their usual trades for bead-making. But when the demand for beads declined, most of the workmen who had been allured by fancy wages to the bead manufacture, were thrown out of work and compelled to return to their former occupations.

Whatever be the cause, bead making has always been the special privilege of Venice, in spite of all foreign attempts to manufacture this article elsewhere. The wages in glass works are for a first master about eight francs a day, for a second master, four and one-half francs, and for the ordinary workmen, from two francs to five francs a day. During the last five years the average annual exportation of beads has been 25,000 quintals, of the approximate value of 5,500,000 francs.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Englishman's Grave.

Winnipeg has been "boomed" in England by interested parties, and the result is that there are to-day numbers of Englishmen scattered throughout the Northwest. Some of these Englishmen are in a bad way. There is in this city of Winnipeg at the present moment an ex-captain of one of Her Majesty's regiments, who has not tasted food for five days. Think of that, my lords and ladies; think of that, you Right Reverends and Wrong Reverends of every kind. Not a morsel of food for five days, and if this gentleman, born and bred, does not get employment shortly he threatens to blow out his brains. There is to day in this city another Englishman lying at the point of death in a city hotel, and he has neither money nor friends. There is another Englishman who has sold his clothes, his jewelry, his souvenirs of home, in order to procure one meal a day, and now he is at the end of his tether; and what next? In conversation with a member of the staff of this journal, a young educated, well-bred Englishman remarked, "Winnipeg is the Englishman's grave." Few of you who read this item know anything about the distress that exists in this wonderful city to-day, and few of you care. Who is to blame for it? Who is responsible for bringing out these young men on the strength of lying and exaggerated promises? First and foremost, the press of Winnipeg, which has lied about the condition of things in the Northwest, and which continues to lie. Go down to the C. P. R. depot any time you like and see the number of men out of employment. Ask the general superintendent, ask the heads of the Post Office, Custom House, and of our leading business houses, how many applications they receive for employment, and then reflect if all you read about this overrated country is true. "The Englishman's grave," that is the name that Winnipeg is receiving, and God knows that things are bad enough in it. —Winnipeg Siftings.

Standing Bear's son proposes to redress the wrong of the red man. He is studying to be a plumber.

"Talk about pitchers with curves" remarks an eminent base-ballist, "there's no curve like that of the little brown jug."

Chinese Peasant Life.

A writer in the London Times gives this as an example of the condition of the Chinese peasant: A family consisting of eight persons owns an acre and a half of land. The land was bought by the grandfather of the present head, and has never been subdivided since nor added to. He grows about seventy bushels of rice and thirty-five of wheat, and some vegetables and cotton beside, worth altogether in money about $50. He has two nephews who work outside and bring home something to help, and in that way they get along, but they are very poor. He and all his neighbors wear native blue cloth, spun and woven in the family, by the women, from cotton grown by themselves. He never wore foreign cotton. The coat he had on (a well worn affair) had been made two years previously, and it would last two years more. It served him at night as a coverlet as well as a coat by day.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNIO

Furnishes indemnity against loss of time by sickness or accident at comparatively low rates. For particulars enclose stamp to the Secretary, Toronto, Ont.

AGENTS WANTED.

BEAVER S.S. LINE

WEEKLY BETWEEN

Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,

CALLING AT

QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST.

For lowest rates and all particulars apply to

Sam. Osborne & Co., 40 Yonge street, Toronto.

1883—ST. JOHN, EXHIBITION—1883

Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose, &c.

Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas. The highest of all Awards for Leather Belting and Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the Judges at the St. John Centennial and Dominion Exhibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, over all competitors.

FOR SALE.

Farm of about 145 acres, 10 miles from Toronto; brick house; outbuilding nearly new; good young orchard just commencing to bear; about 16 acres timber. ROBERT JAMES, Jr., Newton Brook, P. O., Ont.

The Newell Patent Universal Grinder.

Award of Gold and Silver Medals.

NEWELL & CHAPIN
Proprietors,
95 St. James-st. west
Montreal.

These Mills save time, grind any kind of grain very fast and without heating. Larger Size Mills working on same principle with different style of cutter, grinding phosphates, gold and silver ores, quartz, plaster, clay, bones, fish-scraps, bark, &c., Please call or write for particulars.

OAKLAWN FARM,

The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in The World.

Percheron-Norman Horses

WORTH $2,500,000.00

Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by

M. W. DUNHAM,

Wayne, DuPage Co., Illinois,

25 miles West of Chicago, on C. & N.-W. Ry.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees, Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France, and the Percheron-Norman Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20

CONSUMPTION!

Asthma, Bronchitis, Throat Diseases, and Catarrh.

Together with diseases of the Eye, Ear and Heart, successfully treated at the Ontario Pulmonary Institute, 274, 276 and 278 Jarvis Street.

M. HILTON WILLIAMS, M.D., M.C.P.S.O.
PROPRIETOR.

Our system of practice is by Medicated Inhalations, combined with proper constitutional remedies. Over 40,000 cases treated during the past 18 years.

If impossible to call personally for an examination, write for list of Questions and a copy of our new Medical Treatise. Address ONTARIO PULMONARY INSTITUTE, 274, 276 and 278 Jarvis Street, Toronto Ontario.

STOVE AND TIN BUSINESS FOR SALE AT Renfrew; rare chance; must be sold. Address, J. C. HYETT, Renfrew, Ont.

THE MUTUAL MARRIAGE ENDOWMENT Association of Ontario, Head-Office London, Ont. Issues certificates from $250 to $2,000 payable upon marriage. A good investment for young people of either sex Send for particulars. W. I. IMLACH, Secretary, Albion Block, London.

MATHER BROS. & CO., 93 YONGE Street, Toronto. Mail prepaid, assorted package of beautiful Christmas and New Year Cards.

25 cards, assorted, mostly small,	$ 25
25 cards, assorted, medium,	50
25 cards, assorted, larger,	1.00
25 cards, assorted, fine,	2.00

No two cards alike. Cash to be sent with order.

$1 FOR WESTERN ADVERTISER, LONDON, from now to end of 1884. Magnificent premium, "BOOK OF PORTRAITS," only 10c. extra—contains following chromo-lithographs, in five colors: Queen Victoria; the new Governor-General (Marquis of Lansdowne); Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone; Rt. Hon. J. Blake; Sir John A. Macdonald; Hon. O. Mowat; Hon. Alex Mackenzie; Chester A. Arthur, President U. S. Biographical sketch of each. Agents wanted. Address—ADVERTISER PRINTING CO., London, Ont.

CLEAN YOUR BOILERS

Britannia Scale Purger Saves Fuel, saves Repairs, obviates Danger.
Glass Lubricators Save Oil.
Tube Cleaners Save the Tubes.
Belt Fasteners Save your Belts.

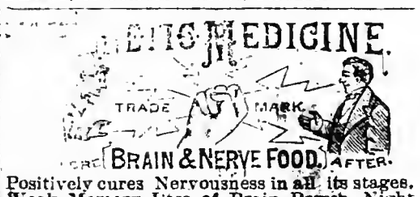
For Sale by COPLAND & McLAREN, Cor. Wellington & Grey Nun Sts., Montreal.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' Ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.



10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black Silks, that is our dollar silk will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50 silk, only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50 blanket for $4; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $1.75 net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL DRY goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures; all goods sold for cash only. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS—or a ten cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, Shirtings, grey flannels, table Napkins, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and colored, cashmere, tweeds, cloakings, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

Positively cures Nervousness in all its stages. Weak Memory, Loss of Brain Power, Night Sweats, Barrenness, Weakness and General Loss of Power. It repairs Nervous Waste, rejuvenates the Jaded Intellect, strengthens the Enfeebled Brain and restores surprising tone and vigor to the Exhausted Generative Organs in either sex. With each order for Twelve Packages, accompanied with five dollars, we will send our written guarantee to refund the money if the treatment does not effect a cure. It is the Cheapest and Best Medicine in the market. Pamphlet sent free by mail to any address.

Mack's Magnetic Medicine is sold by druggists at 50 cents per box, or 6 boxes for $2.50, or will be mailed free of postage, on receipt of money, by addressing Mack's Magnetic Medicine Co., Windsor, Ont., Canada. Sold by all druggists in Canada.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS

—OF THE—

WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among the LARGEST AND FASTEST of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the convenience, passengers, and for safety, Comfort and Speed unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect and every provision, has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto

GOOD BOOKS AT LOW PRICES

25 CENTS EACH.

Scottish Chiefs.	The Spy.	Pretention.	Guy Mannering.
Uncle Tom's Cabin.	The Red River.	The Oak Openings.	Antiquary.
St. Clair of the Isles.	Homeward Bound.	The Heidenmauer.	Rob Roy.
Children of the Abbey.	Eva Effingham.	Mark's Reef.	Old Mortality.
The Lamplighter.	The Two Admirals.	Ned Myers.	The Black Dwarf.
Mabel Vaughan.	Miles Wallingford.	Satanstoe.	Bride of Lammermoor.
Thaddeus of Warsaw.	Afloat and Ashore.	The Borderers.	Heart of Midlothian.
Howards of Glen Luna.	The Pioneers.	Jack Tier.	Ivanhoe.
The Old English Baron.	Wyandotte.	Marcedes.	The Monastery.
Hungarian Brothers.	Lionel Lincoln.	The Romance of the Forest	The Abbot.
Marriage.	The Bravo.	The Italian.	Kenilworth.
Inheritance.	The Sea Lions.	Mysteries of Udolphus. I.	The Pirate.
Destiny.	The Headsman.	Mysteries of Udolphus. II.	Fortunes of Nigel.
The King's Own.	Henry Masterton.	Amelia.	Peveril of the Peak.
The Naval Officer.	John Marston Hall.	Tom Jones. Vol. I.	Quentin Durward.
Newton Forster.	Japhet in Search of a Father.	Tom Jones. Vol. II.	St. Ronan's Well.
Richelieu.	The Wolf of Badenoch.	Joseph Andrews.	Red Gauntlet.
Darnley.	Caleb Williams.	Humphrey Clinker.	The Betrothal.
Philip Augustus.	Pasha of Many Tales.	Peregrine Pickle. Vol. I.	The Talisman.
Tom's Cringle's Log.	Vicar of Wakefield.	Peregrine Pickle. Vol. II.	Woodstock.
Peter Simple.	Midshipman Easy.	Roderick Random.	Fair Maid of Perth.
Mary of Burgundy.	Attila.	Valentine Vox. No. I.	Anne of Geierstein.
Jacob Faithful.	Rory O'More.	Valentine Vox. No. 2.	The Nasby Papers.
The Gypsy.	Pelham.	Notre Dame.	Major Jack Downing.
Cruise of the Midge.	The Disowned.	The Swiss Family Robinson.	The Bigelow Papers. 1.
Two Years Before the Mast.	Devereux.	The Wild Irish Girl.	The Bigelow Papers. 2.
The Three Cutters.	Paul Clifford.	The Trials of Margaret Lindsay.	Orpheus C. Kerr.
Count Robert.	Eugene Aram.	Artemus Ward — his book.	Hans Breitman.
Surgeon's Daughter.	The Last Days of Pompeii.	Artemus Ward—his travels.	Josh Billings.
The Wandering Jew. I.	Rienzis.	Phantom Ship.	Sam Slick. No. 1.
The Wandering Jew. II.	Ernest Maltravers.	Robinson Crusoe.	Sam Slick. No. 2.
The Wandering Jew. III.	Stories of Waterloo.	Pickwick Papers.	Sam Slick. No. 3.
Mysteries of Paris. I.	The Bivouac.	Harry Lorrequer.	The Autocrat.
Mysteries of Paris. II.	Alice.	The Dog Fiend.	The Professor.
Mysteries of Paris. III.	The Robber.	Nicholas Nickleby.	The Poet.
The Waterwitch.	Cyril Thornton.	Waverley.	Sandford and Merton.
The Pathfinder.	Reginald Dalton.		Grimm's Fairy Tales.
The Deerslayer.	The Widow Barnaby.		Anderson's Fairy Tales.
The Last of the Mohicans.	Topsail Sheet Blocks.		Boys' Own Natural History.
The Pilot.	The Huguenot.		Æsop's Fables.
The Prairie.	The Saucy Arethusa.		Arabian Nights.
	Jack Brag.

We will send any of the above books, post-paid, on receipt of 25 cents. 6 for $1.25; 1 doz. $2. Address all orders JAS. LEE & CO., 517 Larauchetiere Street, Montreal, P. Q.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE—$1.00—DOLLAR.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, . . . $7.00 | Half Year, . . . $3.50

Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to THE WEEKLY GLOBE, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),

TORONTO.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion.

The Paper for the Farmer.

The Great Dollar Paper.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

MARKDALE

Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23. 1882. 80-tf

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

—OF THE—

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,

CHEESE, SALMON,

LOBSTERS, SARDINES

In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

G. T. & B. RAILWAY.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1832, trains will run as follows:

GOING NORTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.				Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO		10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.		9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...		8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..		6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER		5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	FLESHERTON		6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....		6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....		5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

C. P. R. CONSTRUCTION.

Gen. VanHorne's Report to the Minister of Railways.

OTTAWA, Dec. 8.—Mr. VanHorne, general manager of the Canadian Pacific railway, in his report to the Minister of Railways, says that tracklaying has been completed eastward from Port Arthur to Nepigon river, and will be continued to a point thirty-five miles beyond before the close of the season. From that point eastward for a distance of 190 miles is encountered the heaviest rockwork on Lake Superior station. This is covered by one mile contracts, and is heavily manned. The work will be continued throughout the winter, and it is expected that a considerable portion of this section will be ready for track in spring. The track of the main line extension westward from Lake Nipissing has advanced beyond Sudbury Junction. This section is also heavily manned, and the work will be pushed forward throughtout the winter.—Toronto World.

MISCELLANEOUS

Jonah was the first man to go a fish-in.

A barrel of money makes a hog sit in society.

It'sonly when awoman's age reaches beyond 100 years that she is willing to have it accurately stated.

A Philadelphia clergyman frightened off six reporters, and he wasn't a cannon either. Maybe he was a son of a gun.

An Oshkosh bride tore her hair when she discovered that her husband was a hod carrier instead of an "architect's clerk."

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

A Bangor bride banged her husband's head with a broomstick because he refused to buy her a gallon of ice cream.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

Small boy: "Pa did you know ma long before you married her?" Pa: "I didn't. I didn't know her until long after I married!"

McGREGOR & PARKS'S CURE. From the [illegible] remedies wrought by Mr. McGregor's Cure for Dyspepsia, [illegible] and Affection of the [illegible], we have compounded to meet the [illegible] to Hill Bros. [illegible] and get a trial of it, of course, [illegible] or one dollar.

PAINTING IS PAINTING.

GENTLEMEN,—

If you want a first-class

Buggie or Wagon

call at

MCKENNA & MASON'S

CARRIAGE WORKS

MARKDALE.

They can supply you with anything from a

Lumber Wagon

up to

Expansion Top Phæton.

To buy from them is to SAVE MONEY!

They are both practical workmen, and employ none but

PRACTICAL WORKMEN

They guarantee their work Second to none for Lightness of Draught and Superiority of Finish.

Use nothing but First-class White Oak Wagons, and thrice Extra Second Growth Hickory for light work.

The immense amount of work turned out of McKenna & Mason's shop is sufficient proof of the wide reputation they enjoy for doing good work.

THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END Poor cheap work we positively will not take.

Special attention given to Re-Trimming and Repainting all classes of Carriage Work.

Satisfaction guaranteed (or No Pay) in

HORSESHOEING

SHOP—On Mill Street opposite to Sproule's Hotel.

McKENNA & MASON.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,

Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

IN

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

AT

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 14. MARKDALE, ONT., DEC. 13, 1883. No. 170.

The Markdale Standard

Is issued every Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequents insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

JOB PRINTING.

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of presses as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University, Viet. College. " " New York, and Hon. Graduate, of the same. " " Ayleth Medical Institute. " " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y. Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the 2nd Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.

January 1st, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton. Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.

ALFRED FROST, County Crown Attorney. J. W. FROST, LL. B. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCES, &c. &c.

OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in

MARKDALE;

Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.

Funds to lend on reasonable terms.

JOHN CREASOR, Q.C., DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.

Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.

Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.

N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Jan, 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE,

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

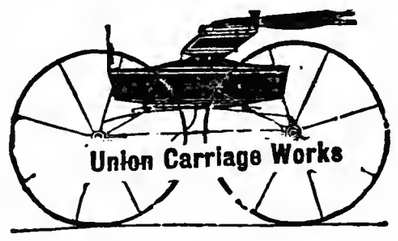
GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at the STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.

Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail



{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED, from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from

FIRST CLASS MATERIAL

In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with

English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.

All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.

GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.

Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside

D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor

Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel. 159-3m

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE ROOMS.

DUNLOP'S BUILDING MAREDALE.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.

Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

LIGHT! LIGHT!!
REFINED COAL OIL
18cts a gallon in two barrel lots and upwards.

HEAD LIGHT OIL
25cts. a gallon by the barrel.

TEAS
At Wholesale Rates.
H. PARKER,
Druggist, - DURHAM.

EUCENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,

Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.

W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.

September 23, 1880. 2-ly

Chatsworth.

From a correspondent.

Everything quiet and very dull.

J. W. Elliott expects to be in his new shop by Christmas.

McClery & McTeer are turning out a large number of sleighs; hope they may not be dissapointed in making sales for wont of snow.

Came to town, by a cow on her horns, part of a ladies wearing apparel. The owner can have it by proving property.

Tuck & McLeod have started business in the Chatsworth House.

A Change of Time.

Until now there have been fifty-two differences of time in this county; under the new arrangements there will only be five differences, these being governed by five meridians.

The principle on which the new system is based will be easily understood if the reader remembers that the earth circling on its own axis brings in succession its three hundred and sixty degrees of circumference to the light of the sun every day. There being twenty-four hours in the day, fifteen degrees of the whole three hundred and sixty must thus pass a fixed point in the heavens every hour.

Therefore, a person travelling finds a difference of one hour for every fifteen degrees—nine hundred miles—travelled. The intermedidate localities, one, two, or three degrees from his starting point, have had a proportionate difference in time.

Now, under the new system, each meridian of fifteen degrees will have a uniform time for all places within it, and the difference between one meridian and the other will be exectly one hour.

The change has been made, indeed, in the interest of simplicity, and it will prevent the confusion that has sometimes arisen from the great variation of time between cities as closely linked as Boston and New York.

THE BEST PLACE
TO GET
A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!
North of Toronto, is at the
Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

THOS. MATHEWS,
HarnesS EstablishmenT
MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.

J. W. FORD
Is giving splendid satisfaction in
CRISTING,
By the New Process at the
Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

To the Public.

I hereby return thanks to my numerous customers for their liberal patronage during the year in which I have been in the saw mill business, and would respectfully solicit a continuance of the same. Having now my mill fitted up in first class condition, I am in a position to give my customers the best satisfaction in lumber and shingle sawing. Special attention to bill stuff. The highest market price paid for 50,000 Hemlock, Basswood, Pine and all kinds of hardwood logs. Hoping by strict attention to business and fair dealing to merit a continuance of your patronage.

I am, your respectfully,
JAS. A. DUNCAN.

Bell Brook Mill, Dec. 10, '83.

Osprey.

From our own correspondent.

Mr. Geo. Blackburn, shoemaker, has left Maxwell and gone to Feversham where he will oppose brother Mitchell & Son, having hung out his shingle on the opposite side of the river.

Mr. J. Hamilton who has for past years run the grist mill at Feversham is leaving that village.

Hall Bros. have engaged Mr. Arch. Grey, of Fergus, as their successor.

Revs. Dobson and Hall are conducting revival meetings in Feversham, and Mr. Shaw at Buckingham, Black squirrels are plentiful, we saw one on M. Richardson's new brick block at Flesherton, recently.

Hickling grange will hold their annual meeting on the 11th inst., for the election of officers for the ensuing year.

The weather is plentiful and varied, the roads ditto.

District Dashes.

We are glad to learn the editor of the Orangeville Gazett has recovered from his late severe illness.

The Swan estate of Mt. Forest has been purchased by Mr. Jas. Honey, of that town.

Mr. Robert Walker, a pioneer of Osprey, died Nov. 22, at the age of 85 years.

The Postmaster General has increased the idemnity of the Dundalk post office from $265 to $400.

Mount Forest merchants have agreed to close their places of business during winter, at 7 o'clock p. m.

Messrs. Neilson of Proton station have commenced purchasing grain at Flesherton Station.

A full report of the seasons operations of theDundalk cheese factory is given in the Herald of last week, and is said to be very satisfactory to the patrons.

Collingwood merchants will close their stores at 6 p. m. during the winter.

The people of Tara are anxious for a railway communication with Owen Sound, and the chances appear to be favorable.

A son of Mr. John Corbet, of Owen Sound, broke his leg while sleighriding last week in that town.

Owen Sound favours connection with Tara by rail, rather than Durham.

The Ontario and Quebec.

It is likely that this road will be ironed and bridged right through to Perth before February 1st and that on that date freight will be run over it to Ottawa. It is not probable that passengers traffic can be accommodated before July 1st by which time the ballasting ought to be completed. When that is done Toronto and Ottawa will not be more than seven hours apart with the tendency in the direction of still further reduction.—Toronto World.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is about costs.

LADIES' COLUMN.

Ladies' Pastimes a Century Ago.

Not long since an eminent German traveller described the fashionable English ladies of the present day as intolerably dull, prudish, and uninteresting, without a speck of natural gayety or fun. Such a complaint seems strange, says a writer in Frank Leslies' Popular Monthly, and without a doubt is founded upon mistaken notions of English social life. He should have been able to visit England in the last century, and then he would perhaps have found that the humors of a London season were more in accordance with his views of liveliness. Here are some pictures which would probably delight him:

"We have a young lady here," writes Gray, "that is very particular in her desires. I have known some young ladies who, if they prayed, would ask for some equipage or title, a husband or matadores. But this lady, who is but 17, and has £30,000 to her fortune, places all her wishes on a pot of good ale! When her friends, for the sake of her shape and complexion, would dissuade her from it, she answers with the truest sincerity, that by the loss of shape and complexion she could only lose a husband, whereas ale is her passion."

What an acquisition that lady would have been to Hans Breitman's famous "barty," and how she would have made the "lager beer" vanish!

Here is another picture of maids of honor and their diversions in the season, among them beautiful, jolly Mary Bellenden, represented by her contemporaries as the "most perfect creature ever known." In a pleasant letter Pope introduces us to a whole bevy of them.

"I went," he says, "by water to Hampton court, and met the prince, with all his ladies, on horseback, returning from hunting. Mrs. Bellenden and Mrs. Lepell took me into protection, contrary to the laws of harboring Papists, and gave me a dinner, with something I liked better—an opportunity of speaking to Mrs. Howard. We all agreed that the life of a maiden of honor was of all things the most miserable, and wished that all women who envied it had a specimen of it. To eat Westphalia ham of a morning, riding over hedges and ditches on borrowed hacks, come home in the heat of the day with a fever and (what is worse a hundred times), with a red mark on the forehead from an uneay hat—all this may qualify them to make excellent wives for hunters. As soon as they wipe off the heat of the day they must simper an hour and catch cold in the princess' appartment; from thence to dinner, with what appetite they may; and after that, till midnight, work, walk, or think—which way they please. Miss Leppelled walk with me three or four hours by moonlight, and met no creature of any quality but the king, who gave audience to the vice chamberlain all alone under the garden wall."

But they could play at high jinks sometimes, and they were somewhat hoydenish in their manners, as the following anecdote, humorously told by Walpole to Sir Horace Mann, will prove:

"There has been," he writes, "a great fracas at Kinsington. One of the mesdames (George II.'s daughter) pulled the chair from under Countess Deforme at cards, who, being provoked that her monarch was diverted at her disgrace, with the malice of a hobbey-horse gave him just such another fall. But alas! the monarch, like Louis XIV., is mortal in the part that touched the ground, and was so hurt and angry that the countess is disgraced. And her German rival (Lady Yarmouth) remains in the sole and quiet possession of her royal master's favor."

The following challenge, issued by Lady Butterfield, proves, too, that the women of the "tea-cup days of patch and hoop" could hold their own at masculine sports:

"This is to give notice to all my honored masters and ladies, and the rest of my loving friends, that my Lady Butterfield gives a challenge to ride a horse, to leap a horse, or run on foot, or holloa, with any woman in England, seven years younger, but not a day older, because I won't undervalue myself, being now 74 years of age. My feast will be the last Wednesday of this month, April, when there will be a good entertainment for that day and all the year after, in Wanstead, in Essex."

This cartel of defiance to the sex was issued annually; but we have never heard that there was any Amazon who picked up the gauntlet. It was before the time of "Mrs." Thornton, who rode for thousands of guineas, and hogsheads of claret at Doncaster and York, and beat even the "crack" jockey Frank Buckle himself; otherwise Lady Butterfield might have found a foewoman worthy of her steel in the mistress of the owner of Thornton Royal.

But the ladies of that time must have been singularly simple and unaffected in their tastes, and free-and easy in their manners When Beau Fielding, a mighty fine gentleman, was courting the lady whom he married, he treated her and her companion, at his lodgings, to a supper from the tavern, and after supper they went out for a fiddler—three of them.

"Fancy the three," says Thackeray, "in a great wainscoted room in Covent Garden or Soho, lighted by two or three candles in silver sconces, some grapes and a bottle of Florence wine on the table, and a honest fiddler playing old tunes in quaint minor keys, as the beau takes one lady after the other and solemnly dances with her."

The Marriage Question.

To be married is with perhaps the majority of women, says a recent writer, the entrance into life, the point they assume for carrying out their ideas and aims, and there are not a few women in most circles whose personal claims are not such as to promise them unlimited choice, and who know this so well that on receiving an offer of marriage they recognize it as an occasion—an opportunity. If such a clear-sighted maiden refuses a pretender to her hand because he does not reach her social standard, she does so alive to the alternative of the future—a life which offers her few honors and small gratitude in return for the sacrifices she makes to social obligations. For, after all, a man very much in earnest and uttering flatteries new to unaccustomed ears may naturally be rejected on the instant with an unforeseen tenderness, exciting a momentary question. We adopt the word sacrifice, for which some apology is due to any single lady who reads the paper, from De Quincey, who is eloquent on the nobility and virtues of the old maids (insulting name he calls it) of England in whom he recognizes the most highly cultivated women of his day—a patrician class of martyrs, so to say, to the cause of social order. The highest type of old maid has made no sacrifice, nor is she in any sense a victim, for marriage as a state is not necessary to her idea of happiness; but she has none of that antagonism toward half the human race which Miss Priscilla makes her boast; nor is she the one who has set herself against marriage, or whom no man has ever wished to marry. She is the woman who has never met with her ideal, and who has never been cunningly persuaded to accept anything short of it.

Every woman with any romance or magnanimity has, so far as she contemplates marriage for herself merely in the abstract, an ideal, or some vague assemblage of high qualities which stand for such. She can only suppose herself voluntarily linking her fate with another, if that other is a man exceptionally good or noble, or at least distinguished among his fellows. At all events he must be quite above the common run of men about her. The typical old maid has had this ideal and been faithful to it; it may be for the want of adequate temptation to inconsistency. Some women—the charming woman, for example—have not been allowed to keep their ideal. They have lost sight of it in finding themselves the ideal of some one else. Our typical vestal has never been a charming woman, though she may have many excellent gifts and graces. Women are so made, happily for men, that gratitude, pity, the exqusitive pleasure of pleasing, the sweet surprise of finding themselves necessary to another's happiness (or being flattered into the notion), altogether obscure and confuse the judgment; they either forget their ideal altogether or think they have found it in the very commonplace mortal who is their choice. But to some women this does not happen. The natural instinct to please is not strong in them. They only care to please where their taste and judgment approve, and their manner is cold or indifferent in general society. There is a French proverb, compounded of resignation and worthy policy, which represents the submission and the destiny of the attractive woman: Quand on n'a pas ce qu' on aime, il faut aimer ce qu' on a. It is not that the other is deliberately attractive, but she recognizes no necessity. She does not want to please out of her pale of sympathies, and the alternative has no terrors for her. In fact, she has foreseen that a single life is her possible destiny. It is not at all necessary that this unattractiveness should have to do with a conscious want of beauty. A beautiful woman, as far as color and outline constitute beauty, but failing in bewitching qualities, may repel admiration by indifference, and live to glorify the sisterhood to which her manner devotes her; but it is the woman of commonplace exterior and sensitive mind that is commonly left alone with her ideal. We believe that almost any woman who is not called "particular," may marry if she chooses—that is, if she does not speculate upon her self or share the world's unfavorable view of her personal pretentions.

GIRLISH GAYETIES.

William Penn came of a hard family. Haven't you heard of the "Pirates of Penn's aunts?"

"I am at your service, madam," said the polite burglar when caught with his arms full of silverware.

"Cloaks are worn long," says a fashion exchange, but it neglects to add that those with the shortest purse were them longest.

"No, sir, my daughter can never be yours." "I don't want her to be my daughter," broke in the young ardent, "I want her to be my wife."

People who are color-blind can not distinguish any difference between red and green. To them the woman who paints her cheeks look green.

"I was only footing one of your late Bills," remarked a fond father to his daughter, after kicking her sweet William out of the front yard.

The christening of an infant archduchess of Austria occurred lately. This fact came by cable. The name of the royal infant will be sent over by steamer as soon as the royal secretary gets it copied.

"The surest way to take cold," said a distinguished physician, "is to hug the stove." Young men who go courting on Sunday nights should remember this, and not spend all their time hugging the stove.

"Next Monday will be a big day in the necropolis," said Mrs. McGill at tea last evening. "How so?" queried the squire. "Because," said she, "it is a sentimental universary of the vaccination of New York by the British troupes."

"Well," said a jaunty son-in-law, lounging in from the office with his father's mail, "you've got a postal from ma, and she says she has met a cyclone." "Pity the cyclone," was the old gentleman's crusty reply, as he jabbed his pen into the inkstand.

"Ethel," said the teachos, "whom do the ancients say supported the world on his shoulder?" "Atlas, sir." "You are quite right," said the teacher. "Atlas supported the world. Now, who supported Atlas?" "I suppose," said Ethel softly, "I suppose he married a rich wife."

Mrs. Symkins de Harris (to lady caller)—Do we know the Hoggs? I don't think we do. Do we Maud? Young Symkins de Harris (age 11 years)—Oh, ma, what a story! Didn't pa say he owed Mr. Hogg $5,000, and he didn't know where in the world it was to come from? (Tableau).

"Have you decided on your winter suit?" inquired a tailor of a sad-eyed gentleman lounging in the door way of the store. "No," was the melancholy reply, "but I believe my wife has." "Your wife has?" exclaimed the puzzled haberdasher. "Yes, I believe she calls it a divorce suit."

The various phases of the tender passion have been thus exemplified: A ship is foolishly in love when she is attached to a buoy; she is prudently in love when she leaves the buoy for the pier; she places her affection beneath her when she is anchoring for a heavy swell, and she is desperately in love when she is tender to a man-of-war.

FOR THE FARMER.

The pig is the only farm animal that will profitably work over the manure of other stock. If store hogs are left to run where cattle or horses are left on store grain they will earn a good part of their living by rooting among the droppings. Again their own excrement will greatly add to the value of the manure pile. In fact, mixing cow and horse manure together and letting it all be rooted over by pigs is much better than using either separately or composting in any other way.

A barrel is a very convenient receptacle for holding seed potatoes in the winter, but one that has once held salt should not be used. If the potatoe is in any way bruised, enough of the salt will be absorbed from the wood to cause decay. There will at best be an injury to vitality of the eyes if kept in a salt or phosphate barrel for the winter. A loose box not more than eighteen inches deep and ventilated is much better than any close receptacle. A light cellar kept a little above the freezing point is better than one that is warm and dark.

Agricultural Notes.

The most extensive orchard in this country is undoubtedly that of Mr. Robert McKinstey of Hudson, N. Y., whose farm of 300 acres is entirely set to apples, pears and cherries. The orchard consists of about 30,000 trees. Most of the fruit is shipped to Europe.

Potato vines thinly spread over strawberry plants makes the best protection for winter. They contain no weed seeds, and most of their substance is broken down into rich mould by the time spring growth begins. Do not cover until the ground is frozen, and weight the vines to prevent them blowing away.

In localities where amber cane has been grown for sugar this year it should not be forgotten that its seed, ground and separated from the husk, makes an admirable substitute for buckwheat flour. The farmer who grows amber sugar can may thus employ himself with food and with sweet to make it more palatable.

It will be a great mistake for any farmer to allow the loss of a single crop to so disgust him as to change his course of farming. If it usually succeeds, keep on. You have at least the implements and conveniences for cultivating and harvesting this crop. A change would involve increased expense, and, unless you have some experience, many losses.

In some experiments with fertilizers on wheat it was found that one piece, with the same treatment, yielded eleven bushels per acre more than another. The difference was finally explained by an old farmer who had long lived in the neighborhood, and who remembered that eight years before the plot yielding most heavily had received a heavy dressing of barnyard manure. Every crop grown since had shown the good effects of this treatment.

During the winter season hogs are apt to get too rich and too concentrated food. They will eat the straw given for bedding while it is clean. Hay is better, because more nourishing, and when hay is plentiful a little may often be profitably fed with other food. It is especially valuable where corn is the staple feed. Oats and barley furnish enough bulk in the husks so that further distention of the stomach is not necessary.

The eggs of the tent caterpillar may now be found in shining bunches closely glued to the ends of twigs, where the worm is to hatch and find its feed. They will endure severe freezing without injury, and are protected against any ordinary degree of moisture. Painting each branch with a brush dipped in varnish will destroy their vitality by closing the eggs so that air cannot enter. Crude petroleum oil will do as well.

It is a noteworthy fact that all the leading dairy breeds of cows come from countries near the seashore, and where there is an abundant supply of moisture in the atmosphere. The milking capacity of common cows may be greatly increased by moistening their feed. If water is always convenient cows will drink much more, but it does not always follow that water so taken will be assimilated with the food in the stomach, as it will where both food and moisture are taken together.

Sows farrow in about 116 days or a little less than four months after coupling. The sows intended for breeding should be kept by themselves and fed with wheat middlings ground oats or barley, and boiled potatoes. It is not best to feed them much corn. They will naturally tend too much to fat while with pig, and it may be necessary to restrict their diet so that they will squeal occasionally before feeding. No time should now be lost in getting sows with pig, as late Spring pigs will hardly get growth enough to profitably fatten the coming fall.

Meadows.

Meadows are rarely as good as they may be made. To have them in good condition they require constant attention and repair. There are two seasons when the meadows can be profitably regulated, viz., Spring and Fall. Just now a liberal top-dressing with fine manure, ashes, lime, or potash salts, with a little fresh seed in thin places, and a moderate harrowing will be of great benefit. There is not much to be got from them by the cows now, and what little there is not very good. It is a good plan to keep a small meadow for Fall or Winter pasture, where the latter can be used. If one has not the grass, rye sown in July or August among the corn at the last working will make a very good substitute. But there is no crop that can be grown that is so good as good grass for this use. If the grass is liberally treated one acre of it will carry one cow, off and on, through the whole season. A good meadow will pay the interest on $500 per acre; that is, $25 or $30 a year at 5 or 6 per cent. interest. And one reason for this is that it comes in at the very seasons when good feeding is the most valuable; that is in the Spring or early Summer and in the Fall. But it should be only used at those seasons and rested between them, so as to make a good growth when it is wanted. And as soon as it has been eaten down it should itself be fed; that is, it should have a dressing of plaster, salt, or fine bone, or all of them, in the Spring, and lime, ashes, or manure, or all of them, in the Fall. Then it will pay, and, just like a cow, it will pay in proportion to the way it is fed.

A restless disposition in a horse is often very annoying and generally hard to overcome. One thing noticeable about it is that such a disposition generally belongs to a horse which is deficient of real good horse sense; hence the lack of a good foundation on which to begin a reform. Kind treatment and quiet handling are about the best treatment that can be prescribed in such cases. One thing is positive, that the rougher they are handled the more liable they are to become nervous and excitable.

Winter Care of Stock.

I do not make this appeal to those who are raising thoroughbred stock or who are devoting their time and money to the most intelligent methods of stock raising, supplied with new and commodious barns and surrounded by all the modern improvements, but to that more numerous class of farmers whose barns were built a half century or more ago, and whose methods of feeding and care are even more ancient. To these would I suggest the adoption of more rational and remunerative systems of Winter care of stock.

Warmth is second only to feed for the prosperity of any stock. Many who read this have practiced turning their cattle into the yard by eight o'clock in the morning of Winter days, where they remain till four in the afternoon, possibly being tied up for a noon feed, but more likely a coarse fodder dinner being scattered for them in the yard. I ask that all such farmers should try for one month the method of keeping every creature sheltered all day, turning out but once, about noon being the best time, for drink. I am convinced that under this method cattle do better and consume less hay. New milch cows may need more drink, but a pail of warm bran slop supplied the want.

A single load of spruce, hemlock, or bass wood logs if carried to the saw mill will make a large number of half-inch boards or battens if split up in widths of four inches or more. These should be nailed over those cracks of the barn that have been widening every year for an age. Hay enough will thus be saved to pay the saw bill. Better still, if around the stable whole boards be nailed so as to leave a few inches space between the inner and the outer walls, the space between being filled with straw or forest leaves. The partition in front of the cattle should be fully boarded up, a drop door being fixed through which to feed. The mangers should be so partitioned off that no animal can steal anotherss hay.

Regularity in feeding is essential to success, also that more feed be given than will be eaten up clean. Feed a variety while possible, and salt occasionally by dissolving coarse salt in a pail of hot water, and sprinkling a foddering of hay or straw. Frequent use of the cattle card makes friends of the stock and pays in dollars and cents. A pocket full of corn nubbins will induce cattle promptly to take their proper places in the barn, while screaming and pounding will ever cause disastrous commotion.

It is often said that Winter is the time when we feed out all we can raise in Summer, as though it were a season of dread, with no profit accruing, but to the thoughtful and earnest farmer, watching and improving the condition of his stock, it should be a season of great satisfaction. Suitable care and attention will make most stock advance in condition, size and value during the Winter months, and the net profit of keeping stock, whether for market or for breeding and dairy purposes is determining by the condition in which they come from the Winter quarters to Summer pastures.

Inventions of Half a Century.

The Home Journal: The number of inventions that have been made during the past fifty years is unprecedented in the history of the world. Inventions of benefit to the human race have been made in all ages since man was created; but looking back for half a hundred years, how many more are crowded into the past fifty than into any other fifty since recorded history! The perfection of the locomotive, and now the world-traversing steamship, the telegraph, chromo-lithographic printing, the cylinder printing press, the elevators for hotels and other many-storied buildings, the cotton gin and the spinning jenny, the reaper and the mower, the steam thresher, the steam fire engine, the improved process for making steel, the application of chloroform and ether to destroy sensibility in painful surgery cases, and so on through a long catalogue. Nor are we yet done in the field of invention and discovery. The application of coal gas and petroleum to heating and cooking operations is only trembling on the verge of successful experiment, the introduction of the steam from a great central reservoir to general use for heating and cooking is foreshadowed as among events; the artificial production of butter has already created a consternation among dairymen, the navigation of the air by some device akin to our present balloon would also seem to be prefigured, and the propulsion of machinery by electricity is even now clearly indicated by the march of experiment. There are some problems we have hitherto deemed impossible, but are the mysteries of even the most improbable of them more subtle to grasp than that of the ocean cable or that of the photograph or the telephone? We talk by cable with an ocean rolling between; we speak in our own voice to friends one hundred miles or more from where we articulate before the microphone. Under the blazing sun of July we produce ice by chemical means, rivaling the most solid and crystalline production of nature. Our surgeons graft the skin from one person's arms to the face of another, and it adheres and becomes an integral portion of his body. We make a mile of white printing paper and send it on a spool that a perfecting printing press unwinds and prints, and delivers to you folded and counted, many thousands per hour. Of a verity this is the age of invention, nor has the world reached a stopping place yet.

When a Waxahacie preacher announced his text he simply said:—"Hell—what is it."

ALL SORTS.

It is a mean wretch who will slyly drop a hair switch in a car loaded with women, and then smile as he sees every woman make a grab for the back of her head when she notices it.

Good boys are trained in the streets and dens of Chicago until they become bad boys, then they can be admitted to the Feehanville training school. This institution is reserved for bad boys. Poor, good boys have no such place to go.

First boy: "Where yer bin, Billy?" Second boy: "Bin fishin'." First boy: "Ketch anythin'?" with an anxious expression on his face. Far seeing second boy: "No, but I expect ter when I git in the house."

"I don't understand why women dress that way," said a man, pointing at a lady who passed along the street. "I don't either," replied a bystander. "That woman," continued the first speaker, "is dressed ridiculously. Her husband must be a fool." "I know he is," said the bystander. "Do you know him?" "O, yes. I'm the blamed fool myself.

The Monetary Times says: A large item in the expense of maintaining a sleeping car is the washing bill. The Pullman Company's entire outfit includes 50,000 sheets, 46,000 pillow-slips, 13,000 blankets, 16,000 hand towels, and 6,000 roller towels. A car is entirely emptied and cleaned as soon as it reaches its destination, and the linen sent straight to the laundry. The Wagner Company's total equipment is 4,000 woollen blankets, 13,851 linen sheets, 12,202 pillow-slips, 5,740 hand-towels, and 2,347 roller-towels. The expense of keeping the Wagner Company's bedding clean is $30,000 a year, the Pullman Company's is larger.

Nest-Building Fishes.

In floating along the shores of some wooded stream, we may watch the domestic life of the sunfish Exponotis, the mottled, bespangled friend of the angler, that is seemingly always on hand to be caught in default of nobler game.

Along the shore where delicate grasses grow, where floating lily pads cast strange shadows, and the white pink-tipped buds reach upward, here among the winding stems, sheltered by a mossy bank with overhanging ferns and cat-o'-nine-tails, the sunfish builds its nest. They may be seen by pairs moving in and out among the lilies near the shore, as if jointly selecting the site for their nursery. It is generally a gravelly spot, and once agreed upon, the little builders set vigorously to work. The stems and roots are torn up for twelve inches about, and carefully carried several feet away, while the smaller rootlets are swept aside by skillful blows of their tails, both fishes standing over the nest creating a mimic whirlpool with their tails that effectually carries of the objectionable particles. The stones are next taken away, the smaller ones in their mouths, the larger being pushed out bodily, or fanned away by the sweeping process, until finally an oval depression appears, with a fine sandy bottom. The stems and other aquatic verdure about the sides, that seem to have been purposely left, now naturally fall over, so that oftentimes the nest is a perfect bower, its walls bedecked with buds, while the roof is a mat of white lilies floating upon the surface. Here the eggs are deposited, the male and female alternatively watching them. We have always known the sunfish as the most peaceful of the finny tribe, and only in wanton playfulness chasing the golden carp; but let a stranger, a bewhiskered catfish, approach the bower, and war is at once declared. The little creatures seem to snap with rage and defiance, the sharp dorsal fins stand erect, the pectorals vibrate with repressed emotion, while the convulsive movements of their powerful tails show that they are ready to stand by their home to the last, and indeed so vigorous is the charge that larger fishes are forced to retreat, and as the sunfishes build in companies, the intruder is often attacked by an entire colony of them. They have, however, an enemy that seems to defy them, the pirate perch (Aphrodedrus sayanus), which like the cuckoo, that is either incapable or too lazy to build a nest of its own, often deposits its eggs in that of its neighbor.—P. HOLDER, in Harper's Magazine for December.

No Reason There.

"Hi say Mr. Pongranate," observed a colored Austin expressman, who was the unfortunate owner of a baulky mule, while some one had unloaded upon him in the melancholy past, "didn't I heah yo' say a good many times dat dere was reason in things?"

"Yes, Sam," replied Mr. Pongranate, "I believe that precept and ain't afraid to say so."

"Yer wussen't?"

"No."

Well, den, I just wisht yo'd cam out in de alley an' look at my mule. He's dun stuck dar for mo' un hour."—Texas Siftings.

Look Out.

It is said that many of the so-called all wool blankets made in the woollen establishments of the United States, are largely made up of hair taken from the hides of Texas cattle. When the hair is taken from the hides it is cleaned with lime, mixed with wool of a low grade, and is then carded and worked into coarse blankets. The hair adds to the weight and thickness of the blanket, and detracts enormously from the durability. There is little difficulty in detecting the hair. It will not all work in the coarse thread. The ends stick out, and as it is not barbed like wool, it is very easily pulled out.

A law has just gone into force in New York City prohibiting the manufacture of cigars or preparation of tobacco in any apartments occupied for living, sleeping, or household purposes. It is aimed at tenement house cigar and tobacco manufacturing, and was enacted on the score of public health. Twenty-eight firms are affected and 7,000 operatives—men, women, and children, chiefly Germans and Bohemians—are thrown out of employment. The condition of health and morals of the ill-paid people is said to be frighful. Attempts to evade the law will probably be made.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items from all Parts of the World.

CANADIAN.

The wages of men employed by the Canadian Pacific Railway in Manitoba, have been reduced ten per cent.

The Kingston Street Railway has not proved a financial success. The plant is soon to be sold to the highest bidder.

Lady Rose, wife of Sir Johu Rose, of London, formerly Finance Minister of Canada, is dead. She died at her residence in London.

Ex-Alderman Lindley, of Brantford, Grnad Secretary of the Canadian Order of Foresters, died at his residence, of consumption, a few days ago.

Hon. M. Bowell, Minister of Customs, has gone with his wife to Lower California, for the benefit of her health. She is suffering from disease of the lungs.

The new Cantilever railway bridge, spanning the Niagara river just above the old railway suspension bridge, is now complete and it will be used at once.

Rev. Dr. Duff, for many years a prominent minister at Sherbrooke, Quebec, died recently in Montreal. He was also a prominent man in the Temperance work.

It is reported that Sir Charles Tupper has been in Paris attempting to negotiate a commercial treaty with France, which would prove of great advantage to Canada.

Hon. John O'Connor, of Ottawa, has been appointed one of the Commissioners for the consolidation of the Dominion statutes, in the place of the late Hon. James Cockburn.

The Hastings County Council have just memorialized the Ontario Government in behalf of Women Suffrage. The Toronto and Kingston city councils have also taken similar actions.

A North West Colonization Company recently paid to the Interior Department at Ottawa $82,400, being an instalment on 82,960 acres of land in the Saskatchawan district.

The Napanee and Tamworth railway, through Lennox and Addington counties, is now nearly completed. The rails are nearly all laid and the road is expected to be in running order in a few weeks.

The Montreal city carnival will commence in that city on the 4th of February. Great preparations are being made for a week of sports and amusements, on a more complete and extensive scale than last year.

Scarlet fever of a very virulent type is reported to be raging in and about Peterboro. Mr. Joseph Taylor, living in Otonabee, lost five children in a few days, of that disease. Two of them were buried in one day.

Workmens wages are everywhere going down. A few days ago the pay of the employees of the Kingston and Pembroke Railway works, was reduced from $1.50 to $1 per day. The men accepted the situation quietly.

Mr. George Stephen, of Montreal, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Syndicate, has presented to the Montreal Hospital $50,000 for the purpose of erecting a building to commemorate the memory of the late Dr. Campbell.

The Petrolia oil men have been sending representatives to Ottawa to ask the Government to place further restrictions upon the importation of American coal oil. They also wish the inspection to be transferred from the Customs to the Inland Revenue Department.

There are great complaints in Toronto about the class of Irish immigrants received this year. It is asserted that 1,990 of those arriving at that city were from the union work houses of their native land. No less than 2,460 were sent to Canada from the work houses this year.

Several ice accidents are already reported. A young lady in Montreal was so seriously injured by the falling of an icecicle on her head, that she died the same day. A young man, of Dalhousie, was drowned through the ice in the Bay of Quinte, near Belleville. Two men were drowned while skating on the river near Ottawa.

Mr. John H. Stafford, a wealthy citizen of Brantford, has offered to build a hospital, in that city, at an expense of $72,000, and donate it to the city. The city council have thankfully accepted the generous offer, and the work will be commenced at once. Twenty-three ladies have offered to furnish a part of the wards. The wife of Hon. A. S. Hardy, Provincial secretary, is among them.

A new unfinished government vessel was wrecked near Digby, Nova Scotia, recently. The vessel had been built at Maitland, on the Bay of Fundy, and was being towed to Halifax, to be equipped, by the steamer Newfield. A heavy storm came up and the hawser, with which the vessel was being towed parted, leaving it to drift upon the rocks, where it went to pieces, a total wreck. There were ten men on board, eight of whom were drowned.

UNITED STATES.

The present season of navigation on the Mississippi river is reported to have been the most prosperous of any since 1877.

A fire occurred in the Masonic Temple New York, recently, doing a good deal of destruction to the beautiful building, but not completely destroying it. The loss is estimated at about $100,000.

A Chicago detective said to be worth $50,000 has been arrested for compounding a felony. No wonder he is so rich. If he is worth that much the chances are that he will not be convicted.

It is said that there are over 17,000 dentists in the United States, and that over one ton of pure gold is every year used for plugging teeth. In a few years the grave yards may be among the richest gold mines in the country.

The National Banks, so generally established throughout the country since the War, have, many of them, broken down. It is said that eighty-nine have been placed in the hands of Receivers since the establishment of the system.

The French Government has decided to rescind the decreee forbidding the importation of American pork into France, provided the municipal authorities or the Chambers of Commerce in the localities interested will organize a system of pork inspection.

A New Orleans woman recently presented herself and passed the necessary examination for a certificate as master of a sailing vessel and the question is being considered by the law officers at Washington whether, under the law as it stands, a woman can fill such a position.

A test of the new electric headlight was recently made on the West India line in Illinois. A third of a mile of track could be seen from the cab. They went twenty miles an hour, but the light never flickered. The power is given by a three-horse power engine attached to the boiler, and taking steam from the boiler. Only one test had been given before, at Indianopolis, a few weeks ago, which was equally satisfactory.

The forty-eighth United States Congress is now in session at Washington, having assembled the first week in the month. Mr. Carlisle, a Democrat, from Kentucky, was elected Speaker. The President's message was delivered the second day, and the work of the session began. It is generally supposed that the session will be a long one, extending, probably, till past the end of the winter.

GREAT BRITAIN.

It is reported in England that King Cetewayo has been restored to power over his Zulu tribes under the protection of British troops.

Cardinal McCabe issued a circular to the Church dignitaries and members in Ireland strongly denouncing secret societies, and the Pope has just expressed his warm approval of the act.

The trial of O'Donnell for the shooting of Carey, the informer, lasted two day, and resulted in a verdict of guilty of murder. O'Donnell was sentenced to be hanged. He was dragged from the court shouting and cursing in a most excited manner, amidst great confusion.

The Prince of Wales is reported to be making land investments in Kansas. It is also asserted that he is already the owner of property to the value of about quarter of a million dollars in Kansas City. Capital seems so abundant in England that it is hard to invest to advantage in "the tight little Island."

The Marquis of Lorne recently visited Birmingham, and in a lecture, spoke very highly in praise of Canada. He said its climate is healthy and salubrious, and many fevers very prevalent in the United States are not known within its boundary. He recommended it as a field of emigration.

London Truth says that Princess Louise and Lord Lorne took home with them to England a rare and beautiful collection of Canadian stuffed birds. There were eight cases containing about one hundred and twenty varieties. They are much admired by their friends.

Another mob took place at Wexford, Ireland, recently. Major Whittle, the Chicago evangelist, was conducting an evangelistic service in a theatre, when an outside mob attacked it, attempting to burn the building. Several gentlemen attending the meeting were stoned and the dresses of ladies nearly torn off. The windows of several Protestant churches were broken, and other depredations committed. The mob paraded the streets for several hours, singing "God Save Ireland."

Flesh or Fat.

Many people do not distinguish the difference between flesh and fat in the construction of their body. They want to get fat, and think they will thereby necessarily become strong, This is a mistake. Let us notice the wide difference between flesh and fat.

Flesh consists of muscle; therefore flesh and muscle are one and the same thing. The muscles constitute a great bulk of the body, and bestow upon it form and symmetry. The "round" of beef and the leg of lamb are nearly all muscle. It consists of fine thread-like filaments or fibres, arranged in small bundles, a number of which united together with connective tissue form a muscle. Every movement of the body is produced directly by the muscles shortening themselves, in response to the nervous influence of nerve fibres permeating them, and so drawing on the bones to which they are attached.

Fat consists of minute cells or sacs of fat, held together with soft, delicate threads and bands of connective tissue. It is found chiefly beneath the skin and walls of the belly, around the kidneys and heart, and in spaces between organs. It contributes to symmetry, facilitates motion, and constitutes a reverse supply of fuel—combustible food, for burning, or oxidation, and is the first tissue to disappear for this purpose in those who are poorly fed. Any increases of it to more than enough for these purposes is useless and burdensome.

With abundance of exercise and plain nutritious solid food—flesh, bread, a moderate allowance of vegetable, and simple puddings, with milk and tea and coffee in moderation, the muscles, if not firm and strong, usually increase in size, firmness and strength, and the whole body in weight. With little exercise, excess of starch, vegetable, fatty and liquid foods, the fat accumulates, though the strength may not increase, but may even decrease, and will, with any great accumulation of fat.

It should not therefore be an object with any one to become "fat," but to secure firm, strong muscles, with the whole made plump and round by a moderate proportion of fat.—Sanitary Journal.

Carlyle said, "That a good man be free and permitted to unfold himself in works of goodness and nobleness is surely a blessing indispensable to him and those about him; but for a bad man to be free and permitted to unfold himself in his particular way is, contrariwise, the greatest curse you can inflict upon him,—a curse upon him and upon all his neighbors. Him the very heavens call upon you to persuade, to urge, to compel into something of well doing; and, if you absolutely cannot, the one blessing left is the speediest gallows you can lead him to."

A Norristown married man can heavily discount Vennor as a prognosticator. When the former starts home at 1 a.m. he always perdicts a "storm" within an hour, and never made a miss but once; and then he found his wife sound asleep when he reached home. Next morning she declared that she had been drugged.

MARRIED IN FUN.

And Sent to Jail to Repent at Leisure —Sequel to a Lawn Party.

Walter Vaughn, of Flatbush, a mere boy, was arrested recently by his alleged wife for failing to provide for her. The couple went through a mock marriage at a lawn party some time ago. Mr. E. S. Vaughn, father of the lad who didn't know that he was married, is treasurer of the Moen Asphaltic company at No. 103 Maiden lane. He is a short, stout, and very jolly old gentleman, resembling not a little "Mr. Pickwick." When asked what answer his son would put in to the charge of abandonment brought against him by the young lady who claims the boy for her husband, the old gentleman burst into a spasmodic fit of laughter, which continued till he was forced to leave the room. Returning in a few minutes with his hands pressed tightly against his sides Mr. Vaughn said: "Whenever I think of it I can hardly move," and straightening up with evident pain, he continued: "We shall carry this case as far as this young lady cares to have it go."

"What do you think prompted Miss Higbie to take such a serious view of the lawn-party marriage?"

"Oh, she didn't. I am quite sure that her mother is at the bottom of it. She is endeavoring to work her daughter off her hands. It's natural, but she has gone about it the wrong way to be successful. It is only another example of would-be mother-in-law, and I think that young lady and her mother stand a poor change of getting Walter or his father's money."

As the reporter started to go Mr. Vaughn asked if he was going to see the young lady, and on receiving an affirmative reply the old gentleman began to chuckle to himself, and as he received another hitch in his side, remarked: "Drop in and let me know what she has to say."

The Higbie family reside about midway between the penitentiary and the Flatbush asylum. Their residence is the first in a row of eight cottages facing the gray of the penal institution. A little figure came tripping down the stairs humming, "I'm lonely to-night, love, without you," and, with a little scream of surprise, she peeked the door.

"Is this Miss Higbie?"

"No; I'm Mrs. Vaughn." Miss Higbie, or Mrs. Vaughn—to be decided by the court—is seventeen years of age. Her hair is dark, and her eyes are Kings county hazel. She is petite, and seemed very determined. She said her lawyer had directed her not to talk about the case at all.

"You can certainly tell me when your hus——Mr. Vaughn was arrested?"

"It was on Evacuation day. Since our marriage I have not asked him to provide a home for me nor to support me, for it was a husband's place to look after his wife without being so directed. He has not done so, and I found it necessary to take some action in the matter."

"What were the details of this wedding ceremony?"

"Why, there was not much of it. We were enjoying ourselves playing croquet at the lawn sociable at John A. Case's, in the evening, when Walter came up to me and said: 'Come on, Annie, and we'll get married.' I took his hand and walkee over to a big tree. Charley Anson asked us the usual questions in the Methodist ceremony, and we were pronounced man and wife. I can't see anything 'mock' about that! We were in earnest, and after we were married we were happy as could be. During the remainder of the evening Walter called me his little wife, and I was only to happy to call him my husband. When he accompanied me home in the bright moonlight we both knew that we had been made one."

"How long have you lived in Flatbush?"

"Only a month. I'm a city girl, you know. I have made only a few acquaintanees here. It is not a very sociable place. What does mother think? Oh, she does not approve of my going to law to hold him. I am doing it all alone. Walter is a gentleman, and I know he will not go back on his marriage vows."

"Considering the newspaper stories which have brought you into notoriety, don't you regret having been married under such circumstances?"

"No. It is a little unpleasant to be spoken of as trying to make a man remain your husband when he does not want to, but I love Walter, and I can not let the matter drop without doing everything in my power to overrule the objections of his parents. I know we were a just a little young to enter into the matrimonial state, but now that we are man and wife I feel it my duty to enjoy my husband's company if the law so directs."

Walter Vaughn's mother was seen, but she would not talk about the circumstances of his marriage. The young man will be examined at Justice Ferguson's office, in New Utrecht The young lady will be represented by Counselor Legget, of Brooklyn.—New York World.

In the Wrong Pulpit.

The Boston Traveller relates the adventure of a worthy Congregationalist clergyman of a church in the suburbs of Boston. He had agreed to supply a Roxbury pulpit for an absent brother. He came into Boston and promptly took a Highland car for the scenes of his evening's labor. In due time he descried a steeple, and, reaching the church, got out, walked in, took off his overcoat in the vestry, and went straight-way to the pulpit. He glanced around on his congregation and proceeded, after a minute or two's delay, to give out a good old standard Congregational hymn. The congregation proceeded to find the place, the organ gave the tune, and the singing began. While it was in progress the sexton walked up the pulpit stairs and said to our suburban friend, "Mr. —— will be here in a few minutes." The situation flashed upon him, but suppressing his emotions, he asked, "Why, isn't this Mr. ——'s church?" "No, sir," calmly replied the sexton, "this is the Universalist church." There was an exchange of places a few minutes later. The friends of the suburban minister are now fond of asking him how he came to enter the Universalist ministry. He laughs and solaces himself with the remark, "Well, I got them to sing a good orthodox hymn, anyway."

FOR A QUART OF BEER.

The Buying and Selling of Wives in England.

Before Mr. Justice Denman, at the Liverpool assizes, Betsy Wardle was charged with marrying George Chisnal at Eccleston bigamously, her former husband being alive. The case was a peculiar one. It was stated by the woman that as her first husband had sold her for a quart of beer she thought she was at liberty to marry again,

His Lordship—That is not what she stated before the magistrate. She said then that he was idle and would not work. When she left him she took the child with her, and he said if she would let him have the child he would not trouble her any further. He added that he would sell her for a quart of beer.

Prisoner—Please your worship, he did so. [Laughter.]

His Lordship—Is there anybody here who knows that? Yes, my lord; Alice Roseby and Margaret Brown.

His Lordship—Call Margaret Brown.

Margaret Brown thereupon stepped into the box and was cross-examined by his lordship. She said she was present at the second marriage. She knew the first husband Wardle was alive; she was told that he had sold her for a quart of beer.

His Lordship—You believed it would be binding? Yes, sir.

His Lordship—And you thought it right she should marry again? She wished me to give her away, and I did so. [Laughter.]

His Lordship—You helped her to commit bigamy. Take care you do not do it again or you will get yourself into trouble.

Alice Roseby was next called, and said she saw Wardle drink one glass of the quart.

His Lordship—Who was the bargain made with? With George Chisnal.

His Lordship—I am not sure that you are not guilty of bigamy, or of being an accessory before the fact. You must not do this sort of thing again. People have no right to sell their wives for a quart of beer or anything else. [Laughter.]

George Chisnal, the second husband, apparently just out of his teens, was the next witness called.

His Lordship—How did you come to marry this woman? Witness (in the Lancashire vernacular)—Hoo did a what? Laughter.] Question repeated. A bowt her. [Laughter.]

His Lordship—You are not fool enough to suppose you can buy another man's wife? Oi. [Laughter.]

His Lordship—How much did you give for her? Sixpence. [Great laughter]

His Lordship—You are as guilty as she is. You are accessary before the fact to her committing bigamy yourself. Everybody has committed bigamy in this case. [Laughter.] Go down.

The witness left the box with alacrity, but was immediately recalled by his lordship, who asked him how long he had lived with the prisoner.

Witness—Going on for three years.

His Lordship—Do you want to take her back again? Awl keep her, if you loike. [Laughter.]

His Lordship—You need not keep her if you do not want. She is Wardle's wife.

Mr. Swift, addressing his lordship, said all he wished to say on behalf of this unfortunate woman was this—that she seemed to have met with a bad husband in the first place, and an ignorant man in the second. He could only venture to hope that his lordship would not think it a case in which she ought to be punished—at least not severely.

His lordship directed that Wardle should be called, and this was done without eliciting any answer.

His Lordship (addressing the prisoner)—It is absolutely necessary that I should pass some punishment upon you in order that people may understand that men have no more right to sell their wives than they have to sell other people's wives, or to sell other people's horses or cows, or anything of the kind. You cannot make that a legal transaction. So many of you seem to be ignorant of that that it is necessary I should give you some punishment in order that you may understand it. It is not necessary that it should be long, but you must be imprisoned and kept at hard labor for one week.—London Telegraph.

An Eccentric Lawyer.

A famous lawyer, noted for his learning and classical scholarship, illustrated by his eccentric habits an old English song.

"The loss of wealth is the loss of dirt,
As sages in all times assert;
The happy man's without a shirt."

"Billy Campbell, as he was familiarly called, made much and saved little money, for he had no idea of its value. He endorsed for everybody, and if he went out in the street with a pocketful of change, he would return without a cent having given something to every beggar he met.

One day, the sheriff, in reply to Mr. Campbell's question, "What's the news?" "Nothing new, sir, but this, I am sorry to say. I had to sell out your house and lot for the debt you owed as security to Mr. Hill."

"Oh, that's nothing," answered Campbell; the property is not lost; it has only changed hands."

Mr. Campbell was an easy going bachelor, and the reputation of being one of the most slovenly dressed lawyers in the State. On one occasion as he was about leaving home to attend the legislature, his sister informed him that she had packed a dozen shirts in his trunk.

"Now, brother," said she, "do be more particular about your dress, and don't forget to put on a shirt at least once a week. It's very mortifying to see you go about looking so dirty."

On his return home at the close of the session, she congratulated him upon his hearty appearance.

"Why you have grown as fat as a pig,' she remarked, "they must have fed you at the capital."

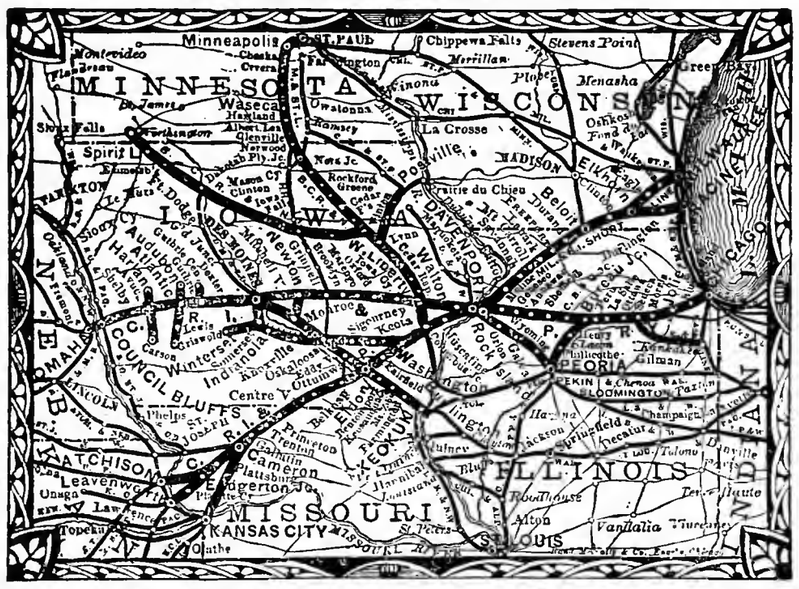
"Yes, they take good care of us," he replied, "for they are always in want of some appropriations."

Looking into her brother's trunk and finding but two shirts she called out:

"Where, brother, are all those new shirts I gave you?"

"Don't you find them in the trunk?"

"No; I see but two."



"Possibly I have some on me."

An examination disclosed that he was wearing six shirts, a fact which accounted for his apparent improvemen in flesh.

Harrison, the "boy" preacher, it is said, will spend Christmas with his grandchildren.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Lost—
Berkshire Boar—R. McBride.
Teacher Wanted—John Hazard.
Notice to Creditors—Geo. Richardson.
Sale of Farm Property—Moss, Falconbridge & Barwick.

The Standard.

MARKDALE DEC. 13, 1883.

MARKDALE SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

Of course the trustees did quite right in accepting Mr. Norris' offer to teach at a salary of $350.00 if—aye, there's the rub—if the said Norris possessed the necessary qalifications. Will the STANDARD kindly enlighten us on this point.—Flesherton Advance.

We beg to say in reference to the above that Mr. Norris comes with all the qualifications necessary, except perhaps that of a high salary. He holds a second class certificate from the Toronto Provincial Normal School, is highly recommended by the inspecto of his district, and has furnished our trustees with high recommendations as to his moral character as well as educational abilities. We think it quite premature on the part of the editor of the Advance to endeavor to belittle our trustees without any cause. He is in the habit of doing this kind of thing. Be more cautious.

CHANGES.

Change seems to be the order of the day. Doubtless the present generation is living in a very progressive age. The adoption of the time of the 75th meridian caused a little stir at the time, but now things go on as before and any temporary inconvenience that may have been felt has passed away.

The next change will probably be the adoption of the twenty-four hour style of reckoning time. An agitation in this direction has already begun. All the railroads entering Chicago (with one exception) have adopted the new system, so has the Canada Southern. By this method the hours are numbered from one to twenty-four, 5 o'clock p.m. being seventeen o'clock and midnight twenty-four o'clock. The advantages presented by the adoption of this style of reckoning are not numerous.

The change of hands our railway line has undergone during the year will be particularly noticed in the change of name. The familiar name Toronto, Grey and Bruce railway almost disappears under the title Ontario and Quebec railway. T. G. & B. division, as will be observed from posters, time tables etc. While the name may for a time be missed, the youthful days of the line with its sharp curves, its narrow gauge, and long delays, will not soon fade from recollection.

INCORPORATION.

A meeting of ratepayers of Markdale was held at the Markdale House on Tuesday evening for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of having the village incorporated. There was a good representation of ratepayers present. Wm. Brown, Esq., was voted to the chair and read a report of the census of the village which was taken by the trustees last week, showing the necessary number of house-holders, freeholders, and a population of 772, (which is twenty-two over the necessary number.) Those present were called on to express their views. After considerable discussion in which there were but two dissenting voices, a resolution was passed requesting the village trustees to take the necessary steps towards having the village incorporated.

RAILWAY QUESTION.

Nothing important has transpired since our last issue in reference to the Durham and Meaford railway, we believe however a scheme is being prepared to carry out the project. Owen Sound is likely to have connection with the G. T. R. via Tara, while another scheme is talked of for the extension of the iron rail from Mt. Forest to tap the C. P. R. at Gravenhurst or Bracebridge.

MUNICIPAL MATTERS.

Several new candidates are reported longing for municipal honors in the various townships surrounding this place. In Glenelg the fight for deputy-reeveship will likely be between McMillan and Glencross, and will likely be a close contest. Mr. Geo. Lamb will likely be one of next years council, he is a good staunch man.

In Holland it is reported that W. Norton will again oppose the present deputy Mr. Shute, quite a number of new volunteers are named for Euphrasia battle, John M. Davis is in the field as a temperance candidate, kinder dry eh, sensible though, he will doubtless poll a good vote. H. Herd and Wm. Stewart are also spoken of, two good men. Markdale is quiet, none in the field yet accept the Mayer.

MUNICIPAL MATTERS IN PROTON.

The hum of the canvasser begins to be heard, and matters are assuming more definite shape. J. J. Midleton, Esq., who for nine years filled the position of Reeve, very satisfactorily, is likely to become a candidate, Mr. M. is a man of extensive municipal experience, and under his care the township flourished financially. The desire has been freely expressed that Mr. Middleton should become a candidate, and should he consent, it is almost a certainty, that he will be elected. Mr. John Agnew the present Deputy-Reeve, and Mr. John McMurdo, are likely to be the candidates for the Deputy-Reeveship. Mr, Agnew will most likely be successful, as his past record is in his favor. The councillors with the exception of Mr. Robinson, will again seek re-election. It is proposed to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Robinson's retirement with Mr. Patrick Shaw. If Mr. Shaw decides to be a candidate, the chances are that he will be elected.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsib'e for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the Standard.

Sir,—I notice in your issue of 6th inst., a letter from the present reeve touching on the affairs of the township, as I am interested in one topic touched by him. I beg to ask the Reeve the following quesitons on the Valley Road: As the council passed the by-law establishing the Valley Road on the premises of Mr. Flesher and Mr. Hogg, that each of them would give a clear free deed of the roadway through their lands, has the reeve obtained from those parties the deeds promised by each of them. If not, why not ? as it is over three years since the by-law was passed it is important to ratepayers that the reeve should see to it that these deeds are both secured as promised and not run the risk of the township perhaps having to pay for that land in the long run. If both the said deeds are not always made sure to the township will the reeve attend to it before election day and not subject the township to any tax for what should be given free as promised.

Your obedient servant,
RATEPAYERS.

Dec.12,'83.

IMPORTANT CHANGE.—We are glad to learn that our esteemed friend Mr. W. J. Rowe, has purchased the property known as "Barrhead Mills," and is now in possession. Mr. Rowe is making preparations to erect a new saw mill this winter on the sight of the old one, and will put in a circular saw, and have it in operation early next spring. This will be the best of news to farmers in this vicinity. Mr. R, we can cheerfully recommend as a man of honor besides being a good practical miller, and we wish him every success.

FIRE.—On Wednesday night about half-past ten o'clock, fire broke out in the building known as the old pottery. It has been used lately by Messrs. Stevenson & Graham as a storehouse for their wool and manufactured goods. The building and contents were entirely consumed and the loss to Messrs S. & G will be very heavy. There was an insurance on the stock of $3,-000. It is quite evident that it was the work of an incendiary as no fire had been in the building.—Orangeville Advertiser.

From Walkerton to New Westminster, B. C

Notes from a letter from J. L. Browne, photographer, late of Markdale.

NEW WESTMINSTER, Nov. 17,'83.

We left Walkerton on the 11th Oct. to Palmerston, remaining there over night; left by 6 o'clock train the following morning arriving in London at 11 a.m., remaining there until evening, when we took the Through Express for Chicago, crossed the line (river) at 10 p. m. by ferry the whole train on board ship, here we passed the American customs where many had a sweet old time, we passed all O. K. however and arrived in Chicago at 9 a. m. next morning. Do not like the appearance of this great city, it being smoky and foggy at best, left Chicago at 11:30 same morning via Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul R. arriving in St. Paul's the next morning in time for breakfast, this being Sunday and haying decided to remain until next morning we had a good opportunity of viewing the city. St. Pauls is the most beautiful place on our trip, we walked over the Mississippi river by bridge to a bluff from which the whole city can be seen on the opposite side of the river, here all kinds of labour as well as pleasure is entered into and stores kept open throughout the Sabbath day. At 8 a. m. we got aboard the Mandana express arriving at the latter place at 7:30 next morning and from thence per emigrant train for Portland. Here we enter upon the longest, dreariest, and yet the most beantiful scenery of the whole trip. The Cascade and Rocky Mountains and the Mississippi Snake, Missouri, Columbia and Frazer rivers. Talk about the Queens Valley and Eugenia Falls, why they are simply no where compared with the scenery along the Columbia from Wallula Junction to Portland, where you can see more scenery every five minutes than in Canada all together, besides the mountains over which the train runs, sometimes the track is as steep as the roof of some houses, while you have winter and summer about every 15 minutes, you go up into the snow line then down to the warm and sunny valley. Whe have seen drifts of snow, had on overcoats, and in a few minutes into a warm and sunny atmosphere. In crossing the rockies at St. Helena, which is the capital of Montana, you think you were as high as it was possible to be, yet you can see the peaks towering thousands of feet above you on one side while the ravine is thousands of feet below on the other side. This is inhabited only by Bear, Eagle, Coyatle, Wolves &c. A great mistake is here made by travellers in attempting to measure distance by sight, for instance we guessed a certain snow capped peak to be 100 yards above the track, some said half a mile, when the conductor informed us that it was just ten miles to the top of that particular peak from the railway track. The air is so clear you can see hundreds of miles. We could see the mountains two days before we reached them. We crossed Snake River in a ferry boat at Ainsworth just a weeks run from St. Pauls; Sunday again, everything in operation, sand fences here instead of snow fences to protect the rail track. After we are fairly over the rockeys we follow the Columbia through to Portland, having seen water falls hundreds of feet high, green valleys far beneath and high mountains which are capped with snow the year round. Tresle work both high and long, tunnells many and dark, we arrived at this place safe and sound, twelve days from Walkerton, from Portland we crossed the Columbia and proceeded next morning by steamer up the river to Kalarma, thence by rail to New Tacoma, then by steamer to Victoria. This is a very pretty place about four thousand inhabitants. We left Victoria by steamer which carried us to the end of our journey, viz., New Westminister. This is a fine country to live in, there has only been one slight hoar frost since I came here, had no occasion for an overcoat at this time of year it is rather rainy and some fog but otherwise it is delightful and temperate, there seems to be no extremes either of heat or cold. The city is situated on Fraser river and is built on a rising slope from river, from my house I can see Fraser for miles both up and down, up is in the direction of Yale one hundred and twenty miles from here, down to Victoria ninety miles. I can see snow peaked mountains 35 miles off (Cascade Mountains.) I can see Mount Baker in Washington Ter. one hundred and fifty miles from here covered with snow all the year round, also mountains on Vancouver Island. Everything here is green, leaves on trees, flowers blooming in the open air, fruit not yet pulled.

JUST received new goods in Watch chains X L N T stamped, also necklets and other lines. Call and see goods and get prices. W. A. Brown, jeweller.

THE Markdale Literary and Gymnastic club will give an intertainment in Vogan's Hall, Williamsford, on Friday evening the 21st December. This promises to be the best entertainment of the kind ever given in this district. The club is over forty members strong, many of whom have made wonderful progress in horizontal bar performances, and not a few have become experts with the gloves. The show will consist of bar performances, boxing exhibitions, sentimental and comic songs, stump speeches, farces, acted by the company, together with music from the string band, which is in itself worth the whole admission, we believe a rich treat is in store for those who go, and have no doubt there will be a crowded house.

Brown's jewellry, Markdale, is headquarters for holiday and wedding presents in silver plated ware.

Credit Sale Register.

Parties getting their sale bills printed at this office will have a notice under this head free of charge.

FRIDAY, DEC. 31ST.—The executors of the late Samuel Cooper, will sell by public auction on lot 7, con. 8, Euphrasia, commencing at 1 o'clock, 3 horses, 5 cows, 10 head young cattle, pigs, sheep, &c. Terms, 12 months on approved paper, or 8 per cent off notes for cash. Geo. Noble, auctioneer.

FRIDAY, DEC. 28TH.—Valuable farm property in Glenelg, sale at the Markdale House. Moss, Falconbridge & Barwick, vendors' solicitors, Toronto.

SATURDAY, 22ND DEC.—Mr. Joseph Hynes will sell on his premises lot 19, con. 10, Euphrasia, cows, horses, sheep, implements, &c. Terms, 12 months on approved notes. Sale to commence at noon. W. J. Shepherdson, auctioneer.

LOST, Between Markdale and Mr. Dan. Blaney's, on the 27th Nov. evening, a HORSE BLANKET. The finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving it at this office.

TEACHER WANTED. For School Section No. 6, Artemesia, Male or Female holding second or third class certificate. Duties to commence on the 2nd January 1884. Apply stating salary to the trustees' secretary treasurer

JOHN HAZARD,
Flesherton Station P.O.

BERKSHIRE BOAR. A fine Thoroughbred Berkshire Boar for service at Lot 99, 2nd, West T. & S. Road, one mile west of Markdale, Terms. $1 at time of service.

R. McBRIDE.

IN THE GOODS AND CHATTELS
—OF—
Samuel Cooper,
(DECEASED.)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34, of Chapter 107, R. S. O. the creditors of Samuel Cooper, late of the township of Euphrasia, County of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 28th Aug. 1883, and all parties having claims upon his estate are, on or before the

FIRST DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1884,

to send by post, prepaid, to Geo. Richardson, Markdale P.O., in the County of Grey, one of the executors, of the personal estate and effects of deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received, or those of them which the executors then have notice.

GEO. RICHARDSON, } Executors.
JOHN LEE, }
Dated this 11th day December.

AUCTION SALE
—OF—
Valuable Farm Property
—IN THE—
TOWNSHIP OF GLENELG

Under the power of sale in a mortgage from MARTIN DUNN to the Vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale and on default of payment of the moneys thereby secured, there will be offered for sale by Public Auction, at the MARKDALE HOUSE in the

VILLAGE OF MARKDALE,
—ON—
FRIDAY, 28TH DAY DEC. 1883

at 2 o'clock p.m., by A. R. VANDUSEN, autioneer, lot number nine (9) in the eighth (8th) concession of the said township of Glenelg, containing 100 acres, more or less, about 50 acres said to be cleared, balance timbered chiefly with hardwood. On the premises are said to be a log house barn and stable.

TERMS—10 per cent. at the time of sale, 15 per cent. within one month after sale and balance secured by mortgage of the premises payable in five yearly instalments with interest at 7 per cent. yearly.

For further particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, ESQ., Flesherton, or to

MOSS, FALCONBRIDGE & BARWICK.
Vendors' Solicitors,

Toronto, Dec. 4, 1883.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.00; Spring $0.60 to $1 00; Barley, 45 to60; Peas, 65; Oats, 30c Butter, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 35c; Hay, $8 .00 ; Pork, 5.00 to 5.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 20c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

BOAR PIG. The thoroughbred boar CHESTER WHITE, will be for service at his pen, Markdale, forwith; a fine boar six months old. Terms—$1. at time of service.
168-71 WM. DOUGLASS.

NOTICE. The undersigned will be at the bank at Markdale from the 20th to the 23rd December for the purpose of collecting sale notes, as they become due at the above date. Those interested will please be prompt and save further trouble and costs.
JOHN FORD.
Annan P. O., November 8th, 1883 166-69

FARMS FOR SALE. Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clear and under ultivation. Lot 8 part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to
J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.
Oct.16.1883, 16

FARM FOR SALE. Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale. For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to 162-72 WM. MUIRHEAD,
Markdale P. O.

BERKSHIRE BOAR. An early spring pig for service at his pen, two miles south of Markdale. Terms, 75 cents at time of service, otherwise $1.
CHAS. LITTLEJOHNS.

FARM FOR SALE. Lot 20, con. 12, Artemesia, containing 100 acres, 80 acres cleared, fenced and under cultivation balance hardwood bush, frame house and rame barn, young orchard bearing, soil clay loam. for further particulars apply to JOHN ROWE on the premises, or by letter to Vandeleur P. O. 169-tf.

MARKDALE HOUSE,
MARKDALE, - - ONT.
MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES
THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION.

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant
WORK THE YEAR ROUND.
Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address
STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

JOHN MONTGOMERY
BAKER.

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUM CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand,

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and CHRISTMAS - TOYS.

BRIDES' CAKES
supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169-90.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personally, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Business is not quite so brisk the past week.

Teas at your own price for the next 60 days at Trimble & Wright's.

Dr. Sproule, M.P., moved into his magnificent residence yesterday.

Candies and Christmas toys in endless variety at Montgomery's Bakery.

Mr. Jas. Elliott sold a dressed hog in this village last week which weighed 502 lbs.

Quite a stir has been made in business in Holland Centre by Mr. H. Foster, in grain buying.

Young man or old man if you want to buy a nobby suit of clothes go direct to Reynold's & Son.

The next sittings of division court, No. 5, will be held in Flesherton, on Thursday January 24th, 1884.

N. B.—All parties indebted to the undersigned will please call and settle forthwith and save trouble and costs, Wilson Benson.

A Choice assortment of new Scotch and Canadian tweeds just arrived at Trimble & Wright's, see them they are nobby goods.

Bargains.—Reynolds & Son have the cheapest and best line of Canadian tweeds in the county of Grey. Come in and see them.

There is no change in the grain market since last week except the lower grades of wheat, which have improved 10 cents per bushel.

The Social last night at the Old Presbyterian church was will attended and a success in every way, we regret being unable to be present.

Reynolds & Son have just received a fresh supply of groceries for Xmas trade. A general supply of Xmas goods just to hand.

G. Grant, is fitting up one end of his spacious plaining factory up stairs for a furniture show room where he will remove his furniture store shortly.

The Chronicle and Review of Durham devote from one to two columns per week to advertising each other. We presume they do it cheaply, editors should of course help each other.

Livery.—J. H. Hull is bound to run his livery for all its worth. He has recently erected new stables and a fine carriage house, and is having several more fine rigs made to order. His new livery is very conveniently located about half way between the Standard office and the railway station on mill street. He is fitting up an office in communication with the carrage house and intends having telephone connection with each hotel and also the railway station. There's nothing like push.

For first class axe handles go to Finnerty's shop, Elizabeth st., opposite the bank, Markdale. You can bring your own timber and have them made to order, or you can get them all ready made at the shop. Sign of the Big Axe Handle. 169-72

In Dr. Christoe's communication last week there were a number of typic errors. a list of which the Dr. sent for correction, but think it scarcely necessary to publish them, as probably very few would have preserved last week's paper to compare.

Dentistry.—T. F. Brown, L. D. S., of Woodstock, will be in Markdale on and after the 15th December for two weeks, filling, extracting, plate work &c satisfactory done. Charge moderate office at W. A. Brown's Jewellry Store.

Vomited a Frog.—Mrs. G. Best, of Artemesia, has been ill for two years. For considerable part of the time she has been under medical treatment. A few days ago she vomited a frog, an inch and a half long. It lived about two hours. It is now in the possession of Dr. Griffin, of Dundalk.—Dundalk Herald.

Another Change.—Mr. J. H. Hull now runs a union bus to all trains. The hotels have ceased driving free busses, and passengers will in future be required to pay a trifle for their passage from the station to any portion of the town to which they wish to be conveyed. This is perhaps the better way after all.

Notwithstanding the continued dark cloudy weather which has prevailed this fall our photographer, Mr. Hamilton is turning out exceedingly clear and life-like pictures in various sizes. Seldom do we see anything like as good work executed in a country place, in fact it will compare favorably with the best of city work.

Sermons will be preached in the Holland Centre Methodist church, re-opening on Sunday the 30th inst., by the Rev. Mr. Casson of Markdale. A te-ameeting will also be held on the evening following, Monday the 31st when Rev. Mr. Casson, will deliver a lecture. Admission to tea and lecture 25 cents.

The editor of the Shelburne Free Press gives us an invitation to visit them in their new premises, and adds that they have a new devil, and that their office will be lit with gas &c. Many thanks bro., it takes us however all our time to keep clear of the "old fellow," without soliciting the acquaintance of a new one,

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, $5,000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

The anniversary services of the Walters Falls Methodist church, will be held in that place on Sunday the 23rd inst., when Rev. W. Casson, of Markdale, will preach morning and evening. The annual tea meeting will be held on Christmas day when a number of reverend and other gentlemen will give addresses. Good music will also be provided. Tea served at 5 p. m. Tickets 25 cents.

The Missionary meeting of the Methodist church was held in Markdale on Wednesday evening last, and was the best ever held in this place. Rev. Mr. Howell, of Owen Sound delivered a most eloquent and comprehensive address, while Rev. Dr. Young, president of Manitoba conference gave a very interesting account of the work in the North West together with numerous and thrilling narratives of pioneer life in the Prairie Province. The very best of order prevailed throughout, and the subscriptions were much in advance of former years.

Trimble & Wright show this week the largest and best selected stock of black and colored velveteens ever brought into Markdale. Every lady should see them prices very low considering quality.

The Thornbury rink is now completed, and is a credit to the promoters of the scheme. It is 190 feet long and 90 feet wide, with two entrances, two dressing rooms, a refreshment room, a gallery and a Band Stand. We understand that the rink will be open to both curlers and skaters every evening and afternoon. Skater's tickets will be $1.50.—Thornbury Venture.

Liberal Conservative Assocation.—The annual meeting of the East Grey Liberal Conservative Association, for the purpose of electing officers, and transacting other important business, will be held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Friday, December the 14th, 1883. at 2 o'clock p. m. sharp. It is important that all sections of the riding be fully represented, as business affecting all parts of the riding will be discussed.

Mr. John Duncan, of Brampton, passed through the village on Friday last with a steam threshing machine and is since threshing in Glenelg about two miles from Markdale. He commenced his seasons work at Brampton and worked all the way through, having threshed 84 days previous to passing into the above neighborhood. He is giving good satisfaction. This is the first steam thresher in this section.

Social.—A good time is in store for those who attend a social to be held at Mr. Thomas Kells residence on the evening of the 18th, Tuesday. A rich program will be provided and an enjoyable time may be expected. Markdale people are expected to put in their usual generous appearence. Proceeds in aid of the Flesherton Presbyterian Church building fund.

Christmas Goods.—Our enterprising druggist is to the fore with stacks of toys of various designs and goods suitable for presents. His stock is large and attractive being much ahead of previous years. The children are already wishing for the mysterious night, and morning of gladness and mirth. See Mr. Turner & Co's. stock which is sure to satisfy, all displayed attractivly, "all to please the boy,"

To the Public.—Having sold out my wholesale liquor and grocery business I take this opportunity of returning thanks to my numerous customers for their liberal patronage during the eight years which I have done business in this place, and now I respectfully solicit for my successor Mr. Thos. McNea a continuance of your esteemed patronage. Wilson Benson, Markdale Dec, 6th, 1883.

The Methodist Church annual tea meeting which will take place on Christmas, promises to be made in advance of anything in former years in point of interest. Tea will be served in the Orange Hall commencing at 5 o'clock p. m. after which all will repair to the church when Rev. Mr. Casson will deliver his popular lecture, "Prevalent Mistakes." The choir will also render choice selections in their usual good style. The lecture will doubtless be worth 50 cts. itself. Admission 25 cents.

Great reductions in prices and big Christmas sale now going on at McFarland's, note the following: 60 boys' caps 15 cents each, old price 40; 72 men's woven caps 30c., old price 50; 200 wool clouds 15c., old price 40; one case flannel 23c., old price 35; 20 black dog skin caps $1.75, old price $3.50; 1,000 yards velvet ribbon 1c. per yd.; 46 ladies cloth jackets at close wholesale prices; 300 yards ladies' ulsterings below cost of manufacturing; 107 shawls double, all wool $2.15, old price $3.75, and thousands of other articles at similar reductions. Investigate immediately before the cheap lines are all sold out.

1883 CHRISTMAS. 1884

SANTA CLAUS

HEAD QUARTERS

MEDICAL HALL.

We desire to inform our numerous Friends and Patrons that we have received and are opening our Annual stock of Christmas Goods, Fancy Goods, Toys Books, and Chrismas Cards. Our stock of Christmas Goods this season is Larger, Cheaper and Better assorted than that of any previous season. Call and examine. Satisfaction guaranted. Liberal discount to purchasers of Lots for Christmas trees.

A. TURNER & CO.

L. O. L. No. 1045.—The following brethren were duly elected and installed officers for the above lodge for the year 1884. The lodge was then opened in the Royal Purple Order and five brethren initiated in the Royal Purple degree. The Markdale lodge is in a very prosperous condition; meetings on Friday on or before the full moon in each month. Bro. Wm. Bradey, W.M.; Bro. Thos. Elliott, D.M.; Bro. J.W. Ford, Chaplain; Bro. John Noble Rec.Sec.; Bro. Joseph Dormer, Fin. Sec.; Bro. James Elliott, Treasurer; Bro. James Dodds, Lecturer; Bro. James Nelson, Dir. of Cero.; Wm. Walker, 1st Com.

Harkaway Grange.—The annual meeting for the election of officers in the above Grange was held in Harkaway school house on the 8th inst., when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Bro. Peter Smith, Master; Bro. H. Hamilton, Overseer; Bro. J. Hawkins. jr., Lecturer: Bro. Wm. Carbett, Steward; Bro. G. Ptolmey, Chaplain; Bro. R. Elliott, Treasurer; Bro. E. W. Moore, Secretary; Bro. J. Thompson, Gatekeeper; Sister P. Smith, Ceres; Sister E. W. Moore, Pomona; Sister H. Hamilton, Flora; Sister A. Smith, Lady Asst. Steward.

Artemesia Grange.—At the December monthly meeting of Artemesia Grange No. 259, the following were elected officers: Bro. J. Weber, W. M.; Bro. Thos. Boland, Overseer; Bro J. I. Graham, Secretary; Bro. D. Graham, Lecturer; Bro. Wm. Buchanan, jr., Chaplain; Bro. J. Boland, Steward; Bro. J. Buchanan, Asst. Steward; Bro. Wm. Heath, Gatekeeper; Sister Mrs. Buchanah. sr., Ceres; Sister E. Brodie, Pomona; Sister E. Carson, Flora; Auditors, Jas. Brodie and Jas. Boland; delegate to Division Grange, J. I. Graham.—Com.

We agree with the Euphrasia man who says the age when ratepayers were content with such a platform as the following is past, for candidates seeking municipal honors, viz: "I'll do the best I can for yez." He says a candidate should put his policy in the shape of an address and have it published. You're a sensible man and we have an offer which should encourage such a course. We will published an address for any of the candidates in our neighboring townships, up to a colum in length, and supply him with 100 copies of the paper containing it for $5. In case any candidate should accept this liberal offer, they will require to notify us of the same six days before the paper is published which is to contain such address. We will also mail them to the parties desired by leaving us a list of their names and post offices.

School Entertainment.—Miss M. Williams, teacher for School Section No. 16 Euphrasia with her school gave an entertainment in the school house on Friday evening last which was a very enjoyable and well attended affair. The children assisted by Mr. Burch and the teacher sang a few selections and quite a number of dialogues and recitations were rendered in a creditable manner, Mr. D. R. Ellis, filled the chair with great acceptance. Trustees Wm. Hutchinson and Jas. Yelland made a few appropriate remarks. The receipts of the evening amounted to $11.75, which will be applied to purchasing books. maps. &c.—Com.

Vennor's Almanac for 1884, issued from the office of Montreal Gezette is to hand. Since Wiggins staked all on his great storm and made a miss, Vennor still heads the list of wether prophets, and his almanac is looked forward to by a large number of people as a guide to the weather for the ensuing winter. His predictions, may be summed up in general terms as indicating a mild winter, with little snow, and probably rains in January. Even to those who do not put faith in his predictions, it is interesting to get the almanac and note how the predictions tally with the actual weather. Besides the predictions, however, there is a great deal of interesting astronomical and other information, well worth the price of the book.

Fooled Again.—A farmer residing in Pilkington was made a fool to the extent of $100 on Tuesday last. The game played is an old one, but it proved successful. A man called on him and asked if he would sell his farm. He replied that if he could get his price, $3,500, he would sell it. The stranger agreed to take it, gay the farmer $100 to bind the bargain, and took his departure, saying that he would meet the farmer in Arthur on that evening to get out the writings. In a few hours afterwards another stranger put in an appearance and asked the farmer the same question as his predecessor had, viz., if he would sell his farm. The farmer replied that he had just sold his place to another man. The new comer expressed his regret at this, and asked how much he got for it. He was told $3,500. 'Why,' says he, 'I would give $4,000 for it.' The farmer now expressed his regret, and on solicitation of the man went to Arthur to induce purchaser No. 1 to break the bargain. He found him in the village, and on mooting the subject the stranger agreed to give back the farm for $200 or $100 more than the forfeit. The farmer agreed to this and paid the $200. He then looked around for No. 2 purchaser to close the bargain for $4,000, but he had gone, It was a put up job of the sharpers.—Herald.

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER II.—(CONTINUED.)

Mr. Rayner had entered the room so softly that we had not heard him,

"You look tired, my dearest Lola," said he, gently; "you had better go and lie down for a little while."

At the sound of her husband's voice Mrs. Rayner had shrunk back into her usual statuesque self, like a sensitive plant touched by rough fingers—so quickly too, that for a moment I almost thought, as I glanced at the placid, expressionless face, that I must have imagined the look of despair and the gesture of invitation. I timidly offered to read her to sleep, but she declined at once, almost abruptly for her, and, with some conventional thanks for my trouble, took the arm her husband held out, thanked him as he carefully wrapped round her a little shawl that she generally wore, and left the rooom with him.

After that, her reserve towards me was greater than ever; she seemed reluctant to accept the smallest service of common courtesy at my hands, and refused my offers to read to her again, under the plea that it was wasting my time, as she was hardly well enough to listen with full attention. I was hurt as well as puzzled by this; and, being too young and timid to make any further advances, the distance between me and the silent, sad lady grew greater than ever.

An attempt that Mr. Rayner made two days after the above scene to draw us together only sent us farther apart. He came into the schoolroom just as Haidee and I were finishing the day's lessons, and, after a few playful questions about her studies, dismissed her into the garden.

"The child is very like her mother in face; don't you think so?" said he. "But I am afraid she will never have her mother's strength of intellect. I see you cannot help looking surprised, Miss Christie. My wife does not give herself the airs of a clever woman. But you would not have doubted it if you had known her five years ago."

He was in one of those moods of almost embarrassing frankness, during which the only thing possible was to sit and listen quietly, with such sparing comment as would content him.

"I dare say," he continued, "it will seem almost incredible to you, who have never heard her say more than is absolutely necessary, but she was one of the most brilliant talkers I have ever met, and four years ago she wrote a book which took London by storm. If I were to tell you the nom de plume under which she wrote, you would be afraid of her, for it became at once a sort of proverb for daring of thought and expression. People who did not know her made a bogy of her, and many people who did looked with a sort of superstitious awe upon this slight, fair woman who dared to write out what she thought and believed. But they had no idea what a sensitive nature lay under the almost masculine intellect. We had a boy then"—his voice seemed to tremble a little—"two years older than Haidee. The two children had been left in the country—in the best of care, mind—while my wife and I spent the season in town; it was a duty she owed to society then, as one of its brightest ornaments. We heard that the boy was not well; but we had no idea that his illness was serious. I assure you, Miss Christie"—and he spoke with touching earnestness—"that, if my wife had known there was the slightest danger, she would have flown to her child's side without a thought of the pleasures and excitement she was leaving. Well—I can scarcely speak of it even now—the child died, after only two days' illness, away from us. It was on her return from a ball that my wife heard of it. She sank down into a chair, dumb and shivering, without a word or a tear. When at last we succeeded in rousing her from this state, she took off her beautiful jewels—you have heard she was an heiress—and flung them from her with a shudder of disgust. She has never looked at them since."

He paused for a few minutes, and I sat waiting for him to continue, too much interested to say much.

"I hoped that the depression into which she sank would wear off; but, instead, it only grew deeper. I have told you before that by an arrangement on our marriage our settled home was in the country; after her boy's death my wife would never even visit town again. When Mona was born, just before we came to this place, a change came, but not the change that I had expected. I had hoped she would reawaken to interest in life, and, perhaps, if the child had been a boy to replace the one she had lost, it would have been so. Instead of that, her apathy deepened, until now, as you see, she shuts herself from all the world and raises a barrier between herself and the life around her which to strangers is often insurmountable. I have been looking for an opportunity to tell you this, Miss Christie, as I was afraid you might have been puzzled, and perhaps offended, by her strange manner the other day when you were reading to her. When I came in, I thought you looked rather frightened, and I supposed that something you had read had recalled the grief which is always slumbering at her heart, and perhaps led to one of those outbreaks which sometimes cause me the gravest, the very gravest, anxiety."

I understood what he meant; but I would not allow myself to appear alarmed by the suggestion. Mr. Rayner went on—

"I fancied I caught sight of a wild look in her eyes, which is sometimes called up in them by a reference to the past, or even by a sudden vivid flash of memory. At such times only I, with the power of my long-tried affection, can calm her instantly. Do not imagine that she would ever be violent, but she might be incoherent enough to frighten you. Tell me, had she said anything that day before I came in which alarmed or puzzled you?"

"No, Mr. Rayner; she scarcely spoke while I read to her."

"Was there anything in what you were reading likely to call up memories of the dreadful time to which I have alluded?"

"I think not. No—none."

"I need not warn you, my dear Miss Christie, to avoid all reference to that subject, or anything that might suggest it, in talking to her, but of course without any appearance of constraint. And I am sure such a sensible girl as you are will not take needless fright at this unhappy disclosure, which I thought it safer to make to you, trusting in your discretion. I still hope that in time she may recover her old health and spirits, consent to see people, and even move away from this place for a little change, which I am sure would do her good. I have begged her to do so over and over again, always unsuccessfully. I cannot bear to be harsh to her; but there is an iron strength of resistance in that woman of strong intellect and weak frame which, I confess, even I have not yet been able to overcome. If you will allow me to advise you, do not mention that subject either to her. One of my reasons for wishing for a young governess was that I might provide her in an unobtrusive manner with cheerful society and let her get accustomed to seeing a bright young face about her; but I am afraid her obstinate reserve has so far defeated my object. However, I don't despair. Now that you know something of her history, you are more likely to sympathise with her and make some allowance for her seeming coldness. Believe me, underneath all she has a warm heart still. And I am sure you will spare a little sympathy for me, condemned to see the wife I adore living a shut up life, as it were, seeming to ignore the undying affection of which she must still be conscious."

There was something so winning in his voice and manner as he said these last words that I felt for the moment even more sorry for him than for her, and I took the hand he held out as he rose to go, and looked up with all the frank sympathy I felt. He seemed touched by it, for, as if by a sudden impulse, he stooped and let his lips lightly touch my hand; then, pressing it once more in his, with a look of almost grateful kindness, he left the room.

I was a little surprised by this demonstration, which I thought rather out of place to a dependant. But he was an impulsive man, the very opposite in all things to his cold, statuesque wife, and the union between them seemed sometimes like a bond between the dead and the living.

When I thought over all that he had told me, after he had left the room, it was impossible, even setting apart my natural inclination as a woman to put the blame on the woman, not to come to the conclusion that the fault in this most uncomfortable household was chiefly on the side of Mrs. Rayner. I had never seen a more attentive, long-suffering husband, nor a more coldly irritating wife. From all I had seen, I judged that Mr. Rayner was a sociable man, particularly alive to sympathy, fond of conversation and the society of his fellow-men. To such a man the sort of exile his wife's obstinate reserve and dislike to society condemned him to must have been specially hard to bear with patience. It was true he scoffed at the society the neighborhood offered, and made me laugh by his description of a country dinner-party, where one could almost predict with certainty what each lady would wear, and where more than half the gentlemen were clergymen, and how the talk would drift after dinner into clerical "shop," and one of the ladies would play a colorless drawing-room piece on the piano, and one of the gentlemen—a curate nearly always—would sing an unintelligible song, in a husky voice, and when told—by a lady—how well it suited his style, would reply modestly that Santley's songs always did.

But I fancied that, dull as it might be, Mr. Rayner would have been glad of more of even such society as the neighborhood afforded; and, from the bitterness with which he laughed at the paltry pride of small country gentlemen, I began to imagine that he must have been snubbed by some among them.

The first Sunday after my arrival was so wet that we could not go to church, so that I had been there a fortnight before I saw a general gathering of the inhabitants. But on the very day previous to this event I had an encounter with two of the ladies of the neighborhood which left a most unfavorable impression upon my mind. Haidee and I were taking our morning walk, when a big Newfoundland dog rushed through a gap in the hedge and frightened my poor little pupil so much that she began to scream. Then a young girl of about fourteen or fifteen, to whom the dog belonged, came up to the hedge, and said that she was sorry he had frightened the child, but that he would not hurt her. And she and I, having soothed Haidee, exchanged a little talk about the fields and her dog, and where the first blackberries were to be found, before we parted, my pupil and I going by the road while the girl remained in the field. We were only a few steps apart when I heard the voice of another girl addressing her rather sharply,

"Who was that you were talking to, Alice?'

The answer was given in a lower voice.

"Well, the other went on, "you should not have spoken to her. Don't you know she comes from the house on the marsh?"

CHAPTER III.

The shock given me by those few overheard words—"You should not have spoken to her. Don't you know she comes from the house on the p[illegible]?" was so great that I lay awake half the night, at first trying to reconcile Mr. Rayner's poetic story with the horror of everything connected with the Alders expressed by the girl to her companion, and then asking myself whether it would be wise to stay in a house to which it was plain that a mystery of some sort was clinging. At last, when my nerves were calmed somewhat and I began to feel sleepy, I made up my mind to set down those unlucky words as the prejudiced utterance of some narrow-minded country girl, to whom the least touch of unconventionality seemed a dreadful thing. However, I could not dismiss the utterance at once from my mind, and the remembrance of it sharpened my attention to the manner of the salutations that Mr. Rayner exchanged with his neighbors next day.

Although Geldham church was only a short distance from the Alders, Mrs Rayner was not strong enough to walk; so she and her husband drove there in the brougham, while Haidee and I went on foot. We started before them, and Mr. Rayner was carefully helping his wife out of the carriage when we got to the gate. There was nothing noticeable in the way in which they bowed to one person, shook hands with another, exchanged a few words with a third; then we all went into the little church, which had been erected but a few years, and of which one aisle was still unbuilt.

There was a square family pew just in front of ours, which was empty when we took our seats; but, when I rose from my knees, I found fixed upon me, with a straightforward and not very friendly stare, the round, grey eyes of a girl two or three years older than myself, whom I recognized as the owner of the voice which had said of me, "Don't you know she comes from the house on the marsh?" By her side, therefore also facing me, was the younger sister with whom I had talked; she avoided meeting my eyes, and looked rather uncomfortable. As for me, I felt that I hated them both, and was glad when the gentleman who was evidently their father changed his position so that he almost hid them from my sight. Next to him sat a stout lady, who wore a black silk mantle covered with lace and beads and a white bonnet trimmed with yellow bows and unlikely clusters of roses. My heart sank curiously when I caught side of the third person in the row, at the farther end of the pew. It was Mr. Laurence Reade, my friend of the dog-cart; and I felt as if a trusted ally had suddenly proved to be an officer in the enemy's camp. Having found myself in an uncongenial household, I had unconsciously looked forward to seeing again, at some time or other, the only person I had met since I came to Norfolk to whom no association of mystery or melancholy were attached. And now to meet him with those horrid girls! He was their brother evidently, for the elder harpooned him sharply several times for dozing during the service; but, when the sermon began and he had settled himself sideways in the corner with the plain intention of sleeping through the entire discourse, and the devout girl made a desperate lunge at him to rouse him once for all, he quietly took the weapon from her and kicked it under the seat. I rejoiced at this, and so missed the text, which was given out during the struggle. And then I missed a great deal of the sermon, for I was growing unhappy in my new home, and, as the preaching of one clergyman, especially if you are not listening particularly, sounds much like the preaching of another, it was easy to shut my eyes and fancy myself sitting with my mother in church at home in London. Presently, happening to glance around me, I caught sight of Mr. Laurence Reade in the corner of the next pew, with his arms folded, his legs crossed, and his head thrown back; and, if it had not been so very unlikely, I should have thought that he was not really asleep, but that through his half-shut eyelids he was looking at me.

When the sermon was over, and we filed out of church, I noticed that old Mr. Reade exchanged a few words with Mr. Rayner rather stiffly, while the two girls deliberately turned their heads away from us. But Mr. Laurence Reade hung back behind the rest of his family, and stooped to speak to Haidee, who was holding my hand. He asked her to give him a kiss, and she refused—and I was very glad. Of course it was my duty to rebuke her for rudeness, and to tell her to accept the attention with gratitude; but, instead, I looked carefully the other way and pretended not to be aware of the little comedy.

"Oh, Haidee, you shouldn't turn away from your friends," said he, in his musical voice, with rather more of grave reproach than the occasion required—to a child.

Mr. Rayner was on the churchyard path a little way in front of us, talking to the schoolmaster, the clergyman, and two or three of the gentlemen of the parish. He was trying to persuade them to start a penny bank, and was pointing out to them the encouragement it would give to habits of thrift, and offered to take the most of the trouble of starting it into his own hands.

The spirit of inactivity ruled at Geldham; there was no energetic curate to scandalise people by insisting that to doze through one sermon a week was but a negligent way of caring for their souls; the last vestry-meeting had dwindled into a spelling-bee, at which the doctor had been ruled out for putting only one "t" in 'committee," and had gone home vehemently affirming that his was the right way, and that of the schoolmaster, his colleagues, and the dictionary, the wrong.

It was curious to note now how they all listened coldly at first, with an aversion to the proposal strengthened by their dislike to the man who proposed it, and how, overcome by an irresistible charm in his manner of arguing as much as by the arguments themselves, they one by one from listless became interested, and not only agreed to the scheme being started, but to taking each some small share in setting it on foot. Then, parting cordially with the man they had greeted so coldly, they all dispersed; and Mr. Rayner, handsome, bright, pleased with his little triumph, turned to his wife and led her to the carriage, while Haidee and I returned as we came—on foot.

He was very severe indeed upon rustic wits and rustic governors during dinner, calling them sheep and donkeys and other things. Then he grew merry and made jokes about them, and I laughed: and, finding in me an appreciative listener, his spirits rose still higher, and I thought before dinner was over that I had never heard anyone talk more amusingly. I think Mrs. Rayner made only one remark, and that was when I was furtively wiping some tears of laughter from my eyes; she asked me—

"Do you care to go to church this afternoon, Miss Christie?"

I suppose I looked rather snubbed, for Mr. Rayner broke in—

"Poor girl, how frightened you look at the thought! Know then, Miss Christie, that it is not one of the conditions of residence under this moist but hospitable roof that you should trudge backwards and forwards to church all Sunday, with intervals of pious meditation. We never go ourselves more than once. Our last governess did, because she liked it, not because she was 'druv to it,' I assure you; and I don't suppose, I don't even hope, that the excellent Miss Parker's mantle has fallen on your quarter-of-a-century younger shoulders."

But I had quickly made up my mind that I had better go. Indeed I liked going to church; and, even if I had not acquired the taste already, the dullness of the Sunday before—which I had spent in the drawing-room with Mrs Rayner and Haidee, hearing my pupil repeat one of the Thirty-nine Articles, which I was sure she did not understand, and which I myself did not understand well enough to explain to her; and stifling my yawns for the rest of the time behind Goulburn's Personal Religion—would have made me love it. So I said I should like to go, and they said that there was no afternoon service at Geldham: but Mr. Rayner told me the way to the church at Gullinborough, the next parish, which was not far off.

It was a sultry summer afternoon, with a heavy clouded sky; but it was pleasant to be out of doors, and it was pleasant to be alone; for I found the society of little Haidee, whose shyness and reserve with me had not worn off yet, rather depressing sometimes—I had even cried a little at night over the difficulty I had in making the child fond of me. So that to be quite alone and out of the sombre atmosphere of the Alders was quite a relef. I passed the gates of a park, among the trees of which I saw a big square white house surrounded by a flower-garden; and a little further on I saw an American chair on the grass under the park trees, and a young man in a light suit, with his cravat hanging loose and his hat off, lying at full length in it. He had a cigar in his mouth and a gaudy-covered book in his hand, and on a rustic table beside him was a half-empty glass containing some liquid; and I could see that there was ice in it. Of course I only glanced that way, but I recognized the gentleman as Mr. Laurence Reade; and I could not help smiling to myself as I went on. He saw me, I think, for he started up and coughed; but I was looking the other way, and I thought it best not to hear him. As I turned the angle of the park, I glanced again at the white house, and I saw, with a little surprise, Mr. Reade running towards it.

I got to church in very good time, and, being given a seat in the chancel, I could watch the country people as they filed in; and, just as the last wheezy sound from the organ was dying away before service began, Mr. Laurence Reade, having exchanged his light suit for church-going attire, strode up the middle aisle and banged the door of his pew upon himself. And, remembering how nice the iced drink looked and how cosy the arm-chair appeared, I thought it did him great credit to come to church the second time.

The sky had grown very dark by the time service was over, and the occasional rolling of distant thunder threatened a storm. A few heavy drops fell as I stepped out of the church door, and my heart sank at the thought of the ruin a good shower would work upon my best gown, a light gray merino. It was nearly half an hour's walk to the Alders; my way lay along lanes and across fields where there was little or no shelter, and my umbrella was a small one. However there was nothing to be done but to start, hoping that the storm would not break with any violence before I got home. I had left all chance of shelter well behind me, when the rain came pouring down like sheets of water, with a sharp hissing sound which made my heart sink within me. I stopped, gathered up my skirt round me, gave a glance round to see that no one was in sight, being aware that my appearance would be neither graceful nor decorous, and then ran for my life. Before I had gone many yards, I heard some one running after me, and then Mr. Reade's voice calling, "Miss Christie!" I ran on without heeding him, ashamed of my plight; but he would not take the rebuff, and in a few more steps he had caught me up, and, taking away my small umbrella, was holding his large one over me. He opened a gate to the right that led into a field with a rough cart-track alongside the hedge.

"But this is the wrong way. I have to turn to the left, I know," said I.

"There is a shed for carts here where we shall get shelter," said he.

And in a few minutes we reached it, and I found myself sitting under a low roof on the red shaft of a cart, watching the downpour outside, while Mr. Reade shook the rain from our umbrellas. A few days before I might have found something to enjoy in this curious encounter with my friend of the dog-cart; but the rudeness and suspicion of his sisters had made me shy with him. So I merely sat there and looked straight in front of me, while he, infected by my reserve, leant against the side of the shed and looked at me. I could see—as one sees so many things, without looking—the rain-drops falling one by one from the low roof on to his hat; but I would not tell him of it.

Things went on like this for some minutes until a bright flash of lightning dazzled me and made me cry "Oh!"

"You are frightened. Let me stand in front of you," said my companion, starting forward.

"Oh, no, thank you—I am not nervous!" I replied contemptuously, when a loud peal of thunder startled me so much that I nearly fell off my seat.

He said nothing, did not even smile at my crestfallen look; but he took up his stand in front of me, giving me a fine view of his profile against the dark sky. Every minute of this awkward silence was making it more difficult for me to think of something to say.

"I wish it would leave off," I remarked stupidly, at length.

"Are you in such a hurry to get back to the Alders? It is no drier there than it is here."

"But at least one can change one's boots."

"Have you got your feet wet? Why you have on little toy town-boots not fit to walk down a country-lane in? You will be laid up with rheumatic fever, or something of the kind," said he anxiously, looking vaguely about him for dry boots.

"Oh, no, no—they are much thicker than they look!" said I. "It isn't that. But Mr. Rayner will be anxious."

"Mr. Rayner; and Mrs. Rayner, won't she be anxious too?"

(TO BE CONTINUED)

Worth More than His Note.

Emery Storrs, the reparteeist, tells a story of a gentleman who bought a bill of goods for $1,500. The firm being suspicious of their customer, put $300 on the usual prices. The customer could only raise $1,200, which was the regular rate, the rest being in excess. He said he would give his note for the remainder, and they took it. Then he said he was in the habit of receiving a present when he made so large a bill. They gave him a necktie. He bitterly objected to such a mean little present. The proprietors then concluded to present him with his note for $300. He took it with a look of cunning and then said:

"Well, Mr. Alexanders, I think I will prefer the necktie, if it's just the same to you."

Malaria and Medicine.

No single case of premature death, of life-long misery, and of loss of working power has ever equalled malaria. There is some reason to think that it was from personal experience of the ague, and the hepatic derangements consequent upon it, that Descartes got his profound conviction of ill health being the greatest of all hindrances to the wisdom and capability of the individual. There can, at least, be hardly any question that malaria is, and always has been, the largest single element in the miseries of mankind. Fortunately, malarial fever has almost disappeared from Great Britain, and it has hardly existed in some of our colonies, particularly the Australasian; it has decreased considerably in many parts of Northern Europe and the United States. Again, there is a drug, cinchona bark, with its products, which has a great power over the course of the fever. The cultivation of the cinchona-tree is now a great industry both in the Eastern and Western Hemispheres, and whatever quinine or other products of the bark can do for malarious sickness will be, at no distant time, a benefit that may be shared by all but the very poorest and the races less accessible to civilization. Lastly, the symptoms, course, and complications of the intermittent and remittent fevers which malaria cause are known with all the precision that can be wished. What share, then, has medicine had in dealing with this destroyer of human happiness in the past, and what is the attitude of medicine toward malaria at present?

The almost total extinction of malaria at home, and its decrease abroad, have been brought about in the ordinary course of draining and cultivating the soil, and by wise attention to the planting or conservation of trees. There is a characteristic passage at the end of Kingsley's novel "Hereward," in which he commemorates his hero as the first of the new English "who, by the inspiration of God, began to drain the fens." The draining of the fens and all such achievements throughout the world have brought better health with them, but neither the doctors nor even the sanitarians have been the primary moving forces. Again, the medicinal uses of cinchona-bark were known first to the indigenous inhabitants of the Peruvian Andes, where the trees are native and where the ague is common; and it was the Jesuits who introduced it widely into Europe (1620) and the East. The story of the reception of this remedy by the medical profession has its unpleasant side. The arch-stupidities of the Paris faculty, who still live for the amusement of the world in Moliere's comedies, opposed it with their united weight. Court physicians in other European capitals than France assailed it with abuse, and no one wrote more nonsense about it than Gideon Harvey, the physician of Charles II. The new remedy apart from its merits, fell in with the views of the Paracelsists, and disagreed with the views of the Galenists, and was recommended or condemned accordingly. Even the great Stahl, nearly a century after cinchona was first brought to Spain, would have none of it, and, in his servitude to his theories, he even went so far as to make use of Gideon Harvey's ignorant tirade against the drug by reprinting it in German. As late as 1729, an excellent physician of Breslau, Kanold, whose writings on epidemics are still valuable for their comprehensive grasp, declared in his last illness (a "pernicious quartan") that he would sooner die than make use of a remedy which went so directly against his principles! The world, of course, gave little heed to those inane disputations; the value of cinchona was beyond the power of the faculty either to discover or to obscure. But, on behalf of the faculty, it remains to add that cinchona found powerful advocates from the first; and it will not surprise any to be told that these were generally the men whom medical history, on other grounds as well, has extolled or, at any rate, saved from oblivion. Such were Sydenham and Morton in London, Albertini in Bologna, Peyer in Schaffhausen, and Werlhoff in Hanover. The therapeutic position of cinchona was firmly established by Torti's treatise on the treatment of periodical fevers, published at Modena in 1709.

The next step in the relief of malarial sickness on the grand scale was the extraction of alkaloid quinine from the cinchona-bark. The powdered bark was not only very unpalatable, but it was cumbrous to carry and dispense, and, although the principle of the remedy remained the same, it has proved of infinitely greater service in the form of quinine, and in the form of the cheap alkaloidal mixture known in Bengal as "quinetum." The first extraction of an alkaloid was in the case of morphia, from opium, in 1805; the discoverer was an apothecary of Hamelen, who was rewarded rather better than the celebrated piper of that town, for the French Academy of Sciences voted him 2,000 francs. Quinine was discovered in 1820 by the French chemists Pelletier and Caventou. The sciences and arts of botany and practical forestry, chemistry and practical pharmacy, are now all concerned in the production of this most invaluable of remedies. The commerce of the world has taken cinchona in hand, and there are now plantations of the trees not unworthy to be named beside those of coffee and tea.—The Quarterly Review.

A Hygienic Colony.

Who will project a hygienic colony for the North-West? There is a temperance colony, and certain religious bodies it appears have their colonies: why not a colony on a strictly public health basis? It would involve the selection of a salubrious site, perfect drainage of the soil, the construction of houses, whether small or large, only on the most approved sanitary principles, perfect sewerage and scavenging and a pure water. It would be necessary for all the individuals of the colony to conform to individual or personal health laws. To use only good, wholesome food, and to observe temperance in all things; in dress, to regard health as of the first consideration, and to regard the bath, regular exercise and rest as essential to health. The result fifty or one hundred years hence of the carrying out of such a project would be looked forward to with a good deal of interest by those who would be likely to live to witness it.—Canadian Sanitary Journal.

THE GREAT NORTH-WEST.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company's Produce Exhibition Car.

A Conservatory on Wheels—The Energy and Enterprise of a Western Railway Which Sends Dakota's Products on an Exhibition Tour.

One of the most notable but quiet enterprises for advertising purposes which any state or railroad can boast of, has been quietly going on in the midst of our Ontario farmers. The Milwaukee and St. Paul railway company, conceiving the idea that the best way to surmount the reports of hard winters, blizzards and small crops, was to exhibit to the farmers the class mostly interested) some of the many products which are the pride of

THE STATE OF DAKOTA.

This vast territory contains 150,932 square miles or 96,500,000 of acres of the best farming land to be found in North America. It is situated between the 42nd and 49th degrees of north latitude and the 19th and 29th degrees of longitude west of Washington. The extent of this state is more than France and twice as large as Great Britain and Ireland. That this territory has the most unbounded resources could easily be seen, if space would admit of the enumeration of its mineral resources, and as well as from the annual report of its products from all sources. Those figures although correct, could not convince any person more plainly than the exhibit made in the fine large car of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway company, which is now visiting (for the benefit of farmers) the various towns and cities in Ontario. A brief description of this elegant may not be out of place.

PRODUCE EXHIBITION CAR

Upon entering the car from either end, one cannot help feeling he has suddenly entered a conservatory arrayed in the most artistic manner, wreaths of corn, wheat, tobacco leaf and many grains and grasses, are woven and interwoven around roof and sides, in a thorough and artistic manner, bouquets of all styles made from earth's fruits are scattered around most profusely, until one can scarcely believe he is not attending the exhibit of a French school of vegetable cookery, preparatory to the cooking process. One of the most notable ornaments in the car is a large bell hung in the centre of the car the lower part of which is made of wheat, corn rye, grasses, etc., and the upper part of corn and vegetables, for a clapper or hammer, a fine clapper-shaped squash is hung in the centre by a blue ribbon, under this bell a prize in money will be given to the loving couple who will join in the bonds of matrimony.

A FEW GOOD THINGS TO SEE.

Corn in twelve varieties, including pop corn and the Dent corn, of which some very fine samples are shown, the Flint corn cobs, measuring sixteen inches in length. Radishes of the size of large rats and similarly shaped, turnips, carrots and rutabaga in endless variety, the Little Queen, Mother Hubbard, Turban, Scollop and other varieties of squashes. The pumpkin display was very fine, $30 having been offered for one sample of sweet pumpkins. In the potatoe department the Early Ohio was the most prominent, not a single potato weighed less than two pounds, some of them running to three pounds; there were the Snow Flake, White Elephant, White Star, Peach Blow, Burbank, Seedling, Western Red, and Victor. The display of grasses, Prairie red top, five feet in height, Blue joint, seven feet in height, Slough grasses and other varieties are woven in all directions as well as standing in the sheaf. Sweet potatoes and tobacco grown at Yanktown, timothy, clover, onions of several varieties, including the Weathersfield, Yellow Denver, Silver Skin, and Early Red, some very fine citrons, watermelons and crab apples. One long, clean looking cotton wood tree, about 20 feet long, attracts unusual attention; it was planted two years ago from a slip, and is now 3½ inches in diameter, which clearly shows the speed with which a young plant will quietly increase in value. Some very fine samples of timber grown from seed are displayed in many varieties, including soft maple, box elder, white ash, cotton wood, and apple, samples of Okra, Martinua, hops, parsnips, and cucumbers of two varieties.

THE GRAIN DISPLAY

is particularly fine, both in sheaves and bottles, and many varieties are shown, particularly the Dakota, No. 1 hard, Mediterranean Spring, and other early wheat grown around Yankton are very conspicuous. Both black and white oats are displayed, and among the latter are some exceedingly fine samples of White Russian, Flax seed, buckwheat, rye, barley, peas and berries can be found in another department, and also samples of fine, white flour from Chamberlain and ground at the mills of J. F. Sisson & Co. Sorghum or sugar cane and broom corn of great length decorate the roof of the car, and are interwoven with small sheafs of wheat cut at full length. On the bottom of the car are some very fine samples of Sioux Falls granite. The stone is compact and polishes to a high degree and is used in the erection of the finest structures at St. Paul and Minneapolis, Minn. The finest class of stone for art work in the collection is the conglomerated stone which once polished for table tops, mantlepieces, etc., would become the rage rapidly. The stone from which Indians make their pipes is also shown, and as a curiosity the autograph of the noted Sitting Bull, written in a plain school boy hand, also a handsome and curious walking cane cut on the Missouri river is one of the greatest of curiosities.

CLIMATE, STORMS AND RAINS

So much has been said in respect to the blizzards and heavy storms that are claimed for Dakota that a few statistics will not be amiss, and the reader should bear in mind that on account of the vastness of the territory a great difference will be found to exist between the region north of the 47th parallel, and that south of it. In southeastern Dakota the climate in many respects resembles that of Indiana, Ohio, Iowa and southern Minnesota, with a greater number of sunny, and a less number of rainy days. The summers are agreeable, and little inconvenience is experienced from heat, owing to the prairie breezes which prevail during the warmer months. The fir is pure and dry in summer, clear and bracing in winter, and affords remarkable relief to persons suffering from incipient consumption, etc. Malarial diseases are wholly unknown. The winters are not severe, and the climate during the whole year compares more than favorably with the states before mentioned. From the tabulated statement of the signal office at Washington for a period covering 87 years, it is found that not a single cyclone has touched this territory whilst other states and territories have suffered 600 tornadoes, particularly in Kansas, Missouri, Illinois, Ohio and Indiana. That this territory has become a favored one for farming there is no doubt, and that Canadians have found it particularly so will be shown by the following returns made in 1880:

United Kingdom and Canada	17,574
Scandinavian countries	17,869
German empire	7,262
Russia	6,493
All other foreign countries	2,597
Total	51,795

The increase in population in one year, from 1881 to 1882, was 43,354. With such an increase in population any person would think the answer to all false reports a pretty plain one, for not only has the population of Dakota increased but it is found that under the liberal homesteads and other laws of the United States its "free lands" are rapidly being disposed of. The report shows that of 15,669,848 acres of public lands entered under the various acts during the period above mentioned, not less than 4,568,919 acres or nearly one-third were disposed of in Dakota alone. Of the total acreage of 6,347,729, entered under the homestead act in twenty-four states and territories 2,187,415, or more than one-third was taken up in Dakota, and that under the timber act more than one-half of the 2,609,797 acres disposed of were entered in this territory. The rapid growth of this territory is mainly due to the energy, enterprise and business push of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Co., which has run its rails in all directions through the territory, and which does not hesitate to run forty and fifty miles of a branch track when accommodation is wanted. Particularly is this noticed at Roscoe. The company has a regular emigration bureau attached to its service, and keeps regular travelling agents to attend to the wants of emigrants alone. No person not employed by the company is allowed in or around the company's emigration offices or railroads, and its system of detectives very soon ferret out any persons desirous of playing tricks upon emigrants. Mitchell and Aberdeen are the two great headquarters for the emigrants where the company's offices are situated. The company's produce exhibition car has been in Ontario under the direct supervision of M. H. Mercer of the emigration department of the road and Mr. Wallace Heafford, Canadian passenger agent of the company.—Toronto World, Oct 27th, 1883.

For descriptive pamphlets and other matter of interest regarding Dakota or the North-west Territories, send letter or postal to Wm. Wallace Heafford, Canadian Passenger Agent, Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway, 28 Front Street, East, Toronto, Ontario, who will cheerfully furnish you by return mail.

A TOTAL ECLIPSE

of all other medicines by Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is approaching. Unrivalled in bilious disorders, impure blood, and consumption, which is scrofulous disease of the lungs.

"Johnny," said the teacher, "a lie can be acted as well as told. Now, if your father were to put sand in his sugar and sell it, he would be acting a lie and doing very wrong." "That's what mother told him," said Johnny impetuously, "and he said he didn't care."

Young men or middle aged ones, suffering from nervous debility and kindred weaknesses should send three stamps for Part VII of World's Dispensary Dime Series of books. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

Modern Elijah, who inclines to be facetious—"I'm getting to be pretty bald, ain't I? Guess you'll have to cut my hair for about half-price hereafter, eh?" Tonsorial artist, who is equal to the emergency, "Oh, no, sir; we always charge double when we have to hunt for the hair!"

GET THE ORIGINAL.

Dr. Pierce's "Pellets" — the original "Little Liver Pills" (sugar-coated) — cure sick and bilious headache, sour stomach, and bilious attacks.

During the thick fog the other evening Gom Gom took a poor blind man by the hand and led him to his door. Telling the story to a friend on the following day, he cried:—"It is terrible to be blind in such a fog."

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

"We are going to have a mild winter, Mrs. Varley; every body says so," remarked Mrs. Seaton. Mrs. Varley merely acknowleged the information with an "Ah," but when Mrs. Seaton had gone she turned to her companion and said: "You know what that remark means, don't you? Her husband's too stingy to buy her a new set of furs."

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollors, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator, Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Of all the actions of a man's life, his marriage least concerns other people; yet, of all actions of his life, it is most meddled with by other people.

PECTORIA! Pectoria Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per Bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria; all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

The strange sunsets of the past few evenings have doubtless been caused by the efforts of the sun to set himself by standard time.

"Man wants but little here below," wrote Oliver Goldsmith, but Oliver didn't stop to consider that the man who is going to build a house wants a lot.

Whenever you see a cannibal with thick lips trotting around with a circus you can put him down as nothing more than a beef-eater. The true cannibal has thin lips and a nose half long enough to pull.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere

Coke and Blackstone are supposed to be the legal authorities most consulted by coal dealers.

For a three cent stamp, Wilson Chemical Co., Kingston, Ont., will send to any address 27 hand colored samples of Triangle Dyes, with directions for use and other information valuable to every house-wife.

The Brooklyn Bridge has already got to be re-floored. The story goes that Jay Gould "cornered" all the Georgia pine of the requisite grade in the market, to spite Ex-Mayor Grace, who had the contract; and it would seem that the latter got even out of the public.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto Canada. A. P. 155.

CARRIAGE SHOP FOR SALE—IN THE village of Preston; doing a good trade; no opposition; satisfactory reasons for selling. HAMACHER & SIMPSON, Preston.

THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by

THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.,

78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN TO grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hip, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church St., Toronto.

The Queen's LAUNDRY BAR

ASK FOR IT and TAKE NO OTHER.

Beware of Imitations.

TRADE MARK. Made by The Albert Toilet Soap Co.

BEST BOILER PLATE.

For sale low, the following sizes suitable for Boilers, Safes, Flumes, Tanks, &c., &c., 5-16 inch thick, 6x3, 8x3, 9x3, 10x3, 6x2½ 7x2½ 8x2½ 9x2½.

SEND FOR PRICES

Copland & McLaren,

Corner Wellington & Grey Nun Sts., Montreal.

F. E. DIXON & CO.,

Manufacturers of Star Rivet

Leather Belting!

70 King Street, East, Toronto

Large double Driving Belts a specialty. Send for Price Lists and Discounts.

Dominion Line of Steamships.

Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months.

QUEBEC TO LIVERPOOL.

Dominion,	Nov. 17	Toronto,	Nov. 21

PORTLAND TO LIVERPOOL.

Sarnia,	Dec. 20	Oregon,	Dec. 10
Ontario,	" 13	Dominion,	" 27

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool, $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $108, $117, $144, according to steamer and berth. Intermediate, $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent, or local agents of the Company, or to

DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,

General Agents, Montreal.

CONSUMPTION!

Asthma, Bronchitis, Throat Diseases, and Catarrh.

Together with diseases of the Eye, Ear and Heart, successfully treated at the Ontario Pulmonary Institute, 274, 276 and 278 Jarvis street, Toronto, Ont.

M. HILTON WILLIAMS, M.D., M.C.P.S.O., PROPRIETOR.

Our system of practice is by Medicated Inhalations, combined with proper constitutional remedies. Over 40,000 cases treated during the past 18 years.

If impossible to call personally for an examination, write for list of Questions and a copy of our new Medical Treatise. Address, ONTARIO PULMONARY INSTITUTE, 274, 276 and 278 Jarvis Street, Toronto, Ontario.

THE MUTUAL MARRIAGE ENDOWMENT Association of Ontario. Head Office London, Ont. Issues certificates from $250 to $3,000 payable at marriage. A good investment for young people of either sex. Send for particulars. W. I. IMLACH, Secretary, Albion Block, London.

MATTHEWS BROS. & CO., 93 YONGE Street, Toronto. Mail prepaid, assorted packages of beautiful Christmas and New Year Cards.

25 cards, assorted,	mostly small,	$ 25
25 cards, assorted,	medium,	50
25 cards, assorted,	larger,	1.00
25 cards, assorted,	fine,	2.00

No two cards alike. Cash to be sent with order.

SANTA CLAUS

HAS LEFT TWO CAR LOADS OF

TOYS, DOLLS, GAMES, & NOVELTIES

—AT THE—

GREAT TOY EMPORIUM,

213 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.

For Christmas Trees, Church Fairs, Bazaars, Festivals, Fish Ponds, and Grab Bags. I will send by express, charges paid, as follows. Good Value.

200 Well Assorted Toys		$10 00
150 "	" Better Grade	10 00
100 "	" Still Better	10 00
1 Doz. Langtry Dolls 23 in. long		2 25
1 Doz Beautiful Shell Goods Assorted		2 25

Address all orders to C. W. DENNIS 7 and 10 cent Multiple Store, 213 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.

BEAVER S. S. LINE

WEEKLY BETWEEN

Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,

CALLING AT

QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST

For lowest rates and all particulars apply to

Sam. Osborne & Co., 40 Yonge street Toronto.

ELM CITY HARNESS OIL.

BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.

Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it.

F. F. DALLEY & CO.,

HAMILTON, ONTARIO.

Sole Agents for the Dominion

FUN AND MYSTERY

ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS.

Have you seen it? The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks, Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards;" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards: the Star Puzzle: 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle: 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music; 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle: the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great 25 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.

ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail, postpaid. Two Packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

DR HOFFMAN'S GERMAN BITTERS

50c. | A GENUINE GERMAN DYSPEPSIA CURE. | 50c.

No injurious mineral, no poison, no irritating acid.

Acts on a different principle from other Bitters.

Possesses tonic, aperient and Digestive properties, and a principle that soothes the inflamed membranes, opens up the absorbing vessels of the stomach and Liver, cures Dyspepsia, Catarrh of the Stomach, Liver Complaint, Constipation, &c.

Wm. Goldsmith, of Collingwood, Ont., suffered for years with the worst form of Dyspepsia; tried physicians and every remedy advertised without benefit. One bottle of Hoffman's German Bitters cured him.

Wholesale by Lyman Brothers, and Northrop & Lyman, Toronto.

FOR SALE.—IMPROVED SYNDICATE Farm, nine miles from Brandon, Manitoba, must be sold. S. JAMES, 20 Union Block, Toronto St., Toronto.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION

Furnishes indemnity against loss of time by sickness or accident at comparatively low rates. For particulars enclose stamp to the secretary, Toronto, Ont.

AGENTS WANTED

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS

—OF THE—

WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among the Largest and Fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety, Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect: and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself.

For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto.

OAKLAWN FARM,

The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.

PERCHERON HORSES

WORTH $2,500,000.00

Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by

M. W. DUNHAM,

Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,

35 miles West of Chicago on C. & N.-W. Ry.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue NO. 20.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black silks, that is our dollar silk will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50, silk only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50, blanket for $4; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $1.75, net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL dry-goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures: all goods sold for cash only, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS—or a 10 cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, shirtings, grey flannels, table napkins. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS, silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and Cloored, cashmeres, tweeds, cloakings. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

THE RES

HORSE REMEDIES

are those made by

TRADE MARK.

THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO

Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5. 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c.; 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment, 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th Street, N.Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to

ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,

Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York

POPULAR STORIES!

ONE HALF CENT EACH.

1 Death and Marriage.
2 The Broken Dyke.
3 Saved by Telegraph.
4 How She Lost Him.
5 My Deaf Wife and Aunt.
6 Slimkin's Revenge.
7 The Chemist's Story.
8 Crimes of the Ocean.
9 Gurith, the Norwegian Beauty.
10 Adalina the Coquette.
11 A Terrible Story.
12 The Trapper's Death.
13 The Rivals.
14 Lynx Eyes.
15 Under False Colors.
16 Adventure of a Bachelor.
17 A Race for Life.
18 Murder's Hollow.
19 All's Well That End's Well.
20 Cheated of the Price.
21 The Father's Secret.
22 The Husband and the Lover.
23 A Sea Adventure.
24 Love Among the Dishes.
25 Salem Witchcraft.
26 A Mexican Adventure.
27 Good Friends Again.
28 No Beggars Need Apply.
29 A Nebraska Adventure.
30 The Meeting.
31 The tale of Stanislaus.
32 Diamond Cut Diamond.
33 Left Till Called For.
34 A Moustache, and what came of it.
35 The Well of Destiny.
36 Making it Hot for Them.
37 Lion and the Shark.
38 Left to Die.
39 Mary's Mistake.
40 Imprisoned.
41 Under the Waves.
42 A Married Flirt.
43 It was Too Late.
44 Out Upon the Line.
45 The Confessed Murderer.
46 A Strange Revenge.
47 I Alone am Guilty.
48 Western Drover's Story.
49 The Old Miller's Daughter.
50 The Pretty Cousin.

We will mail all the above stories on receipt of 25c; 6 Lots for $1.00; 12 Lots for $2.00. We positively will not take an order for less than the whole 50 stories.

JAS. LEE & CO., MONTREAL, P. Q.

WATCH CHARMS

These new, elegant and unique little beauties gotten up in Ivory to be worn on watch guards, neck-chains or as ornaments and keepsakes, and each contains "The Creed," "Lord's Prayer," "Ten Commandments," and other Scriptural mottoes; also, "Foreign and American Scenery." "Beautiful Ladies.', "Groups." "Public Buildings," etc., etc., which upon looking through the Charm is magnified. By mail 2 for 25cts., 1 doz. $1.00, 6 doz. $4.60, 1 gross $7.00.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q

STARCH POLISH.

For Polishing Collars, Shirt Bosoms Lace Curtains, Cuffs, etc.

Putting on the same gloss and hard pearl finish as when bought at the store new at a cost of only one cent per week. Everybody wants it, and any one can sell it. Reasons why: 1st. It enables any woman to polish linen equal to a Chinaman. 2nd. It causes the iron to run smoothly and prevents iron rust. 3rd. It makes old linen look like new. 4th. It gives the linen such a smooth, glossy finish, that dust and dirt will not stick to it. 5th. It saves a woman from two to four hours' hard work each week. The Polish is packed in a slide box containing 24 lozenges, which will last an ordinary family six months. Terms to agents: Samples by mail 25c., 1 dozen by express $1.25, 6 dozen by express $7.00, 12 dozen by express $12.00.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

CHEAP!

15 sheets Note Paper, 15 Envelopes, Penholder, 1 Lead Pencil, 1 Cold Water Pen and a handsome piece of Jewellery mailed for 25c. 1 doz. by express, $1.50.

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

Contter's Microscope.

No Student, Merchant, Mechanic, Agriculturist, Professional man or school child should be without it. Months of study of Natural History from books will not give the practical knowledge that a few minutes' use of the Microscope affords. By mail postpaid, 30c; 3 for 75; 1 doz., $2.50.

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

LIFE IN THE BACKWOODS.

A guide to the successful hunting and trapping of all kinds of animals. It gives the right season for trapping; how to make, set and bait all kinds of traps; traps for minks, weasels, skunks, hawks, owls, gophers, birds, squirrels, musk-rats, foxes, rabbits, racoons, etc.; how to make and use bird lime. It gives the English secrets of catching alive all kinds of birds; it tells how to know the true value of skins, as well as how to skin all animals deodorize, stretch and cure them; to dress and tan skins, fur and leather; to tan with or without the hair; to skin and stuff birds; baits and hooks for fishing; how to fish systematically without nets, lines, spears, snares, "bobs" or bait, a great secret; how to choose and clean guns; how to breed minks for their skins (hundreds of dollars can be made by any boy or young man who knows how to breed minks), etc. Sent postpaid for 20c., 3 for 50c., 6 for 80c.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal,

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE—$1.00—DOLLAR.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, . . . $7.00 | Half Year, . . . $3.50

Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to THE WEEKLY GLOBE, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),

TORONTO.

The Great Dollar Paper.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion.

The Paper for the Farmer.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

MARKDALE

Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and deliivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-ly

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BooT & ShoE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH. GOING SOUTH

Read Down. A.M.	P.M.		Read Up. A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	3 30	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

Woman Suffrage.

MILTON, Dec. 5.—At the meeting of the County Council of Halton, held here yesterday, it was resolved that a petition from that body should be forwarded for presentation at the next session of the Local Legislature, praying that the municipal and parliamentary franchise should be granted to women having the property qualification which now gives men the same privilege.

Grip's Comic Almanac for 1884.

This popular publication (fifth year) comes to us in all the glory of an illuminated cover, and is decidedly the best yet published. It is full of sparkling fun, profusely illustrated with humorous cuts. The "Essays by little Tommy," given in that precocious youngster's own handwriting, with pictures by himself, are unique specimens of comic work: the weather predictions are racy as usual, and the general miscellany is excellent. The advertisements are restricted to the last pages, and, as a consequence, the appearence of the book typographically is greatly improved. We advise every one of our readers to secure a copy of this genuine Canadian work, which costs only twenty five cents.

Everybody wouldn't make a good editor after all, although he thinks he would. Some people can't write even a small advertisement correctly as is evidenced by the following which lately appeared in a popular and prominent newspaper. "Mrs.——having cast off clothes of every discription, now solicits immediate inspection."

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

TRIMBLE &

WRIGHT

has an immense stock of goods, every department is filled to overflowing, and their premises is perhaps the largest north of Toronto, their customers are the best class, many of whom come over 15 miles and they say it pays them well,

Their heads are level;
For style and pricc we lead the way,
And offer you choice goods to day.

TRIMBLE &

WRIGHT.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,

Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

IN

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we area not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 15. MARKDALE, ONT., DEC. 20, 1883. No. 171

The Markdale Standard

Issued every Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

Terms—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 yr.	6 mo.	3 mo.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inches space	7 00	4 00
Three inches space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequent insertion.

Strayanimals &c., advertised 3 weeks for three insertions. Not to exceed twelve lines.

JOB PRINTING.

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Sydney's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Grant, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University, Vict. College,
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Aylesh Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 164

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c. Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST. J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICE—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St. Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in MARKDALE;
over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Money to loan on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown,

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE.
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

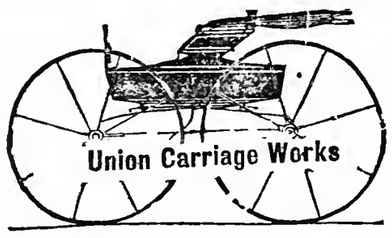
COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at the STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.



GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time
consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.
159-3m

District Dashes.

Shelburne has ten establishments lit with gas. Its streets are also supplied with lamps, this does not speak bad for their deeds.

Some Dundalk man writes to the Grey Review giving a list of buildings erected this season amounting to the value of $40,000. They must have an elastic manufactory, and doubtless this man has been investing in that commodity.

Mr. C. J. Leitch, of Flesherton has removed to Titiusville, Pen.

Mr. Commings, who was recently disabled by an accident, while working at the new Presbyterian church, Flesherton, is around again.

There will be a shooting match at Allisons, Maxwell, on Christmas,

A tea meeting will be held in Maxwell Methodist church, on Christmas day.

—Three ladies named Mrs. Armitage, Mrs. H. Wartman and Mrs. Gorrie, were killed near Kingston, on Monday, while crossing the G. T. R. in a stage, the express running into the coach.

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE ROOMS.
DUNLOP'S BUILDING MARKDALE.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

LIGHT! LIGHT!!
REFINED COAL OIL
18cts a gallon in two barrel lots and upwards.

HEAD LIGHT OIL
25cts. a gallon by the barrel.

TEAS
At Wholesale Rates.
H. PARKER,
Druggist, - DURHAM.

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,

Money Loaned
IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good indorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

Holland Council.

Holland Centre Dec. 10th, 1883.
Council met at Vogan's Hall.
Reeve in the chair, members all present.

A resolution passed by the Euphrasia Council was read with regard to breaking up union S. S. No. 2.

McKinnett, Deavitt, that Richard Lyons be paid three dollars for removing stones off road, on 12th con.

A communication was read from Dr. McClelland with regard to James Campbell removing his fence off the street in beat, No. 3 side road.

The Council is of the opinion that the township By-Law is sufficient in the case and that the power rest in the pathmaster.

Deavitt, Shute, that the west part of lot 2, in the 2nd con., be put on the assessment roll and be extended on the collectors roll.

Shute, Galbraith, that an order be issued to Wm. Telfour for the amount of $4.85, being back taxes charged against lot 21, con 2, in error.

Shute, McKinnet, that the sum of $1.55 be refunded to Edward Fagan, as taxes charged in error.

Galbraith, Deavitt, that the agreement between Holland Township and James Farley with regard to gravel pit on Farly's property be signed and sealed by the Reeve.

Galbraith, McKinnet, that Harry Baker get an order for $5, to buy necessaries for his family.

McKinnet, Deputy Reeve, that $20 be expended on 3rd con. East between 50 and 60 side road.

Deavitt, Galbraith, that George Hughes be notified to cause Andrew McQuaker to take his fence from off the road on No. 6.

Galbraith, Deavitt, that the acct. of A. B. Simpson, for attending court of revision at Chatsworth, be paid.

McKinnet, shute, that $5. be granted to repair road on 2nd con., west, between 50 and 55.

Galbraith, Deavitt, that the Reeve look after repairing bridge at Chatsworth and put in bill in accordanee.

Galbraith, McKinnet, that the following widows be exempted from paying taxes for the year 1883: Widow's Matthews, McGregor, Deavitt, Chambers, Graham and McDiermid.

Galbraith, Shute, that the following persons be refunded the following amounts: John Malow, $1.60; Pat Burman, $3.00; M. Omara $3; Owen McGowan, $3; John McCartney, $1.90; Mrs. B——$1.40; T. McCarty, 55cts.

Shute, Galbraith, that an order be issued in favor of Donald elder on account of error in assessment.

Shute, Galbraith, that five dollars be granted to make culvert opposite Richard Clark's.

Galbraith, McKinnet, that Martin McLean receive the sum of three dollars for road work performed in 1882.

Deavitt, Galbraith, that By-law No. 8 appointing poling places and returning officers, be read 1, 2, and 3 times and engrossed on the minutes.

Deavitt, Galbraith, that this council adjourn sine die.

CARSON PRICE, Clerk.

Euphrasia Council.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment on the 7th day of December 1883.

Members all present.

Minutes of last session of council read and confmed.

The collector was authorized to receceive W. McNalley's taxes, less $2, cbarged for statute labor, and Dan Millar's taxes less $3, charged for statute labour, as these parties have performed said labour.

The collector was authorized to receive the taxes charged against the N. ½ of lot 7, con. 12, less $6 charged for statute labour, said labour having been performed by permission. The time for the collectors to return their rolls was extended

The treasurer was instructed to remit as follows, viz.: G, Cruikshanks, $4, repairing road scraper and work on bridge; Messrs. Andrews, Thornbury, $1.60, for spikes used on bridge; A. McGill, Chatsworth, $36, payment for road scrapers.

The Reeves orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz: James Falls, $10, service as janitor of Town Hall; John Jobe, $1.25, labour on 18 and 19 side line; John McArthur $3, labour on 12 and 13 side line, con. 8; William Irwin $1.50 repairing culvers; S. Wiley, $1.70, plank for culvert; William Kerr, $5, labour on 9 and 10 side road; John McCallum, 50cts, removing fence on deviation side line, con. 1; Christopher Knott, $42, building bridge; Henry King $3, said amount being charged in error for statute labour.

The council adjourned until the last Friday in December.

ROBERT DUNLOP, Clerk.

Glenelg Council.

This council met at the Town Hall on the 10th inst.

All members present.

Orders were issued on the Treasurer in payment of work on roads and bridges to the amount of $1,334.73, as follows: Ward No. 1, $152.13; No. 2, $716.60; No. 3, $214; No. 4 $252.

Accounts paid—W. R. Rombough, conveyancing and diagrams, $10; T. Lauder, registrar fees, $5.40; I. Elder, mending scrapers, $2; The Clerk postage and stationary, $1.69; The Clerk, service under the school act $15; A. Cochrane, road scraper, $8; Provision and attendance to S. Cope, as charity, $21.84; the taxes against the first and second divisions of lot 23, con. 1, E. G. R. reduced to $15.75, and the taxes against lots 11, 12, 13, and 14, con. 3, S. D. R. reduced to $5.98. Arrears of taxes against lot 4, con. 9, struck off the roll, Mrs. McDonald, Mrs. Wilkie, and Thomas McGrade, were exempt from taxes for 1883.

The Reeve, Clerk and Assessor were allowed $4 each for selecting Jurors.

The members of the council remunerated themselves for services on committees, to the following extent: The Reeve, $10; the D. Reeve $4; Davis, $16; McMillan, $8; Dunsmoor $6.

Charles Moffat, Wm. Smellie, H. McKee, Kenneth McKenzie and John S. Black were appointed deputy returning officers for next municipal election.

The commissioners were allowed eight per cent on road expenditure as follows: Davis $11.02; McMillan, $34.92; Mullarky $17.12; Dunsmoore $21.24.

After the usual 'vote complimentary' to the Reeve, the council adjourned sine die.

To the Public.

I hereby return thanks to my numerous customers for their liberal patronage during the year in which I have been in the saw mill business, and would respectfully solicit a continuance of the same. Having now my mill fitted up in first class condition, I am in a position to give my customers the best satisfaction in lumber and shingle sawing. Special attention to bill stuff. The highest market price paid for 50,000 Hemlock, Basswood, Pine and all kinds of hard wood logs. Hoping by strict attention to business and fair dealing to merit a continuance of your patronage.

I am, your respectfully,
JAS. A. DUNCAN.
Bell Brook Mill, Dec. 10,' 83.

Monthly Fairs.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.

Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.

Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.

Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.

Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.

MountForest—Third Wednesday in each month.

Durham—Third Tuesday in each month.

Hanover—Monday before Durham.

Walkerton—Last Wednesday in every month.

COUSIN JOHN.

THE STORY OF A CHRISTMAS DAY.

"Are we near Marston Station now?" I asked timidly of my opposite companion, with whom a few civilities had been exchanged during a somewhat long railway journey performed in a second class carriage.

"We shall be there almost directly," she answered briskly. "You are glad, I dare say: for it has been a tiring day for you."

"Yes" I replied doubtfully, feeling inwardly a sensation little akin to gladness; for, though I was going home in one sense of the word, having no other place to call by that name, I had never been to Marston before. I was going as a stranger to accept a shelter from relatives I had never seen—going with dread and uncertainty too; for though my aunt Vereker's letter had contained the promise of a welcome, how could I be sure she really meant it? How could I divine whether my cousins would not regard me in the light of an intruder and interloper as well? But I had had no choice in the matter. All had been hurriedly settled and arranged, almost before I had realised that I was to leave my old home and go out amongst new friends and strange faces.

I knew that the Verekers were rich—at least, rich in comparison with what we had ever been; and, as my means were in future to be of the most modest description, I had travelled in a way would probably shock them if they chanced to see me alight. But that could not be helped. I knew I was right. Very likely none of them would be at the station; at all events, there was not much time for deliberation; even then the train was slackening its speed. I was gathering up my few belongings and preparing very tremblingly for the ordeal.

I had jumped out very quickly, not pausing to glance either to the right or to the left, when suddenly a voice behind me said something which in my nervousness I could not quite catch; but, looking up, I found myself facing a gentlemen who, concluding who I was, introduced himself as my cousin John Vereker. He was dressed in a rough gray shooting-suit, with a wide-awake hat, which he raised slightly when he first addressed me,

"Lina is here too," he said. "We drove over together; and the cart has been sent for your boxes."

"Thank you," I answered; "but I have only one small box and what you see."

"All right," said my cousin John, though how he came to be my cousin was a mystery which was not to be explained; for I had never heard that aunt Vereker had a son. I had always imagined that her family consisted of daughters only.

He possessed himself quietly of my small property, and, leading the way, conducted me through the little gateway to the pony-carriage wherein Lina sat gazing towards us with evident curiosity as we approached. She welcomed me kindly, and then proceeded to ask if I would mind sitting behind in the seat usually occupied by the groom, as she wished to drive home.

"And John won't let me," she said, with a pretty plaintive gesture, "unless he sits beside me. He is such a tiresome old plague; a'n't you, John?"

"Nonsense, Lina!" replied John. "I mean to sit here"—pointing to the back seat—"I can guide the reins just as well if you get frightened."

So I got in obediently and seated myself by Lina's side. She kept up a running fire of small-talk all the way home, varied only by one or two nervous exclamations when the ponies seemed disposed to get beyond her control. When had I started? Was I very tired? Didn't I think the heat terrible? And wasn't I afraid to take such a long journey alone?

"Oh, John"—suddenly stopping her conversation with me, during which my replies had been of the least consequence to her—"here is Mr. Haughton coming! Hadn't we better speak to him? He is sure to have made a call on us, and he will have been so dreadfully disappointed. Do stop, John!"

Walking very leisurely up the road, accompanied by several dogs, was a gentleman who I of course concluded was Mr. Haughton; he was tall and very fair, with an almost moustache and extremely handsome sunburnt face. The features were faultless, excepting only the chin, which, sloping inwards, gave a look of indecision and weakness, which in my opinion detracted not a little from his good looks. However, he was very gentlemanlike, and greeted Lina most cordially, as well as my cousin John.

Neither of them thought of introducing me to him so I sat quietly by, half amused, half annoyed at Lina's incessant chattering, and her evident desire to impress Mr. Haughton favorably. It struck me however that the latter appeared hardly grateful enough to her. His manner was a mixture of indifference and politeness; and, after the first few sentences had been spoken, he made a decided movement to depart, which Lina apparently did not notice. She rattled on most vigorously, until reminded by her brother that we ought to hasten homewards on my account; so, with a few last words, which were rather lengthy ones, we started off once more on through a most picturesque little village, then down a broad road bordered on either side by magnificent elm-trees, until we came to an iron gateway with a cosy lodge one mass of blooming jessamine, roses, and honeysuckle, with bright lattice-paned windows and brilliant flower-beds facing them.

"How pretty!" burst from my lips. "How lovely! Oh, it is like a picture!" I exclaimed involuntarily as we drove up the short approach and came within view of the house.

In another few seconds we drew up before the doorway. The reins were thrown by Lina to a a groom, who promptly appeared; Cousin John helped me to get out; and, under his escort, I was presently ushered into aunt Vereker's presence.

I had expected to see some one very cold and formal—I had fancied she was so from her letters—but, instead, I found a youthful-looking person, dressed in most elaborate black—it could scarcely be called mourning—with a tiny little tulle trifle perched most coquettishly on the side of her head, which thick plaits of chestnut hair also adorned. Far from being cold and formal, she was cordial and kindly to a degree; she repeated all Lina's enquiries, and was equally accommodating to my answers. But, although outwardly there was nothing left for me to desire, so far as words went, something—I could not explain what—chilled me towards aunt Vereker.

Aunt Vereker had been a widow for about five years, and since then had lived at the Grange, which belonged to Mr. John Vereker, who was only her step-son, having been a well-grown boy of fifteen when his father fell in love with and married her. Perhaps it was out of love for her, perhaps it was from some innate conviction of her incapability and shallowness, perhaps from his entire confidence in his—no one know—but the late Mr. Vereker had left his widow to the care of his son, and trusted to him to supplement, as far as he considered needful, a very moderate settlement, which was all he had made upon his wife.

John Vereker was a rich man, and, what was still more to the point in my aunt's opinion, a very generous one. She considered she had been very badly treated by her husband, and there were times when she rather murmured because her step-son did not secure to her the allowance he gave. However, those sentiments, were never uttered in his presence: it was only behind his back that John Vereker was at times accused of being "mean," "stingy," and "miserly." The girls were each to have three thousand pounds—"a beggarly pittance," aunt Vereker said; but, if John did his duty, they would have a great deal more.

Lina was her favorite; and Lina's prospects of a matrimonial settlement were just then beginning to occupy her mind. Mr. Haughton was the individual upon whom their hopes were resting; and, as I came to know my aunt better, I trusted most sincerely, for the sake of general peace, that he might not disappoint them.

He was a frequent visiter at the Grange—in fact, hardly a day passed without our seeing something of him; but, as his place was within an easy distance, and he had nothing at home to enliven him, I sometimes wondered whether it was for his own or Lina's sake that we were so often favored with his company. I had been at the Grange a little over a month, and had become day by day more convinced of one thing—namely, that neither aunt Vereker nor Lina regarded me with friendly eyes. Perhaps I was too near Lina's own age—I was nineteen; perhaps they felt I was a restraint and burden. I could not tell what it was. Of Mr. John Vereker I saw very little; and my three younger cousins, being still in the schoolroom, were seldom available as companions; so I found myself solitary in the midst of them all, an intruder and an interloper—just what I had feared when I was hurrying towards Marston on the first day of my arrival.

I had one pleasure however which none of them grudged me, and of which I could avail myself as often as I desired. Soon after I came to Marsten the organist of the village chapel was suddenly taken ill; no one was able or willing to undertake the duties he could not for a time perform, and for the first Sunday the service was conducted without music of any kind.

"Aunt Vereker," I said that same evening, "do you think Mr. Harleigh would let me play for him?"

"You!" repeated aunt Vereker. "Play in church! Oh, no; it would never do!"

"I used to do so at home sometims," I answered, "when I didn't sing in the choir."

"I don't like the idea of your performing here in public," replied aunt Vereker severely. "I should never dream of allowing Lina to do such a thing."

"But Lina couldn't," put in Beatrice, with naive sincerity.

"Couldn't she?" laughed Lina, who at that moment appeared, with Mr. Haughton behind her, at the drawing-room window. "Pray what can I not do?"

"Play the organ in church. Blanche has been asking mamma if she may."

"Are you musical, Miss Beresford?" asked Mr. Haughton, addressing me.

"I am very fond of music, if that means being musical," I answered, with a guilty consciousness that aunt Vereker was eyeing me severely.

"Will you play something now?" continued Mr. Haughton. "Do ask your cousin"—appealing to Lina, who seconded his request so warmly that I was obliged to accede.

Hardly had I played a few chords when aunt Vereker, interrupting me, begged that we would all recollect what day it was—Sunday—and, if I must play, she must beg me to play only chants. However, Lina and Mr. Haughton drew near the piano, at which I seated myself; and soon a chorus of voices—shrillest amongst them aunt Vereker's own—sounded through the pretty dining-room.

But music at the Grange was not like the music I revelled in when, armed with aunt Vereker's rather unwillingly accorded consent, I undertook the organist's post and practiced for it in the long summer afternoons. It was a lovely little chapel, built partly by uncle Vereker, and fully finished at Mr. John Vereker's expense. Many an hour I spent in it, many a sad thought and fancy I embodied in the grand tones which rolled forth under my fingers. When I was saddest, when things felt strangest and most desolate, I used to take the key of the chapel, and, tying on my hat, run down the shrubbery walk, and, crossing the broad elm-bordered road, enter the still little edifice, and in the pleasures of harmony forget as far as I could the realities of life.

One rather drizzling day I had set forth to have some practice, and had just reached the gateway leading to the chapel, when I saw Mr. Haughton coming towards me. It was impossible to pretend that I had not observed him; I must make some civil remark; so I waited quietly until he came up, fancying that he would go on to the Grange where I knew he was already expected.

As yet he had not done his duty regarding Lina; she was still hoping daily for a declaration, the very tardiness of which might have sufficed to convince her that it would never come. I pitied Lina from my heart. What could be more wearing or more degrading than a perpetual effort to bring an unwilling suitor to the point, or more distracting than aunt Vereker's transparent little schemes to throw them together and to give him every possible facility for asking the question that was to make poor Lina happy?

"Did he say nothing to-day, Lina," aunt Vereker would—"nothing tangible?"

"No, nothing. What do you mean?" Lina would answer, angry, indignant, and disappointed.

Mr. Haughton's silence, though very exasperating, did not suffice to damp my aunt's welcome to him. He was at liberty to come to the Grange at all times, and, when there, was treated with all the honor due to a future most unexcehtionable son-in law. I have described him as a handsome man. In features he certainly was, and his general appearance was gentlemanlike; but, when he stood side by side with my cousin John Vercker, the contrast between the two ought, I thought, to have been sufficient to cure Lina of her preference. For there was nothing manly about Eustace Haughton, no intellect in the pale blue eyes, no strength in the narrow white hands, with their long nerveless-looking fingers; whilst Mr. Vereker, with his almost plain face, gray-streaked hair, and shabby shooting-coat, had an air of quiet decision, an indescribable something which at once proclaimed him to be, what I felt from the first he was, a brave, honest, honorable English gentleman. I could have fancied it possible to face any great danger quietly with John Vercker by my side.

Before I had been long at the Grange, I knew that I had seen the one person in the world with whom life for me would be almost cloudless; but what folly it was to think of such a thing! How I tried to reason myself out of it one moment; the next, how closely I clasped the sweet secret—the secret that would be buried with me! For I loved John Vereker—I, Blanch Beresford, aged nineteen, possessed of the magnificent fortune of about fifty pounds a year, with nothing to recommend me except perhaps my voice. And I could sing; even aunt Vereker said one night that she could not listen quite unmoved when Blanche sang, for she had tears in her voice.

I wondered what he thought. But he seldom spoke to me. Sometimes, when he seemed inclined to do so, I grew so nervous that my answers simply repelled him. I knew it, and writhed to think how utterly foolish and unnatural I must appear. I had the presumption to love him. Well, no one knew it, and time might cure me perhaps. Besides, I should not long remain at the Grange; aunt Vereker did not wish it. I could perceive that more from her manner than from anything she ever said; instinctively I was aware that the welcome of which I had been doubtful from the first had ceased to exist, and that toleration only was accorded to me by my cousins as well as herself. No suspicion of what had caused the growing coolness had ever flashed across me, never distantly did I dream of the possibility of having interfered with Lina's prospects, until this drizzling afternoon, when, hurrying to the chapel, I chanced to encounter Mr. Haughton.

"Miss Beresford," he said, when the first greetings had been exchanged, "won't you give me a great pleasure? Won't you let me hear you sing something? I know that you are going to practice. Won't you let me listen?"

"If you like," I answered, without hesitation. "Old Tufton comes to blow the organ for me; so I must go to his cottage first.

"Couldn't I do instead?" asked Mr. Haughton. "Suppose you engage me, and dismiss old Tufton?"

Tufton proved to be out; so there was nothing for it but to agree to accept Mr. Haughton's good offices or to give up my practice. I hesitated for a few seconds, and then resolved upon the latter course.

"I shan't practice to-day," I said, as we retraced our steps towards the chapel.

"Do," urged Mr. Haughton; "do Miss Beresford. I should like to hear you play?"

"You hear me every Sunday," I said smiling.

"Yes, I know that; but then you are playing for everybody's benefit. I should like you to play for mine only. Oh, Miss Beresford," he continued, with some vehemence, "if you only knew——"

"I don't want to know," I interrupted desperately—"I don't want to know anything."

Whatever he might have intended to say was checked, not so much by my entreaties as by the sudden and timely appearance of my cousins John Vereker and Lina, who just then turned down the pathway leading towards where we were.

Nice behaviour! Nice conduct. Such a cunning piece of deception had never before come under her eyes; but she knew me now—that was one comfort—knew me thoroughly. So aunt Vereker informed me, when, after a protracted interview with Lina, she came into my room to confront me with my crime.

"I don't know what you mean, aunt," I said. "I really do not understand what I have done."

"Done!" echoed aunt Vereker. "Done! Why, your own conscience might tell you! You have deprived poor Lina of all she cares for in the world; you have lured Eustace Haughton away from her, just when he was on the verge of a proposal, by your quiet sneaking ways."

"I—lured—Mr. Haughton! Oh, aunt how can you say such a thing? I met him to-day by the purest accident."

"I am sure you did—an accident of daily occurrence," replied aunt Vereker. "Very accidental, no doubt! I suppose that is equally accidental;" and she threw down a letter addressed to me in an unknown hand.

"I should say that it was quite accidental; for I do not recognise the handwriting."

"Little serpent!" cried my aunt, as she turned to leave the room. "I wish you had never darkened my doors!"

How he must despise me if he thought I had laid myself out to entrap such a man as Mr. Haughton—I who had never given him a thought, far less dreamt of his preference! Yet there was his letter—for sure enough it came from him—hurried, but earnest in its entreaties to me to accept what he now offered—himself. He feared he had offended me; if he had, I must forgive him; and, if I could not give him my love all at once, he begged me not lightly to reject his, but give him the chance of winning mine.

Never was a proposal so unwarranted, never had one been so unwelcome. I sat quiet and speechless after perusing it, until roused by hearing the dressing-bell ring, which warned me that in half an hour I must meet them all at dinner.

Lina, tear-stained and indignant, was the first that greeted me; behind her was my aunt, vigorously fanning herself; whilst my cousin John was apparently buried in the study of the Times.

I approached them tremulously enough, and presently summed up courage to address to Lina a rather unintelligible remark as to my having feared that I was late for dinner, my watch being slow.

"Oh, you are in excellent time!" responded my aunt, who took the remark as addressed to herself. "We should have had to excuse you if you had been late."

A slight sob from Lina and a rustle of the Times, followed by the announcement of dinner, saved my having to reply. But what a dinner it was! The only voice was my cousin John's, who strove, vainly enough, to bring forward topics which might be generally and safely discussed. Once or twice he addressed me in a manner so pointedly that I could have broken down right there and then and sobbed my precious secret out at his feet, utterly regardless of aunt Vereker's or Lina's presence, both of whom sat in silent wrath, glancing towards me with the most unmistakable contempt and abhorrence.

Well, it would soon be over; for I could not stay long at the Grange. Very soon I should be gone; but whither? That was a question hard indeed to answer—a problem beyond my solving. I was very young. I knew nothing of the ways of the world. I had no idea how far my own small means were capable of maintaining me. I was not sufficiently accomplished to be a governess; and, without having one shade of conceit about, me I knew I was too good-looking to pass through life in the obscurity which I began to desire for myself.

The vista before me was cold and chill and hopeless. A few lines of refusal having been duly despatched to Mr. Haughton, I sat in my own room reflecting on my future. Many were the projects I revolved ere I slept. These the morning sun dispelled, for they had not been of the wisest. However, with some trepidation I sought out aunt Vereker, and told her, as simply as I could, how grieved and sorry I was, but how utterly unexpected Mr. Haughton's proposal had been.

"Not unwelcome, if unexpected," responded my aunt. "But I wish to tell you frankly that I think your behaviour has been simply abominable. Not that you probably will care for what I may say or think—as Mrs. Haughton, you will be in a position to do without my good opinion—but I wish to express it now to you, and to tell you at the same time how bitterly I regret having allowed you to come here at all."

"That I can quite believe," I answered, with some bitterness. "But you are in error if you think I am likely to become Mrs. Haughton."

My aunt laughed incredulously.

"You are not going to further impose upon me, Blanche. Don't imagine that I believe you intend to refuse such an offer."

"I have refused it," I replied laconically.

"You have refused it!" exclaimed my aunt. "Well, you are the best judge of your own actions; but may I ask, if it is true that you have refused Mr. Haughton, what was your object in detaching him from Lina?"

"I never detached him," I answered indignantly; "I never dreamt of his daring to propose to me!"

"Daring to propose! Really, Blanche, I wonder if you have any idea of your own position? By birth you may be entitled to marry a gentleman; but, considering your penniless——"

"I have fifty pounds a year, aunt," I said, "and I mean to live upon that. I am very sorry that I have so innocently distressed Lina; but I shall go away to-day—to-morrow—as soon as you like; and Mr. Haughton will do me the justice to tell you that it was no fault of mine."

"As if I would discuss it with him," uttered aunt Vereker;" and as if I could, in decency, allow you to go away! No, no: you must remain where you are until I can see you properly bestowed elsewhere; but, recollect, here you have brought nothing but unhappiness, and in this house your presence can never be welcome. I am only giving you an idea of what every one, from your cousin John downwards, thinks and feels in consequence of your conduct."

This was the final blow for me. A wild sense of the injustice, the cruelty of it all surged through me. Involuntarily I started up, and then sat down, faint and trembling, speechless with impotent wrath, shame, and sorrow.

"Please do not attempt any heroics. Blanche, I am not a person to be impressed by any exhibition of the kind;" and aunt Vereker got up, and, with a sneering glance towards me, left the room.

Mr. Houghton came no more to see us, and my cousin John departed to spend, first, a couple of months at his shooting quarters in Scotland, and afterwards, I gathered from what I heard, he went about paying visits. At all events, the Grange was not to see him until Christmas. How I longed for Christmas to come, and how I listened for any chance scrap of information touching the movements of my absent cousin!

One very dull, rainy morning in December there came a letter from him to aunt Vereker, headed from Grimsby Castle, Lord Vaudeleur's place in Shropshire, saying that he was now really en route for home, but that Lord Vaandeleur had pressed him to remain for another week, so he would not appear at the Grange until the twenty-fourth—Christmas Eve.

"There must be some special attraction at Grimbsby," suggested Lina. "Isn't Miss Vandeleur a great beauty?"

"I believe she is," returned aunt Vereker; "but John isn't a marrying man, happily for us. He has often said he would never marry."

"That's the very reason he will," replied Lina petulantly. "A nice thing for us to have to bundle out of this house and go off to some poky hole!"

"Don't distress yourself, Lina," said my aunt. "John isn't attractive enough to please the Honorable Miss Vandeleur. She expects to marry nothing under a duke."

"I hope she won't be disappointed," sighed Lina; "but I agree with you, mamma"—more brightly. "John isn't a beauty."

It was late when he arrived, looking browner and more stalwart than ever, and just as quiet, grave, and nice as he had been since I first saw him. I was very nervous when he advanced to shake hands with me. Perhaps my state of my mind accounted for the sudden pallor which must have overspread my face, for my cousin John said kindly—

"Blanche is not well, surely?"

"Oh yes, I am—quite well!" I said quickly.

"What is the matter?" asked aunt Vereker sharply, turning towards me just in time to see a burning blush covering my face. "I see no signs of illness."

"Don't you?" I heard my cousin John say; and then the lights began to flicker strangely, and vague noises like the rushing of many waters sounded in my ears. I made a wild stumble forwards, and then, failing to reach a friendly chair, was conscious of sinking downwards into darkness, and presently revived to find that I was being borne up-stairs in a pair of strong arms; and I recognized, bending over me as he laid me down, the face of my cousin John.

"She is better now," he said softly. "It was a fainting fit, I suppose. "Has it happened before?"

"Never," answered a voice which I knew was aunt Vereker's; and then cousin John went quickly from the room, leaving me with a bitter sense of humiliation and shame to recover.

What could they all think of me? I could fancy aunt Vereker setting my illness down to heroics and a desire to attract; I could imagine my cousin John himself being once more and for ever "disgusted," and Lina's innumerable suppositions as to what had caused the seizure. I lay there all the evening alone. Only once Beatrice came up, to see if I would have some tea, as I had missed dinner altogether.

No, I would have nothing—nothing at all; I was glad to be a martyr, as some sort of self-punishment for my weakness. As I had a dim hope my refusal might be made known to cousin John.

It was a wretched feeling, I owe; I should really have enjoyed a cup of tea immensely—still more should I have liked to have been down-stairs, instead of spending my Christmas Eve in such a miserable fashion. At last kind nature's sweet restorer closed my tired eyelids and banished my dreary thoughts; and, when I awoke, Christmas Day had fairly dawned.

Such a bright lovely day it was, the ground and trees covered with snow; icicles were hanging in crystal glittering loveliness, and the great elm-tree branches were bowed with drifts of half-melted snow, which crumbled into powder when a bird lighted on a bough, or dropped gradually in soft fragments to the ground. All was still, white, and lovely when I looked out of my bed-room window, lit up as the landscape was by the reflection from the sun on the otherwise colorless scene.

Service was to be at eleven o'clock; so I hurried to the chapel to perform my duties there, not waiting to hear whether the rest of the party meant to follow or not. After the preliminary voluntary came that wonderously beautiful hymn—

"Hark, the herald-angels sing Glory to the new-born King!"

Then, standing up, I saw in the Grange pew aunt Vereker, Lina, Beatrice and my cousin John, whilst in the Brampton Thorpe one I beheld Mr. Haughton.

The latter's unexpected visit annoyed me more than I can say. I feared he might wait for me, and offend my aunt more than ever by attempting to renew his request. So, when the service was over, I remained quietly in the organ-gallery until I thought every one must have gone. At last I ventured out. How pale and silent everything was as I passed through the little churchyard—passed with hurried footsteps, rendered noiseless by the heavy snow—as noiseless as those which overtook me, for I heard no sound until the voice—not of Mr. Haughton, but—of my cousin John suddenly addressed me.

"What were you doing, Blanche?" he asked, "I thought you were never coming."

"I was arranging my things for the evening," I answered.

"I don't think you ought to play to-night," he said very kindly.

"Why not?" I asked, so brusquely that I was utterly disgusted with myself.

"You are not fit for it," said cousin John, "I did not know you had been ill when I was away."

"I wasn't ill. I never was better!" I exclaimed: but my face must have contradicted my words, he looked so incredulously at me.

"You weren't happy, Blanche. I know it; and I have a message for you which may make you happier. I have promised to deliver it to you, and to—ask you to—weigh it"—these last words said very slowly.

"Eustace Haughton told me to tell you that he has not accepted your answer as final. He hopes still; and I have promised to tell you so. It is my duty, Blanche. He is rich. I believe he is all that we could desire; and you must weigh matters well. There are advantages——"

"There may be," I interrupted, "many advantages; but I could not care for him, not even if——"

"If what, Blanche?"—and my cousin's voice was strangely changed.

"If I had seen no one I cared for more," I answered, with a desperate heedlessness of consequences.

"You love some one else then?"

"With my whole heart!" I answered.

And then there came a silence, a long awful silence, during which I noticed with strange acuteness the heavily-laden snow-covered palings and the bent branches of the fir-trees in the shrubbery.

"Can you name him? Blanche, is he worthy? Have compassion, Blanche—have compassion upon me!"

What words would convey the depths of happiness sounded on that snowy Christmas morning? What heart was so joyous or so thankful as mine, when it dawned upon me that cousin John had loved me from the first? But, from his imagining that the disparity in our ages was too great, and from other groundless causes, he never dreamed that his preference could be returned.

Six weeks after that we were married and I am happy to say Mr. Haughton not only got over his disappointment, but consoled himself not long afterwards by marrying, not Lina, but a Spanish-looking beauty who looks down with great condescension on Mr. and Mrs. John Vereker.

So my eventful Christmas Day ended in being a merry one. And I cannot do better for my friends than wish them as merry a one, and as happy a New Year, and many of them, as fell and have fallen to my own share.

A new religious sect has arisen in England which worships Mother Eve. The daughters of Eve are worshipped by all sects.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Santa Claus.

BY JIMMY BROWN.

What on earth do you think has hap- The other day I was at Tom Mc- 's house and he had some company. was a big boy, and something like a and Tom. Would you believe it, that there wasn't any Santa Claus? I for him, and I told him at he could never have any little boy distinctly did tell—but I mention it. We should never reveal weakness of other people, and ought to be thankful that we are worse anybody else. Otherwise we would be the Pharisee, and he was very bad. I for certain that it was a fib Tom Mc- told. But all the same, the about it the more I got wor-

's a Santa Claus—and of course could he get upon top of the could come down the chimney, rolled a big ladder with him; this, how could he carry pres- mornahundred stockings? could he help getting the soot from the chimney, and marriage when the chimney is ke and fire, as it always is at But then, as the preacher says, natural—I had to look that dictionary.

Tom McGinnis's cousin told worrying me, and finally I began to perfectly awful it would be if in it. How the chil- ed! There's going to be no children at our house this Christmas, and her two small boys are I heard mother and Aunt about Christmas the other day, agreed that all the children should bedsteads in the back parlor, they could open their stockings to- and mother said, "You know, Eliza, a big fire-place in that room and the can hang their stockings around the

Now I know I did wrong, but it was only I did not want the children to be Disappointed. We should always do to and so on, and I know I should have if anybody had tried to get up Claus for me in case of the real one Neither do I blame though if she hadn't spoken about in the way she did, it would happened. But I do think they made a little allowance for only trying to help make the yesterday. Tom Mc- and all the folks except Aunt Eliza's lit- We were talking about I was telling Tom how all to sleep in the back par- was a chimney there that Santa Claus. We the chimney, and then I it would be to dress chimney and pre- Claus, and how it would then, and how pleased the would be, for they are al- amuse them.

with me that it would be said we ought to practice chimney, so that we could Christmas-eve. He said he to do it, because it was our and no, he was a visitor, and and selfish in me to de- pleasure. But Tom wouldn't that it wasn't feeling very didn't like to take liber- money, and, besides, he was was so big that he wouldn't Then we thought of Har- at he was just the right Harry said he'd do it when for he isn't afraid of any- proud to be allowed to play that he would do anything to.

took off his coat and shoes, up to the roof, and Tom Harry till he got on the top and put his legs in it and went down like a flash, for rough to brace himself the sweeps do. Tom and I we the back parlor to meet hadn't arrived yet, though full of ashes and soot.

had stopped on the way a while we thought we like somebody calling, that way off. We went up on the Harry might have climbed chimney; but he wasn't there. on top of the chimney we plain enough. He was cry- for help, for he was stuck down the chimney, and or down.

over for some time, and de- best thing to do whs to get a down to him, and pull him I got the clothes-line and let it Harry's arms were jammed close so he couldn't get hold of it. ought to make a slipper noose, over Harry's head, and pull him way, but I knew that Harry wasn't and I was afraid if we did that apart.

proposed that we should get along push Harry down the rest of the but after hunting all over the couldn't find a pole long enough, to give that plan up. All this was crying in the most discon- although we were doing all we That's the way with little never have any gratitude, and discontented.

couldn't poke Harry down, Tom try to poke him up. So we told patient and considerate, and we down-stairs again, and took the long- we could find and pushed it up the Bushels of soot came down, and everything, but we couldn't reach with the pole. By this time we be- discouraged. We were awfully Harry, because, if we couldn't get before the folks came home, Tom would be in a dreadful scrape.

thought that if we were to build a fire the draught might draw Harry Tom thought it was an excellent plan. started a fire, but it didn't loosen Har- and when we went on the roof to meet him we heard him crying louder than ever, and saying that something was on fire in the chimney and was choking him. I knew what to do, though Tom didn't, and, to tell the truth, he was terribly frightened.

We ran down and got two pails of water, and poured them down the chimney. That put the fire out, but you would hardly believe it that Harry was more unreasonable than ever, and said that we were trying to drown him. There is no comfort in wearing yourself out in trying to please little boys. You can't satisfy them, no matter how much trouble you take, and for my part I am tired of trying to please Harry, and shal let him amuse himself the rest of the time he is at our house.

We had tried every plan we could think of to get Harry out of the chimney, but none of them succeeded. Tom said that if we were to pour a whole lot of oil down the chimney it would make it so slippery that Harry would slide right down into the back parlor, but I wouldn't do it, because I knew the oil would spoil Harry's clothes, and that would make Aunt Eliza angry. All of a sudden I heard a carriage stop at our gate, and there were the grown folks, who had come home earlier than I had supposed they would. Tom said that he thought he would go home before his own folks began to get uneasy about him, so he went out of the back gate, and left me to explain things. They had to send for some men to come and cut a hole through the wall. But they got Harry out all safe; and after they found that he wasn't a bit hurt, instead of thanking me for all Tom and I had done for him, they seemed to think that I deserved the worst punishmen I ever had, and I got it.

And I shall never make another attempt to amuse children on Christmas-eve.—Harper's Young People.

A NIGHT IN A CHINA TOWN.

A Few Facts Relating to Their Habits and General Mode of Living, Etc.

The Chinese in Los Angeles are quite numerous and almost monopolize a certain portion of the city; they are quiet and orderly as a class, attentively minding their own business, but, nevertheless, always a target for the ever present hoodlum.

Through the kindness of one of the city officials—a courteous lawyer and gentleman—we were escorted on a most interesting tour through "Chinatown," as it is called. Starting out at 8 o'clock one pleasant evening, we called first at some of their stores; business being about over for the day, we found them in clusters, old and young, eagerly gathered about the counter, at their greatest of amusements—gambling. Not a word was uttered by any, so absorbed were they in their game, and, after casting a hasty and wondering glance at us, they ignored us entirely. Passing on and visiting many stores, we came to a restaurant about 10 p.m. First entering a small office, we passed in at a door to find ourselves in the dining room; here, seated at tables, are several celestials quietly but hard at work on a dish of thick kind of soup, which they caused to disappear rapidly by throwing into their mouths with chopsticks. A fat cook busy at the stove is seen in the rear, humming a dismal air. The man who does the waiting, being considered quite a musician, is called upon for music and favors us with a series of howls and groans which he calls a song; and then, on his one-stringed instrument, he makes us feel generally ill. As the music progresses and the musician seems to warm up to his work, he howls like a dog and rolls his eyes wildly. A movement is heard above and, on looking for the cause, we find a dozen pair of sharp eyes looking down at us from above; thus, while supposing ourselves in the company of two or three Chinamen, we realize that a score or more of them are about us, and we find that the apartment is, as it were, cut in two, thus giving two floors to an ordinary sized room, a ladder being used to ascend into the sleeping apartment above. Thus one fair-sized room can be used for a restaurant below, and lodge twenty persons or more on the shelves above; but they seem happy and contented. As they are packed together in such a state, we wonder how they can emerge looking so cleanly each day; but they are particular about their appearance generally and carefully bathe every morning.

The night is wearing on, and midnight brings us to a dark, dreary spot, where, hand in hand, we were wonderingly led through passage after passage, first up, then down, until our leader knocks at a door, being answered by a Chinaman who, after a glance, recognizes one in authority, and quietly ushers us in. We find ourselves in a dimly lighted temple, a weird, strange looking place with an altar. We are conducted to an apartment in the rear behind the altar, and there we find a singular scene. Reclining on couches smoking opium are the priests, who at first look amazed at the intrusion, but soon relapse into their stolid, fixed expression. One of the priests, by request kept telling us his feelings as the smoking gradually affected him, and if he told the truth, as he probably did, he soon became too happy to talk, and the expression on his face certainly denoted intense and almost supreme happiness.

We accepted an invitation to take some tea, which was very hot and without sugar. The custom of offering hot tea to all visitors is a universal one among the Chinese, the omission of the courtesy being considered extremely ill mannered.—N. Y. Post

Fashionable Dinners.

Years ago, when David Crockett was a member of Congress and had returned home at the close of the first session, several of his neighbors gathered around him one day and asked him questions about Washington. "What time do they dine in the city?" asked one. "Common people, such as we have here, dine at 1. The big ones dine at 3; we Representatives at 4; the aristocracy and Senators eat at 6." "Well, when does the President fodder?" "Old Hickory?" exclaimed the Colonel; "well, he don't dine till next day."

A passenger on the Auburn Railroad offered the conductor a trade dollar for fare, says the Cornellsville, N. Y., Times. The conductor examined it and remarked: I don't want that piece of money." "Well, give it to the company, then," replied the passenger.

Old Christmas Games.

One of the interesting features of a Christmas in the olden times was the varied assortment of games which were so heartily joined in by both old and young assembled round the blazing hearth. Most of these merry pastimes have long ago passed away; only a few, such as snapdragon, hide-and-seek, etc., being known by the present generation out of the long list of Christmas games formerly kept up. Thus, an old game played especially at Christmas was "hot cockles,' a species of blind-man's-buff, in which the person kneeling down, and being struck behind, was to guess who inflicted the blow. It is described by Gay in the following lines:

As at hot cockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rose, and read soft mischief in her eye.

In an old tract, "Round About Our Coal Fire; or, Christmas Entertainments," published in the early part of the last century, mention is made of a game called "Questions and Commands." The writer says that the commander may oblige his subjects to answer any lawful question, and make the same obey him instantly under the penalty of paying any such forfeit as may be laid on the aggressors. "Handy-dandy" was much in request at this season. One of the party concealed something in his hand, making his neighbors guess in which one it was. If the latter guessed rightly, he won the article, if wrongly, he lost an equivalent. It is alluded to in "Piers Ploughman," and it is, perhaps, noticed in Shakspeare where King Lear (Act iv., sc. 6) says to Gloster: "Look with thine ears; see how yon' justice rails upon yon simple thief. Hark, in thine ear: change places; and, handy-dandy, which is the justice, which is the thief?" Browne, too, in one of his "Pastorals," tells how boys

With the pibbles play at handy-dandy.

A childish diversion also usually introduced at Christmas in bygone days was the "Game of Goose." It was, says Strutt, played by two persons, although it readily admitted of many more, and was well calculated to make the young people sharp at reckoning the produce of two given numbers. The table for playing "Goose" was about the size of a sheet almanac, and divided into sixty-two small compartments, arranged in a spiral form, with a large open space in the centre marked with the number 63; the other compartments were denoted by numbers from one to sixty-two, inclusive. The game was played with two dice, each player throwing in turn, and marking with a counter whatever number the dice cast up. Thus, if there were a four and five he marked nine, and so on, until the game was completed. The number 63 had to be reached exactly, and should the player exceed it he had to reckon back, and throw again in his turn.

Another game seems to have been "Fox i' the Hole," and is thrice mentioned by Herrick, but not once explained:

Of Christmas sports, wassail-bowl,
That's tossed up, after fox i' the hole.

A diversion which often caused much laughter was "Dan in the Mire." A log of wood was brought into the middle of the room: this was "Dan," or the cart-horse, and a cry was raised that he had stuck in the mire. Two of the company then advanced, either with or without ropes, to draw him out. When unable to do so, they called for further help, until finally all the parties joined in the game, when Dun was, of course, extricated. No small merriment arose from each person's sly efforts to let the log fall on his neighbor's toes. It is frequently alluded to by old writers, and by Shakspeare in "Romeo and Juliet" (Act i., sc. 4), where Mercutio says to Romeo:

Tut, dun's the mouse, the constable's own word:
If thou art dun we'll draw thee from the mire.

Some doubt exists as to the precise nature of a game designated "Shoeing the Wild Mare," and mentioned by Herrick, where he speaks of—

Christmas sports, the wassail-bowl,
Of blind-man-bun', and of the care
That young men have to shoe the mare.

"It appears," says B and, "that the wild mare was simply a youth so called, who was allowed a certain start, and who was pursued by his companions, with the object of being shoed, if he did not succeed in outstripping them." Then there were "capverses," wherein one gave a word, to which another found a rhyme; a pastime once very popular.

Among other references to old Christmas games may be quoted the "Paston Letters," in which a letter dated Dec. 24, 1484, relates how Lady Morley, on account of the death of her lord, directing what pastimes were to be used in her house at Christmas, ordered that "there were none disguisings, nor harping, nor luting, nor singing, nor none loud disports: but playing at the tables, and chess, and cards; such disports she gave her folks leave to play, and none other."

Of old Christmas card-games may be mentioned that known as "Post-and-Pair," to which Ben Jonson refers in his "Maeque of Christmas:"

Now Post and Pair, old Christmas' heir,
Doth make a gingling sally;
And wot you who, 'tis one of my two Sons, card-makers in Pur-alley.

It is, too, among the diversions described by Sir Walter Scott, in his graphic picture of Christmas Eve in "Marmion," and is mentioned by many of our old writers. Three cards are dealt to all, the excitement of the game consisting in each person's vying or betting, on the goodness of his own hand. It would seem that a pair of royal aces was the best hand—hence one of its names, "Pair-royal"—and then other cards, according to their order, such as kings, queens, etc. Thus it much resembled our modern game of "Commerce." Another game of cards was "Ruff," known also as "Double Ruff" or "Cross Ruff," one of its most popular names being "Trump." It is mentioned in "Poor Robin's Almanace" for 1693:

Christmas to hungry stomachs gives relief,
With mutton, pork-pies, pasties, and roast beef;
And men at cards spend many idle hours,
At loadum, whisk, cross-ruff, put, and all-fours.

This game was much the same as whist; and was played by two against two, and occasionally by three against three. Noddy, too, we are told, was also much in demand, being noticed by Middleton, where Christmas, speaking of the games at that time as his children, says; "I leave them wholly to my eldest son Noddy, whom, during his minority, I commit to the custody of a pair of knaves and one-and-thirty." In "Poor Robin's Almanack" for 1755 it is thus noticed:

Some folks at dice and cards do sit,
To lose their money and their wit,
And when the game of cards is past,
Then fall to at Noddy at the last.

There is some doubt as to what game was meant; some think cribbage, and others "Beat the knave out of doors."

Such were some of the old games practiced at Christmastide; and the importance that was attached to these diversions may be gathered from the fact that every large household had its Lord of Merry Disports, whose duty it was to arrange the merry-makings every season; a custom which was extended to our Universities and the Inns of Court. At the present day when Christmas is shorn of so many of its former glories, some of these old fireside games might with advantage be revived, thereby creating harmless mirth and fun.—Illustrated London News.

Family Matters.

CUSTARD PIE.—Three beaten eggs, three tablespoonsful sugar, a little nutmeg and salt, and two large cupsful rich milk.

If the stair-rails are dingy, their appearance may be improved by washing them with a little sweet milk; polish with a flannel cloth.

DUST ON THE WALLS.—To wipe the dust from papered walls take a clean, soft piece of flannel. Of course it must not be damp, but the dry flannel will remove the dust.

An economical and really delicious way to flavor a cake which is to have icing over the top is to grate part of the peel of an orange or lemon over the cake before putting the icing on.

ACID PIE.—Two tablespoonsful flour, one scant cupful water, one-third cupful molasses, one-third teaspoonful tartaric acid, set on the stove and stir until it boils, and bake with one crust.

Often one has gravy left from a roast of beef, and if you have no soup stock to which it may be added, use it to fry sliced cold boiled potatoes in for breakfast. This makes an excellent dish.

When cleaning carpets, dampen some Indian meal, mix salt with it, and sprinkle over the carpet; sweep vigorously. Take a small, sharp-pointed stick to remove the salt and meal from cracks and corners.

In making lemon syrup take one pint of lemon juice, one and a quarter pounds of sugar. Let it stand till thoroughly dissolved; then bottle and cork tightly for future use. It will keep for years, and have a finer flavor than if boiled.

Apple custard pie should be baked with an under crust only. The mixture for two pies, if made of one pint of sweet milk, one pint of smooth apple sauce, well-sweetened, three eggs; flavor with lemon or a little nutmeg. This will make two small-sized pies or one very large one.

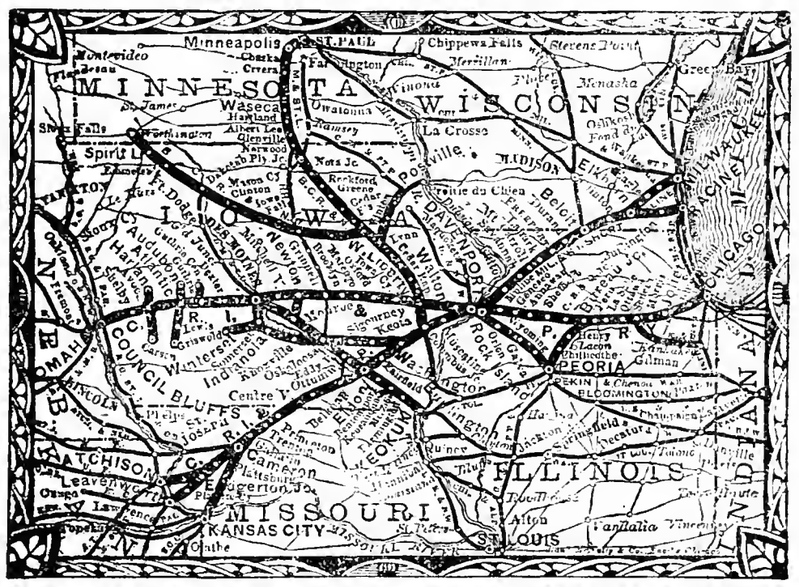
For sponging old black silk, a poor article of black cashmere should be used, and for sponging colored silks, a piece of white cashmere or some of the same color. Cotton must not be used to cover the table upon which they are sponged, or else it will leave white fluff all over it, which will be difficult to get off. An old black shawl is as good a thing as any.

A DOG WALKS 1,600 MILES.

Finding his Way Home Alone from New Orleans to Aurora, Ind.

George Griffin, an old citizen and property owner, at Aurora, Ind., says that a dog belonging to him found his way from New Orleans, where it had been taken on a flat-boat down the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers. The distance from New Orleans to Cincinnati is something over 1,600 miles, and this place is only twenty-five miles below Cincinnati. Mr. Griffin said the dog was a worthless animal, and was taken on the boat with the intention of dropping it off somewhere down the river to get rid of it. The dog, was, however, kept aboard the boat and taken to New Orleans, where he was turned adrift in the city. The boat's crew returned home together, and as they had seen nothing of the dog for some days before leaving New Orleans, they concluded that they had lost him.

"About three months after my arrival home," said Mr. Griffin, "the lost dog crawled under the back fence and sneaked up to the kitchen door. He was the most woebegone-looking creature I ever saw—poor, lank, and hungry, with barely enough strength to drag himself along. He was the Prodigal Son of dogs, and looked as though he wanted the fatted calf, and wanted it right away. When I left him in New Orleans he was sleek and fat. When he turned up at home three months later he was a mere skeleton. His feet were sore and bleeding. He had a bushy tail and it was full of burrs, showing that he had come through the woods. I am sure he walked every step of the way. At first I was afraid to tell my wife of his return, knowing she would think there was something supernatural about it and worry over it. I prepared her for the news by telling her it was a common thing for dogs to walk from New Orleans, and that I was expecting Jack home any day. I fixed up a nice comfortable nest for him in the woodshed, and it was three weeks before he would leave it. He just laid there and rested."



Mr. Griffin has lived on Second street in Aurora for twenty years, and is a reputable and trustworthy citizen.

Railway Improvement.

As is well known, the slipping of the driving-wheels of locomotive engines is an inconvenience of very common occurrence and not always easy to remedy, besides being attended by loss of steam, waste of fuel, and wear and tear of both engine and rails. This trouble is very apt to be experienced in certain kinds of weather, under heavy loads and steep grades. A mode, therefore, of overcoming the difficulty is well worth knowing, and such mode has recently been communicated to a Scientific Society in France. On a certain line of railway which, from local causes, the rails were abnormally slippery and the difficulty in question had been very great, a lucky accident revealed a remedy. A joint in one of the cylinder cocks of a locomotive sprang a leak, whereby a jet of steam was thrown upon the rails. The engine driver instantly found the wheels to bite the rails so well that he was able to ascend the steep grade without the usual slipping. This has led to the slight modification in all the locomotives used on the road, by which they are made to discharge steam upon the rails as required, the result being a saving of fuel of some ten per cent.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC RY,

Being the Great Contral Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Kookuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE DEC. 20, 1883.

A merry Christmas and a happy New Year to all is the sincere wish of the STANDARD.

INCORPORATION.

A communication from a ratepayer in another column in reference to the above question is so unreasonable and void of intelligent argument that it is scarcely worthy of a reply. We will however notice the several objections. "first, there is nothing to be gained by incorporation ?" In answer to this we would inform our friend that the village of Markdale paid in 1882 the sum of $381.10, besides about $50 in fines and unperformed statute labour, which amounts, the village would have at their own control for improvements, or if not expended thus, to reduce the taxes, this amount is independent of county, railway, general school, special school, and other rates which would be unchanged by the formation of a new municipality, and also independent of the amount which is now levied by the village to run its affairs, which is from $100 to $150 per year. we hold that this would be something gained. Second, he says, "our taxes will be increased ten-fold without any compensating advantage," This is s rediculous that it is not worth referring to, besides the answer to the first objection completely explodes it. Third, we are told that the village receives its due proportion of township revenew, but our citizen does not intimate in what manner, and for the life of us we cannot imagine in what shape the village has been assisted. If we desire to build a sidewalk we simply levy the amount on ourselves and pay for it. We would like to know in what shape the village has received her due portion. Fourth, "The incorporation movement has been inaugurated by those who have all to geiu and nothing to loose," This is a very strong argument in favour of incorporation from one who appears so opposed to it, as those most interested in the question are large property holders, heavy ratepayers and staunch citizens. Fifth, "Fat offices &c," who ever heard of the like in an incorporated village, where the council always give their services gratuituously. It is unnecessary to follow ratepayer through sixthly and seventhly as they do not contain anything reasonable against the question of incorporation.

What We would Like to See.

Good sleighing until after the holidays.

The municipal elections conducted without politics,

County councils reduced to one-half their present number of representatives.

And the Provincial Legislature also.

And Dominion Parliament likewise.

A comfortable waiting room for passengers at Berkeley station.

Ratepayers interested in school matters.

And attend the annual school meeting next Wednesday.

What We may Expect.

A wedding in town shortly.

Some person get their leg broken in those delapidated sidewalks.

And the town sued for damages.

Very little good sleighing this winter.

A crowded house Christmas evening to hear Rev. Mr. Casson's lecture.

Joy among the children next Tuesday.

And medicine required after it.

Sad havoc among the fowl for two weeks.

And the poor forgotten amid the excitement.

A strife among our store keepers for who'll have the most attractive shop for the holidays.

And Mac. take the cake.

—O'Donnell's execution was carried out on Monday.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

THE VALLEY ROAD.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR,—I can scarcely tell whether your correspondent on the celebrated Valley Road is in earnest or not. One thing is evident I think, that some one has told him that the road runs through both Hogg's and Flesher's lands. But what about the other parties through whose lands it passes ? Why single out Mr. Hogg and Flesher ? Another thing is evident, that he has not been careful to notice the history of the matter. But, to be courteous, I might say the council have received the deeds from Mr. Hogg, for which he was paid an equivalent by forcing a road through Plewis' property for his benefit; but we have not the deed of Mr. Flesher's portion. Two reasons exist for it; first, the road was run irrespective of the boundaries of the lots, and therefore it was not possible to define its location. Mr. Flesher claims that where the road could be run on divisional lines with no material deviation or obstruction, that certainly should be its location, and he promised on those conditions. Mr. Flesher left immediately for England and so the matter stands. The road is established nevertheless, but will be deviated to suit the conditions, if practicable; if not it will remain where it is, and if need be the township will pay for it say $20. But from the very first, the council were cautious and would not bind themselves to expend any money on this road until cooperative measures were taken by Euphrasia. It is to be regretted, I think, that such antagonism exists in Euphrasia against this road. Is it not a maxim, true all the time, that the more competition there is the better chances exists for farmers to get in value the last cent for their produce. Markdale is not to blame in her endeavors to divert the trade of Euphrasia to her, and to speak of facilities they are prepared to offer. But when a man has a choice of markets, although he himself might not come to Flesherton, he finds a competitive market at Markdale made so by the facts stated. The very wisest policy therefore, for Euphrasia, is to co-operate regarding this road scheme. Artemesia has the line established to the township line already, but must have the road pushed beyond otherwise relinquish indefinitely the scheme. The electors should carefully consider the question. To Euphrasia the cost would be exceeedingly small compared with the advantages ; to Artemesia the cost would be considerable. But in both municipalities the making of the road would only be gradual, so that no one need think the townships would be swamped by adopting the scheme. Personally, I have no axes to grind and am quite passive in the matter. I only insist that it would be great folly to expend money to get into a swamp with no possible expectation of getting through.

Yours truly,

W. S. CHRISTOE.

INCORPORATION.

To the Editor of the Standard.

Injudicious rumors are afloat in our community tending to prejudice the ratepayers in l ehalf of incorporating our village of Markdale. There are several substantial reasons against incorporation: First, there is nothing to be gained by incorporation. Second, our taxation will be increased ten fold without any compensating advantage. Third, a false rumor is being circulated that the village does not receive its proportionate share of revenue. This is a base falsehood as the township returns of the municipalities of Artemesia and Glenelg will show. Fourth, the incorporation movement has been inaugurated by those who have all to gain and nothing to lose. Fifth, fat offices and loaferism are synonimous terms in the greater number of petty municipalities. Sixth, there is indisputable evidence that a false return of population has been given in order to aid the intriguers. Seventh, high taxation and increased rents will debar an increase of our population, those we already have will emigrate and outsiders will be deterred from coming in.

AN INTERESTED RATEPAYER.

Kimberly.

Business is brisk in the lumber line this winter, two or three companies, gangs making square timber which they will float down the river in the spring to the bay.

NOTICE.—There will be a shooting match on Christmas day in Kimberly, when a quantity of geese, turkeys, &c. will be provided and a good time is expected. A hop and supper will take place in the evening. Wismer's String Band will be in attendance.

A. O. U. W.

At the last regular meeting of Markdale lodge of Ancient Order of United Workman, the following were elected officers for the ensuing year :

Wm. Lucas, M. W. ; C. W. Rutledge, Foreman ; Robert Askin, Overseer ; J. G. Irving, Recorder ; Wm. Brown, Receiver ; Wm. N. Haskett, Financier ; Alex. Kay, Guide ; J. P. Sparling, Inside Watchman ; George Wilson Outside Watchman ; Wm. Lucas, R. S. Rae and C. W. Rutledge trustees.

This lodge is in a flourishing condition and every member is highly pleased with the order as a life insurance institution, it being one quarter cost of the ordinary life insurance. There are now 30 members in this lodge and the number increasing every month, their hall is spacious, comfortable, well lit and beautifully carpeted, giving it a most comfortable appearance, while the members are courteous, cheerful and unanimous in assisting any movement that will tend towards the social improvement or mutual good of the members, quite a number of farmers have recently joined this lodge and before winter is over a still greater increase is expected from that class. The organization is fifteen years in existance, and our assessments has not exceeded $14 per year on $2,000 of insurance, that is $7 on $1,000. This is certainly a very low rate. The membership has increased in Ontario 35 per cent during the past year, and the order is now the most popular insurance organization in existance.

The Societies.

EUGENIA L.O.L. No. 1118.—The following are the officers elected for 1884: Bro. W Armstrong, WM; Bro S Pedlar, DM; Bro Rev T Grandy, Chap; Bro J I Graham, Sec; Bro J Linton, Fin Sec; Bro Jos Fenwick, Treas; Bro M Akitt, first com man; Bro J J Fields, Dir of Cer.

FLESHERTON L.O.L.—The following were elected officers of Flesherton L. O.L. No. 429 for the year 1884: Bro J W Bates WM; Bro W H Johnson, WDM; Bro Rev McGregor, WC; Bro W P Crossley, WS; Bro J A Heard, WT; Bro Alfred Malloy, FCM; Committee, Bro R McGruther, Bro A S VanDusen, Bro J E Moore, Bro Jos Smith; Bro Wm Varty, D of C.—Advance.

BERKELEY L. O. L.—Berkeley lodge No. 176, meets on Tuesday on or before full moon, has a membership of forty-eight and is in a flourishing condition. At the last regular meeting the following officers were elected for the ensuing year . Bro John Gillespie, WM; Bro Thos Abbott, DM; Bro And Gillespie, Chap; Bro And Walker, Treas; Bro Jas Gillespie, Rec Sec; Bro D Jackson, Fin Sec; Bro Edward Brown, Dir of Cer; Committee, Bros John Middleton, And Ritchie, George Ritchie, Wm Jackson, John Love; Bro Geo Fleming, Lecturer.

MEAFORD ROAD U.S.S.—The following are the officers of Meaford Road Union Sunday School: Wm Buchanan, Superintendant; P Sparling, Asst. Supt.; J I Graham, Sec. Treas; Jos Buchanan and Geo Wright, Librarians Teachers, Miss Boland, Miss Buchanan, Miss A Kells, Miss Sparling, Jas Buchanan, Jas Hanson, A Johnson, H Sparling. The school intends holding their anniversary on the 15th Jan. The committee appointed to buy a new organ for the school reported that they would have it for the anniversary.

MR. JOHN, FORD, of Annan give us a call yesterday. He will remain in town a few day's.

—Dr. A. A. Riddell, an old practitioner, of Toronto, died on Sunday last.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

The Dundalk school examination was held on Monday. The pupils appear to be making satisfactory progress.

The public school entertainment on Tuesday evening was a grand success both teachers were the receipients of valuable presents.

The Methodist S. S. hold their anniversary on Xmas day, a good time is expected,

The skating rink opened on Wednesday night. This event has been anxiously awaited by the young people of the village.

Business is more lively since the sleighing began.

The Presbyterians are taking steps to secure a resident minister.

No change in the municipal situation.

Proton council held the last session of the year Tuesday and Wednesday,

Credit Sale Register.

Parties getting their sale bills printed at this office will have a notice under this head free of charge.

SATURDAY, DEC. 22ND.—At the Revere Hotel, Markdale, M. Byrnes will sell by auction that fine matched roadster team, several cows, a lot of buffalo robes, &c., sale at 2 o'clock. Geo. Noble, auctioneer.

FRIDAY, DEC. 31ST.—The executors of the late Samuel Cooper, will sell by public auction on lot 7, con. 8, Euphrasia, commencing at 1 o'clock, 3 horses, 5 cows. 10 head young cattle, pigs, sheep, &c. Terms, 12 months on approved paper, or 8 per cent off notes for cash. Geo. Noble, auctioneer.

FRIDAY, DEC. 28TH.—Valuable farm property in Glenelg, sale at the Markdale House. Moss, Falconbridge & Barwick, vendors' solicitors, Toronto.

SATURDAY, 22ND DEC.—Mr. Joseph Hynes will sell on his premises lot 19, con. 10, Euphrasia, cows, horses, sheep, implements, &c. Terms, 12 months on approved notes. Sale to commence at noon. W. J. Shepherdson, auctioneer.

BIRTHS.

QUINN—In Markdale, on the 18th inst., the wife of Mr. J. T. Quinn, of a son.

MCPHERSON—In Flesherton, on the 8th in the wife of Mr. A. McPherson, of a daughter.

MARRIAGES.

MCDONALD—MCINNES—On the 10th inst., by the Rev. D. McLeod, at the residence of the bride's father, Mr. Duncan McDonald, to Mis Flora Ann McInnes, daughter of Mr. Duncan McInnes, all of Glenelg, (Durham Road.)

WILEY—HUTCHINSON—At the residence of the bride's father, Euphrasia, by Rev. J. S. Corcoran, on the 19th inst., Mr. R. H. Wiley to Miss Sarah E. daughter of Mr. Jno Hutchinson, all of Euphrasia.

SIMMONS—BLACKBURN—On the 19th inst., by Rev. A. Wilson, at the Presbyterian Manse. Markdale, Mr. Walter Simmons, to Miss Sarah Blackburn, all of Artemesia.

DEATHS.

CLARK—In Markdale, on the 16th inst., Mrs. Clark, mother of Mr. W. M. Clark architect, aged 82 years.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.00; Spring $0.60 to $1 00; Barley, 45 to60; Peas, 65; Oats, 30c Butter, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 35c; Hay, $8 .00 ; Pork, 5.00 to 5.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 20c; eggs. 22c to 25c.

SUFFOLK BOAR. One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con. 7, Euphrasia. Age, year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

EXECUTOR'S NOTICE

TO THE CREDITORS OF

James Thompson.

Notice is hereby given that the creditors of James Thompson, late of the Township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, Farmer, who died on or about the 4th day of April, 1883, at the said township of Artemesia are, on or before the next, to send to either of the undersigned Executors at Flesherton, their Christian and Surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and the nature of the securities (if any) held by them. After the said Fourth day of January next the said Executors will distribute the assets of the said James Thompson, amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to such claims as the said executors shall then have notice of.

TENTH DAY OF JANUARY,

This notice is given in pursuance of Chap. 107, Sec. 34, R. S. O.

Dated at Flesherton this 11th day of December 1883.

(Signed) ISAAC SINCLAIR.

171-74 WILLIAM HILL.

AUCTION SALE

—OF—

Valuable Farm Property

—IN THE—

TOWNSHIP OF GLENELG

Under the power of sale in a mortgage from MARTIN DUNN to the Vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, and on default of payment of the moneys thereby secured, there will be offered for sale by Public Auction, at the MARKDALE HOUSE in the

VILLAGE OF MARKDALE,

—ON—

FRIDAY, 28TH DAY DEC. 1883

at 2 o'clock p.m., by A. R. VANDUSEN, autioneer, lot number nine (9) in the eighth (8th) concession of the said township of Glenelg, containing 100 acres, more or less, about 50 acres said to be cleared, balance timbered chiefly with hardwood. On the premises are said to be a log house barn and stable.

TERMS—10 per cent. at the time of sale, 15 per cent. within one month after sale and balance secured by mortgage of the premises payable in five yearly instalments with interest at 7 per cent. yearly.

For further particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, Esq., Flesherton, or to

MOSS, FALCONBRDGE & BARWICK.
Vendors' Solicitors.

Toronto, Dec. 4, 1883.

LOST, Between Markdale and Mr. Dan. Blaney's, on the 27th Nov. evening, a HORSE BLANKET. The finder will be suitably rewarded by leaving it at this office.

BOAR PIG. The thoroughbred boar CHESTER WHITE, will be for service at his pen, Markdale, forwith ; a fine boar six months old. Terms—$1, at time of service.

168-71 WM. DOUGLASS.

BERKSHIRE BOAR. A fine Thoroughbred Berkshire Boar for service at Lot 99, 2nd, West T. & S. Road, one mile west of Markdale, Terms, $1 at time of service.

R. McBRIDE.

TEACHER WANTED. For School Section No. 6, Artemesia, Male or Female holding second or third class certificate. Duties to commence on the 2nd January 1884. Apply stating salary to the trustees' secretary treasurer

JOHN HAZARD,
Flesherton Station P.O.

FARMS FOR SALE. Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are cleared and under cultivation. Lot 5 part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; and necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 15, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVIN,
Markdale.

Oct. 19, 1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE. Lots 36 and 37 second range west of T. & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation, fair buildings, good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2 miles from the flourishing village of Markdale. For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to 162-72 J. C. MUTCH,

Markdale P. O.

BERKSHIRE BOAR. An early spring pig for service at his pen, two miles south of Markdale. Terms, 75 cents at time of service, otherwise $1.

CHAS. LITTLEJOHNS.

MARKDALE HOUSE,

MARKDALE, - - ONT.

MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

IN THE GOODS AND CHATTELS

—OF—

Samuel Cooper,

(DECEASED.)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34, of Chapter 107, R. S. O. the creditors of Samuel Cooper, late of the township of Euphrasia, County of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 29th Aug. 1883, and all parties having claims upon his estate are, on or before the

FIRST DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1884,

to send by post, prepaid, to Geo. Richardson, Markdale P.O., in the County of Grey, one of the executors, of the personal estate and effects of deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received, or those of them which the executors then have notice.

GEO. RICHARDSON, } Executors.
JOHN LEE, }

Dated this 11th day December.

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKER,

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand,

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169-90.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK.

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personally attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any private individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

The Markdale house has a fine new sign.

Trimble & Wright have opened a branch store at Maxwell.

Armstrong Bros. steam turning factory is now in operation.

Goods at your own prices till end of the year at Reynolds & Son's.

Mrs. Hollingshead has a fine assortment of sweet meats for the holidays.

There will be a shooting match at the Revere hotel, Markdale, Christmas day.

Dont forget the annual school meeting which takes place next Wednesday, the 19th.

The polling for ward No. 3, (Glenelg will take place in Mullarky's cooper shop Markdale.

There will be Divine Service at Christ Church, Markdale on Christmas day at 10. 30. a. m.

Mr. John, Mercer, has sold his farm, 100 acres to his father Alex. Mercer, Esq. for $4,000.

Wm. R. Burnett, eldest son of Mr. Wm. Burnett, Artemesia, returned from Montana, last Friday.

The next sittings of division court, No. 5, will be held in Flesherton, on Thursday January 24th, 1884.

Sugar Making.—Considerable taffy has been indulged in recently between the Hanover Post and Flesherton Advance.

Say, stop! where are you going? why to Reynolds & Son's to see those great bargains people are raging about.

Reynolds & Sons have great pleasure in wishing their numerous customers a merry Xmas and a happy New Year.

We are informed that Mr. Boyd, of Euphrasia, is a candidate for Deputy Reeve, Mr. Ellis and Mr. Erskine are also candidates.

N. B.—All parties indebted to the undersigned will please call and settle forthwith and save trouble and costs, Wilson Benson.

Ever since the standard time came in force the days have been growing shorter, next week however they will commence to lengthen.

In the report of election of officers last week we omitted the name of Jas. Brodie who was elected treasurer in Artemesia Grange No. 259.

Subscribers to the Standard who do not reside in this district, and who wish the paper continued will do well to renew promptly as we cannot continue sending to those outside the county after their subscription has expired.

Mr. Wm. Hutchinson, of Euphrasia has sold his farm to his brother John, and bought Mr. John Rowe's farm in Artemesia for $2,050.

The Flesherton Advance has changed its form and it is now an eight page, the same size as the Standard, giving it quite an improved appearence.

Just received new goods in Watch chains X L N T stamped, also necklets and other lines. Call and see goods and get prices. W. A. Brown, jeweller.

The annual Christmas tree entertainment of Christ Church Sunday School will be held in the Orange Hall on Thursday evening Dec. 27th comencing at 7 o'clock.

Mr. R. O. Whitby has engaged the service of a first class painter for the commiug summer and respectfully solicits the patronage of those in need of anything in his line.

The Flesherton, Presbyterian Sabbath School will hold their anniversary tea-meeting on Christmas day, evening, songs, new recitations, new dialogues, &c. A good time is expected.

Reduced fares for the holidays are being offered on the T. G. & B. From the 21st to the 25th Dec., and from the 28th Dec. to 1st Jany. inclusive, return tickets will be issued between all stations at single fare.

All who intend investing in holiday or wedding presents will insure good value for their money, by selecting them from the fine stock of silver plated, hollow and flat ware, at W. A. Brown's jewellery store, Markdale.

Markdale Cab.—Mr. Hull has introduced a new feature in his livery business, that of driving his union bus out two afternoons each week, ladies or others desirous of having a drive can do so at the small cost of ten cents per hour.

We have added a greater number of new, unsolicited subscribers to our list during the past month than at any period of the same length since we entered the business. This is the best evidence we could have that the Standard is growing in popularity and is highly appreciated by the public.

We acknowledge receipt of subscriptions from those at a distance through the paper. But not those in the district. This week we have received $1. from Andrew Kennedy, Stevensburg, Mich., for 84. and $1, for six months of 83, and six of 84, for W. F. Whitby, Corvallis, Oregon.

For first class axe handles go to Finnerty's shop, Elizabeth st., opposite the bank, Markdale. You can bring your own timber and have them made to order, or you can get them all ready made at the shop. Sign of the Big Axe Handle. 169-72

Notwithstanding the continued dark cloudy weather which has prevailed this fall our photographer, Mr. Hamilton is turning out exceedingly clear and life-like pictures in various sizes. Seldom do we see anything like as good work executed in a country place, in fact it will compare favorably with the best of city work.

Sermons will be preached in the Holland Centre Methodist church, re-opening on Sunday the 30th inst., by the Rev. Mr. Casson of Markdale. A tea-meeting will also be held on the evening following, Monday the 31st when Rev. Mr. Casson, will deliver a lecture. Admission to tea and lecture 25 cents.

Wiarton, Dec. 17.—Two more bodies have been found at Johnston's Harbour, belonging to the lost steamer Eclipse. One man had light hair, and was stout built. There were papers found on him dated at Sault Ste. Marie. The other body has not been identified. Both bodies had life preservers on, and were buried at Jonston's Harbour.

A person who has been in gymnastic and dramatic clubs in Toronto and other places, and who visited Markdale club while at practice one evening recently, informed us that he never saw as many good performers in a club before. A big time is expected at their entertainment in Williamsford, tomorrow (Friday) evening.

The social at Mr. Kells' residence last Tuesday evening was well attended and a very enjoyable time was spent, several sleigh load, in fact the majority of those present, were from Markdale. Mr. and Mrs. Kells did all in their power for the comfort and enjoyment of those present, and were in every way successfull. Proceeds $12.55.

True merit brings its own reward, in the case of Burdock Blood Bitters it is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, $5,000 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

The anniversary services of the Walters Falls Methodist church, will be held in that place on Sunday the 23rd inst., when Rev. W. Casson, of Markdale, will preach morning and evening. The annual tea meeting will be held on Christmas day when a number of reverend and other gentlemen will give addresses. Good music will also be provided. Tea served at 5 p. m. Tickets 25 cents.

The Methodist Church annual tea meeting which will take place on Christmas, promises to be made in advance of anything in former years in point of interest. Tea will be served in the Orange Hall commencing at 5 o'clock p. m. after which all will repair to the church when Rev. Mr. Casson will deliver his popular lecture, "Prevalent Mistakes," The choir will also render choice selections in their usual good style. The lecture will doubtless be worth 50 cts. itself. Admission 25 cents.

Walkerton, Dec. 16.—At ten o'clock last night a fire broke out in the extensive flouring mills of David Moore and Son, Walkerton, which in a short time distroyed the whole place. The building at the time contained 1,000 barrels of flour and about 6,000 bushels of wheat. The flour was mostly got out, but the wheat was destroyed. The loss on the building and contents is about $35,000, on which there is an insurance of $19,000 in the Western, Royal, and City of London.

Disastrous Occurrence.—One day last week, after the Messrs. Dickson, of Lavender, had completed the threshing at Mr. George Dynes', near Redickville, the latter gentleman undertook to drive the sleigh carrying the engine to the next location, and in going up the lane at Mr. Joseph Thompson's the sleigh slewed, upsetting the steamer into a ditch, damaging it to the extent of $150, and to add to the misfortune, Mr. Dynes got a couple of ribs cracked, rendering medical assistance necessary, which was furnished by Dr. Norton.—Shelburne Free Press.

A New Years Gift.—Residents of Grey County, are invited to send in a number by card or otherwise, between 1 and 1000, to compete free of charge for a neat, nickle, lever, alarm clock, value $3.75, number will be put with clock, open to Jan 1st, noon, nearest to exact guess gains the clock. Give full address with No. Clock very useful to early risers, send in your guesses at once. Guesses will be numbered as received, so if two alike first one wins. Address W. A. Brown, jeweller, Markdale, box 5. Award made by Mr. C. W. Rutledge, and published first week in January, 1884.

1883 CHRISTMAS. 1884

SANTA CLAUS

HEAD QUARTERS

MEDICAL HALL.

We desire to inform our numerous Friends and Patrons that we have received and are opening our Annual stock of Christmas Goods, Fancy Goods, Toys Books, and Chrismas Cards. Our stock of Christmas Goods this season is Larger, Cheaper and Better assorted than that of any previous season. Call and examine. Satisfaction guaranted. Liberal discount to purchasers of Lots for Christmas trees.

A. TURNER & CO.

Seventeen C. S. R. cars were completely wrecked and two trainmen injured at Rodney on Saturday.

It is said that an arrangement is pending between the Northern and Hamilton & North-Western Railways in regard to the Pacific Junction.

Sad accident.—Two weeks ago while working in the bush taking out sawlogs, Geo. eldest son of Mr. R. Torry, Glenelg had his leg broken below the knee, the limb was set by Dr. Sproule, but we regret to learn that the boy is in rather a critical state, he is about 17 years of age.

Fire.—About 9 o'clock on Thursday evening last, a stable at the rear of Marshall's store, Division Street, was discovered to be on fire. The alarm was given, and as soon as the hose attached to the hydrant at Tucker's corner was brought into play, the fire was quickly got under. The stable which was used by P. Doyle, was only a short distance from his house, and if any wind had been blowing at the time, we should no doubt have had to record a more extensive conflagration. The loss is about $125.—O. S. Times.

Those of our subscrebers who are in arrears for 1883 will do us a favor by handing in the amount or remitting by mail at once. We will accept $1. as payment for subscription for 83 on condition that the cash is sent along with it for 84 otherwise $1.25 will be charged, this offer is good until the end of this year. Those who are in arrears for subscription or other account for any time previous to the 1st January 1883 may find their account with the clerk of the Court Division if not paid before the 28th inst., We have been very lenient in the past, but our business compells us to collect, so you cannot. blame us. Accounts have been rendered time and again and no further notice may be expected.

The Markdale Literary and Gymnastic club will give an intertainment in Vogan's Hall, Williamsford, on Friday evening the 21st December. This promises to be the best entertainment of the kind ever given in this district. The club is over forty members strong, many of whom have made wonderful progress in horizontal bar performances, and not a few have become experts with the gloves. The show will consist of bar performances, boxing exhibitions, sentimental and comic songs, stump speeches, farces, acted by the company, together with music from the string band, which is in itself worth the whole admission, we believe a rich treat is in store for those who go, and have no doubt there will be a crowded house.

Christmas is coming with all its hallowed influences and festivities which makes the old young again and the young feel the happy impulse which youth and the prospects of gaiety can give. The general topic now is, what little surprise in the shape of a present can I give to my dear friends, and where should I go to secure what is desirable. We will try and answer the the question, First, get something useful. Second, you will find W. J. McFarland has outdone himself this year in providing good useful articles for Xmas and New Years gifts. 75 good useful all wool shawls, $1.75 up. 100 rich cloth mantles. 175 ladies' fur caps, lovely trimmed hats and bonnets, special. 75 lace ties, choice goods, wool wraps, corsects, gloves, cashmeres, &c.

For the men, 300 overcoats, 450 tweed suits, hats, caps, gloves, shirts, ties, collars silk handkerchiefs &c. For the children, 1,000 different useful articles all at startling prices.

Grand illumination of the store which is beautifully decosated, every night the public are cordially invited to inspect, no pressing to buy goods.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

THOS. MATHEWS,

HarneSS EstaBlishmenT

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!

IN CONNECTION.

"Dolly, Isn't Christmas Jolly?"

A certain young lady,
Who lives in Arcady,
Thinks her simple Polly
A duck of a Dolly;
And in an arm-chair,
With a minute to spare,
Fast chatters away to her:
Though what she can say to her
By way of invention
Is past comprehension;
Now kissing, now scolding her,
Now warmly enfolding her.

A sly little bird
One day overheard
Missy's gossiping tattle,
And thus ran the prattle:

My sweet darling Dolly!
Now is it not jolly
That Christmas is near,
With its berries and holly,
And best of good cheer?
I am vastly delighted,
Mamma has invited
Young ladies a few
To meet me and you
Well may you stare, Miss,
At thought of such bliss.
Each brings a fine Dolly.
But none like my Polly!
Yes, you shall be drest
As fine as the best:
Nay, finer; for know—
Let me whisper it so—
I am sure you can hear,
Though dumb you appear.
You're like my dog Tray,
Who knows all I say;
For that he shows clear
By pricking his ear
And beating his tail
On the floor like a flail:
But he is too shy,
I suppose, to reply:
Yet what sympathy lies
In his liquid brown eyes!
His frame all a-shiver
And a low whining quiver
Betraying his rapture
As I hold him in capture.

I wish you would speak,
If only a squeak,
Just as Pussy-cat goes
When you step on her toes.
Now, dearest of dears,
Keep open your ears,
And let your eyes glisten
To show me you listen.
I've a toilette, the rarest,
To suit you, my fairest;
A pink satin dress,
From Paris express:
Then dainty silk socks,
With finely worked clocks;
And shoes—O such beauties!—
To put on your tooties;
Rare pearls to bedeck
Your lily-white neck;
A scarf o'er your shoulders,
To charm all beholders;
And a pair of kid gloves,
Such dear little loves,
Tight-fitting as skin
The fair hands within.
O won't you look fine
And all else outshine!
With envy they'll stare.
Their eyes open wide,
As you sit on a chair
Erect by my side.
Dressed out as a Queen
Or State days is seen.
O, darlingest Dolly!
Now isn't Christmas jolly!

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER III.—(CONTINUED.)

"Oh, Mrs. Rayner is never anything! At least—I mean," said I, annoyed at having spoken without thinking, "she is so reserved that——"

"That you like Mr. Rayner best?"—"Oh, yes!"

He drew himself up rather coldly.

"So do most ladies, I believe."

"One can't help liking a person who talks and laughs, and is bright and kind, better than one who never speaks, and glides about like a ghost, and looks coldly at you if you speak to her," I burst out, apologetically at first, but warming into vehemence towards the close of my speech.

"Perhaps she means to be kind," said he gently.

"Then she ought to make her meaning plainer. She can't think it is kind to fix her eyes upon me as if I were something not human, if I laugh, to give me her hand so coldly and unresponsively that it seems like a dead hand in mine, and at other times to take no more notice of me than if I were not there. Besides, she knows that it is the first time I have ever left home, and she must see sometimes that I am not happy."

Mr. Reade suddenly stooped towards me, and then straightened himself again just as suddenly, without any remark: but he cleared his throat. I remembered that I had no right to make this confession to a comparative stranger, and I added quickly—

"I ought not to talk as if I were ill-treated. I am not at all. If she would only not be quite so cold!"

"Perhaps her own troubles are very heavy and hard to bear."

"Oh, no, they are not!" I replied confidently. "At least, she has a kind husband and a pretty home, and everything she can wish for. And I think it is very selfish of her to give herself up to brooding over the memory of her dead child, instead of trying to please her living husband."

"Her dead child?"

"Yes. She had a boy who died some years ago, and she has never got over it. That is why she is so reserved."

"Oh! How long ago did this boy die?" asked he, in curiously incredulous tones

"About five years ago, I think Mr. Rayner said."

"Oh, then it was Mr. Rayner who told you?"—"Yes."

"And Mrs. Rayner has never got over it?"

"No. It seems difficult to believe, doesn't it, that a brilliant woman who wrote books and was much admired should fade like that into a kind of shadow? I wonder she doesn't write more books to divert her thoughts from brooding over the past."

"Oh, she wrote books! Did she tell you so herself?"

"No—Mr. Rayner."

"Oh! Did Mr. Rayner tell you any more?"

The irony in his tone was now so unmistakeable that I hesitated and looked up at him inquiringly.

"I am sure he must have told you that he is a very ill-used man and a very long-suffering husband, and asked you to pity him. Didn't he, Miss Christie? Ah, I see he did?" he cried.

I could feel the blood rushing to my cheeks; but I was indignant at having to submit to this catechism.

"Mr Rayner never asks impertinent questions," I said severely.

The young man drew back, muttered "I beg your pardon," and, turning to watch the rain, began to hum something without any time to cover his discomfiture. I was sorry directly; but my dignity forbade my calling him back to retract the snub. Yet I was dying to know the reason of his violent prejudice against Mr. Rayner. To my relief, in a few minutes he came back to me of his own accord.

"Miss Cristie," he began nervously, "I am afraid I have offended you. Won't you forgive me for being carried a little too far by my interest in a lady who herself confessed that she is away from her friends for the first time and not—very happy?"

I could not resist such an appeal as that; I looked up smiling, with tears in my eyes.

"Oh, I am not at all offended! But I should like to know what reason you have for thinking so ill, as you seem to do, of Mr. Rayner."

"Perhaps I am wrong. I really have no proof that he is anything but what he wishes every one to think him—a light-hearted accomplished man, of idle life and pleasant temper. It is not his fault that, with all his cleverness, his ease of manner is not quite the ease of a gentleman."

I was scarcely experienced enough to have found that out for myself. I considered for a moment, and then said rather timidly—

"Won't you tell me anything more? You can if you will, I think, and, alone in the world as I am, I want all the knowledge I can get of the people I live among, to guide me in my conduct."

He seemed to debate with himself for a moment; then he sat down beside me on the other shaft of the cart, and said very earnestly—

"Seriously, then, Miss Christie, I would advise you to leave the Alders as soon as you possible can, even before you have got another engagement. You are in the midst of more dangers than you possibly know of, more probably than I know of myself, more certainly than I can warn you against."

His voice was very low as he finished, and, while we both sat silent, he with his eyes intently fixed on my face, mine staring out fearfully at the sky, a dark figure suddenly appeared before us, blocking out the light. It was Mr. Rayner. Mr. Reade and I started guiltily. The new-comer had approached so quietly that we had not heard him; had he heard us?

CHAPTER IV.

In spite of the rain and mud. Mr. Rayner was in the brightest of humours; and his first words dispelled my fear that he might have overheard the warning Mr. Reade had just given me not to stay at the Alders. He caught sight of me first as he came under the roof of the dark shed.

"At last, Miss Christie! It was a happy thought of mine to look for you here. But how in the world did you discover this place of refuge?" Then, turning, he saw my companion. "Hallo, Laurence! Ah, this explains the mystery! You have been playing knight-errant, I see, and I am too late in the field; but I shall carry off the lady, after all. My wife noticed that you started without your ulster, Miss Christie, and, as soon as service was over, she sent me off with it to meet you."

He helped me on with it, and then I stood between them, silent and rather shy at receiving so much unaccustomed attention, until the rain began to fall less heavily, and we seized the opportunity to escape. When we got in sight of the park, Mr. Reade wanted to take a short cut through it to the house; but Mr. Rayner pointed out that there was no object to be gained by catching a bad cold wading through the long wet grass, so we all went together as far as the park gates, when Mr. Reade left us.

"Nice young fellow, that," said Mr. Rayner, as soon as the other was out of earshot. "Just the kind of open frank lad I should have liked to have for a son in a few years' time. Handsome too, and good-natured. There's not a girl in all the country-side who hasn't a smile and a blush for Laurence."

I did not think this so great a recommendation as it seemed to Mr. Rayner, but I said nothing; and he went on—

"He is worth all the rest of his family put together. Father—self-important, narrow-minded old simpleton; mother—ill-dressed, vegetable, kept alive by a sense of her own dignity as the penniless daughter of an earl; sisters—plain stuck-up nonentities; younger brother—dunce at Eton. But they haven't been able to spoil Laurence. He may have a few of their prejudices, but he has none of their narrow-minded pig headedness. You don't understand the rustic mind yet, Miss Christie. I assure you there are plenty of people in this parish who have condemned me to eternal punishment because I am fond of racing and, worse then all, play the violin."

"Do you play the violin? Oh, I am so fond of it!"

"Are you? Poor child, you had better not acknowledge the taste as long as you remain in this benighted spot; they class it with the black art. I believe I am popularly supposed to have bewitched the Alders with my playing. Some of the rustics think that the reeds round the pond play all by themselves about midnight, if they are accidentally touched."

"Oh, Mr. Rayner, aren't you rather hard upon the rustics?" I said, laughing.

"Not a bit, as you will find out soon enough. However, if you are not afraid of being bewitched too, you shall hear my violin some evening, and give me your opinion of it."

We were within the garden gates by this time, and, as we walked down the path, I saw a woman's figure among the trees on our right. The storm had left the evening sky so dark and she was so well hidden that, if I had not been very sharp-sighted, I should not have noticed her. As it was, I could not recognise her, and could only guess that it was Mrs. Rayner. The idea of those great wierd eyes being upon me, watching me, just as they had been on the evening of my arrival, made me uncomfortable. I was glad Mr. Rayner did not look that way, but went on quietly chatting till we reached the house. He left me in the hall, and went straight into the study, while I, before going up-stairs to take off my bonnet, went into our little schoolroom to put my church-service away. The French window had not been closed, and I walked up to it to see whether the rain had come in. The sky was still heavy with rain-clouds, so that it was quite dark indoors, and, while I could plainly see the woman I had noticed among the trees forcing her way through the wet branches, stepping over the flower-beds on to the lawn, and making her way to the front of the house, she could not see me. When she came near enough for me to distinguish her figure, I saw that it was not Mrs. Rayner, but Sarah the housemaid. I stood, without acknowledging it to myself, rather in awe of this woman; she was so tall and so thin, and had such big eager eyes and such a curiously constrained manner. She was only a few steps from the window where I stood completely hidden by the curtain, when Mr. Rayner passed quickly and caught her arm from behind. She did not turn or cry out, but only stopped short with a sort of gasp.

"What were you doing in the shrubbery just now, Sarah?" he asked quietly. "If you want to take fresh air in the garden, you must keep to the lawn and the paths. By forcing your way through the trees and walking over the beds you do damage to the flowers—and to yourself. If you cannot remember these simple rules, you will have to look out for another situation."

She turned round sharply.

"Another situation! Me!"

"Yes, you. Though I should be sorry to part with such an old servant, yet one may keep a servant too long."

"Old! I wasn't always old!" she broke out passionately.

"Therefore you were not always in receipt of such good wages as you get now. Now go in and get tea ready. And take care the toast is not burnt again."

I could see that she glared at him with her great black eyes like a tigress at bay, but she did not dare to answer again, but slunk away cowed into the house. I am not surprised, for the tone of cold command with which he spoke those last insignificant words inspired me with a sudden sense of fear of him, with a feeling that I was face to face with an irresistible will, such as I should have thought it impossible for light-hearted Mr. Rayner to inspire.

The whole scene had puzzled me a little. What did Sarah the housemaid want to stand like a spy in the shrubbery for? How had Mr. Rayner seen and recognised her without seeming even to look in that direction? Was there any deeper meaning under the words that had passed between them? There was suppressed passion in the woman's manner which could hardly have been stirred by her master's orders to keep to the garden paths and not to burn the toast; and there was a hard decision in Mr. Rayner's which I had never noticed before, even when he was seriously displeased. I waited behind the curtain by the window until long after he had gone back towards the study, feeling guiltily that his sharp eyes must find me out, innocently as I had played the spy. If he were to speak to me in the tone that he had used to Sarah, I felt that I should run away or burst into tears, or do something else equally foolish and unbecoming in an instructress of youth. But no one molested me. When I crept away from the window and went softly up-stairs to my room, there was no one about, and no sound to be heard in the house save a faint clatter of tea things in the servants' hall. At tea-time Mr. Rayner was as bright as usual, and laughingly declared that they should never trust me to go to church by myself again.

That night I pondered Mr. Reade's warning to me to leave the Alders; but I soon decided that the suggestion was quite impractical. For, putting aside the fact that I had no stronger grounds than other people's prejudice and suspicion for thinking it imprudent to stay, and that I could see no sign of the dangers Mr. Reade had hinted at so vaguely; what reason could I offer either to my employers or to my mother for wishing to go? This sort of diffidence at inventing excuses is a strong barrier to action in young people. And, if I had overcome this diffidence sufficiently to offer a plausible motive for leaving the Alders, where was I to go?

My father was dead; my mother, who had been left with very little to live upon, had been glad, at the time when it was agreed that I should begin to earn my own living, to accept an offer to superintend the household of a brother of hers who had not long lost his wife. My uncle would, I knew, give me a home while I looked out for another situation, but I understood now how few people seemed to want the services of "a young lady, aged eighteen, who preferred children under twelve."

And what a bad recommendation it would be to have left my first situation within a month! And what could I say I did it for? If I said, Because the house was damp, people would think I was too particular. And, if I said I was afraid my pupil's mother was mad, they would want some better reason than the fact that she talked very little and moved very softly for believing me. And, if I said I had been told the place was dangerous, and so thought I had better go, they would think I was mad myself. And, besides these objections to my leaving, was there not, to a young mind, an unacknowledged attraction in the faint air of mystery that hung about the place, which would have made the ordinary British middle-class household seem rather uninteresting after it? So I decided to pay no attention to vague warnings, but to stay where I was certainly, on the whole, well-off.

The next morning, as I put on a dainty china-blue cotton frock that I had never worn before, I could not help noticing how much better I was looking than when I lived in London. Instead of being pale, I had now a pink color in my cheeks, and my eyes seemed to look larger and brighter than they used to do. After a minute's pleased contemplation of my altered appearance, I turned from the glass in shame. What would my mother say if she could see how vain her daughter was growing? Without another look even to see whether I had put in my brooch straight, I went down-stairs. Mr. Rayner was already in the dining-room, but no one else was there yet. He put down his newspaper and smiled at me.

"Come into the garden for a few minutes until the rest of the family assembles," said he; and I followed him through the French window on to the lawn.

The morning sun left this side of the house in shade. The birds were twittering in the ivy and stirring the heavy leaves as they flew out frightened at the noise of the opening window; the dew was sparkling on the grass, and the scent of the flowers was deliciously sweet.

"Looks pretty, doesn't it?" said Mr. Rayner.

"Pretty! It looks and smells like Paradise! I mean——" I stopped and blushed, afraid that he would think the speech profane.

But he only laughed very pleasantly. I was smelling a rose while I tried to recover the staid demeanour I cultivated as most suitable to my profession. When I raised my eyes, he was looking at me and still laughing.

"You are fond of roses?"

"Yes, very, Mr. Rayner."

I might own so much without any derogation from my dignity.

"But don't you think it was very silly of Beauty to choose only a rose, when her father asked what he should bring her! I have always thought that ostentation of humility spoilt an otherwise amiable character."

I laughed.

"Poor girl, think how hard her punishment was! I don't think, if I had married the prince, I could ever have forgotten that he had been a beast, and I should have always been in fear of his changing back again."

"The true story is, you know, that he always remained a beast, but he gave her so many diamonds and beautiful things that she overlooked his ugliness. Like that the story happens every day."

I only shook my head gently; I could not contradict Mr. Rayner, but I would not believe him.

"Now, if you were Beauty, what would you ask papa to bring you?"

I laughed shyly.

"A prince?" I blushed and shook my head.

"No, not yet," I said, smiling rather mischievously.

"A ring, a bracelet, a brooch?"—"Oh, no!"

"A Murray's Grammar, a pair of globes, a back-board?"

"No, Mr. Rayner. I should say a rose like Beauty—a beautiful Marshal Niel rose. I couldn't think of anything lovelier than that."

"That is a large pale yellow rose, isn't it? I can't get it to grow here. What a pity we are not in a fairy-tale, Miss Cristie, and then the soil wouldn't matter! We would have Marshal Niel roses growing up to the chimney-pots."

We had sauntered back to the dining-room window, and there, staring out upon us in a strange fixed way, was Mrs. Rayner. She continued to look at us, and especially at me, as if fascinated, until we were close to the window, when she turned with a start; and when we entered the room the intent expression had faded from her lustreless eyes, and she was her usual lifeless self again.

At dinner-time Mr. Rayner did not appear; I was too shy to ask Mrs. Rayner the reason, and I could only guess, when tea-time came and again there was no place laid for him, that he had gone away somewhere I was sure of it when he had not reappeared the next morning, and then I became conscious of a slow but sure change, a kind of gradual lightening, in Mrs. Rayner's manner. She did not become talkative or animated like any other woman; but it was as if a statue of stone had become a statue of flesh, feeling the life in its own veins and grown conscious of the life around it. This change brought one strange symptom; she had grown nervous. Instead of wearing always an unruffled stolidity, she started at any unexpected sound, and a faint tinge of color would mount to her white face at the opening of a distant door or at a step in the passage. This change must certainly, I thought, be due to her husband's departure; but it was hard to tell whether his absence made her glad or sorry, or whether any such vivid feeling as gladness or grief caused the alteration in her manner.

On the second day of Mr. Rayner's absence Sarah came to the school-room, saying that a gentleman wished to speak to me. In the drawing-room I found Mr. Laurence Reade.

"I have come on business with Mr. Rayner; but, as they told me he was out, I ventured to trouble you with a commission for him, Miss Cristie."

"I don't know anything about business, especially Mr. Rayner's," I began doubtfully. "Perhaps Mrs. Rayner— ."

"Oh, I couldn't trouble her with such a small matter! I know she is an invalid. It is only that two of the village boys want to open an account with the penny bank. So I offered to bring the money."

He felt in his pockets and produced one penny.

"I must have lost the other," he said gravely. "Can you give me change for a threepenny-piece?"

I left him and returned with two half-pennies. He had forgotten the names of the boys, and it was some time before he remembered them. Then I made a formal note of their names and of the amounts, and Mr. Reade examined it, and made me write it out again in a more business-like manner. Then he put the date, and wrote one of the names again, because I had misspelt it, and then smoothed the paper with the blotting-paper and folded it, making, I thought, an unnecessarily long performance of the whole matter.

"It seems a great deal of fuss to make about twopence, doesn't it?" I asked innocently.

And Mr. Reade, who was bending over the writing-table, suddenly began to laugh, then checked himself and said—

"One cannot be too particular, even about trifles, where other people's money is concerned.

And I said, "Oh, no! I see," with an uncomfortable feeling that he was making fun of my ignorance of business-matters. He talked a little about Sunday, and hoped I had not caught cold; and then he went away. And I found, by the amount of hemming Haidee had got through when I went back to the schoolroom, that he had stayed quite a long time.

Nothing happened after that until Saturday, which was the day on which I generally wrote to my mother. After tea, I took my desk up-stairs to my own room; it was pleasanter there than in the schoolroom; I liked the view of the marsh between the trees, and the sighing of the wind among the poplars. I had not written many lines before another sound overpowered the rustle of the leaves—the faint tones of a violin. At first I could distinguish only a few notes of the melody, then there was a pause and a sound as of an opening window; after that, Schubert's beautiful "Aufenthalt" rang out clearly and held me as if enchanted. It must be Mr. Rayner come back. I had not thought, when he said he played the violin, that he could play like that. I must hear better. When the last long sighing note of the "Aufenthalt" had died away, I shut up my half-finished letter hastily in my desk and slipped down stairs with it. The music had begun again. This time it was the "Standchen." I stole softly through the hall, meaning to finish my letter in the schoolroom, where, with the door ajar, I could hear the violin quite well. But, as I passed the drawing-room door, Mr. Rayner, without pausing in his playing, cried "Come in!" I was startled by this, for I had made no noise; but I put my desk down on the hall table and went in. Mrs. Rayner and Haidee were there, the former with a handsome shawl, brought by her husband, on a chair beside her, and my pupil holding a big wax-doll, which she was not looking at—the child never cared for her dolls. Mr. Rayner, looking handsomer than ever, sunburnt, with his chestnut hair in disorder, smiled at me and said, without stopping the music—

"I have not forgotten you. There is a souvenir of your dear London for you," and nodded towards a rough wooden box, nailed down.

I opened it without much difficulty; it was from Covent Garden, and in it, lying among ferns and moss and cotton wool, were a dozen heavy beautiful Marshal Niel roses. I sat playing with them in an ecstasy of pleasure, intoxicated with music and flowers, until Mr. Rayner put away his violin and I rose to say good-night.

"Lucky Beauty!" he said, laughing, as he opened the door for me. "There is no beast for you to sacrifice yourself to in return for the roses."

I laughed back and left the room, and, putting my desk under my flowers, went towards the staircase. Sarah was standing near the foot of it, wearing a very forbidding expression.

"So you're bewitched too!" she said, with a short laugh, and turned sharply towards the servants' hall.

And I wondered what she meant, and why Mr. and Mrs. Rayner kept in their service such a very rude and disagreeable person.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

A Simple Test.

People who seek healthy sites for building themselves homes are often victims to their sense of sight or to that of others. In many cases the sense of smell is inferior, and the eyes are left to supply the deficiency. A building site may be charming to the vision, and made additionally attractive by being in or proximate to "a good neighborhood," as the phrase runs, and the family house purchased or builded may possess all the appliances of sanitization known to experts in building and plumbing, and yet be a mansion of death. Fate steps away in a manner which surprises physicians and brings woe to the survivors. Not long since in an upper district of New York City, the family of a well known clergyman was almost decimated by diphtheria, and found so far as external appearances were concerned the house was dry and inviting, and strangest of all, in a neighborhood well drained and densely populated by an excellent class of citizens. The premises underwent investigation by plumbers and were pronounced free from all taint of sewer gas. Yet the dread carnival of death carried misery into the hearts of the inmates of the family, and the house was abandoned. Similar instances have, and will always, abound until some simple test for the detection of malarial odors and influences are made. The simplest of all is to place pieces of fresh meat on the proposed site, properly protected from theft, and in twelve hours time it can be decided whether or not the place is unhealthy or the reverse. If the flesh rapidly purtrifies, avoid the locality as you would a plague spot. All architects should be students of hygiene as well as of the art of conceiving plans for mansions in which human life is to be saved or sacrificed.—Rochester Union and Advertiser.

Valuable to Tea Drinkers.

It is well known that the green tea affects the nerves much more than the black tea which is believed to arise from the different mode of preparation. For making green tea the leaves are put over the fire and partially dried directly they are picked, but with black tea the leaves are put into a basket and exposed to the influence of the atmosphere for twenty or thirty hours, during which time a slight fermentation takes place, and the color of the leaf changes from a green to a brown or chocolate hue (this is easily seen by the infusion of the dried leaf of black and green tea; the leaf after infusion will show the different colors named); they are then put over the fire and finished. In this country about 215,000,000 pounds are delivered yearly, of which about 40,000,000 are exported, but the proportions are about 207,000,000 of black and 7,000,000 of green, Oolong and Japan. While in America the black tea imported is about 5,250,900, the green tea (including Oolong and uncolored Japan tea, which possesses nearly the same properties as green) amount to 58,000,000. Would not this excessive use of green account for the opinion of the American doctors as to the effect of tea on the nervous system? I doubt very much if a pound of black tea, boiled down in the same way as the young hyson mentioned, would poison either rabbits or cats with the same dose. There is no doubt the fermentation of the leaves of black tea reduces the amount of the active principle "theine" that you find in green.

Another thing: in preparing tea for the table, boiling water is put on the leaf and an infusion made which is at once partaken of. But who would ever think of boiling tea to drink? By so doing you extract from the stalk and woody fibre of the leaf an acid decoction that no one would find pleasure in taking, and from which woody part would be most likely extracated the poisonous qualities mentioned. In tea-drinking European countries, as Germany, Russia, etc., scarcely any green is used, and doubtless the great increase in the consumption in this country arises from the almost universal use of black tea, green being only used in mixing with it to impart a flavor, and while of late years the consumption of black tea has largely increased, that of green has remained stationary, which clearly shows that the taste in this country is entirely different from that of America. May we long continue in this country to enjoy "the cup which cheers but not inebriates."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"The Christmas Bells."

...gerous the leafless land
...hear the clash of Christmas chimes;
...and o'd stand hand in hand.
...om the past in present times.
...ory in the Bells
...nts in whispers through the air:
...come their music tells,
...to others of despair!

...w the thing the window wide;
...on a Christmas Eve as this;
...be is to greet the bride
...lebrate the bridegroom's kiss.
...too brief, alas!
...flesh por still the wave;
...morning we shall pass
...s on her husband's grave!

...you can't forget
...ness of last Christmas night,
...cold and wet
...ed and hungry to the light.
...wreaths unwithered still,
...new year had scarcely come.
...shone across the hill,
...lost brother had come home!

...and Peace!" in leafy scroll,
...above the chancel dim;
...the mighty organ roll
...for the Christmas hymn.
...was of love, and all
...our hearts—a Christian fold;
...kisses never fall
...her's forehead as of old!

...Christmas bells, of peace;
...on of love that never dies;
...that lasts though life must cease,
...deathless sympathies;
...only true belief
...the meadows and the plain,
...nce more will smile in leaf:
...flowers come again,

...usic of the chimes
...hate and kills despair;
...the good old times
...move the very air;
...buried, it will rise,
...row triumphs, 'twill depart:
...grief-wasted eyes,
...joy the empty heart.

"Fireside Fancies."

...ands beside the fire,
...her to admire
...and fan, and bangles;
...make hearts to break,
...and elbow make—
...est of angles.

...doubt that Christmas joys
...ter girls and boys,
...or in city:
...grown since girlhood's time,
...even a Pantomime
...really to be witty.

...thinks the season brings
...pleasant things,
...concatenation;
...ross the icebound stream,
...their dearest duty deem
...Church's decoration.

...brings the thought of those
...in the time of snows,
...stunned and weary-hearted;
...within the embers red,
...see the faces of the dead,
...ghosts of days departed.

...Though the tear-drops dim
...she'll have a smile for him,
...keep a score of dances:
...we'll leave her—since we know
...find a third de trop—
...her fireside fancies.

BURIED ALIVE.

Terrible Fate which All Persons Dread.

...when I am laid into my tomb, I
...?"—Romeo and Juliet.

...or of being coffined before the ...ck has become extinct is beyond the ...ription. Burned in a fiery furnace, ...beneath the water to rise no more, ...ling, falling asleep in the arms ...with a scythe, the hectic flush ...cheek and the hacking cough on the ...ying in a pest house of the cholera, ...or blown to smithereens by a ..., each and all bad enough. Mor... relatives may somewhat allevi... friends may smooth the pillow or ... business perform the last sad offi... waking in a coffin, cramped till ... impossible, having the power to ... feel and know, yet incapable of ... self, is a manner of having ... opened and being kicked out that ... to contemplate. Doomed to a slow, ... miserable, perhaps a maddened ... death, insanity is a relief and ... a boon. Languishing, starving, ... the noisome vapors of the ... house, buried, yet alive!

...ON A DISSECTING TABLE.

...Mr. Edward Stapleton, a London ..., died of typhus fever, with symp... that astonished the physicians. His ... would not allow a post mortem; so ... had been buried eight feet under ... the doctors arranged with some ... to rifle his grave. Placed ... table, an incision of some length ... made in his abdomen, when the ... appearance of the corpse suggest... the battery. Many experi... were tried, when one suggested ap... the battery to one of the pectoral ... A rough gash was made, a wire ... contact, when the patient, with ... movement, rose from the table ... into the middle of the floor. ... a few unintelligible words, he ... in the middle of the floor. It was ... daylight, and the corpse cutters were ... with awe and paralyzed with fear. It was time for action. The man was alive. He was speedily brought to, and eventually restored to his friends. Mr. Stapleton declared that at no time was he totally unconscious; that he heard the doctors pronounce him dead, and when he was on the dissecting-table tried to shout, "I am alive."

Equally horrible was the case of a beautiful young lady, about to be married, which came under the writer's own observation three years ago. The young lady was disposed to be fleshy, and laced tightly to preserve her figure. Returning one evening from a ball, where she had danced perhaps to excess, she was taken in a swoon. She lay several days, and the attending physician pronounced her dead of heart disease. She was buried, and a few days after her mother had a terrible dream, in which the form of her daughter appeared to her clad in her burial robes, her hair disheveled, her eye-balls glassy, blood-shot and protruding, her hands convulsively clenching her cheeks and horrible agony depicted on every lineament of her countenance, while her death shriek: "Oh, come to me mother; I am not dead, they have buried me alive!"—rang in her ears. Such was the vivid impression made upon the mother's mind by the dream that she had the coffin opened, and it was found that the corpse of her daughter had turned upon its side, while large pieces of flesh had been torn from her cheeks in the struggle of agony she had made to escape.

A CONGRESSMAN'S WIFE.

The wife of a lawyer and member of Congress was seized with a sudden and unaccountable illness in Baltimore. The skill of the most eminent physicians was baffled. After much suffering she was supposed to die. The face had the pinched and sunken outline, the lips of marble pallor, the eyes were lustreless, pulsation ceased, and the body was icy cold. For three days it was preserved unburied, during which time it had acquired a stony rigidity. The lady was deposited in the family vault, and for three years was undisturbed. It was then opened, when, horror of horrors, as the husband opened the door the white-apparelled skeleton of his wife in her unmoulded shroud fell rattling in his arms. Investigation showed that two days after burial the buried wife had revived, and in her struggles had knocked the coffin from its shelf, and it had broken open. But a fearful fate awaited the coffin-escaped woman. Becoming entangled in some irons which projected, she had either starved to death or died from fright, and the flesh literally rotted from her bones.

BORN IN A COFFIN.

December 26, 1882, the New York Sun relates the burial alive of a lady at Warsaw: "A lady died under somewhat peculiar circumstances, which gave rise to the report that her death had been caused by her husband's ill-treatment Hence, several weeks after her interment her body was exhumed for post-mortem examination, when it was found that in the grave a perfectly healthy child had been born." On the 23rd of last April Miss Mosley, a domestic living in a family in West Middlesex, Penn., apparently died. Physicians could not diagnose the case, but shook their heads and agreed that it was mysterious. Her family before her death had moved to Missouri, and she was buried. On the 17th her friends from Missouri arrived to remove the remains, and upon opening the coffin a heart-rending spectacle was presented. The young lady had been buried alive, had turned over on her side, and was laying face downward, her hands clinched in her hair, and her distor features plainly showing the ntensity of her sufferings.

A BRIDE BURIED.

Intoxicated with the approaching fruition of her love's young dream, a young and beautiful woman on the eve of her marriage was buried in Lodi, in Piedmont, having been prononnced dead by the doctor's certificate. He said she had died from excitement—overjoy at the prospect of being married; but the legal name of the accident was heart disease. When they tossed the first shovelful of earth on the coffin strange noises were heard, as if evil spirits were disputing over the body of the dead. The grave-diggers ran off, the mourners fell on their knees, counted beads and prayed; but the bridegroom, the only one who seemed to have any common sense, said: "Unnail the coffin." It was too late. She was found in an upright attitude, her eyes wide open, her teeth clenched, and her hands clutching her hair. The lamp of life had then gone out; but when she was laid in her coffin the day before her eyes were closed, her hands folded on her breast as if in paayer.

A YOUNG PRIEST.

Cardinal Dennet related the following remarkable account before the French Assembly: A young priest was suddenly stricken down unconscious in the pulpit of a crowded cathedral, where he was preaching. The funeral knell was soon after tolled, and a physician declared him to be certainly dead, and obtained leave for his burial next day. The Bishop of the Cathedral where the event had occurred, had recited the "De Profundis" by the side of the bier, the coffin being already prepared. Night was approaching, and the young priest, who heard all these preparations, was suffering agonies. He was only twenty-eight years old, and in perfect health. At last he distinguished the voice of a friend of his childhood. This caused him to make a superhuman effort, and produced the wonderful result of enabling him to speak. The next day he was enabled to preach again. But there is even higher authority than this. When in February, 1866, the French Senate was discussing the question of establishing mortuary houses in which people supposed to be dead should remain a certain number of hours before burial, and a motion was made to proceed with the order of the day, His Eminence the Cardinal Archbishop of Bordeaux protested, and stated he was sure he had saved several lives about to be sacrificed to the indecent haste of survivors. He had seen a man taken from his coffin and restored to perfect health. Another man of advanced years had already been placed in the coffin, and yet lived twelve hours after. More than that, he had himself performed a miracle which, had he lived in the Middle Ages, would have canonized him as a saint. He had seen the body of a young lady laid out for burial, the attendants covering the face as he entered, but allowing him to observe enough to see that the maid was dead, but not asleep. Thereupon he cried out that he had come to save her. He told her to wake up and shake off the lethargy which oppressed her, and return to life. His voice reached her benumbed sensation, and she lived to be a wife and a mother.

Would Have an Easy Time.

"Say, how long do these mosquitoes bite?" asked a guest of an Arkansaw hotel, as a colored gentleman entered with a pitcher of water. "I have been lying here fighting 'em for an hour. How long do you suppose they will keep up this business?"

"Well, I dunno, sah. 'Cordin' ter how manny da is."

"There are ten thousand."

"In dat case, sah, it's 'cordin' ter how hungry da is."

"They are as hungry as wolves."

"Den yer's mighty likely ter hab trouble wid 'em, sah."

"Why don't you put a bar over the bed?"

"'Case nobody eber sleeps in dis room but one night. When a one night man come along we give him dis room. Didn't nobody sleep in heah las' night an' dat's de reason da's so hungry. Ef yer'd happen ter strike dis bed jes' arter a fat man had been in in it, yer'd had an easy time, sah."—Arkansaw Traveller.

Turkish authorities are making a raid on high heels and thin veils. Of course this is a "she raid."

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Short Line.

From the Winnipeg Free Press.

A representative of the Free Press, on a recent visit to Ontario and Quebec, had the good fortune to ride over the above line from St. Paul to Chicago and return, and to his great pleasure found that all the claims made by this popular company were more than justified by his experience. The road-bed, track, and equipment are superb, and the route is down the banks of the beautiful Mississippi river, through Lake Bity, Winona, Lacrosse, and Milwaukee. Securing a section in a magnificent Pulman palace sleeping car he left St. Paul about noon on a beautiful October day, was soon called to dinner in one of the "finest dining cars in the world," to use the language of the company's advertisements, and whether this be true or not, it was certainly the finest he had seen, in elegance of construction, gorgeous decoration, variety of menu and excellence of cuisine—enjoying his otium cum dig, as well as his dinner. He was charmed by a succession of panoramic views of picturesque bluff, river, lake, and woodland scenery through the spacious plate-glass windows of this "hotel on wheels," and made up his mind that this great railroad had reached the acme of perfection in providing for the luxurious comfort of its patrons. This line is as short and makes as quick time as any, and is 120 miles shorter and makes the run in from seven to ten hours shorter time than some.

Compulsory shaving is no longer a regulation of the British army, except in the sutler's department. There the soldier must not only submit to being shaved, but to being skinned.

A FORTUNE

may be made by hard work, but can neither be made nor enjoyed without health. To those leading sedentary lives Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is a real friend. It stimulates the liver, purifies the blood, and is the best remedy for consumption, which is scrofulous disease of the lungs. By all druggists.

The ruling passion is strong in a schoolmaster.

Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" always becomes the favorite remedy of those who try it. It is a specific for all female "weaknesses" and derangements, bringing strength to the limbs and back, and color to the face. Of all druggists.

The present time—Christmas.

Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets." They operate without disturbance to the constitution, diet, or occupation. For sick headache, constipation, impure blood, dizziness, sour eructations from the stomach, bad taste in mouth, bilious attacks, pain in region of kidney, internal fever, bloated feeling about stomach, rush of blood to head, take Dr. Pierce's "pellets." By druggists.

A real pulman car—A hand-car.

There are flaws in diamonds, flies in amber, and faults in every man. Perfection is attained only by the Triangle Dyes. Their colors are truly beautiful.

A nod thing in bonnets—A sleeping beauty in church.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

The farmer's wife should wear gros grain silk.

PECTORIA! Pectoria! Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria, all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

"No license" does not trouble the inebriate so much as "no ten cents."

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West. Toronto, Canada

"Oh, haven't I got the sand?" sings the sugar dealer.

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

A prima donna sang "Home, Sweet Home" to the convicts in an Eastern prison, and it so worked upon their feelings that seven of them escaped and struck out for the parental roof-tree the same night.

A.P 156

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN TO grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hip, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions, AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church St., Toronto.

1883-St. John Exhibition-1883

Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose, &c. Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas. The highest of all Awards for Leather Belting and Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the Judges at the St. John Centennial and Dominion Exhibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, over all competitors.

$100,000 TO LOAN

on first-class farm property, at lowest rates. Farmers will save money by applying by mail direct to me.

E. E. KNOTT,
48 Adelaide St., East, Toronto.

BEAVER S. S. LINE,
WEEKLY BETWEEN
QUEBEC, MONTREAL, AND LIVERPOOL
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
Sam. Isborne & Co., 40 Yonge street, Toronto.

FOR THE
Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical [illegible] generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and [illegible] said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

Back stares are impolite, no matter in whose house you see them.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION
Furnishes indemnity against loss of time by sickness or accident at comparatively low rates. For particulars enclose stamp to the secretary, Toronto, Ont.
AGENTS WANTED.

THE QUEEN'S
LAUNDRY BAR.
TRADE MARK. ASK FOR IT AND TAKE NO OTHER.
Beware of Imitations
TRADE MARK Made by The Albert Toilet Soap Co.

TINSMITHS' GOODS.
TIN PLATE—Different Brands and Sizes.
TINNED SHEETS— do do
CANADA PLATE—Pen and other Brands.
INGOT TIN—Lamb and Flag and Straits.
GALVANIZED IRON—"Davies," "Avon," &c:
And STAMPED GOODS, CHEAP.
For Sale by COPLAND & McLAREN,
MONTREAL.

THE BEST
HORSE REMEDIES
TRADE MARK. are those made by
THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.

Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5; 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c.; 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th St., N Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years, and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to
ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
50 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.
PERCHERON HORSES
WORTH $2,500,000.00
Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,
35 miles West of Chicago on C. & N.-W. R'y.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.
390 Imported the Past Three Months.
Consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States.
Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20.

HOFFMAN'S GERMAN BITTERS

50c. | A GENUINE GERMAN DYSPEPSIA CURE. | 50c.
No injurious mineral, no poison, no irritating acid.
Acts on a different principle from other Bitters.
Possesses tonic, aperient and Digestive properties, and a principle that soothes the inflamed membranes, opens up the absorbing vessels of the Stomach and Liver, cures Dyspepsia, Catarrh of the Stomach, Liver Complaint, Constipation, &c.
Wm. Goldsmith, of Collingwood, Ont., suffered for years with the worst form of Dyspepsia; tried physicians and every remedy advertised without benefit. One bottle of Hoffman's German Bitters cured him.
Wholesale by Lyman Brothers, and Northrop & Lyman, Toronto.

MATTHEWS BROS. & CO., 93 YONGE Street, Toronto. Mail prepaid, assorted packages of beautiful Christmas and New Year Cards.
25 cards, assorted, mostly small, $ 25
25 cards, assorted, medium, 50
25 cards, assorted, larger, 1.00
25 cards, assorted, fine, 2.00
No two cards alike. Cash to be sent with order.

THE LILY
is a perfect gem, equa to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

F. E. DIXON & CO.
Manufacturers of Star Rivet
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto.
Large double Drivin Belts a specialty. Send or Price Lists and Discounts.

ELM CITY
HARNESS OIL.
BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.
Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it
F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONTARIO.
Sole Agents for the Dominion.

SANTA CLAUS
HAS LEFT TWO CAR LOADS OF
TOYS, DOLLS, GAMES & NOVELTIES
AT THE
GREAT TOY EMPORIUM,
213 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.
For Christmas Trees, Church Fairs, Bazaars, Festivals, Fish Ponds, and Grab Bags. I will send by express, charges paid, as follows. Good value.
200 Well Assorted Toys $10 00
150 " " " Better Grade 10 00
100 " " " Still Better 10 00
1 Doz. Langtry Dolls 23 in. long 2 25
1 Doz Beautiful Shell Goods Assorted 2 25
Address all orders to C. W. DENNIS, 7 and 10 cent Multiple Store, 213 Yonge St., Toronto, Ont.

CONSUMPTION!
Asthma, Bronchitis, Throat Diseases, and Catarrh.
Together with diseases of the Eye, Ear and Heart, successfully treated at the Ontario Pulmonary Institute,
274, 276 and 278 Jarvis Street.
M. HILTON WILLIAMS, M.D., M.C.P.S.O., PROPRIETOR.
Our system of practice is by Medicated Inhalations, combined with proper constitutional remedies. Over 40,000 cases treated during the past 18 years.
If impossible to call personally for an examination, write for list of Questions and a copy of our new Medical Treatise. Address, ONTARIO PULMONARY INSTITUTE, 274, 276 and 278 Jarvis street, Toronto, Ontario.

Dominion Line of Steamships
Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months. Sailing dates from Quebec:—
Ontario, Dec. 27. | *Sarnia, Jan. 17.
Toronto, Jan. 3. | Montreal, Jan. 24.
Dominion, Jan. 10. | Oregon, Jan. 31.
Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $108, $117, $144 according to steamer and berth. Intermedia $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent or local agents of the Company, or to
DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black silks, that is our dollar silk will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50 silk only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50 blanket for $1; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $1.75 net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL dry-goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures; all goods sold for cash only, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne St., Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS—or a 10 cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, shirtings, grey flannels, table napkins. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS, silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and colored, cashmeres, tweeds, cloakings. A. B. FLINT. 35Colborne Street, Toronto.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
OF THE
WHITE STAR LINE
Are all of them without exception among the Largest and Fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect; and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario, or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto

FUN AND MYSTERY
ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS.
Have you seen it? The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack; the Mystic Oracle; Guide to Flirtation; 10 new Evening Games; Set of "Hold to Light Cards;" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards; the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music, 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.
ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail postpaid. Two Packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.
JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE—$1.00—DOLLAR.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion.

The Paper for the Farmer.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, . . . $7.00 | Half Year, . . . $3.50

Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to THE WEEKLY GLOBE, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),
TORONTO.

The Great Dollar Paper.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

MARKDALE

Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-1y

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NORTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.				Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO		10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.		9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...		8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..		6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER		5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	FLESHERTON ...		6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....		6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....		5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

The Firm Mother.

BY OPIE READ.

"An' must I always say my prayers before goin' to bed?" asked a boy of his mother.

'Yes.'

'But if I sit up all night I needn't say 'em need I?'

'Yes.'

'Why?'

'Because you must ask the Lord to bless you.'

'How bless me?'

'Take care of you and save you.'

'How save me?'

'Take you to Heaven when you die.'

'An' if I ask Him will He do it?'

'Yes.'

'How do you know?'

'The Bible says so.'

'Does it say me?'

'It says little children.'

'Men too?'

'Yes.'

'An' grown up women.'

'Yes.'

'How do you know?'

'Oh, I dont know. For gracious sake hush and let me read.'

'What are your readin'?'

'A story.'

'What kind of a story.'

'About a man and a woman and I dont know what all.'

'Is it a story?'

'Yes.'

'Why don't you read the truth?'

'If you ask another question to-night I'll whip you.'

'But I can ask another one in the mornin' mayn't I?'

'Yes'

'But I musn't ask any more to-night?'

'No, not another one, for if you do I'll whip you.'

'I wont ask any more to-night, will I?'

'No.'

'But I will in the mornin' wont I?'

'Yes.'

'An' you'll whip me if I ask any more to-night. wont you?'

'Yes.'

'But you wont in the mornin' will yon?'

'No,'

'But you will to-night. wont you?'

'Look a-here, not another word out of you now. If you ask another single question I'll whip you.'

'But you said I could ask 'em in the mornin' didn't you?'

'Yes,'

'And you wont whip me then, will you?'

'No.'

'But you will to-night. wont you?'

'There comes your father, and it is a good thing for you, for I was going to whip you.'

'Jes' for askin' questions to-night?'

'Yes.'

'But you wont in the mornin' will you?'—Ark. Traveller.

A MILLBROOK MAN IN TROUBLE.

Digby Howard Collared at Denver for Stealing $15,000.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—Alfred Digby Howard is the junior member of the firm of Kirchhoffer & Brandon, solicitors, of Winnipeg, and until about a week ago bore an unblemished reputation. He formerly resided at Millbrook, Canada, where he is well connected. One day last week his firm received $15,000 in cash from Coney & Co., of Port Hope, Canada, with which to make payments on some Manitoba lands. Howard abstracted this money from the safe, it is alleged, and absconded. Deputy-Sheriff Charles T. Lintock, of Denver, was notified to look out for him and a telegram sen by that officer to Mr. Pinkerton states that Howerd was arrested at the Windsor hotel, where he was registered under the alias of Stuart. On searching Mrs. Howard's rooms almost the entire amount of the money was found carefully hidden in her bustle. Mr. Kirchhoffer arrived here from Winnipeg on Friday, and left on the noon train for Denver. Howard cannot be extradited for the crime, but can be kept in jail under the absconding debtor law.—News.

THE GREATEST HEALING COMPOUND is a preparation of carbolic acid, vaseline and cerate called McGregor & Parks's Carbolic Cerate. It will cure any sore, cut, burn or bruise when all other preparations fail. Call at Hill Bros. General Store and get a package. Twenty-five cents is all it costs.

Rat portage has been again visited by fire sustaining damage to the extent of $100,000.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Is the only instantaneous relief for Neuralgia, Headache, Toothache, etc. Rubbing a few drops briskly is all that is needed. No taking nauseous medicines for weeks, but one minute's application removes all pain and will prove the great value of Kram's Fluid Lightning. Twenty-five cents per bottle at Hill Bros. General Store.

Murphy, the promoter of the guelph lottery scheme was fined $20, on Tnesday.

Frank Yates, a weaver in a Belleville factory eloped with mary Belch employee in the same factory, but were arrested at Union Station Toronto Monday night last. Yates has a wife and four children.

McGREGORS SPEEDY CURE.

From the many remarkable cures wrought by using McGregors Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation and Affection of the Liver and from the immense sale of it without any advertising, we have concluded to place it extensively on the maket, so that those who suffer may have a perfect cure. Go to Hill Bros. General Store and get a trial bottle free, or the regular size at fifty cents or one dollar.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,
Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

IN

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

AT

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we ared not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 16. MARKDALE, ONT., DEC. 27, 1883. No. 172

The Markdale Standard

Is issued evesy Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequents insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

JOB PRINTING.

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residance—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Gradnate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeors, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST. J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE.
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

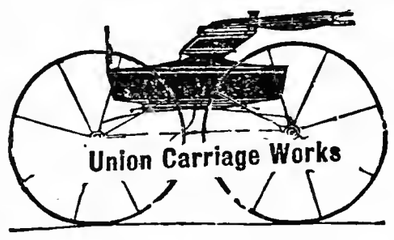
CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.



Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail
{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED, from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style; and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time
consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.
159-3m

MISS. GREEN,
DRESS AND MANTLE
ROOMS.
DUNLOP'S BUILDING MARKDALE.

All kinds of ladies wearing apparel cut and made in the very latest style.
Wedding Suits a Specialty. 149.62

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

THOS. MATHEWS,
HarnesS EstablishmenT
MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made eqtensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,
Money Loaned

IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

TESTING THE NEW BRIDGE.

Twenty Engines and Twenty-Four Flat Cars Resting Safely on the Cantilever.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Dec. 20.—The Cantilever bridge was tested to-day by running twenty engines and twenty-four flat cars loaded with ballast, and proved successful. About 11.30 the two sctions moved out on the structure from the Canadian side, one section on each track. The Committee of Engineers inspected each section of the structure when the train was standing on it, before allowing them to go further, and so on until the immense weight rested entirely on the structure from shore to shore, when the large number of people who lined both sides of the river and the old suspension bridge give loud cheers, and the twenty eingines standing on the bridge opened a costinuous whistle for fifteen minutes. The whole made a grand spectacle to witness over the mighty Niagara Falls. The engines in the Grand Trunk yards responded by their whistles, and the greatest excitement prevailed for some thirty minutes among fifteen thousand spectators. Every train approaching since yesterday morning carried guests to the opening, and some five hundered prominent railroad and scientific men of both the United States and Canada witnessed the test, and will partake of a grand banquet at the MountEagle hotel this afternoon.

Presentation in Osprey.

On Wednesday evening last, the young people of S. S, No. 5, Osprey, met at the residence of Mr. E. Hanley and presented the teacher of the said school, Miss M. A. Fleming, with two vases with flowers, a Bible, and an album containing a photograph of some of her pupils. These were accompanied by the following address:—To Miss Maggie Fleming Teacher of S. S. No. 5 Township of Osprey.

DEAR TEACHER.—We, your loving pupils, are assembled at this time with feelings mingled with pleasure and regret, pleasure to know that friends, the dearest of all, will soon greet you with smiles and caresses in your own home, but regret to think that you are so soon to be seperated from us. During your three years stay with us, we have profited much by your instruction. Your uniform kindness and courtsey, and your earnest endavors for our welfare, have won the affection of us all.

Before parting, we ask you to accept this slight token of our esteem, which will perhaps help you to remember your first public school pupils, Hoping that your future may be one of increased prosperity and happiness, and that, after you have completed your studies, we may again greet you as our highly asteemed teacher, and wishing you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, we reluctantly say, farewell. Signed in behalf of your affectionate pupils: Cecilia Osborn, Minnie Summers, Sarah Inkster.

Miss Fleming replied very suitably as follows:—My dear pupils and friends, being taken by surprise, I can scarcely express my gratitude for such lovely presents, and the kind address which you have just read. Those presents will call to remembrance my dear pupils in Osprey, and the pleasant three years I have spent in your midst. I have always endeavored to do my duty and hope you have profited by my instruction. I shall now bid you all a fond farewell, wishing each of you a merry Christmas and a happy New Year, and many of them, also future success in your studies. If we meet not here again, may we meet where parting is unknown.

Your grateful teacher
M. A. Fleming.

The people of the section join with the pupils in expressing their deep regret at the departure of Miss Fleming, who by her kind and genial manner, has won the high esteem of all with whom she has had intercourse and wishing her all success and prosperity in future, now bid her a fond adieu.

Entertainment and Presentation.

From a correspondent.

The entertainment given by Miss Might on the evening of the fourteenth of December was a complete success. It was held in the school house of section No. 5, where she has been teaching for the last three years. Mr. Jack was appointed chairman and commenced the proceedings of the evening with a short but very suitable address in the course of which he highly commended Miss Might for the earnestness of purpose, and yield with which she has striven to culture the minds of the youth committed to her care during her sojourn amongst us and her personal deportment which has been blameless, Miss Might then gathered her pupils around her and together they sang out a hearty and cheerful welcome to their guests, she accompaning their voices on Mrs. Thos. Cook's organ which that lady kindly lent to aid the amusement of the evening. Recitations were afterwards given by Misses Agnes Jack, Maggie Lauder, Ewen McNab, William Banks and others of Miss Mights pupils with a correctness of elocution and emphasis, that surprised and pleased all who were present. Mrs. Cook and Miss Crooks favored us with two pieces of select music. Miss Crooks sang while Mrs. Cook performed the part of accompaniest, each part being exceedingly well carried out. Readings of a profitable and humerous nature were taken part in by Mrs. Cook, Misses. Agnes Robson, Hattie Cole, Ellen Edge and others of the company. The pertormance of a play in which the Misses. Cole, Alfred Crooke, William and Emma Edwards figured, and the singing of a comic song by Mr. Stanly contributed not a little to the enjoyment of the company. The faithful services rendered us by Miss Might within the last three years were greatfully acknowledged. And the high position that she justly maintains in the esteen and good will of the community attested to by the presentation of beautiful china tea set and volume of poems. Alfred Crooks read the presentation address which we will here insert for the benefit of Miss Mights friends and associates.

To Miss Might.

DEAR TEACHER.—We are very sorry to hear that you intend leaving us, but we hope you will find as hearty a welcome in your new field of duties as we would give, were you going to continue our teacher for the next year, but since you have decided to leave us, we could not let you go without some little remembrance of Glenelg. We therefore take great pleasure in asking your acceptance of this tea set and this volume, hoping you may find a use for it, as a slight token of our esteem, with that of our parents, hoping we may have the pleasure at no very distant date, of drinking tea with you in your town home. At present we will be satisfied with wishing you the compliments of the season and a long life of happiness.

May your joy be as deep as the Ocean,
Your sorrow as light as its foam.

Signed in behalf of your pupils, Hattie Cole, Emma Edwards, Alfred Crooks.

Miss Might replied to the foregoing address in a very feeling manner, warmly thanking both parents and children for all their kindness, and alluding to the jocularly expressed wish of her pupils to pay their respects to her in her town home said that she was uncertain as to the time when they might meet to congratulate her on such an occasion, but extended a hearty invitation to all wished to drink tea with her in her mothers house. She was vigorously cheered from the platform. The proceeds of the meeting amounted to about $9 and will we believe be devoted by Miss Might to the purchase of a Globe for the school as a a parting token of her friendship. At nine o'clock the party broke up and returned to their homes, wishing Miss Might a merry Christmas, many days of health and joy, and a swift and glorious career to the highest pinnacle of literary fame.

A. G.

WOMAN'S COLUMN.

The Queen's Bed.

The London Truth says:—According to a weekly contemporary, "it may not be generally known that the Queen invariably takes her own bed with her wherever she may be travelling." People would infer from this statement that her majesty's "own bed" forms a part of the royal baggage. The Queen always sleeps in beds of precisely the same pattern and made up in exactly the same way. They are all manufactured at Windsor Castle, and there is one with accessories at each royal residence in this country, at the Villa Hohenlohe at Baden, at Rosenau, near Coburg, and on board the Victoria and Albert. When the Queen pays a visit or goes abroad, a bed on the usual pattern is made and dispatched from Windsor in advance to be in readiness for her. One was sent last year to Mentone, and three years earlier another went to Baveno. At Dunrobin, Floors and other country houses at which the Queen has been a guest her special bed has usually been left as a memento of the royal visit.

Sealskins.

The seal, furnishing the rich fur, a cloak of which is an article dear to the heart of fashionable women, inhabits both the Arctic and the Antarctic seas. Greenland, Newfoundland, the Baltic, and the southern polar shores, all supply a quota of these much sought after animals. From a paper in the last Quarterly Review, a very readable paper, by the way, we get a sketch of a district which yields many of the "Fur Seals of Commerce."

The scene is the Pribylov Islands, two small specks of land situated on the eastern side of Behring's sea, and ceded in 1867 by Russia, along with the adjoining mainland Alaska, to the United States Government. The islands are but a few square miles in area, their population in 1880 was but 300, and yet the annual revenue they yield to the American exchequer is over £50,000, to which sum falls to be added the handsome profits realized by the company to whom the islands are let. This result has been achieved by one of the most provident and far-seeing pieces of state management that the history of the commercial world affords. The islands are the home during six months of the year of multitudes of the fur seals of commerce. The number has been estimated on reliable statistical grounds as 4,700,000. This number is kept practically constant by the effective protection of the animals. Only 10,000 are allowed to be killed each year, and from among the victims are strictly prohibited the breeding males, who are over five years of age and whose pelts are commercially worthless, and all the females young and old. Only the "bachelors" or young males of three or four years are allowed to be taken and they are captured on certain nights in the months of June and July, before daybreak.

The Silks that Wear Longest.

After the silk passes from the dyer's hands the manner in which it is woven is of essential importance. All other things being equal, goods woven with an equal weft and woof is the most durable, hence the strongest silk is the old fashioned taffeta or Lyons silk of a generation ago. Corded silks are beautiful, but between the reps of the goods are interstices for the dust to collect in, which, if allowed to remain, speedily cuts into the fabric; and no corded goods can be made without some part of the weave being heavier and exerting strain on the lighter portion. Taffeta silks, from the lightness of their construction, are usually hand-made goods. Large quantities of inexpensive striped and checked taffetas known as summer silks, are woven in Switzerland in a circuit of about thirty miles around the city of Zurich. Whole families of Swiss peasants, including the man of the house, his wife, sons and buxom daughters, are employed together at hand looms. A checked taffeta under a dollar will usually outwear several silks which range in prices from $1 to $2 a yard and are made as silks at this price usually are, by the less durable processes of the power-loom, where the weaver never stops to tie a thread, and the delicate fibre of the silk must be tightly twisted to bear the strain of the rougher handling of wholesale work. A goods equally as strong as taffeta is India foulard, sometimes called handkerchief silk. These goods are woven in a country where the heathen workmen have not yet learned the clever shams which are practised in the Christian lands. All foulard silks are dyed and stamped after they are woven, except in the case of pongee, which is the natural color of the raw silk-webb. French foulards are an inferior machine-goods, and are mixed with large quantities of "chappe," or short silk, which is rough and liable to break apart at a slight strain. Short silk differs from long silk—which is the continuous thread spun by the worm and reeled off at the filature—in being composed of the waste of the filature. The silk which is broken or tangled in reeling, the rough silk on the outside of every cocoon, and the silk of perforated cocoons from which the moth has emerged, are all torn apart and spun again by artificial means, like cotton or flax. Chappe is at best a species of silk "sneddy," and is often mixed with cotton or some other vegetable fibre to strengthen it. Large quantities of foulard goods are made in the country which are similar to the French goods. The durable "Louisine" summer silks are woven with an even weft and woof, and are composed of raw or half-boiled silk, part of the natural glue of the cocoon being left in the goods.—N. Y. Tribune.

Mother's Turn.

"It is mother's turn to be taken care of now."

The speaker was a winsome young girl, whose bright eyes, fresh color and eager looks told of light-hearted happiness. Just out of school, she had the air of culture which is an added attraction to a blithe young face. It was mother's turn now. Did she know how my heart went out to her for her unselfish words? Too many mothers, in their love for their daughters, entirely overlook the idea that they themselves need recreation. They do without all the easy, pretty and charming things, and say nothing about it and the daughters do not think there is any self-denial involved. Jennie gets the new dress and mother wears the old one, turned upside down and wrong side out. Lucy goes on the mountain trip, and mother stays at home and keeps house. Emily is tired of study and must lie down in the afternoon; but mother, though her back aches, has no time for such indulgences. Girls, take good care of your mothers. Coax them to let you relieve them of some of the harder duties which, for years, they have patiently borne.—Presbyterian.

The Queen of All.

Honor the dear old mother. Time has scattered the snowy flakes on her brow, plowed deep furrows on her cheeks but is she not sweet and beautiful now? The lips are thin and shrunken; but those are the lips which has kissed many a hot tear from the childish cheeks, and they are the sweetest lips in all the world. The eye is dim, yet it glows with the soft radience of holy love which can never fade. Ah, yes, she is a dear old mother. The sands of life are nearly run out, but feeble as she is, she will go further and reach down lower for you than any other upon earth. You cannot walk into a midnight where she cannot see you, you cannot enter a prison whose bars will keep her out, you can never mount a scaffold too high for her to reach, that she may kiss and bless you in evidence of her deathless love. When the world shall despise and forsake you, when it leaves you by the wayside to die unnoticed, the dear old mother will gather you in her feeble arms, and carry you home and tell you of all your virtues until you almost forget that your soul is disfigured by vices. Love her tenderly and cheer her declining years with holy devotion.

Non-Poisonous Disinfectants.

The antiseptic properties of carbolic acid have long been known, and this substance, in its liquid state, is extensively used in operations by surgeons. As a non-poisonous disinfectant the acid, in a vaporized condition, is said to be invaluable in hospitals and sick-rooms, and the following is a simple plan recommended by Messrs. F. C. Calvert & Co., of Manchester, the manufacturers not only of the acid, but also of a carbolic vaporizer, for the use of which apparatus detailed particulars are given.

Place an ordinary house shovel over the fire until it becomes thoroughly hot (but not red hot); then take it to the centre of the room and pour in the shovel an ounce (back of each bottle is graduated in ounces) of No. 4 or No. 5 carbolic; lean the shovel so that no fluid can fall to the floor, and the carbolic will be readily given off in vapor sufficient to fill an ordinary room. This will disinfect the air of the room, and as genuine carbolic (more properly called phenol or phenylic acid) is not a mineral corrosive acid, the vapor in no way will injure pictures, metals, or fabrics. It is highly beneficial in many infectious diseases, and having been sufficiently proved to benefit lungs affected by tubercle, it may be safely inhaled to a reasonable extent, and it can be diluted if weaker vapor is wanted. The No. 4 fluid can be more easily tolerated because of its extra purity, and to many its odor is decidedly pleasant, if not excessively employed. Daily use of this process is strongly recommended when infectious diseases are present or feared, and it will be found serviceable in case of whooping-cough. The vapor is not at all inflammable unless the shovel be made red hot or held within two feet of fire or light, and the fluid will not injure carpets; but it should not be allowed to fall upon oil-cloths, painted or varnished wood-work or furniture.

If any raw carbolic acid should fall on the skin, it must promptly be rubbed off with a dry cloth, and the affected parts well rubbed with oil. If taken internally by mistake, sweet oil and castor oil should be at once administered in large doses, and no water used.—Chamber's Journal.

The Glossograph.

One of the most interesting exhibits at the Vienna Electrical Exhibition is Gentill's glossograph, a little instrument by which speech is automatically reproduced as soon as it is uttered. A small apparatus is placed in the mouth of the speaker—in contact with the roof of his mouth, his tongue and lips—and on being connected with an electro-magnetic registering apparatus the sounds are committed to paper. It is constructed in such a manner as not to cause any inconvenience to the speaker; neither is it necessary that the voice should be raised, as it reproduces a whisper as exactly as a shout; the only condition is a correct and distinct articulation. According to the inventor's calculation, it will be possible to write four or five times as fast by means of the glossograph as has hitherto been possible even by the quickest writer. At first sight it appears as if this invention were but an improvement upon Edison's phonograph; it is, however of a much older date. It rests, unlike the former, on acoustic principle, and does not reproduce the sounds in a microscopical form. The chief obstacle to the introduction of the glossograph, says the Pall Mall Gazette, will be the difficulty in deciphering the characters, but it is not impossible that with the help of a second automatic apparatus the characters produced by the glossograph may be translated into our common type writing. The orthography would doubtless appear strange, but in these days of phonetic spelling this might not long be a hindrance.

A contributor to a London scientific paper writes: "The poet has said, 'The toad wears yet a precious jewel in its head,' However beautiful, it cannot surpass, in lustre and beauty of setting, the eye of the flea (Pulex iritans). When viewed under a power of 200 or 300 diameters by reflected light, it presents a crystalline lens about 1,500 of an inch in diameter, surrounded by a dark brown or black rim, and sunk in a depression of rich chitinous covering of the head. If the light be judiciously applied, this combination of bright light in the lens with the middle tint of the surrounding yellow skeloton of the head and the dark supplied by the black rim—these being harmonized and blended by the shade and shadow of the depression, and assisted by the harmonious curve which bounds it dorsal margin—presents a combination worthy the study of the trained eye of the artist." It is to be feared that even its lovely eye will scarcely reconcile the Pulex irritans to those on whom it dines.

GLEANINGS.

A murderer in Kansas jail charges 5 cents for a look, and is thus doing a thriving business.

An Albany peanut vendor discovers that he looses 400 peanuts a day by people taking one as they pass by his corner.

Experiments in determining the height and velocity of the clouds, by means of photography are being made in England.

Florida newspapers have their joke about the swamp lands. Some of them say that the lands are to be sold by the gallon.

A Cincinnati physician has examained 140 of the best whistlers in the city, and finds them sadly lacking in mental development.

The engineer in charge of the government works at Key West has fished up a copper cannon of the fifteenth century. It belonged to the early Spanish invaders.

Judge Hoover, who once upon a time was Chief Justice of Arizona, is now chief waiter in a restaurant in Southern California. Judge Sattherthwaite, also of Arizona, is now doing tinker's jobs for a living.

The Memphis (Tenn.) Avalanche says that a census of Southern editors shows two Captains, seventeen Majors, seven Generals, and 1,826 Colonels. There are no privates and no officers below the rank of Captain.

The treasurer of Carroll County, Ark., placed $7,000 in an old boot for safe keeping, placing the boot in a pile of rubbish. Now he is trying to negotiate with the man who stole the boot.

A cane brought over in the Mayflower by William White, the father of Peregrine White, the first white child born in New England, is now in possession of Captain William White, of Yarmouth, Mass.

Kwang Lee the young Emperor of China, devotes three hours a day to studying the language of his country, but otherwise does nothing except ride in the Imperial Gardens. He will assume the reins of government personally on the 31st of next July, his fifteenth birthday.

The walls of Canton, China are of sandstone, capped with brick. They are twenty feet thick and from twenty-five to forty feet high. There are twelve outer gates, through which boats pass into the moat east and west. The gates are all shut at night, and a guard is stationed near them to preserve order.

Jewelry-making is the biggest business of Providence, R. I. There are 184 manufacturing establishments, employing about 3,500 hands, and turning out $5,775,975 worth of goods annually. The manufacture began soon after the Revolution, and in 1805 there were four establishments. The city also makes 87 per cent. of the screws used in the country, and 2,340,000 pieces of prints during the year.

A banker at Osakis, Minn., has built a house which he thinks will defy the tornado. All the corners of the house are acute angles, giving this architectural freak the contour of a star. From the highest point of the roof the gutters sink suddenly, making great depressions. This angularity was, it is said, inspired by the banker's wife, who lives in constant dread of storm. The corners were made very sharp, to split tornadoes. The cellar walls are anchored in them, so that the house may not be blown down, without taking up the foundations. All the weather-boarding is put on in oblique lines.

Escapes From Edinburgh Castle.

"Edinboro Old Town," by Andrew Lang, is the opening paper in the January Century. Pennell's clever sketches supplement finely Mr. Lang's picturesque descriptions. Many romantic stories of the castle are told, among them the following: "If 'sinne' could sink town and tower, Edinburgh would centuries since have been with 'Memphis and Babylon and either Thebes.' In those old times, when a Scotch prince hated a man, he very commonly acted on the maxim, 'If you want a thing well done, do it yourself,' and dirked his foe with his own hand. This was the custom of the Duke of Albany, brother of James III., who slew John of Scougal, and in other ways so conducted himself that, in 1482, he was consigned to prison in the Castle. Thence Albany deemed that he was not likely to come forth alive, especially as his brother Mar had mysteriously vanished—so mysteriously, indeed, that even now the manner of Mar's fate is unknown. Albany's friends sent a small ship to wait in the harbor of Leith, and a hamper of wine easily found admission to Albany's rooms in the Castle. The hamper contained ropes as well as wine, and when Albany had made his keepers drunk with the liquor, had slipped them, and thrown their mail-clad bodies to grill on the fire, he escaped to the ship at Leith by aid of the ropes. But the favorite way of escaping had a bland and child-like simplicity. The captive's wife paid him a visit, the pair exchanged clothes, and the prisoner walked out in the lady's petticoats! This old trick was played in the Castle as often as the 'confidence trick' in the capitals of modern civilization. Apparently it never missed fire, and we may conclude that in every case the turkeys were bribed. The only prisoner of note who ever failed was the first Marquis of Argyll, in 1601. The Marchioness came to see him in a sedan chair; he assumed her dress and coif, and stepped into the sedan. But presently he lost heart and stepped out again, though what he was afraid of it is difficult to guess. He could only die once, his execution was certain, and he might as well be shot privately, in the attempt to run away, as be decapitated publicly in the town where the great Montrose, his enemy, was done to death. When the Marquis's son, in his turn, was confined in the Castle, his ready brain conceived the novel idea of escaping, not in the dress of a lady, but in that of the lackey of his daughter-in-law. He let the lady's train drop in the mud, whereon, with the wit and coolness of a daughter of the Lindsays, she switched the dripping silk in his face, crying, 'Thon careless loon.' Then the soldiers laughed, and Argyll, for that time got clean away."

Lord Lorne has been trying to acclimatize the Canadian moose in Scotland, but the experiment is a failure. The moisture is too great for animals accustomed to the bracing air of Canada.

A CANADIAN IN CHINA.

Three Years in the Celestial Service—A Formidable Navy—Chinese Superstitions about the Sea—France has a Hard Bone to Bite.

Mr. Andrew P. Cleveland was born in Canada and went to sea in his sixteenth year. After serving for several years on the "Frederick F.," of St. John, N. B., he shipped on the Boston ship "Agnes" and sailed to Canton. Hearing that foreigners were employed in the Chinese navy, he put in an application and was offered a position on the "Tung-Hin," with promise of good wages if he was capable of teaching sailors how to handle the guns. He accepted, and remained from April, 1879, till September, 1882, in the Chinese service; his position was a very pleasant one, and he received none but the kindest treatment from his superiors.

The Chinese, Mr. Cleveland says, have nothing of a seafaring nature about them. But in 1862, seeing the uselessness of their junks against European war-ships, and being required also to put down piracy, the foundations of a navy were laid. Several gunboats that the British Government no longer wanted were handed over to the Chinese, and for nearly a dozen years served all the purposes for which that nation needed water craft. But in 1876, when the Formosa dispute occured between China and Japan, the fleet of the latter greatly troubled their continental neighbours. The Corea and Loo Choo difficulties followed, and the Chinese purchased fourteen first-class warships from an English builder. They are superior vessels, formidably armed and capable of high speed. The purchasers are greatly pleased with the ships and Japan is no longer dreaded. In fact, China has the better navy of the two. While Mr. Cleveland was still in the service the Government took another step. Two double-turreted ironclads were got from the shipyards of Stettin, and these corvettes completed a fleet of sixty vessels, of which the sixteen last referred to are the equals of any afloat. The old gunboats count for very little, but there are some very well built transports in the fleet.

The Chinese are as ingenious as Yankees. They buy an English waggon or American plough, and make others on their model. They are now building ships from the models of those they have bought, the work being directed by Germans or Americans. Doubtless good ships will be built, but it is to be questioned whether manufacturing will not prove most costly than purchase. Li Hung Chang, who really founded the navy, also organized the North China Navigation Company, which had twelve steamers a year ago. These in competition with the junks, have almost a monopoly of the carrying trade. In time of war it is provided that they shall act as transports. Mr. Cleveland describes Li Hung Chang, whom he often met, as a man of great energy. No state officer has more to contend with. He has the greatest difficulty in manning his navy, the people having a superstitious dread of the sea, and being got by the highest wages. The belief is that if a man lives three days on board he will not only have escaped the dreaded bad luck, but will be more fortunate on the sea than anywere else. Consequently, there are no deserters, after the miserable three days are over. The sailor is ridiculed by all his countrymen and he is an outcast. Li has procured Western officers and sailors without tint. Foreign assistance has done the work of organization, and most of the seamen are good able bodied fellows, well disciplined and capable, and under the authority of competent superintendents.

From my own personal observation, says Mr. Cleveland, I incline to think that the Chinese navy is now quite capable of maintaining the rights of the Empire. Japan is not alone interested. China maintains her dignity on the waters of the Yellow Sea, and as well as her position further south. The Annam affair is critical. The action of the French was regarded as one of intolerable impertinence before I left Canton. The Chinese are fearfully persistent in their opinions, and France will find that she will have a hard bone to bite. If the dispute comes to war, China without a navy could do nothing. But it has a navy, and beyond the shadow of doubt it will be employed in occasion of war, and employed so well that the world will know, what it now scarcely dreams of, that China has one of the best and most formidable of modern navies.

A Few Guesses.

A correspondent of the Home Farm says: "I wish there were not so much guess work in farming operations, but guessing from my own experience, I cannot afford to keep a butter cow without some kind of provender, I also guess that I cannot afford to grow roots or buy wheat bran for her. Corn ground in the ear two parts, and cotton seed meal one part, three quarts of the mixture night and morning, feu dry, has given us the best results in cow, milk and butter, and our customers never find fault, I have never had a cow eat at the shingles from the barn or chew bones, while upon this food. If you have no cobs, throw in a small handful of ashes once or twice a week: also give them all the salt they will eat. For beef oxen I have decided that two dollars in corn meal and one in cotton seed will do as much as four in corn meal alone. The more experience I have in cotton seed, the better I am pleased with it, while the more I have with wheat bran the less I think of it. I know that smarter men than I feed bran and stick to it, and I often think I must have been mistaken and try it again, but always with the same unsatisfactory result. Barley meal gives good results for beef, pork and butter."

hat match you are lighting your cigar with is a very small thing, isn't it?" said a passenger who had shared my seat for a few miles. "A small thing; but you wouldn't believe the American people paid out $27,000,000 for matches last year, would you? It looks big, but it is a fact. Now, take a pencil and figure it out. Fifty millions of people in this country; they use on average five matches each per day; that is 250,000,000 matches daily, or 2,500,000 boxes of 100 matches in a box, every day. Last year these boxes retailed at 3 cents each, making $75,000 a day for matches, or $27,375,000 a year. And, then, to think that three-fourths of all these matches were supplied by one company. If they didn't make $8,000,000 clear profit out of it, they didn't make a cent."

DEATH OF THE CRAZY DOVE.

A Bird that Waited Long for her Mate and Died in the Same Way at Last.

A female dove, in Elmira, N. Y., whose peculiar actions for some time past gave it the name of the "crazy dove," was killed recently under these curious circumstances:

The bird was one of a pair that belonged to a young lady living near the Erie Railway track. A few months ago, in flying across the railroad track, the male bird came in contact with the smokestack of the Pacific express locomotive. It was killed instantly, and was thrown suddenly out of the sight of its companion. The female circled about in the air for a few minutes, in evident amazement at the sudden disappearance of her mate. She then flew to a mile post near by, and for a long time gave utterance to the mournful notes peculiar to the species. Suddenly she seemed to realize what had carried her companion from her, and she rose in the air and flew swiftly in the direction the train had taken.

She did not return for a long time. When she did return she alighted at her cote, where she remained for the rest of the day uttering her plaintive cries. The next morning, just before 7 o'clock, she flew to her position on the mile post, near the spot where her mate had disappeared the day before. When the express train came along she flew at the locomotive, hovering about the smoke stack and cab as if looking for her mate. She accompanied the train to about a mile, and then returned.

Every day she repeated her strange actions, taking her place at her lookout on the mile post at exactly the same time, and waiting for the train, no matter how late it might be, and then going through the same manœuvres, and returning to her cote to mourn as before. She ate but little. On Saturday she collided with the smoke stack of the express train locomotive, just as her mate had done, and met the same fate at nearly the same spot.

PEARLS OF TRUTH.

The wheel of fortune turns incessantly round, and who can say within himself I shall to-day be uppermost.

He that hath a scrupulous conscience is like a horse that is not well weighted; he starts at every bird that flies out of the hedge.

Wounds and hardships provoke our courage, and when our fortunes are at the lowest, our wits and minds are commonly at the best.

It is another's fault if he be ungrateful, but it is mine if I do not give. To find one thankful man I will oblige a great many that are not so.

Weigh not so much what men assert, as what they prove; remembering that truth is simple and naked, and needs not invention to apparel her comeliness.

By desiring what is perfectly good, even when we don't quite know what it is, and cannot do what we would, we are part of the divine power against evil.

Alas! if the principles of contentment are not within us, the height of station and worldly grandeur will as soon add a cubit to man's stature as to his happiness.

A wise and good man will turn examples of all sorts to his own advantage. The good he will make his patterns and strive to equal or excel them. The bad he will by all means avoid.

Sapiness and effeminacy have ruined more constitutions than were ever destroyed by excessive labors. Moderate exercise and toil, so far from prejudicing, strengthens and consolidates the body.

Next to clothes being fine, they should be well made, and worn easily, for a man is only the less genteel for a fine coat, if in wearing it he shows a regard for it, and is not as easy in it as if it were a plain one.

Great talents for conversation should be attended with great politeness. He who eclipses others, owes them great civilities; and whatever a mistaken vanity may tell us, it is better to please in conversation than to shine in it.

If our credit be so well built, so firm, that it is not easy to be shaken by calumny or insinuation, envy then commends us and extols us beyond reason, to those upon whom we depend, till they grow jealous and so blow us up when they cannot throw us down.

Experience keeps a dear school: but fools will learn in no other, and scarce in that; for it is true we may give advice, but we cannot give conduct. However, they that will not be counseled cannot be helped, and if you will not hear reason you will surely rap your knuckles.

A buried village has been found by the Hon. Amado Chaves a mile from his house near Socorro, New Mexico. Mr. Chaves writes to the Santa Fe Review: "It is built of stone. The outer walls are three feet wide, and the city is large enough to have accommodated 3,000 souls. I have already cleared four rooms in the upper story and two on the first floor of one house. The dimensions of the first-floor room just finished are 11x12 feet, while from floor to ceiling the distance is about fifteen feet. The village is almost square, and the building is situated at the northwest corner. The large room has a large door leading to the outside of the wall, but no windows whatever. In this room I found the skeleton of a girl. The hair is in a perfect state of preservation; it is fine, and of a chestnut color. I also found there a string of fine coral beads, one of torquoise beads, another of long ivory beads, and a ring set with a black stone, on top of which is a piece of torquoise. All the timbers of the roof are burned to a char. I have arrived at the door which appears to lead to inner rooms, and I am full of curiosity to open it, but the second floor is only supported by the stones and debris about the door, and should I attempt to remove these the upper stories will tumble in and fill up the lower rooms, just cleaned out, with a mass of stone, charred timbers, and debris."

Sir Moses Montefiore was the first Jew ever made Sheriff of London, and was knighted by Queen Victoria a few days after her accession to the throne, when she visited the city on the next Lord Mayor's Day. Mr. Millais is to paint his portrait for next year's Academy.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items from all Parts of the World.

CANADIAN.

Warning has been given that counterfeit coins are circulating pretty largely in Montreal, principally silver ten cent pieces.

It is reported that some regiments of militia in Montreal and its vicinity have received invitations to take part in the U. E. Loyalist centenary in Toronto next June and many expect to attend.

The new Cantilever Railway bridge across the Niagara, near the railway Suspension bridge, is now completed and being used. The first test made of its strength was to run twenty locomotives on it at one time, accompanied by several loaded cars. It stood the test splendidly.

A Toronto paper says that the average number of railway trains per day arriving at the Union depot is sixty-five, of which thirty-two are passenger trains and thirty-three freight. The total number of departures daily is sixty-six, of which twenty-nine are passenger and thirty-seven freight.

An old man, a French Canadian, named Paul Belanger, in the employ of the Intercolonial railway at Quebec, is credited with being the father of no less than thirty-three children. He has had three wives. The first wife was the mother of nineteen, the second of six, and the third eight. The two latest arrivals are twins and were baptized a few days ago.

A serious accident happened at the Grand Trunk railway crossing, Cataraqui, near Kingston, a few days ago. The Napanee express, with a number of passengers, was crossing the track when it was struck by a passing train and almost completely demolished. Mrs. Armitage, a wealthy widow of Quebec, was instantly killed, and Mrs. Clarke, another passenger, died soon after of her injuries. Mrs. Wartman was so much injured that she not expected to recover. Two young medical students, named Wagner and Stormes, of Ernest town, and two young ladies, Miss Purcell and Miss Corbett, were all pitched to one side, but they were not badly injured. There must have been some inattention on the part of the engineer.

UNITED STATES.

A succession of several years, the buffalo are returning to the plains of North Dakota again, and will likely remain if protected from wanton destruction.

The total amount of silver dollars in the United States Treasury is $114,900,000. Of this $79,000,000 are held as a deposit against a corresponding amount of silver certificate. The other $35,000,000 the Treasury may be called upon to disburse as any time.

The depression in the Iron trade in Pennsylvania is very general. Almost every day some large work is closing temporarily or reducing the hours and rate of labor. In consequence of the iron depression many coal miners are also being thrown out of employment.

Learn a Trade.

Every time I look at my old steel composing rule that I don't bless myself that, while my strength lasts, I am not at the mercy of the world. If my pen is not wanted I can go back to the type case and be sure to find work; for I learned the printer's trade thoroughly—newspaper work, job work, book work, and press work. I am glad I have a good trade. It is a rock upon which the possessor can stand firmly. There is health and vigor for both body and mind in an honest trade. It is the strongest and surest part of the self-made man. Go from the academy to the printing office or the artisan bench; or, if you please, to the farm—for, to be sure, true farming is a trade, and a grand one at that. Lay thus a sure foundation, and after that branch off into whatever profession you please.

You have heard perhaps of the clerk who faithfully served Stephen Girard from boyhood to manhood. On the twenty-first anniversary of his birthday, he went to his master and told him that his time was up, and confidently expected important promotion in the merchant's service. But Stephen Girard said to him:

"Very well. Now go and learn a trade."

"A trade, sir?"

"Barrels and butts must be in demand where you live. Go and learn the cooper's trade; and when you have made a barrel bring it to me."

The young man went away and learned the trade, and in time brought to his old master a splendid barrel of his own make.

He examined it, and gave the maker two thousand dollars for it, and then said to him:

"Now, sir, I want you in my counting house; but henceforth you will not be dependent upon the whim of Stephen Girard. At what will come you have a good trade always in reserve."

The young man saw the wisdom and understood.

Years ago, when the middle-aged men of to-day were boys, Horace Greeley wrote:

"It is a great source of consolation to know that when the public shall be tired of us as an editor, we can make a satisfactory livelihood at setting type or farming, so that while our strength lasts, ten thousand blockheads, taking offense at some article they do not understand, could not drive us into the poor-house."

And so many a man becomes truly independent.

The Tails of Comets.

The spectroscope has furnished us with curious evidence as to the material of which the tails of comets are composed. Several, which from their remarkable development have deserved to be noted as great comets, have had multiplied tails, or streams flowing from the same head, but separating so as often to be distinguished by the unaided eye. These were supposed to be formed of different chemical elements, and the spectroscope has shown that such is actually the case. Thus when the comet has an abundant supply of hydrogen the finest of tails are produced; others are formed of carbon, chlorine, or even of iron as principal ingredients. — Philadelphia Times.

The Queen and the Quakers.

In the autumn of 1818, her Majesty, Queen Charlotte, visited Bath, accompanied by the Princess Elizabeth. The waters soon effected such a respite from pain in the royal patient that she proposed an excursion to a park of some celebrity in the neighborhood, the estate of a rich widow belonging to the Society of Friends. Notice was given of the Queen's intentions, and a message returned that she should be welcome. Our illustrious traveller had perhaps never before held any personal intercourse with a member of the persuasion whose votaries never voluntarily paid taxes to "the man George, called king by the vain ones." The lady and gentleman who were to attend the august visitants had but feeble ideas of the reception to be expected. It was supposed that the Quaker would at least say thy majesty, or thy highness, or madam.

The royal carriage arrived at the lodge of the park, punctual at the appointed hour. No preparations appeared to have been made, no hostess nor domestics stood ready to greet the guests. The porter's bell was rung; he stepped forth deliberately with his broad-brimmed beaver on and unbendingly accosted the lord in waiting with, "What's thy will, friend?" This was almost unanswerable.

"Surely," said the nobleman, "your lady is aware that her majesty——Go to the mistress and say the queen is here."

"No, truly," answered the man, "it needeth not; I have no mistress nor lady, but friend Rachel Mills expecteth thine; walk in."

The Queen and princess were handed out and walked up the avenue. At the door of the house stood the plainly attired Rachel who without even a courtesy, but with a cheerful nod, said: "How's thee do, friend? I am glad to see thee and thy daughter; I wish thee well! Rest and refresh thee and thy people before I show thee my grounds."

What could be said to such a person? Some condescensions were attempted, implying that her majesty came not only to view the park, but to testify her esteem for the society to which Mistress Mills belonged. Cool and unawed, she answered, "Yes thou are right there: the Friends are well thought of by most folk, but they need not the praise of the world; for the rest, many strangers gratify their curiosity by going over this place, and it is my custom to conduct them myself; therefore I shall do the like to thee, friend Charlotte; moreover, I think well of thee as a dutiful wife and mother. Thou hast had thy trials, and so had thy good partner. I wish thy grandchild well through hers"—she alluded to the Princess Charlotte.

It was so very evident that the Friend meant kindly, nay, respectfully, that offence could not be taken. She escorted her guest through her estate. The Princess Elizabeth noticed in her hen-house a breed of poultry hitherto unknown to her, and expressed a wish to possess some of those rare fowls, imagining that Mrs. Mills would regard her wish as a law; but the Quakeress merely remarked, with characteristic evasion, "Thoy are rare, as thon sayest; but if any are to be purchased, in this land or in other countries, I know few women likelier than thyself to procure them with ease." Her royal highness more plainly expressed a desire to purchase some of those she now beheld. "I do not buy and sell," answered Rachel Mills. "Perhaps you will give me a pair?" answered the princess, with a conciliating smile. "Nay, verily," replied Rachel, "I have refused many friends; and that which I denied to mine own kinswoman, Martha Ash, it becometh me not to grant to any. We have long had it to say that these birds belonged only to our own house, and I can make no exception in thy favor."—Home Journal.

The Yarn of the Whaler's Mate.

A novel vacation voyage to Europe by seven artists, who decorated the captain's cabin, is described in the January Century, by C. C. Buel, under the title, "Log of an ocean Studio." The trip is cleverly illustrated by Chase, Blum, Beckwith, Vinton, Quartley, Anderson, and Lungren. Story-telling in the smoking-room was an unfailing amusement, to which the marine artist contributed the following narrative: "You must fancy that I'm Mr. Jones," he said, "a whaler's mate, spinning yarn for messmates. He shifts his quid and begins:

"We wuz all feelin' sort o' grumpy, for thar hadn't been no kin I o' luck, when the lookout cries, 'Theer she blows!'—so I goes up to Cap'n Simmons an' sez I, 'Cap'n Simmons, she's a blower; shell I lower?'

"Sez he; 'Mr. Jones, she may be a blower, but I don't see fitten fur tu lower.'

Then I goes forrud, and the men aloft sings out agin, 'Theer she blows!'—and she's a spermer!' So I goes agin to Cap'n Simmons, an' sez I, 'Cap'n Simmons, she's a spermer an' an a blower; shell I lower?'

"Sez he: 'Mr. Jones, she may be a spermer an' she may be a blower, but I don't see fitten fur tu lower; but if so be you see fitten fur tu lower, w'y lower away an' be 'tarnally dashed tu yer.'

"So I lowered away, an' when we come to about fifty yards o' the critter sez I, 'Hold on, boys, fur I'm death with the long harpoon!' An' I struck her fair, an' we towed her alongside the ship; an' when I come aboard Cap'n Simmons stood in the gangway, an' sez he, 'Mr. Jones, you air an officer an' a gentleman, an' there's rum and terbackeer in the locker—an' that of the very best quality—at yer sarvice, sir, durin' this voyage.'

"Then sez I, 'Cap'n Simmons, I'm a man as knows his dooty and does it, an' all I axes of you is serrility—an' that of the commonest dog-goned kind!'"

Couldn't Go With Him.

A story is told of the wife of a nouveau riche, who, by skillful pushing, had got into a certain circle in society, and obtained a prominent place in it, while her husband, who had no social ambition, remained unknown to nearly all her acquaintances. One of the guests at a grand entertainment given by her, found himself, when tired and bored, next to an insignificant looking little chap. To him he said, in an outburst of confidence: "It's growing beastly dull, and I'm going home. Won't you come with me?"

"I'd like to," was the reply, "but I can't. I am the host."

A Romantic Story.

The following dispatch from Montreal to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat has a local flavor from the fact that Lady Rose is an aunt of Mrs. C. F. Livermore, of this city:

The announcement of the death in London of Lady Rose, wife of Sir John Rose, of London, and formerly of Montreal, brings to mind some romantic incidents of her early life. Lady Rose was a daughter of Robert Emmet Temple, of Rutland, Vt., who held the position of Pension Agent of the United States Government for the revolutionary war. He was a gentleman of distinguished appearance and elegant manners, and had brought up his daughters in all the courtly graces and accomplishments which marked the higher classes at the beginning of this century. The younger ladies paid a visit to Montreal, and the younger married a Montreal gentleman (Mr. Robert Sweeney), a Protestant Irishman, who at that time held the position of Inspector of Potashes and was a partner of Col. Dyde. Her sister married Mr. Chapman. The Sweeneys moved much in military circles, and Mrs. Sweeney, from her fascinating manner and savoir faire, became a general favorite.

An unfortunate affair took place which caused much comment in fashionable circles in those early days. Maj. Ward, of the First Royals, was an intimate friend and companion of Mr. Sweeney, and one afternoon the two friends strolled up town together. That evening Mr. Sweeney had friends to dinner, and during the repast a note was brought into Mrs. Sweeney, which she immediately handed to her husband. He jumped from the table and proceeded to the mess rooms of the First Royals. Maj. Ward, hearing Mr. Sweeney's voice, called out to him to come in and have a glass of wine. This was sternly refused, and on the Major making his appearance Mr. Sweeney handed him the note with the demand, "Did you write this, sir?" Maj. Ward took the missive, and after glancing at it contemptuously, tore it into fragments. Hot words ensued, and a challenge was given and accepted.

THE DUEL.

About sunrise next morning the two friends, who had left Col. Dyde in a very friendly mood the night before, stood confronting each other with pistols at the St. Pierre race course on the Lachine road. The word was given and Mr. Sweeney, who was an accomplished duellist, having had several affairs before, shot his antagonist through the heart before the latter had time to explode his weapon. He and his wife retired to the States until at the request of the officers of Major Ward's regiment a nolle prosequi was entered and he was allowed to return and find that the letter was the heedless practical joke of a flighty girl who had imitated Major Ward's handwriting. The circumstance so preyed on Mr. Sweeney's mind that he died literally broken-hearted.

A short time afterward his young widow, with her son, went to board at a house on Victoria Square, and there she met James Rose, a youth from Huntington, who was studying law in the office of Judge Day. A mutual attachment between the fascinating and accomplished widow and the talented young law student ensued, and shortly after his admission to the bar they were married. Her wonderful tact and suavity of manner made her a leader in society, where she was ever on the alert to advance her husband's interests. As Lady Beaconsfield was to her husband so Lady Rose was the mainspring of Sir John Rose's success, and her diplomacy and ambition spurred her husband on to higher aims, which made him one of the foremost Canadians of his time. Sir John entered political life early and advanced rapidly, working in connection with Sir John A. Macdonald. He was at one time the Minister of Finance, which position he retired to enter the firm of Morton, Rose & Co., bankers of London and New York.

Felt the Situation.

A German farmer was on trial in one of the justice courts the other day for assault and battery, and had pleaded not guilty. When the cross-examination came the opposing counsel asked:

"Now, Jacob, there was trouble between you and the plaintiff, wasn't there?"

"I expect dere vhas.'

"He said something about your dog being a sheep-killer, and you resented it, eh?"

"Vell, I calls him a liar."

"Exactly. Then he called you some hard names?"

"He calls me a sauer kraut Dutchman."

"Just so. That made you mad."

"Oof course. I vas so madt I shake all eafer."

"I thought so. Now Jacob you are a man who speaks the truth. I don't believe you could be hired to tell a lie."

"Vell, I pelief I vhas pooty honest."

"Of course you are—of course. Now, Jacob, you must have struck the first blow. You see——"

The other lawyer objected, and after a wrangle the defendant turned to the court and said:

"I doan' oxactly make oudt how it vhas. I like to own oop dot I shtruck firsht, but I haf paid my lawyer fife dollar to brove de odder vhay. I doan' like to tell a lie, but I feel badt to lose der money!"

Brother Gardner's Health Hints.

"Seb'ral members of dis club," said the l'resident as the bars were let down and the meeting driven in, "have axed me to write out a set of rules, regulashuns an' medical hints to be followed durin' the heated sezun. I have dashed off de followin':

1, "Doan' w'ar obercoats nor obershoes nor ear-muffs doorin' July an' August.

2. Hire a cheap han' to cl'ar de snow off yer sidewalks, so as not to oberheat yer blood.

3. "Lef de ole woman split de wood an' de chill'en hoe de garden, an' doan' let nobody beat yer in a foot-race fur a prize of fifteen cents.

4. "Hang out late nights, lay abed late in de mawnin', pick up your meals at beer saloons, an' talk 'nuff polyticks to keep de blood circulatin'.

5. "Slidin' down hill, skatin', slidin' an' snowballin' am dellyterious to health in midsummer.

"Dat's about all de advice I have to gin you, an' we will now purceed to bizness."—Detroit Free Press.

FACTS AND INCIDENTS.

Items of Interest from all Over—Five Minutes Entertaining Scraps.

Three large stones having deeply indented footprints of birds have been taken from the quarries in Portland, Conn., 300 feet below the surface.

The tunnel under Lake Michigan that is to give water to Hyde Park, a suburb of Chicago, has been carried out 2,460 feet from the shore. It is 6 feet 3 inches in vertical diameter and 6 feet in horizontal diameter, and has been blasted through solid rock.

The glove manufacture in Ireland at one time stood higher than that in any other country. While the trade was flourishing, French workmen came over to learn, and, gaining all the information they wanted, returned home with several Irish workers and all the skins they could buy. They then started manufactories which unabled them to undersell. Many thousands in Ireland were thus thrown out of employment.

"I know a man"—Gen. Comly said to a Cincinnati Enquirer reporter—"who had 18,000 sheep on one of the Hawaiian Islands, for which he had been offered a dollar a head. He refused the offer, expecting to do much better with them; but there was a drought, and every sheep died for want of water. There was absolutely no possible way of saving them. There are places on the islands where enormous piles of bones mark the spots where cattle had been in the habit of drinking. The fountains dried up, and they perished."

Cocoanuts, as well as pineapples and oranges, are grown in Florida. Mr. E. G. Chesley writes that Major Evans of Myers has a grove on the Caloosahatchie that produces 300 or 400 cocoanuts per tree, and that 325,000 trees are growing in Monroe county. A vessel has just arrived at Key West with 120,000 nuts, to be planted in Biscayne by a colony recently started there. Mr. Chesley prophesies that the entire coast line of Monroe county will ere long be a vast cocoanut grove.

The story that a German professor has perfected a scheme whereby he can stop the vital wear and tear of persons for an indefinite time, and then set them going again, contains an idea that is not new under the sun. Edmond About's story of the desiccated "Man with the Broken Ear," and an essay by Benjamin Franklin that is one hundred years old, are to the same purpose. The German professor wishes to operate by freezing, which was Franklin's plan. All that the professor now has to do to demonstrate that the vital processes in a person may be switched off and on at will is to prove it. He needs a subject, of course, and is said to be looking for one.

The original seal of the Confederate States, which is of massive silver, is still in the hands of an ex Confederate soldier, who treasures it carefully. It consists of a device representing an equestrian portrait of Washington (after the statue which surmounts his monument in the Capitol Square at Richmond), surrounded with a wreath composed of the principal agricultural products of the Confederacy (cotton, tobacco, sugar-cane corn, wheat), and having around it the words, "The Confederate States of America, Twenty-second February, Eighteen Hundred and Sixty-two," with the following motto: "Deo Vindice." The Confederate monument at Magnolia Cemetery to the memory of the dead who fell in defense of Charlestown bears on one of its faces an enlarged representation of the great seal of the Confederate States.

Drinking and Health.

At a recent meeting of the Toronto University Temperance League, Dr. Geikie, Dean of the Faculty of Trinity Medical College, made a very practical speech in regard to the effect of even moderate drinking on the health. Coming from a gentleman of his high reputation and standing as a medical man his views ought to have much weight.

The following is a brief summary of the most important of the doctor's remarks on this important subject:—

He warned them against the tendency existing among certain abstainers of being rather Pharisaical. He had been asked to say a few words from a doctor's standpoint. Drinking in moderation was useless, he said so as a medical man. (Applause). Why was it useless? What use was it? That seemed a curious answer to such a question. He had visited the gymnasium, and watched with interest the proceedings. Did they think they would have big arms through drinking liquor? Never. Nor would they have by it. The less they drank the better would their muscles be, the clearer their heads, the better their stomachs, the longer their lives. (Applause). He was not afraid to maintain that position against anybody. Does not this prove at once that the drinking of liquor is not only useless, but most hurtful. Drinking was useless if they wanted to be fine specimens of physique, because they had demonstrations every day that the very finest specimens of health and strength were total abstainers. Go down stairs and look at his horse—(laughter)—they would see his glossy coat and fat body. He had an excellent temper, a disposition that could not be surpassed, and he, (Dr. Geikie) had never known him to have a headache. That horse was a total abstainer, (Renewed laughter). Man differed only from the animal that he possessed an intellect, the finer powers; then all the greater need from abstaining from the abuse of those powers. (Applause). Drinking is not only useless, but most injurious and dangerous. He had seen over and over again in his professional career men fall into a state of unconsciousness, and never wake in this life. That was no fancy figure. In the excitement of the moment, under the influence of drink, the blood vessels of the brain might enlarge, and a man die. It might be said that a great many medical men still tampered with drink; that was the strongest argument of his contention that it was dangerous. There was a fascination about it. It got such a hold on men that with all their kindness of heart, their love of home and children, the demon drink surpassed all. The stomach is injured very much by alcoholic drinks. Congested to the verge of inflammation, and this condition produced not occasionally, but frequently, and kept up by many men all but constantly, means sooner or later, simply its great injury and ultimate destruction. Every day drinkers give proof of the truth of this. See the state of a drinker's stomach after a protracted spree, and sometimes even after a short one, and the destruction of digestive power in inveterate topers.

FINE BRAINS OR GOOD STOMACHS

And the liver, who has not heard of the gin drinker, hob-nailed, lion. The organ rough, hard, shrunken, and so changed that the blood at length cannot circulate freely through it, and thus dropsy often ends a miserable and useless life. Every healthy person is healthier, wiser, safer, and better in every way, and even so much happier without drink than with it

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davonport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Callatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE DEC. 27, 1883.

THE NEW YEAR.

This being the last issue of the STANDARD for 1883, we sincerely wish all our readers happiness and prosperity during the coming year. We also return thanks to our numerous subscribers and patrons for their support together with various expressions of good will during the year now closing, and respectfully solicit a continuance of the same, the great majority of subscriptions expire at the end of the year, and we would press upon you the desirability of being prompt in renewing for 1884. Quite a number have done so, but there are yet many hundred who we trust will make it a point to be prompt in this matter. we will be pleased at all times to have suggestions in reference to the improvement of the paper, we are always open to advice, but detest grumblers and fault finders, we are not however troubled with the latter to any serious extent. We will endeavor to make the STANDARD still more interesting during the coming year, and to that end would ask correspondents to keep us posted on the doings of their several localities, and any who would like to assist us in this way will please drop us a line to that effect. We want a good live corresponent in every neighborhood and village in the district.

MUNICIPAL.

Next Monday will be nomination day all over the country and until then it is impossible to determine who will be the candidates for municipal honors. We may, however, give the probabilities in the surrounding townships.

In Glenelg the present reeve, F. McRae, Esq., who has served the township faithfully for a number of years, and has proved himself a first class financer, will doubtless be returnd by acclamation. J. A. McMillan and Wm. Glencross are in the field for Deputy-Reeveship, they have both had considerable municipal experience, especially the former, and the contest is likely to be close. We understand Mr. Davis retires, he has served faithfully as Councillor and also Deputy-Reeve, and has proved himself worthy the confidence of his supporters, and will be missed at the council board. The candidates for the new council so far as heard from are Geo. Lamb, N. Dunsmoore, P. Neil, Mr. McCuaig C. Williams.

The Artemesia Council will likely be re-elected.

In Osprey matters are quiet, but there will likely be lively times yet, the Present Reeve, A. McGirr, J. R. Sing and Thos. Gamey, Esq., are among the number who will be candidates for municipal premier, while A. McIntyre will doubtless be re-elected Deputy and the old councillors will likely be returned to power.

There is excitement in the Euphrasia camp, it is rumored that Mr. Patterson will oppose Mr Gilray for the Reeveship, the lattter will however likely be returned president. Boyd, Erskine and Ellis are candidates for Deputy, and should they all stand their ground the last will very probably be first. Either H. Herd or Wm. Stewart will be a candidate for Councillor, also John M. Davis. Wm. Fawcett, Mr. Kerr and others.

Quietness prevails in Holland, Mr. Cameron will doubtless be re-elected by acclamation, while it is reported that Mr. Norton will again oppose Mr. Shute. We haven't learned the names of any new candidates for for councillors.

Late, since the above was written we have been informed that Thomas Davis, of Glenelg, will oppose Mr. McRae for the reeve-ship. Mr. John Gillaspie is also in the field in Holland for councillor. He is a good man and if elected will doubtless make a good councillor, and A. Elliott will, we understand oppose Dr. Christoe for Reeveship in Artemesia.

Latest, W. J. Shepherdson, is a candidate for councillor in Euphrasia and hereby solicits the support and influence of the electors.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

THE LAND OF GOLD.

BRITISH COLUMBIA, Nov.30,1883.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR,—I don't know wherein what I have to say respecting this country will be of any interest to you or your readers or not. I have delayed writing anything of heresay regarding the climate, until I could be able to speak from actual experience, as I hold the opinion that no one can tell much of what a country is short of a year's residence at least in it, and even then you may be describing an exceptional year. June, July, August and September were very dry months but I am told this was an exceptional year in that respect, yet the heavy cool dews at night compensated for the lack of rain. Between fog and smoke from bush fires navigation on the Fraser was sometimes impossible. The crops were good; root crops grow here to great perfection, fruit is excellent. Some of the old Hudson Bay men who settled upon ranches (farms), you see I must follow the fashionable names, twenty and thirty years ago are coining money. One of these. I know cleared over $1,000 from apple orchard. $1.50 for a box of 50 lbs. sell like hot cakes. The crap apple grows wild, these are grafted upon and you have fruit in a very short time; huckle berries red and blue are plentiful. Fish, oh! you can go along any small stream in the fall and with a crooked spike nail tied on the end of a cedar pole and trail as many as you like on to the bank, but of course these are not the choice kinds of salmon. The bear feast sumptuously at this season of the year, he is a good fisher and like any other fisher seems to catch them for the fun of it, and leave them laying on the bank with only a bite taken off them. The weather during these months was very pleasant, the nights so cool that one can always feel comfortable and sleep soundly, no tossing about with the heat. But now all this is changed and we are having true B. C. weather. October and November has rained fully half the time. The first snow fell here on Nov. 23, from 8 to 12 inches, then on Tuesday the 27th it commenced to rain and it rained and rained day and night and is yet raining as I write, and mind you don't forget it, it is no Scotch mist but a determined down pour. Canadians who have been here six or seven years prefer it to the snow. There are quite a few Canadians here from Grey and Bruce but you can meet people from all parts of the world, Californians, Australians, Manitobans and every nationality I think under the sun. I met a Highlandman on one of the river boats and asked the usual question, how do like British Columbia? He said: "Well, I likes her well, she'll hae lived in Kanada for sefen year and she'll no like her at a', and she'll thocht ta gang ta Pritish Kalumba and when she'll come here she'll stop now five year and she'll like it well, it is the pest country that effer was, thar is kold in her mountains and no pody need starve, there is plenty fish in her rives and her timber is grand and her land rich.' I remarked that he was quoting Dufferin and as the boat stopped to let us off he shouted, "it will all pe true effry wort she'll say." In regard to this heavy rain storm I am just informed by an old settler that he does not remember such a storm in seven years. The country in the district around New Westminster looks wild and rugged and at first you feel disappointed as is mostly the case with stranges in a strange land. But by and by you begin to like the grandeur of the snow covered peaks. For my own part I was determined to see the best or worst, and I have been so far pretty fortunate, but it won't do to speak of sone's self. It is expected that the C.P.R. will be completed next spring from Port Moody, (this is an arm of the gulf of Georgia stretching inland) to Yale at the head of navigation on the Fraser; work is carried on day and night Sunday included. Everybody seems to have money and you would think they thought as little of a dollar as we would of ten cents. Ten cent pieces are the smallest change in the country, twenty-five is called two bits, but in giving change you get ten cents which is called a bit, everything under a dollar is counted in bits thus 75cts. or six bits, 50cts. or four bits. The length of this letter will answer for long silence. The novelty of camp life gets dispelled when the wet season sets in. Wishing you Mr. Editor a happy Christmas and that some of your readers will send you the necessary fat goose for the occasion, we would have to pay $3 for one here.

I remain, yours truly,
J. M. WEBSTER.

THE VALLEY ROAD.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR,—I notice in you issue of Dec. 20th, a reply from the Reeve of Artemesia to my first letter, I am sorry he was not more explicit. I singled out Mr. Hogg and Mr. Flesher in my enquiry because those gentlemen both went to the council and promised to give the council a clear deed of the roadway through their lands each two concessions in extent if the council would agree to make the valley road down to the town line of Euphrasia, and because they are equally interested in the road being made, they made the same promise to the council, and the council having gone into the agreement the Reeve should have promptly attended to getting the title to the roadway through their lands simultaneously secured. On enquiry I find that Mr. Flesher was at home here at the time Mr. Hogg signed his deed, and for some weeks after. Why did the Reeve not have both deeds prepared at same time, and not let one lay over and run the risk of the township having to pay either of them for land promised free. And now if Mr. Flesher has to be paid even twenty dollars, will the Reeve pay out of his own pocket in consequence of his wilful neglect in not even asking Mr. Flesher for his deed although he was here, before, at the time, and after the deed was secured from Mr. Hogg. I hope the Reeve did not pay Mr. Hogg even one cent as both deeds were given free. And as the matter has not been properly attended to I trust the Reeve will attend to it now and pay himself whatever expense attends the procuring of a deed from Mr. Flesher and not make other people pay for the sluggish performance of duties entrusted to him. As to the other parties through whose land the road is surveyed I think they should be dealt with as soon as the free deeds promised are both secured, in fact the whole of the titles should have been perfected as soon as possible after the road was established, (now over three years) and several parties who were anxious for the road would have had a great part of it made passable before this at their own expense. Cordwood is now a good price and being a heavy article to team all the leading roads to the railway station should be improved as speedily as possibly to enable farmers to realize something out of their timber, which would be a great help to them and the township gennerally. Will our council wake up and throw of all sluggishness in this matter and the Reeve cease to sit in the chair as an extinguisher to enterprise, and let the township advance rapidly as it certainly would do if our municipal rulers were of a more enterprising spirit, especially in road matters. I could take up other matter but my letter is getting too long already.

Yours truly,
RATEPAYER.

REEVESHIP OF GLENELG.

To the Ratepayers of the Township of Glenelg:

GENTLEMEN—I am informed since my return from the county council, that I am to be opposed for the reeveship and that it is also circulated that I am not a candidate. You will now take notice that I am a candidate and hope to meet the ratepayers at the town hall on the 31st inst, (nomination day) and will give any explanation required.

FINLAY MACRAE.
Glenelg, Dec.24, 1883.

THOSE of our subscrebers who are in arrears for 1883 will do us a favor by handing in the amount or remitting by mail at once. We will accept $1. as payment for subscription for 83 on condition that the cash is sent along with it for 84 otherwise $1.25 will be charged, this offer is good until the end of this year. Those who are in arrears for subscription or other account for any time previous to the 1st January 1883 may find their account with the clerk of the Court Division if not paid before the 28th inst., We have been very lenient in the past, but our business compells us to collect, so you cannot blame us. Accounts have been rendered time and again and no further notice may be expected.

Flesherton Station.

Mr. Wood. of Toronto, has leased R. Cook's brick store and has opened out a stock of groceries and is doing a good business.

Neilson Bros. are buying grain in large quantities.

Williamsford.

From our own correspondent.

Business has been booming here the past week, grain has been purchased by our enterprising merchant, Mr. Foster in large quantities thereby adding materially to the business of the place.

Owing to the severe storm on Friday night last, the attendance at the Markdale Literary and Gymnastic Club's entertainment was not as large as could have been desired, the program was however well sustained and the actors certainly did credit to themselves, it is a rare thing to see so many well trained amatures on the stage, those present were highly pleased with the performance, and will be glad to have the opportunity of again attending should the club again see fit to favor them with an apportunity.

The nomination will take place here on Monday next for municipal officers.

Lilburn Bro's are making preparations for a heavy seasons work in the saw mill business.

Kimberly.

From a correspondent.

John Hurd has returned from Northern Dakota to remain in the Valley, he says it it too cold for him there.

Mr. Hamman has purchased two lots from William Stuart and is at work building a store 20x42 on it, which he intends having ready for spring goods.

Kimberly will be the best station on the W. G. & B. R. from Durham to the Georgian Bay.

Mr. Wilton has arrived in Kimberly and is going into the shoemaking business, he is said to be a good workman.

The united Methodist people are going to have a tea party on the 1st day of January. Tea to be served at 6 p. m., it is expected to be largely attended as the proceeds will be applied to erecting a church.

Mr. Condy, formerly of Markdale, is said to have his hotel fixed up very comfortably.

Henry Hurd will be a candidate for the Euphrasia council this year, and it is believed he will be elected as he is a very suitable person.

Credit Sale Register.

FRIDAY, DEC. 31ST.—The executors of the late Samuel Cooper, will sell by public auction on lot 7, con. 8, Euphrasia, commencing at 1 o'clock, 3 horses, 5 cows, 10 head young cattle, pigs, sheep, &c. Terms, 12 months on approved paper, or 8 per cent off notes for cash. Geo. Noble, auctioneer.

FRIDAY, DEC. 28TH.—Valuable farm property in Glenelg, sale at the Markdale House. Moss, Falconbridge & Barwick, vendors' solicitors, Toronto.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.05; Spring $0.60 to $1 08; Barley, 40 to55; Peas, 66; Oats, 27c Butter, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 35c; Hay, $8 .00 ; Pork, 5.00 to 5.60; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.00 to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40c Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 20c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

MARRIAGES.

PEDLAR—TWEED—At the residence of James Plewes, Esq., "Markdale Mills," by Rev, T. Grandy, Wm. S. Pedlar, of Artemesia, to Miss Mary M. Tweed, of Markdale.

DEATHS.

FLEMING—At Berkeley, on the 16th inst., Milford L. V,. infant child of Mr. George Fleming P. M.

SEWELL—In Artemesia, on the 22nd inst., Mr. Arthur Sewell, Sr., 79 years, his end was peace.

GLENCROSS—In Glenelg, on the 10th inst., Margaret, infant daughter of W. Glencross Esq.

MCGIRR—In Glenelg, on Tuesday the 18th inst., the beloved wife of James McGirr, Esq., Sr.

FOR SALE.
25 Building lots in the village of Markdale. first class locations, good terms, apply to
M. ARMSTRONG,
Markdale.

TEACHER WANTED.
For Union School Secction No. 1. Euphrasia and Artemsia, Female holding Second or Third Class certificate, duties to commence 2nd January 1884. Apply personally to Wm. Mathews, Robt. Carruthers or James Stewart, or by letter to
JAMES STEWART,
172-74 Eugenia P.O.

TEACHER WANTED.
For School Section No. 6, Artemesia, Male or Female holding second or third class certificate. Duties to commence on the 2nd January 1884. Apply stating salary to the trustees' secretary treasurer
JOHN HAZARD,
Flesherton Station P.O.

FARMS FOR SALE.
Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot 8 part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres, all bush. For terms and particulars apply to
J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.
Oct.16.1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE.
Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale, For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to 162 72. WM. MUTRIE,
Markdale P. O.

BERKSHIRE BOAR.
A fine Thoroughbred Berkshire Boar for service at Lot 99, 2nd, West T. & S. Road, one mile west of Markdale, Terms, $1 at time of service.
R. McBRIDE.

IN THE GOODS AND CHATTELS
—OF—
Samuel Cooper,
(DECEASED.)

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Pursuant to Section 34, of Chapter 107, R. S. O. the creditors of Samuel Cooper, late of the township of Euphrasia, County of Grey, deceased, who died on or about the 29th Aug. 1883, and all parties having claims upon his estate are, on or before the

FIRST DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1884,

to send by post, prepaid, to Geo. Richardson, Markdale P.O., in the County of Grey, one of the executors, of the personal estate and effects of deceased, their christian and surnames, addresses and description, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and nature of the securities (if any) held by them, and in default thereof the assets of the said deceased will be distributed, having regard only to the claims then received, or those of them which the executors then have notice.

GEO. RICHARDSON, } Executors.
JOHN LEE, }
Dated this 11th day December.

AUCTION SALE
—OF—
Valuable Farm Property
—IN THE—
TOWNSHIP OF GLENELG

Under the power of sale in a mortgage from MARTIN DUNN to the Vendors, which will be produced at the time of sale, and on default of payment of the moneys thereby secured, there will be offered for sale by Public Auction, at the MARKDALE HOUSE in the

VILLAGE OF MARKDALE,
—ON—
FRIDAY, 28TH DAY DEC. 1883

at 2 o'clock p.m. by A. R. VANDUSEN, autioneer, lot number nine (9) in the eighth (8th) concession of the said township of Glenelg, containing 100 acres, more or less, about 50 acres said to be cleared, balance timbered chiefly with hardwood. On the premises are said to be a log house barn and stable.

TERMS—10 per cent. at the time of sale, 15 per cent. within one month after sale and balance secured by mortgage of the premises payable in five yearly instalments with interest at 7 per cent. yearly.

For further particulars apply to W. J. BELLAMY, ESQ., Flesherton, or to
MOSS, FALCONBRIDGE & BARWICK.
Vendors' Solicitors.
Toronto, Dec.4, 1883.

WINES AND LIQUORS
CHOICE BRANDS.

Brandy in Hogsheads.
Scotch and Irish Whiskey in Tr. Casks.
Holland Gin in Tr. Casks.
Jamacia Rum in Tr. Casks.
Fine Old Port and Sherry in Tr. Casks.
Native Wine in Tr. Casks.
Five-year-old Rye Whiskey in Barrels.
White Wheat Whiskey in Barrel.
Rye and Malt Whiskey in Barrels.
Domestic Whiskey in Barrels.
Liquors in Cases.
Bottled Ale and Porter.

H. PARKER,
Druggist, - DURHAM.

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK.

Dress Stuffs Tweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILLIAM BROWN.

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personally, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

W. J. ROWE, wants 10,000 saw logs delivered at Barr-head mills.

MCFARLAND & HULL want 1,000 cords elm, birch, and red beech, stave bolts.

THE polling for ward No. 3, (Glenelg) will take place in Mullarky's barber shop Markdale.

THE NEXT sittings of division court, No. 5, will be held in Flesherton, on Thursday January 24th, 1884.

FRANK TAYLOR, son of Walter Taylor, eleventh line Euphrasia, has a calf fifteen months old which weighs 700 lbs.

PUBLISHERS ASSOCIATION.—We are asked to learn from the Bruce Herald that the Bruce county printers have succeeded in organizing. We hope Grey will follow suit forthwith.

W. J. URQUHART, of the Toronto Evening News gave us a call on Saturday. He secured 20 subscribers for that wide-a-wake paper during the few hours he spent in Markdale.

NOTICE.—The Nomination for Reeve, Deputy-Reeve and councillors for the Township of Holland will be held in Vogan's Hall, Holland Centre village on Monday the 31st December inst. Carson Price, Tp. Clerk.

THE Berkeley Sabbath School will hold their annual entertainment on Saturday the 4th January in the Presbyterian church Berkeley. Several Reverend and other gentlemen are expected to address the meeting. Tea at 6 p. m. Admission 25 cents.

LOST.—On Saturday the 15th inst., between Mr. Geo. Lamb's, farm and Markdale, a newly made "log cabin" quilt and three skains of yarn. The finder will leave them at this office or Coblodge, and they will also be rewarded.

THE annual tea meeting of the Markdale Presbyterian Church will be held on New-Year's day. Tea served at 6 p. m. A good program is being prepared and a good time expected, Tickets 25 cents. Proceeds in aid of building fund.

FOR FIRST class axe handles go to Doherty's shop, Elizabeth st., opposite the bank, Markdale. You can get your own timber and have them made to order, or you can get them all ready made at the shop. Ask for the Big Axe Handle. 169-72

TRUE merit brings its own reward, and the case of Burdock Blood Bitters is rapidly bringing its reward in its increased sales, as a prominent druggist recently said, "it now sells on its merits;" It is the grand specific for diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, 100 bottles have been sold during the last three months. For sale by A. Turner & Co. Markdale.

SOCIAL.—The Methodists of this place will sober off from their superabundant Christmas tea-meeting with a social in the church on Friday evening next, 28th a large quantity of the best of the provisions provided by the generous friends of the church are in reserve together with a rich program. Admission 10 cents.

SERMONS will be preached in the Holland Centre Methodist church, re-opening on Sunday the 30th inst., by the Rev. Mr. Casson of Markdale. A tea-meeting will also be held on the evening following, Monday the 31st when Rev. Mr. Casson, will deliver a lecture. Admission to tea and lecture 25 cents.

PROFESSOR Gregg, of Knox College, Toronto, will conduct the Anniversary services in the Presbyterian church, Markdale, on Sunday next the last sabbath of the year, both morning and evening, 10:30 a. m. & 6:30 p. m. As Dr. Gregg is one of the popular fathers of the Presbyterian church and widely known throughout the Province, a rich treat will be in store for those who attend these services. Collections in aid of the building fund.

L. O. L. No. 1383.—The above lodge which meets at Kells' corner, is in a flourishing condition, elected their officers for 1883 as follows: Bro Jas Lackey, WM; Bro Thos Kells, DM; Bro Geo Sewell, Chap; Bro T Boland, Sec; Bro Geo Wright, Fin Sec; Bro J B Boland, Treas; Committee men, Bros S Bowls, R Sewell, S Lackey, A Sewell; Bro C Shears, Dir of Cer.

THE annual school meeting was held in Markdale, on Wednesday, when the ordinary business was brought before the few who attended and found satisfactory. The trustees report show a total of 275 names on the school register for 1883 with an average attendance of 80. Mr. Lyons was the retiring trustee, and Mr. T. Hill was elected in his place. The sectian elected C. W. Rutledge as their auditor.

CANADIAN ALMANAC.—This depository of usefull knowledge is now in its 37th year, and contains its usual authentic commercial, statistical, astronomical, departmental, ecclesiastical, educational, financial, and general information. There is not as much useful and comprehensive information, published in any from of its size, and all for the pattry sum of 15 cents. It contains a map of Ontario worth twice the money. for sale at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store, Markdale.

OUR PATRONS who wish to subscribe, or renew their subscaiption for any of the following publications will do us a favor by handing the amount in to us at the STANDARD office, viz. Weekly Mail, or Globe, Family Herald and Weekly Star, monthly Farmers Advocate, American Agriculturist, any of the above with the STANDARD for $2.00 or singly for one $1. except the Agriculturist which is $1.50.

A BEAUTIFUL GIFT.—The Great Rock Island Route has issued a new and most comprehensive Cook Book, of 128 pages, filled with new and reliable receipts from the best caterers of this and other contries. No house. wife can afford to be without it; and though worth one dollar, it will be sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of ten cents in stamps. As they will go like hot cakes send at once to E. St. John, G. T. & P. A., Chicago, Illinois.

MARKDALE GRANGE No. 334.—Officers for 1884: Bro S Douglas, W M; Bro G Richardson, WO; Bro B Coleman, Lecturer; Bro Jos Myers, Steward; Bro Sheil, Chaplain; Bro A Elliott, Secretary; Bro Thos Elliott, Treasurer; Bro Ed Lomas, Gatekeeper; Sister E. Drew, Ceres; Sister Alice Drew, Pomona; Sister Mary Walker Flora; Sister E Walker, Lady Assistant Stewardess; Bros B Coleman, Thos Ellictt, S Lackey, executive committee; Bro G Richardson, delegate to Division Grange.

The Guelph lottery swindle has been consummated. The prizes have been drawn on a scaled down basis. the total cash value distributed being $68,325. divided in alleged prizes of $17,000 down to $7.50. It is declared that 65,693 tickets were disposed of, which means that, according to their own admissions, J. L. Murphy et al have got away with $63,057 of the people's money.

FARMER'S ADVOCATE.—The December number of the excellent farmer's periodical is at hand. The prize essay "The Advantages of Maintaining Township Exhibitions" by H. F. Honsberger of Springfield, Ont., appears in this number. Farmers who deny themselves the advantages of a good agricultural monthly, stand in their own light. The Aevocate is a good one. Thirty six pages, $1 per annum. The Advocate is interesting practical and cheap. Wm. Weld, Publisher, London, Ont. Samplet at this office, and subscriptions taken.

A NEW YEARS GIFT.—Residents of Grey County, are invited to send in a number by card or otherwise, between 1 and 1000, to compete free of charge for a neat, nickle, lever, alarm clock, value $3.75, number will be put with clock, open to Jan 1st, noon, nearest to exact guess gains the clock. Give full address with No. Clock very useful to early risers, send in your guesses at once. Guesses will be numbered as received, so if two alike first one wins. Address W. A. Brown, jeweller, Markdale, box 5. Award made by Mr. C. W. Rutledge, and published first week in January, 1884.

THE ANNUAL Christmas tea-meeting at the Methodist Church was a genuine success. Tea was served in the Orange Hall thereby avoiding the crush consequent on having it in the same building as the entertainment. The eatables and drinkables were of excellent quality and in abundance. According as each table were served they repaired to the church where Dr. Sproule, M. P. took the chair at the hour appointed, sharp on time, and after a few appropriate remarks entered upon the program which consisted of music by the choir and Rev. Mr. Casson's lecture. The former did exceedingly well, the assistance of Mr. Brown with the flute and Mr. Mason with claronette was valuable and well appreciated. The lecturer gave his interesting, amusing and edifying lecture in his usual vigorous and eloquent style, which was received with applause. Everything passed off orderly and highly satisfactory, both to the public and the committee. Proceeds $97.

THE C. P. R. AND THE ELEVATOR.—Last week Mr. Whyte, General Superintendent of the Ontario and Quebec system was in town. Mr. Whyte was waited on by the Town Council and the Board of Trade in reference to the completion of the elevator. The construction of which was commenced by the Toronto, Grey & Bruce company last winter. In the course of conversation Mr. Whyte said that if the C. P. R. or Ontario and Quebec Company had agreed to pay $140,000 a year for the use of the T. G. & B. R. it would of course be to their intrest to build the elevator in order to enable the road to earn as much money as possible, and that if the town would stand by the agreement entered into with the T. G & B. R. that the elevator would be built. The cost of the elevator with complete set of machinery, equal to that in the Midland elevator. (which is said to be the best in now operation in Canada) will be about $70,000. At a special meeting of the Council on Monday evening last the by-law granting $15,000 to the Toronto. Grey & Bruce to assist in the building of an elevator was renewed, or time extended for the completion of the elevator till July 1st 1884, on or beforo which date the elevator under the new managment is to be completed.—C. S. Times.

1883 CHRISTMAS. 1884

SANTA CLAUS

HEAD QUARTERS

MEDICAL HALL.

We desire to inform our numerous Friends and Patrons that we have received and are opening our Annual stock of Christmas Goods, Fancy Goods, Toys Books, and Chrismas Cards. Our stock of Christmas Goods this season is Larger, Cheaper and Better assorted than that of any previous season. Call and examine. Satisfaction guaranted. Liberal discount to purchasers of Lots for Christmas trees.

A. TURNER & CO.

EXECUTOR'S NOTICE

TO THE CREDITORS OF

James Thompson.

Notice is hereby given that the creditors of James Thompson, late of the Township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, Farmer, who died on or about the 4th day of April, 1883, at the said township of Artemesia are, on or before the next, to send to either of the undersigned Executors at Flesherton, their Christian and Surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and the nature of the securities (if any) held by them. After the said Fourth day of January next the said Executors will distribute the assets of the said James Thompson, amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to such claims as the said executors shall then have notice of

TENTH DAY OF JANUARY,

This notice is given in pursuance of Chap. 107. Sec. 34. R. S. O.

Dated at Flesherton this 11th day of December 1883.

(Signed) ISAAC SINCLAIR.
WILLIAM HILL.

171-74

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKER,

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand,

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings. Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169 90.

BOAR PIG.

The thoroughbred boar CHESTER WHITE, will be for service at his pen, Markdale, forwith; a fine boar six months old. Terms—$1, at time of service.

168 71 WM. DOUGLASS.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
Toronto, Ont.

141-75

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

GRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery,

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

MARKDALE HOUSE,

MARKDALE, - - ONT.

MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia. Age, year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

BERKSHIRE BOAR.

An early spring pig for service at his pen, two miles south of Markdale. Terms, 75 cents at time of service, otherwise $1.

CHAS. LITTLEJOHNS.

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER V.

The next day was Sunday, to which I had already begun to look forward eagerly, as one does in the country, as a break in the monotonous round of days. Old Mr. Reade was not at church, and his son sat in his place with his back to me. Instead of putting his elbows on his knees through the prayers as he had done on the Sunday before, he would turn right round and kneel in front of his seat, facing me—which was a little disconcerting, for, as he knelt with his chin on his hands and his head back, he seemed to be saying all the responses to me, and I could not raise my eyes for a minute from my book without having my attention distracted in spite of myself.

After service, as we stood about in the churchyard, I heard Mr. Rayner telling the doctor and two of the farmers about the races he had been to the week before, and of his having won fifteen pounds on a horse the name of which I forget; and he took out of his pocket a torn race card, seeming surprised to find it there, and said it must have been that which had caused his thoughts to wander during the sermon. He asked Mrs. Reade whether her husband was ill, and did not seem at all affected by the cool manner in which she answered his enquiries,

"I had the pleasure of lunching with a relative of yours, Mrs. Reade, on the course at New Newmarket last week—Lord Bramley. He is a cousin of yours, is he not?"

"Hardly a cousin: but he is connected with my family, Mr. Rayner," she answered more graciously.

"He thinks more of the connection than you seem to do, for he asked me particularly how you were, and whether you thought of going up to town this autumn. I told him I could not give him any information as to your intended movements, but that you had never looked better than when I saw you last."

And Mrs. Reade was still talking to Mr. Rayner, with more affability in her haughtiness, when Haidee and I started on our walk home.

At dinner Mr. Rayner gave us part of their conversation, with an excellent parody of the lady's manner and a funny exaggeration of the humility of his own. He was always particularly bright on Sunday at dinner, the contact with duller wits in the morning seeming to give edge to his own.

On that afternoon I was scarcely outside the gate on my way to church when he joined me.

"No no, Miss Christie; we are not going to trust you to go to church by yourself again."

I blushed, feeling a little annoyed, though I scarcely knew why. But surely I could take care of myself, and did not want surveillance, especially Mr. Rayner's.

"Don't be angry; I spoke only in fun. I want to see Boggett about some fencing, and I know I shall catch him at church. But, if you object to my company——"

"Oh, no, Mr. Rayner, of course not!" said I, overwhelmed with terror at the thought of such impertinence being attributed to me.

The shock of this made conversation difficult to me, and I listened while Mr. Rayner talked, with even less of "Yes" and "No" and simple comment than usual. When we passed the park, I saw Mr. Laurence Reade, dressed for church, tossing a small prayer-book—men never burden themselves with the big church-service we women carry—and finishing a cigar, with his back against a tree. I think he must have seen us for some time before I caught sight of him, for I was looking at an oak-leaf in my hand while Mr. Rayner explained its structure to me. I had never seen Mr. Reade look cross before, and I thought it a pity he should spoil his nice kind face by such a frown; and I wondered whether he was ill-tempered, and, if not, what had annoyed him.

When one sees people playing with prayer-books and dressed for church, one cannot help expecting to see them there; and I had an unreasonable and absurd feeling almost like disappointment as the little organ droned out a dismal voluntary and the services began, and still Mr. Laurence Reade did not appear; and I caught myself looking up whenever the door creaked and a late worshipper came in, and glancing towards the pew he had occupied on the Sunday before, which I suddenly remembered was very unbecoming in me. But he did not come.

The heat and this absurd little trifle, and my penitence for it, so distracted my attention that I scarcely heard a word of the sermon. But then it was the curate who preached on that afternoon, and his discourses were never of the exciting kind. I just heard him say that it was his intention to give a course of six sermons, of which this was to be the first; and after that I listened only now and then; and presently I noticed that Mr. Rayner, who always looked more devout than anybody else in church, was really asleep all the time. It was a heavily-built little Norman church, very old and dark, and he was sitting in a corner in such an attentive attitude that I thought at first I must be mistaken; but I looked at him twice, and then I was quite sure.

When services was over, he stayed behind to talk to Boggett, while I went on alone. He overtook me in a few minutes; but, when he said the sermon was good of its kind, I had to turn away my head that he might not see me smiling. But I was not quick enough for Mr. Rayner.

"I didn't say of what kind, Miss Christie. I may have meant it was good as a lullaby. One must be on one's guard with you demure people. I have never yet been to afternoon service without going to sleep, and I have never before been discovered. Now the spell is broken, and I shall feel that the eyes of the whole congregation are upon me. Are you shocked Miss Christie?"

"Oh, no, Mr. Rayner!"

"You wouldn't take such a liberty as to be shocked at anything I might do; would you, Miss Christie?"

His tone of grave mischief woke an answering spirit in me.

"Certainly not, Mr. Rayner."

"Where did you pick up a sense of humour, most rare gift in your sex, and why do you hide it away so carefully, Miss Christie?"

"Indeed I don't know; I don't mean to hide anything," I answered rather foolishly.

"And how did you like the sermon?"

"I—I wasn't listening much, Mr. Rayner."

"Not listening! A religious little girl like you not listening! I'm surprised—I really am."

His manner grew suddenly so grave, and he really seemed so much surprised, that I felt called upon to make a sort of profession.

"I'm not really religious," I said hurriedly. "I haven't meant ever to pretend to be. But I do respect religion and religious people very much, and I hope some day I shall be able to enter into their feelings better than I can now. I do pray for it," I ended, almost in a whisper.

Mr. Rayner took my hand very kindly.

"It will come, child, it will come." he said gravely and quite paternally. "Go on quietly doing your duty as you do, and the blessing will come in due time."

He said it so simply, without any attempt at preaching, that I felt I looked up to him more naturally than even to a clergyman, being quite sure now that he acquitted me of any intention to be hypercritical. And when, after, he asked me to accompany his violin on the piano while he played Mozart's Twelfth Mass, the fervour which he put into the beautiful music inspired me with a corresponding exaltation of feeling, such as no sacred music had ever woke in me before. At the end of the evening Mrs. Rayner wished me good night and glided softly from the room before I had finished putting the music in order, as Mr. Rayner had asked me to do. When I rose from bending over the canterbury, still flushed with the excitement caused by the music, Mr. Rayner held out his hand with a grave smile.

"You are the best accompanist I have ever met; you catch the spirit of the sacred music perfectly. To-morrow night I shall prove whether you are as accomplished a reader of secular music. Good night, my dear child."

And he bent down to kiss me. But I shrank back slightly, and so evaded him, trying at the same time to make my movement seem unconscious: and, with a smiling "good night," I left the room.

As soon as I had done so, my heart sank within me. What had I done? Probably offended Mr. Rayner beyond recall by what must seem to him an absurdly strained piece of prudery. It looked as if I thought myself a person of such attractions that he wanted to kiss me to please himself, instead of an insignificant little girl whom he was going to kiss good-naturedly, as he might have done if he had been her father. But then he was not my father, and not nearly old enough to be so, however paternal and kind his manner might be; if he had been forty or fifty, I should have submitted without a moment's hesitation. But, if Sarah or Mrs. Rayner, neither of whom seemed to like me very much, had suddenly come in and found Mr. Rayner kissing me, she might have mistaken, in a way which would have been very unpleasant for me, the feeling which prompted him to do so. So I comforted myself as well as I could with the thought that, after all, I had done only what was right and prudent; and, if he was offended, well, there was no help for it.

The next morning, to my great relief, his manner was just the same as usual; of course what had caused so much thought and anxiety to the girl of eighteen had seemed but a trifle to the man of three-and-thirty. I wondered whether I should be summoned to the drawing-room to accompany him on the violin, as he spoken on the previous night of wishing me to do. But at tea he was much preoccupied, and told Sarah that a gentleman would be coming to see him presently, who was to be shown into the study.

As he turned to say this, I noticed a sudden flash of horror pass over Mrs. Rayner's pale features and disappear in a moment, before her husband could see her face again; and I thought I saw on Sarah's dark face a look of intelligence when the order was given her, as if she too knew something about the unexpected visitor. I hope I am not very inquisitive; but, in a quiet country-house to which, rightly or wrongly, some suspicion of mystery is attached, one cannot help noticing even trifles connected with unaccustomed events, and wondering whether there is some meaning in them.

I tried not to think any more about it, as it certainly did not concern me; but I did succeed very well in banishing it from my mind until I sat down in the empty schoolroom to my evening task, set by myself, of translating a page of Markham's English History into German. I was very anxious to improve myself, so that by-and-by I might be an accomplished woman and able to take an engagement as finishing governess, which at that time seemed to me quite a lofty ambition. When the translation was finished, I had still to read a chapter of Guizot's French History; but that was pleasant, easy work, and might be enjoyed in the garden. I had seen the stranger as I was crossing the hall after tea. He was a small slight man, with a fair moustache, who might be old or young; and, although he wore only a gray-travelling suit, he gave one the impression of being very well dressed indeed. I had forgotten all about him long before I made my way, with a heavy volume of history in my arms, to the pond, near the prettiest, reediest corner of which I had made myself a little nest. There was here a willow tree which had been forced by an aggressive oak to grow in a slanting position, and one of its lowest branches hung parallel to the ground. This made my seat, and a piece of cord fastened from branch to branch a foot and a half above made a rest for my back; so, with a couple of old bricks to raise my feet out of the deep grass, I could injudiciously sit there in the summer evenings till quite late. I read my Guizot, conscientiously hunting out in the dictionary all the words I did not know, until the light began to fade, and I was thinking it was time to go in, when I heard voices that seemed to be coming towards me from the house.

I have mentioned a path which led, by a short cut through the plantation, from the house to the high-road to Beaconsburgh. The speakers, a man and a women, as I could already make out, seemed to be coming along this path. Whoever they might be, I would wait until they had gone by before I went in. I could not see them, nor could they see me, I knew. When they came a little nearer, I recognised Sarah's voice; the other was that of a man of a class much higher than her own. Could it be the stranger? He was talking familiarly and seriously with her; I could tell that before I heard any words. Sarah was speaking in a tone of bitter complaint, and the first words I heard were hers.

"I won't stand it much longer—and so I tell you."

"Tell him, my dear Sally—if you dare. And now oblige me by speaking a little lower, for there is nothing like trees for carrying tales."

She began again in a lower voice, but in the same tone, and, from the occasional words I heard—for I could not help listening—I gathered that she was angry because some unknown "he" paid too much attention to some unknown "her." But I could guess who they were. Sarah, it was well known in the house, had an admirer, a man some years younger than herself, who lived a long way off—in London, I think I had heard it said—and who paid her visits at irregular intervals. Mr. Rayner took great interest in this love-affair, and derived much amusement from it; he had somehow discovered that the admirer, whose name was Tom Parks, was inclined to pay more attention than was meet to the kitchen-maid, Jane; and it was Mr. Rayner's opinion that there would be very little left of Jane if she encouraged the fickle swain's attention.

So Sarah was giving vent to her jealousy in an earnest and intimate conversation with her master's guest. It seemed a very strange proceeding. I knew than men in the position of gentlemen do not treat women of a lower class with more consideration than is necessary when they are young and pretty; but Sarah's face, which looked as if it was worn and lined before its time with hard work and strong passions, was more repellent than attractive, and I was glad I could not see it as I heard her fierce words more plainly, and knew how her great black eyes must be flashing and her mouth twitching, as they did whenever she was annoyed.

"Look what I've done for him; think how I worked for him!" she said. "He would never be where he is now if it wasn't for me. Does he think his new fancy will plan for him and plot for him, and risk——"

"Hush, hush — don't speak so loud! Where's your old discretion, Sally?"

"Let him look for discretion in Miss Baby, with her round face and her child's eyes. Does he think he can make use of her? Nonsense! It wants a woman that's strong in her head and strong in her limbs to do the work he wants done, and not a soft little chit like that!"

"Depend upon it, however useful she might be, he would never compare her services with yours, Sally. He is only amusing himself with this little simpleton," the man said soothingly.

But she interrupted him in a tone of half-suppressed savagery that made me shudder, out of her sight thought I was.

"Amusing himself, do you say? Only amusing himself! Looking at her, talking to her, not because he wants to make use of her, but because he likes her, loves her"—she hissed—"as he has never loved any of his poor tools, though they were handsomer a thousand times than this wretched girl! If I thought that, if I really believed that, he'd find me more than his match for once. I'd spoil her beauty for her, and for him, if I hanged for it?"

Oh, what an awful woman! And all because poor little Jane was younger and prettier than herself, and had had the misfortune—for it was indeed a misfortune—to attract the attention of her unprincipled lover!

The man spoke again, this time very gravely. I had to listen with all my attention to hear him, for they had now passed the place where I sat.

"Sally, don't do anything foolish," said he. "Jim isn't a fool, and he knows how to repay services like yours, though he may be a trifle harsh sometimes. Why, he might have thrown you over with the rest when——"

I could hear no more; they had gone too far. I waited till their voices died away, and then dashed from my perch, through the plantation and the hall, up to my room, as fast as I could, locked the door, and sat down appalled.

What a terrible tragedy in the servants' hall we were likely to have if things went on like this! If Mrs. Rayner had been only a woman, not a statue, I would have confessed all to her; but, as she was, it would do no good. It was not the sort of thing I could tell Mr. Rayner, and there was no way of letting him know without telling him. There was nothing for it but to hope that little Jane would be wise and leave off provoking Sarah, and that Providence would bring Sarah herself to a better mind.

But what a dreadful woman to have in the house! And why had the stranger spoken of Tom Parkes as "Jim"?

CHAPTER VI.

The next morning I woke up with that strange feeling of oppression which is caused by something unpleasant heard the night before I soon remembered what it was, and tried to shake off the recollection of the talk in the plantation and of Sarah's vindictive tones. I looked at her searchingly as she came in demurely to prayers with the cook and poor little Jane, and I could not help thinking that Tom Parkes, or "Jim" as the stranger had called—but then a man of such a desperate character as they had described him to be would have a dozen aliases—might be excused in preferring the simple little kitchen-maid Jane to that forbidding-looking shrew. But perhaps, when he first made love to her, she was young and comparatively fair; and, if so, he ought not to desert her just because she had grown thin and hard-looking in doing the wicked things he had made her do. What were those wicked things? I wondered. I had seen Tom Parkes, a strongly-made thick set young man, two or three times, and he had seemed to me to have a stolid but rather good-humored expression; I should have thought him to be more stupid than wicked, and certainly not the sort of man to rule with a rod of iron the formidable Sarah.

That very day I had an opportunity of comparing my impression of Tom, when I thought him a harmless and inoffensive person, with my impression of him now that I knew him to be a rogue of the most determined kind. When Haidee and I returned from our walk, we came into the garden by a side-gate at the back of the house, and had to pass by the servants' entrance. Tom Parkes was sitting outside the door in as easy an attitude as the broken chair he sat on would permit, eating bread and cheese; while opposite to him stood Jane and Sarah, both apparently in high good humor, One held a jug, the other a glass, and they seemed united in the desire to please him by ministering to his wants, and by a rough kind of humor to which he was not slow in replying. They were talking about kisses, and I think they were going to illustrate the subject, when Tom suddenly became aware of our presence, and, taking his arm from round Jane's waist, pulled his cap off apologetically and remained standing until we had gone by.

What a strange contradiction this scene seemed to give to what I had overheard on the night before! Sarah was scarcely the woman to exercise great self-control when among her equals; yet here she was, all laughter and rough gaiety, submitting in the best of tempers to receive a share only, and evidently the smaller share, of Tom's attention with her rival Jane! I was rather ashamed of my strong interest in the low-class love affair; but Sarah was such an exceptional women, and her admirer, from what I had heard, such an exceptional man, that I could not help puzzling myself as to whether she had been only acting good humor, or whether the love-affairs of the uneducated were conducted on different principles from those of other people.

That evening, after tea, when, my translation finished, the time came for Guizot, I remembered with a pang of conscience, that I had left that nicely-bound book out in the damp all night, forgotten in my hasty flight I hurried through the plantation, eager to see whether it was much injured; but, when I got within a few yards of my nest, I saw Mr. Rayner there before me, standing with the unlucky volume in his hand.

If I had been conscience stricken before, when my guilt was known only to myself, what did I feel now that it was discovered? I had not the courage to face him, but turned, and was sneaking back towards the house, when he called me—

"Miss Christie!"

I might have known I should not escape his sharp eyes and ears. I went back slowly, murmuring, "Yes, Mr. Rayner," and blushing with mortification. It was only a trifle, after all, but it was a most vexatious one. To Mr. Rayner, to whom I could not explain that I was too much occupied in listening to a strictly private tete a tete to think of his book, it must seem a most reprehensible piece of carelessness on the part of a responsible member of his household; it would serve me right if he requested me not to touch any of his books in future. He was turning over the leaves with his eyes bent on the book as I came up; but I have since thought that he took a mischievous pleasure in my discomfiture.

"I am very sorry, Mr. Rayner," I began, in a low voice which almost threatened tears; "I brought that book out here to read yesterday evening, and I—I forgot to take it with me when I went in. I knew it was most inexcusable carlessness—indeed I will never bring one of the library-books out again."

"And why not, Miss Christie?" said he suddenly dispelling my anxiety by looking up with his usual kindly smile. "I am sure Guizot is dry enough to stand a little moisture, and, if you were to throw him into the pond, you would be his only mourner, for nobody takes him off his shelf but you. But what makes you spoil your young eyes by plodding through such heavy stuff as this! It is very laudable of you, I know: but, if you were to bring out a volume of poetry or a novel, that would run no risk of being forgotten."

"I am so ignorant," said I humbly, "and I want some day to be able to teach girls much older than Haidee, so that I have to read to improve myself. And I don't only read dry things. This morning I found time to read nearly the whole of yesterday's paper."

"Well, that was dry enough; there was nothing in it, was there?"

"Yes, there was an account of another murder in Ireland, and a long article on the present position of the Eastern difficulty, and the latest details about that big burglary."

"What burglary?"

"Haven't you read about it? A large house in Derbyshire, belonging to Lord Dalston, was broken into last Wednesday, and a quantity of valuablo things stolen. They say they've got a clue, but they haven't been able to find any of the thieves yet.

"And they won't either. They never do, except by a fluke."

"They say the robbery must have been most carefully planned, and that it was most skillfully carried out."

"They always say that. That is to excuse the utter incompetency of the police in face of daring and dexterity."

"And they say it looks like the work of the same hand that committed several large jewel robberies some years ago."

"Whose hand was that?"

"Ah, they don't know! The man was never discovered."

"That is another newspaper commonplace. To say that the way one ladder was placed against a window, the window opened and entered, and the diamonds taken away, looks very like the way another ladder was placed against another window, and another set of diamonds taken away, sounds very cute indeed; and to imply that there is only one thief in England with skill enough to baffle them raises that uncaught thief into a half divinity whom it is quite excuseable in mere human policemen to fail to catch."

"Well, I hope they will catch this one, whether he is half divinity or not."

"Why, what harm has the poor thief done you? You have nothing to fear from diamond-robbers, because you have no diamonds."

"I believe you have more sympathy with the thieves than with the policemen'" said I, laughing.

"I have, infinitely more. I have just the same admiration for the successful diamond-robber that you have for Robin Hood and Jack Sheppard, and just the same contempt for the policemen that you have for the Sheriff of Nottingham and Jack's gaoler."

"Oh, but that is different!" I broke in hotly—for I always put down "Robin Hood" in confession books as "my favorite hero," and I was not without a weakness for Jack.

"Oh, yes, it is very different, I know!" said Mr. Rayner maliciously. "Robin Hood wore Lincoln green and carried a picturesque bow and arrow, while Sheppard's costume, in colored prints, is enough of itself to win any woman's heart. And then the pretty story about Maid Marian! Jack Sheppard had a sweetheart too, hadn't he? Some dainty little lady whose mild reproaches for his crime proved gentle incentives to more, and who was never really sorry for her lover's sins until he was hanged for them."

"Well, Mr. Rayner, their very appearance, which you laugh at, shows them to be superior to the modern burglar."

"Have you ever seen a modern burglar?"

"No; but I know what they look like. They have fustian caps and long protruding upper lips, and their eyes are quite close together, and their lady-loves are like Nancy Sikes."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Scientific Notes.

Since the days of the Stuarts the increase of wealth in England has been more rapid than the increase of population. In 1861 the wealth of England and Wales was equal to £45 per head; in 1872 it was £127, and last year £249. Public wealth has quadrupled since the Waterloo epoch, and doubled since the accession of Queen Victoria. Since 1849 wealth has increased four times more rapidly than population, which led Prof. Levi to remark that they disprove the Malthusian theory, so far as England was concerned.

A new company claims to reproduce in the most perfect manner the Vasamurrhina glass made by the ancient Egyptians more than three thousand years ago, but lost to the modern world. The art of making this glass is a secret form of blending in with the glass, in an artistic manner, all kinds of metal, such as gold, silver, brass, iron, copper, and steel, also all kinds of jewels and gems, so as to produce any combination of color, direct or reflex, from the most brilliant sky or sea of fire to the sombre clouds of northern skies, and is also the secret of imitating the gold, jewels, diamonds, and gems themselves.

The car which is to convey Patti around the country on her operatic tour is to be a marvel in the way of luxuriousnes: it will, indeed, be the most convenient and magnificent drawing-room car ever put on any road, It will have one novelty which ought to be imitated in summer time on ordinary cars. A refrigerating apparatus will be employed similar to that used in Madison Square Theatre in New York, by which the temperature can be reduced 100°. Summer travelling is sometimes intolerable because of the heat, which can be mitigated by this device.

In the International Exhibition at Nice, M. Faselli exhibited what he called "The observatory under the sea." This is a name given to a sort of submarine balloon made of steel and bronze to resist the pressure of water at about 100 fathoms. It is forty feet in height and is divided into three compartments. On the top sits the commander, the second is a saloon for eight passengers, and on the bottom a machine constructed on the principle of a fish's bladder, by which the balloon is raised or lowered. A powerful electric light illumines the sea to a great distance, enabling the passengers to study through the glass flooring, the rocks, plants, and the fishes of these aqueous depths. A telephone communicates with the attending vessel upon the surface of the water. This machine is almost an exact reproduction of Jules Verne's submarine steamer in his "20,000 leagues under the sea."

In view of the danger which attends the gatherings of the Mohammedans in their pilgrimages to Mecca, a French savant suggests that foreign nations should intervene and jointly occupy that sacred but now very dirty city. It is beyond dispute that cholera and other infectious diseases are spread by the pilgrims, who return to their various homes after kissing the holy stone. Should the several nations occupy Mecca, they need not put a stop to the pilgrimages, but they can make such sanitary regulations as would insure against the danger of starting the cholera on its voyage around the world. The possession of Mecca by the Christian powers might also serve to discredit Mohammedanism in the minds of its votaries, and the enforced washing and cleansing of the myriads of pilgrims might do something towards renovating their whole natures.

A government laboratory for the analysis of chemicals and patent medicines is one of the means resorted to in Japan for protecting the public health. The makers of such medicines are required to tell of what they are made, and the proportions of the ingredients. Would not such an institution be of great value in this country? Vast quantities of patent medicines are sold in the United States and Canada, and none but the proprietors know of what they are made. We are very careless about such matters. No one should be allowed to practice as a doctor, unless he can show a state or government diploma, certifying to his knowledge of medicine and surgery; but we allow medical schools and colleges to give authority to their own graduates to practice, when it is notorious that not one in three who receive a diploma is properly qualified to practice either by training or experience.

Rules for the Journey of Life.

Never ridicule sacred things or what others may esteem as such, however absurd they may appear to you.

Never show levity when people are engaged in worship.

Never resent a supposed injury till you know the view and motives of the author of it, and on no occasion relate it.

Always take the part of an absent person, who is censured in company, so far as truth and propriety will allow.

Never to think worse of another on account of his differing from you in political and religious subjects.

Not to dispute with a man who is more than seventy years of age, nor with a woman, nor with any sort of an enthusiast.

Not to affect to be witty, or to jest so as to hurt the feelings of another.

To say as little as possible of yourself and those who are near you.

To aim at cheerfulness without levity.

Never to court the favor of the rich by flattering their vanities or their riches.

To speak with calmness and deliberation on all occasions, especially of circumstaces which tend to irritate.

Frequently to review your conduct and note your feelings.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

A Darling Little Pet.

Skunks, when young, make very pretty pets, says Dr. Clinton M. Merriam, in his description of the vertebrates of the Adirondack regions. "They are attractive in appearance, gentle in disposition, interesting in manners, and cleanly in habits—rare qualities indeed! They are playful, sometimes mischevous, and manifest considerable affection for those who have the care of them. I have had at different times, ten live skunks in confinement. They were all quite young when first taken, measuring from four to seven inches in length: two were so young that they had to be brought up on milk: the others ate meat and insects from the start. From some of these I removed the scent bags, but the greater number were left in a state of nature. None ever emitted any odor, although a couple of them, when half grown, used to assume painfully suggestive attitudes on the too near approach of strangers, so suggestive indeed, that their visitors commonly beat a hasty retreat. These same skunks would climb up my legs, and get into my arms: they liked to be caressed, and never offered to bite. If accustomed to the presence of a number of people, they are familiar and friendly toward all; while if kept where they habitually see but one or two persons, they will not permit a stranger to touch them. —Buffalo Courier.

How The Treasury Is Guarded.

What puzzles my English friends even more than the ignorance of the people of Washington as to where the original draft of the Declaration of Independence is kept, is the apparent absence of guards about the treasury department at night, writes a Washington correspondent. The treasury building covers, as you know, two squares of ground. In its great vaults are as many millions as the richest man in the world would want to roll in; yet you can walk up Fifteenth street at night, touching every window and door on its side from lower Pennsylvania avenue without meeting a single watchman, except at certain hours, and then the meeting would be accidental. Within the walls are guards, but they are not visible, and the building seems deserted. "Now, in London," said an Englishman, to-night, "if you were walking past the bank of England about the time that the street lamps were being lighted, you would meet a small army of troops, armed and equipped for sentry duty, and you would see them take their places for the night as though the bank were a fortified camp. I'd like to see you tackle Old Lady of Threadneedle.

Not Quite Smart Enough.

A day or two ago, as the passengers were leaving one of the Detroit River ferry boats, a gentleman who stood beside a custom house officer, remarked:

"When I see a poor fellow like that, I am provoked for not being rich."

"Who?"

"Why, that man with the hump on his back. I had rather be poor all my days, than to be deformed and have millions of money.

"I'll cure him in about five minutes—more or less," replied the officer, as he walked toward the unfortunate, and invited him to pass up stairs. There was a kick, but he had to go, and three or four minutes' time sufficed to remove his deformity, which consisted of twenty-two yards of flannel, and a pair of socks.

"Pretty smart!" growled the smuggler, as he was allowed to go.

"Not so very," was the reply. "A man with such a hump on his back, should carry more than he did. You didn't."

Seventy years since a Bank of England note was paid into a Liverpool merchant's bank in the ordinary course of business. On holding it up to the light to test its genuineness the cashier saw some faint red marks on it. Examining them closely, he traced out half-effaced words between the printed lines and upon the margin of the note written apparently in blood. After a long and minute scrutiny he made out the following: "If this note should fall into the hands of John Dean, of Longhill, near Carlisle, he will learn hereby that his brother is languishing a prisoner in Algiers." The merchant immediately communicated with Mr. Dean, and he lost no time in bringing the matter before the Government. Inquiries were set on foot and the unfortunate man was discovered and ransomed. He had been a slave to the Dey of Algiers for eleven years, when the message he had traced with a splinter of wood dipped in his own blood reached the Liverpool counting house. Liberty, however, came too late; the privations and hardships of the galleys had sapped his strength, and although he was sent home to England, it was but to die.

THE FOX AND THE HEN.

A Fable with many Morals.

"How big a brood shall you have this year, madam?" said the Fox to the Hen, one cold winter evening in the barn-yard.

"What's that to you?" said the Hen to the Fox.

"Supper!" replied the Fox, promptly.

"Well, I don't know," said the hen, in reply: "I may have ten; but I never count my chickens before they are hatched."

"Quite right," said the Fox, "neither do I; and, as a hen in the present is worth ten of hens in the future I will eat you now.' So saying he carried her off.

The next morning the farmer, seeing the tracks of the fox in the snow, took his gun and went out and shot him. "Alas!" said the Fox, "I should have waited for the ten chickens; there is no snow in the summer time."—St. Nicholas for January.

The Hon. Capt. Moreton, a brother of the Earl of Ducie, gives a glowing account in England of things out West. He has a large place out in Iowa, and goes in for what is known there as "the pupil dodge." Young men of good family are sent out to him from England, and for a liberal fee the captain instructs them in farming and things generally. On his arrival he astonished the Iowans by starting a butler and dining at 8 p. m. But they have got over these eccentricities, and the captain has become a favorite.

Nursing the Sick.

Quietude is a great thing, of course; but real quietude means the absence of all excitement, and it must be remembered that anything out of the common will tend to excite the mind of a sufferer. Do not, therefore, walk on tiptoe; for this in addition to its usual elaboration of the gait, invariably causes a certain amount of creaking. Speak in low tones, but don't whisper; a whisper will often awake a sleeper who would not be disturbed by ordinary conversation; and never say "Hush!" Let your clothes and foot-covering be of as noiseless and unobtrusive a character as possible, and instead of gliding and tottering about like a rickety ghost, do not hesitate to walk. If you have occasion to say anything in the room, say it so that the patient can hear it if he wishes, and do not let him be aware of your conspiring privately with the others, especially at the door. That door has much to answer for. If it be visible from the bed people open it cautiously, put their heads in and slowly withdraw again. If, as is more frequently the case, it is screened by the bed-curtains, mysterious openings and shuttings are heard, unattended with any apparent ingress or egress, and sotto voce colloquies go on outside. When you enter do so honorably and at once; do not spend five minutes in turning the handle, like a house-breaker, thereby producing a series of irritating little clicks, finally terminating in a big snap, with which the door flies open. If the latch be at all rusty, a handle that is slowly wound back in this way will often stick, and either require to be rattled back into position, or, if left as it is, may start back suddenly, after a time, of its own accord, with a report like a pistol shot! It is always well to recollect that it by no means follows that a sick person is asleep because his eyes are shut; he may be acutely conscious of all that is passing in the room, though unable or unwilling to make any sign; and nothing can be more maddening, under such circumstances, than to have people hush-sh-shing and whispering around and creaking about on the tips of their toes. We have all sympathized in our hearts with poor Leister Dedlock when his tongue was smitten with paralysis with his sister constantly bending over him with clasped hands and murmuring, "He is asleep!" till, goaded to desperation, he makes a sign for his slate and writes. "I am not."

Never stand at the foot of the bed and look at the patient. While talking to him it is better to sit by the side of the bed, and as near the pillow as possible, so that you may converse easily, while your face and body are turned in the same direction as his. By this means you can make all necessary observations of his features without enforcing the arrest of his eyes to your own, which is so embarassing and disagreeable to one lying in bed, and is almost unavoidable when facing him. Keep him in as comfortable position as possible, by all means, but don't be too demonstrative in smoothing the pillows and little offices of that sort. Fidgety attentions will worry him, and do him more harm than downright neglect.—All the Year Round.

Women and Journalism.

A Chicago paper gives the following list of American women who are now connected with the press:

Mrs. L. M. Latham edits a department in the Cedar Rapids Times of Iowa, called "Woman's Bureau;" Mrs. Fannie Folger conducts a Woman's Department in the Manistee Standard of Mich. Mrs. Laura Schofield keeps up a department in the interest of women in the Kokomo Tribune of Indiana, Mrs. Florence M. Adkinson edits "Woman's World" in Indianapolis Sunday Sentinel, and Mrs. Mary Wright Sewall superintends "Woman's Work" in Indianapolis Times. Helen Wilmans presides over "Woman's World" in Chicago Express, and Elizabeth Boynton Harbert rules "Woman's Kingdom" in Chicago Inter-Ocean. Helen M. Cougar edits and publishes Our Herald of LaFayette, Ind., and Mary B. Willard conducts the Union Signal of Chicago, Mrs. E. T. Housh, is editor and proprietor of Woman at Work of Brattleboro, Vt., Emeline B. Wells edits and publishes the Woman's Exponent of Salt Lake City, and Lucy Stone and daughter, Alice Stone Blackwell, do the major portion of the editorial work of the Woman's Journal of Boston. Sallie Joy White is a member of the editorial staff of the Boston Herald, and Lillian Whiting is a member of the editorial corps of the Boston Traveler. Mary Clemmer Ames is as brilliant a correspondent as ever wrote for any paper, and Louise Chandler Moulton's letters to the New York Tribune have never been surpassed by any of their kind. Mrs. Gertrude Garrison is employed to work up feature articles for several New York papers and has no superior in her line. Middy Morgan reports for the "Stock and Cattle" department of the New York Tribune, and Emily B. Charles is associate editor of the Citizen and Soldier of Washington, D. C. Mrs. Duniway publishes the New Northwest in Portland, Oregon, Mrs. Winslow the Alpha of Washington City, and Mrs. Quinby the Ægis of Cincinnati, Ohio, and these are only a few of the many women successfully engaged in Journalism.

Exception Denied.

"I want to appeal this case," said Mary McGuire, as she received a thirty days' sentence in the Jefferson Market Police Court. No attention was paid to her.

"I take an exception," she screamed as the officer's hand fell upon her shoulder.

"On what grounds?" she was asked.

"The officer swore I just came down from the Island on Monday, when I did not arrive here till Tuesday morning."

"Exception denied."

"I'll serve ye with a writ of certiorary," she said defiantly as she was dragged into the corridor.

"Tell me," she asked the officer coaxingly, "tell me why my appeal was slighted and my exception scorned, and I'll be good and go right along with you."

"Because we have business to transact in this 'ere court. These things are only noticed in the higher courts, where they have nothing else to do."

"Oh!"

PECTORIA! Pectoria! Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per Bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria, all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

A TERRIBLE PROPHECY.

The Red Sunset, Cyclones and Earthquakes Foretelling Coming Disaster—How to Meet It.

The recent mysterious appearances following sunset and preceding sunrise have attracted wide attention from students of the skies and the people generally. During the days of recent weeks the sun seems to have been obscured by a thin veil of a dull leaden hue which, as the sun receded toward the horizon, became more luminous, then yellow, then orange, then red; and, as night settled down upon the earth, a dull purple. At first it was thought these appearances were ordinary sunset reflections of light, but it is now pretty certain that they are either the misty substance of the tail of some unseen comet, in which the earth is enveloped, or a surrounding stratum of world dust or very small meteors. Professor Brooks, of the Red House Observatory, Phelps, N. Y., has turned his telescope upon these objects and discovered what he thinks are myriads of telescopic meteors. If it is unorganized world dust, or decomposed vapors, as the Democrat and Chronicle of Rochester, N. Y., remarks: "How is this matter to be disposed of? Will it settle and form a deposit upon the earth, or remain a partial opaque shell about the earth to cut off a portion of the sun's light upon it?"

Whatever the mystery is, there is no denying that some very strange forces are at work in the upper airs. The terrible tornadoes and cyclones which have swept our own country, and the fearful volcanoes and earthquakes which have destroyed so many cities and thousands of people—the tidal waves which mysteriously rise and fall on coasts hitherto unvexed by them—the tremendous activity which is evident in the sun by the constant revelation of enormous spots upon its surface—all indicate unusual energy in the heavenly bodies.

These circumstances recall Professor Grimmer's prophecies that from 1881 to 1887, the passage of the five great planets—Mars, Neptune, Jupiter, Uranus and Saturn—around the sun would produce strange and wonderful phenomena. He says: "The waters of the earth will become more or less poisonous. The air will be foul with noisome odors. Ancient races will disappear from the earth." He attempts to prove his prophecy by the fact that in 1720, when Mars and Saturn made their passage around the sun coincidentally, great destruction and mortality visited all parts of the globe. He also found the same results in previous perehelion passages of the planets, and argues that these circumstances always produce epidemics and destructive diseases which will baffle the skill of the most eminent physicians; that the poor will die by thousands, the weak and intemperate falling first, those whose blood has been impoverished by excess of work or dissipation next and only those who are in comparative vigor shall escape to enjoy the era of renewed activity and prosperity which will follow the period of destruction.

Inasmuch as the entire world seems subject to the sway of the heavenly bodies, no part of the earth, he thinks, can escape scourging. He even predicts that America will lose over ten millions of people; that farmers will be stricken with fear and cease to till the soil; that famine will make human misery more wretched. That hundreds will flee to overcrowded cities for aid in vain. That sudden changes in ocean currents, temperature and surroundings will entirely transform the face of nature and climate of countries: that the air will be so foul with malaria and other noxious gases; that those who survive will be troubled with disorders of the digestive organs. That many who escape other ills will bloat with dropsy and suddenly pass away, while others will grow thin and drag out a miserable existence in indescribable agony for weeks. Neuralgia pains in different parts of the body will torment them. They will easily tire and become despondent. A faint, hot feeling will be succeeded by chilly sensations, while hallucinations and dread of impending ill will paralyze all effort. "The birds in the air, the beasts of the field and even the fish of the sea will become diseased, poisoning the air and poisoning the waters of the globe." We are told on the other hand that those who shall pass through the period of trial will have larger enjoyment of life and health, The earth will yield more abundantly than ever before. The animal kingdom will be more prolific and life prolonged very materially. This prolongation of life will be owing to the healthy, electric and magnetic influences that will pervade the atmosphere. It would perhaps seem that the present redness of the sun, and the presence of a belt or veil of cosmic matter, justified in a measure, the prediction of Professor Grimmer, but disturbing as his prediction may be we are told for our comfort that the strong and pure blooded need have little to fear in these calamities, that those who are delicate or indisposed should adopt means to keep the system well supported and the blood pure and that the most philosophical and effective method of accomplishing this is to keep the kidneys and liver in good condition. From the testimonials of such men as Dr. Dio Lewis and Professor R. A. Gunn, M.D., Dean of the United States Medical College, New York, and thousands of influential non-professional people, it seems almost certain that for this purpose there is no preparation known to science equal to Warner's Safe Cure. This medicine has acquired the finest reputation of any preparation that was ever put upon the market. It is a radical blood purifier, which soothes and heals all inflamed organs, strengthens the nervous system, washes out all evidences of decay, regulates digestion, prevents malassimilation of food in a philosophical and rational manner, fortifies the system against climatic changes and malarial influences and the destructive agencies which seem to be so abundant in these "evil days."

It is not our purpose to dispute the correctness of Professor Grimmer's prophecies. As we have said, the marked disturbances of the past few years would seem to give a semblance of verification of his theory. It is certain, as above stated, that we are passing through what may be regarded as a crucial period and it is the part of wise men not to ignore, but to learn to fortify themselves against the possibility of being overcome by these evils. It is a duty which each man owes to himself, and his fellows, to mitigate as much as possible the suffering of humanity, and in no way better can he accomplish this purpose than to see to it that he, himself, is fortified by the best known preparation in the strongest possible manner, and that he exert the influence of his own example upon his fellows to the end that they, too, may share with him immunity from the destructive influences which seek his ruin.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

Sojourner Truth's real name was Isabella Hardenburg.

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere

General Martin, who has just been elected mayor of Boston, was nothing but a truck-driver less than thirty years ago.

There are flaws in diamonds, flies in amber, and faults in every man, Perfection is attained only by the Triangle Dyes. Their colors are truly beautiful.

Charles Kingsley was very fond of cats: his stable was never without a white cat, or his house without a black or tabby.

Important

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

"A. P." 157

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION

Furnishes indemnity against loss of time by sickness or accident at comparatively low rates. For particulars enclose stamp to the secretary, Toronto, Ont

AGENTS WANTED

MATTHEWS BROS. & CO., 93 YONGE Street, Toronto. Mail prepaid, assorted packages of beautiful Christmas and New Year Cards.

25 cards, assorted, mostly small,	$	25
25 cards, assorted, medium,		50
25 cards, assorted, larger,		1.00
25 cards, assorted, fine,		2.00

No two cards alike. Cash to be sent with order.

$1 FOR WESTERN ADVERTISER, LONDON, from now to end of 1884. Magnificent premium, "BOOK OF PORTRAITS," only 10c. extra—contains following chromo-lithographs, in five colors: Queen Victoria; the new Governor-General (Marquis of Lansdowne); Rt-Hon. W. E. Gladstone; Hon. E. Blake; Sir John A. Macdonald; Hon. O. Mowat; Hon. Alex Mackenzie; Chester A. Arthur, President U. S. Biographical sketch of each. Agents wanted. Address—ADVERTISER PRINTING CO., London, Ont.

THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured by

THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET TORONTO.

F. E. DIXON & CO.
Manufacturers of Star Rivet
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto.

Large double Driving Belts a specialty. Se for Price Lists and Discounts.

$100,000 TO LOAN

on first-class farm property, at lowest rates. Farmers will save money by applying by mail direct to me.

E. E. KNOTT,
48 Adelaide St, East, Toronto.

ELM CITY
HARNESS OIL.
BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.

Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for

F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONT.
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE DOMINION

The Queen's
LAUNDRY BAR
ASK FOR IT, AND TAKE NO OTHER.
Beware of Imitations.
TRADE MARK. Made by The Albert Toilet Soap Co.

BEST BOILER PLATE.

For sale low, the following sizes suitable for Boilers, Safes, Flumes, Tanks, &c., &c., 5-16 inch thick. 6x3, 8x3, 9x3, 10x3, 6x2½, 7x2½, 8x2½, 9x2½.

SEND FOR PRICES

Copland & McLaren,
Corner Wellington & Grey Nun Sts.,
Montreal.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' Ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black Silks, that is our dollar silk, will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50 silk, only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50 blanket for 4; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $1.75 net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL DRY goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures; all goods sold for cash only. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS—or a ten cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, Shirtings, grey flannels, table Napkins, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and colored, cashmere, tweeds, cloakings, A. B FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.
PERCHERON HORSES
WORTH $2,500,000.00
Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,
35 miles West of Chicago on C. & N.-W. Ry.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue NO. 20.

FOR THE
Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

Since Alexander H. Stephens' death, Mr. Evarts is the smallest man of political renown. He has eleven children, some of them married, and makes a hundred thousand dollars a year in his law practice.

BEAVER S. LINE
WEEKLY BETWEEN
Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
Sam. Osborne & Co., 40 Yonge street Toronto.

Dominion Line of Steamships.

Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada' Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months.

Ontario,	Dec. 27	Sarnia,	Jan. 17.
Toronto,	Jan. 3.	Montreal,	Jan. 24.
Dominion,	Jan. 10.	Oregon,	Jan. 31.

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $108, $117, $144, according to steamer and berth. Intermediate, $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent, or local agents of the Company, or to

DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
OF THE
WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among LARGEST AND FASTEST of Ocean Steamers They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety, Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather, The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect: and every provision, has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto

FUN AND MYSTERY

ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS

Have you seen it? The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks, Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards:" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards; the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music, 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.

ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail postpaid. Two packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

DR HOFFMAN'S GERMAN BITTERS

50c. | A GENUINE GERMAN DYSPEPSIA CURE. | 50c.

No injurious mineral, no poison, no irritating acid.

Acts on a different principle from other Bitters.

Possesses tonic aperient and Digestive properties, and a principle that soothes the inflamed membranes, opens up the absorbing vessels of the stomach and Liver, cures Dyspepsia, Catarrh of the Stomach, Liver Complaint, Constipation, &c.

Wm. Goldsmith, of Collingwood Ont., suffered for years with the worst form of Dyspepsia; tried physicians and every remedy advertised without benefit. One bottle of Hoffman's German Bitters cured him.

Wholesale by Lyman Brothers, and Northrop & Lyman, Toronto.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE $1.00 DOLLAR.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, . . . $7.00 | Half Year, . . . $3.50

Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to THE WEEKLY GLOBE, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),
TORONTO.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion.

The Paper for the Farmer.

The Great Dollar Paper.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

MARKDALE

Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23. 1882. 80-1y

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NORTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.			Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

CONVERTING THE HEATHEN

Moody and Sankey's Success in England's Great Metropolis.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—Moody and Sankey concluded their two weeks' mission at Stepney to-day. Five immense meetings were held in their hall, and overflow meetings conducted in Stepney church and Beaumont hall. The interest excited by the mission at Stepney is remarkable, as there it has reached a lower class of the population than heretofore. Fervent and crowded inquiry meetings have been held, and thousands of people have been converted. The attendance at the churches in Stepney has been largely increased. The mission services have been partially suspended until after the holidays, and will be resumed at Clapham, whither the iron mission hall will in the meantime be removed. From Chapham the evangelists will go to Stratford. They have engagements up to July.—Worald.

To the Public.

I hereby return thanks to my numerous customers for their liberal patronage during the year in which I have been in the saw mill business, and would respectfully solicit a continuance of the same. Having now my mill fitted up in first class condition, I am in a position to give my customers the best satisfaction in lumber and shingle sawing. Special attention to bill stuff. The highest market price paid for 50,000 Hemlock, Basswood, Pine and all kinds of hard wood logs. Hoping by strict attention to business and fair dealing to merit a continuance of your patronage.

I am, your respectfully,

JAS. A. DUNCAN.

Bell Brook Mill, Dec. 10,' 83.

Monthly Fairs.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.

Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.

Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.

Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.

Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known. Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat ar acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

OUR old townsman, Mr. Alex. Speers, is at present on a visit from Manitoba, his present home. He has developed into a full-blown farmer, at Griswold, about twenty-five miles west of Brandon, and is in ecstacies with the country and his success as a farmer. His farm is on the C. P. R., within a mile of the station, and this last season he has raised 2700 bushels of wheat, and about 2000 bushels of oats, without a frozen grain, besides roots &c. Before coming down he sold 1800 bushels of wheat at 80c. He says farming in Manitoba pays.—Times.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

John R. Vert, Hamilton, says: "McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia and Indigestion is cheap at fifty times the price asked for it. I am a commercial man, and travel continually, and would no more think of leaving home without a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure in my valise than I would of leaving my team at home and going on foot." Free trial bottle at Hill Bros. general store. Regular size, fifty cents and one dollar.

HEAVY FAILURE.—We are sorry this week to have to announce the failure of Mr. James Sutherland. Mr. Sutherland has for nearly thirty years been engaged in the produce trade here. At times his business in grain extended to other points, he having agencies at Meaford, Chatsworth and Wiarton. The cause of Mr. Sutherland's failure, we learn, was his late late heavy investments in ties on the Manitoulin Island and elsewhere, and his large vessel interest. Mr. Sutherland's misfortune is keenly felt by the town and the farming community, as he was looked on as the mainstay of the maket here. We have heard many expressions of regret from farmers, and they all hope soon to see him in shape again to do business.—O. S. Advertier.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITURE

FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiting.

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made to Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kept in stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at our Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in exchange for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,
Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

— IN —

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c.

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

AT

Bulmers Photograph Gallery,

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 17. MARKDALE, ONT., JAN. 3, 1884. No. 173

The Markdale Standard

Is issued every Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 60	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequents insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

—JOB PRINTING.—

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon Priceville,
Graduate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Aylesth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital. N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons.O. 164

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and at Marshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-71

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL.B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS. CONVEYANCES, &c. &c,
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
☞Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown.

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES. &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE.
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

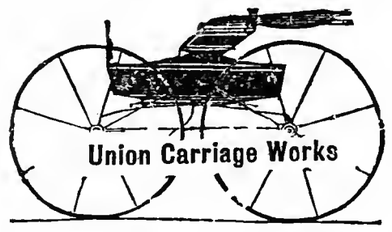
COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.



GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED, from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time
consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.
139-3m

MARKDALE HOUSE,
MARKDALE, - - ONT.
MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

THOS. MATHEWS,
HarnesS EstablishmenT
MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.

EUCENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made eqtensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND
Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

Wm. Lucas & Co.,
BANKERS,
Money Loaned
IN large or small amounts, at all times, on good endorsed notes, or on collateral security.

INTEREST AT 6 PER CENT.
Allowed on Savings Deposits.

☞Drafts issued and Collections made on points, at lowest rates.
W.M. LUCAS,
Manager.
September 23, 1880. 2-ly

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS,
SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

District Dashes.

Durham has been presented with a market site by Mr. Jas. Edge.

W. H. Hunter, and lady, of Orangeville will take a trip to Florida shortly.

The Grey Review is putting on airs and appeared last week in a tony color.

Mr. R. J. Doyle of Owen Sound, has sold his saw-mill in Dundalk, to Mr. James Haig.

The Owen Sound Advertiser is twenty-one years of age, and the proprietor is a single man, and this is leap-year.

Mr. Milne, of Queen's College Kingston, occupied the pulpit in the Presbyterian church Dundalk last Sunday.

The Flesherton Advance has a creed discussion on hand. A very unsatisfactory and unprofitable subject to discuss.

Wiarton Corporation proposes to establish a public cemetery, and a vote is to be taken on Jan. 7th for raising $1200 to pay for it.

The Shelburne papers vow vengeance on a disorderly squad of yahoos in that village who destroy the peace and order of public meetings. Go for them.

The Dundalk Herald says Charles McConnell shot a deer last week. If he was looked after it might be made a dear shot for him. The deer-shooting season was out on the 15th Dec.

Hon. Adam Crooks has been adjudged a lunatic by the chancery court, and a commission composed of R. H. Bethune, Major R. J. Evans and G. D. Dawson appointed to look after his estate.

Mr. E. Wragge, late manager of the T. G. & B. railway, was the recipient of an address together with valuable presents for himself and lady by the employers of the above road on the 31st Dec., 1883.

The attempt to form a Publishers Union in the county of Grey has failed owing to about one-half of the Publishers failing to respond. Shame on such men. They deserve to starve as they have been doing heretofore.—Bruce Herald.

The Durham Chronicle is death on "the red flag" or dry goods auction sales, and advises the public to make their purchases from, and patronize those doing a legitimate business resident in their midst. Hear, hear, we endorse the sentiment.

COLLINGWOOD, Dec. 18.—Malcolm Duffey, a farmer, after purchasing a load of lumber yesterday started on his way home. When near Nottawa his horses started at something, overturned the load, ditched the man. Mr. Duffey did not return home last night, and the family did not suspect what had happened. On going out of the house this morning they discovered the horses in the yard with part of their harness on. This aroused their suspicion that some thing had happned and they at once started for Nottawa. When part of the road had been travelled they came up to where the the waggon and lumber lay in the ditch, and on the other side found their brother lying in the gutter dead. Wheather the man was killed by being thrown from the load or perished by cold it is as yet impossible to say.

Chatsworth.

From our own correspondent.

Mr. McArthur was elected school trustee.

Sleighing is good yet business is very quiet.

J. W. Elliott removed into his shop and dwelling last week.

A. Morrow's shooting match on Christmas was a success.

A dramatic club has been organized and is progressing favorably.

The Methodist S. S. Christmas tree entertainment on Christmas eve was a success.

Mr. John McKinnon sold his hotel to Mr. Loyd, of Owen Sound, who takes possession this week.

A. Campbell, of the Cariboo House, treated his many friends to an oyster supper on New Years eve, and Tuck & McLeod of the Chatsworth House, did likewise.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

For the first time in the history of our village, considerable interest was manifested in the nominations for police trustees. No less than fifteen nominations were received by the returning officer. Most of them declined, but four of them: Messrs. T. Hanbury, G. R. Middleton, A. G. Hunter, and F. F. Teeple decided to run. Hence we shall have the excitement of an election.

Proton township nominations were held on Monday last at Hopeville, the successful candidate of last year Thos. Femnell, has it is said arranged matters so that in case of his election he will not be required to withdraw as he did after his election last year. He is out this year in opposition to J. J. Middleton. There is no doubt as to the result, Middleton is certain to take the Reeveship. For Deputy Reeve there are three in the field: Mr. J. Agnew, the Deputy of last year, Mr. Samuel Rogers, of Cedarville, a member of last years council, and the ambitious John Abbott. For councillors Mr. Robt, Black, Geo. Johnston and Patrick Shaw were nominated. There being no other nominations those were declared elected. The last two are new men.

Priceville.

From a correspondent.

The Sabbath School entertainment came off Thursday, 27th inst. Tea was served in Mr. Reiley's hall, the intellectual part of the entertainment was conducted in the Presbyterian church. Mr. Brander was chosen chairman and excellent order was preserved throughout the evening. Mr. Charles Ghent, Miss Ghent, and Miss E. Wright furnished instrumental music, and Miss Nichol and the S. S. children vocal music. A reading by Mr. M. Black, recitations and speeches entertained and instructed the audience. The speech of the evening was delivered by Rev. Mr. Wilson, of Markdale. The leading feature was the address and presentation to Mr. John Irwin, for many years superintendant of the Sabbath school. The address was read by Rev. Mr. McLeod. The presentation consisted of a Bible and a purse, value in all $57.40. Votes of thanks were given to the chairman, Mr. Reiley for the use of the hall, Mrs. Tuck for the use of the organ, and the various speakers, singers, and players, after which the meeting closed about 10 o'clock. The address is as follows:

To Mr. John Irwin, S. S. Superintendent,

DEAR SIR—We learn with regret that you are soon to leave this village and neighborhood. Permit us, before your departure, to present you with this Holy Bible as a token of our love and regard for you as a member of this community, and of our appreciation of your faithful and abundant work and labor of love in connection with the Church, the Sabbath school and the Book and Tract Society. We have longe observed your persevering efforts in promoting the happiness and well-being of all those with whom you come in contact, and the efforts have always been entered in such an unasuming humble and disinterested manner as to win the heart of all men. We beg of you also to accept of this purse. In conclusion we wish you and your partner in life and your children God speed. May the God whom you served while you were in our midst be your guide through life your shield and your exceeding great reward. On behalf of the subscribers to this presentation.

D. MCLEOD.

Hanlan and Stevenson.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 29.—Hanlan lately offered $1,000 to any man on the coast who would outrow him Stevenson accepted, and Haulan now asks the latter to release him from the engagement, but won't say why.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 30.—Hanlan has offered to allow Stevenson $1,000 expenses to go east and row at Point of Pines, which is [illegible] bigger to carry out. Stevenson has accepted.

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER VI.—CONTINUED.

"I see. Then you do not sympathize with a criminal unless he is good-looking, nicely dressed, and in love with a lady of beauty and refinement?"

'Oh, Mr. Rayner," I cried, exasperated at having my words misconstructed in this mischievous manner, "you know I don't sympathize with criminals at all! But Robin Hood and Jack Sheppard lived in different ages, when people were not so enlightened as they are now; and, besides," said I, brightening in triumph as a new idea flashed across me, "I don't know what the real Robin and Jack did; but the Robin Hood and Jack Sheppard of the novels and poems that I can't help liking and admiring robbed only rich people who could afford to lose some of their ill-gotten wealth."

"But all wealth is not ill-gotten," interposed Mr. Rayner mildly.

"It was then," I went on hastily—"at least generally. And Robin Hood didn't rob the good rich people, only the bad ones; and most of his spoil he distributed among the poor, you know," I finished triumphantly.

"It won't do, Miss Christie; I must destroy your edifice of argument at a blow," he said, shaking his head mournfully. "I happen to know something about this Lord Dalston whose house was broken into; and he is a very bad rich person indeed, much more so than the poor old abbots whom your favorite Robin Hood treated so roughly. He ill-treated his mother, stole and squandered his sisters' fortunes, neglected his wife, and tried to shut her up in the lunatic asylum, knocked out in a passion the left eye of one of his own grooms, had embezzled money before he was twenty-one, and now owes heavy debts to half the big tradesmen in London. So that he is something like a thief. Now, if you were to find out that the man who had the chief hand—for, of course, there were dozens at work over it—in planning the robbery of the wicked rich man's property was young, good-looking, well dressed, a large subscriber to charities, and in love with a pretty lady-like girl, you ought, if you were logical, to admire him as much as you do Robin Hood, and more than you do Jack Sheppard."

"Oh, Mr. Rayner," said I, joining in his laughter, "how absurd! But it is too bad of you to make fun of my logic. I can't put it properly; but what I mean is this. In those days the laws were unjust, so that even good men were forced into defiance of them; but now that the laws are really, upon the whole, just, it is only wicked people who disobey them."

"Then you don't like wicked people, Miss Christie?"

'Oh, Mr. Rayner, of course not!" said I, aghast at such a question, which he asked quite seriously.

"Ah, you must know some before you decide too hastily that you don't like them!" said he.

"Know some wicked people, Mr. Rayner?" I gasped.

He nodded gravely; and then I saw that he was amusing himself with my horror-struck expression.

"You won't like all of them, any more than you shall be all the good people you know. But you will find those you do like best the good people hollow."

"Indeed I am sure I shouldn't like them at all. I would not speak to a wicked person if I could help it."

"But you can't. You won't be able to tell them from good ones, except, as I said before, that they are nicer; and by the time you find out that they are wicked you will like them too much to go back."

It was too bad of Mr. Rayner to tease me like this; but, though I saw he was enjoying my indignation, I could not help getting indignant.

"You are quite mistaken in me indeed," I said, trying to keep down my annoyance. "I can prove it to you by something that happened to me not very long ago. I knew a person against whom I had heard nothing, who always seemed to me to look good-natured and simple. And then I found out that he was really a most wicked man; and when I saw him after that his very face seemed changed to me, to look evil and cunning; and the sight of him made me shrink."

I was thinking of Tom Parkes, and the change I had seen in him that morning. Mr. Rayner looked at me keenly as I said this; but I was not afraid of him finding out whom I meant in such a cautious statement.

"And what would you do if, in the course of your career as governess, you found yourself in a family whose morals you could not approve? Would you give them lectures on the error of their ways and try to convert them all round, Miss Christie?"

"Oh, no, I couldn't do that!" said I hastily. "If I found myself among very wicked people, I should just run away back to my uncle's house, where my mother lives, and on the first opportunity, without saying anything to any one till I was gone, and without even writing to say I was coming, I set my letter should be intercepted. I should be so horrible afraid of them."

"Well, child, I hope you will never have to do anything so desperate as that; but the profession of teaching has its dangers for a beautiful woman," he said gravely.

The last words gave a shock to me. I had never heard them applied to me before, and for a moment I was without an answer. He had been sitting on my seat, and I had been standing with my back against a young oak-tree, a few feet from him and nearer to the pond. He got up and came toward me, when a shrill little cry as from out of the ground caused him to start. It was the only sound that ever drew forth such a display of ordinary human weakness from self-possessed Mr. Rayner. It came from the lips of his little baby daughter Mona, who, ragged, dirty, and withered-looking as usual, had walked or crawled through the mud and rushes till she had silently taken her place in the long grass a little way from us, and who now, seeing her father approach, had given vent to her extraordinary dislike of him in her usual undutiful manner.

For one moment I saw in the dusk a look pass over Mr. Rayner's face which made me catch my breath; it reminded me instantly of his tone on that Sunday night when he had caught Sarah in the garden; and, quickly as it passed and gave place to a light laugh, it had frightened me and made me long to escape. Mona was an excuse.

"Oh, you naughty little girl to be out so late at night—and without a hat! Sarah must have forgotten you. Come—I must take you in now. Be a good girl and come with me."

Mona had somehow come to regard me with less animosity than she did most of the household. So she let me take her in my arms without much opposition, and gave only one more yell when her father, while wishing me good night, shook hands with me and accidentally touched her dirty little shoe. I took her into the house and gave her to Sarah in the hall; then I went into the schoolroom to replace the dissipated volume of Guizot that had been out all night among its more sober brethren, and then, moved by some spring of vanity, took my candle to the mantlepiece and looked at myself in the glass above it.

I suppose no girl can hear herself called a beautiful woman for the first time, no matter by whom, without a slight thrill of gratification. To be called pretty, I suppose, at some time or other, falls to the lot of most girls; but the other term implies a higher measure of attractiveness, and I certainly was not insensible to the pleasure of hearing it applied to me. I had lived such a quiet life with my mother, and had had so few acquaintances, that I had never known flattery of any kind. The thought that flashed through my mind as I looked at my dark eyes, brighter than usual, and at my cheeks, flushed with gratified vanity, was—"Does Mr. Lawrence Reade think me—beautiful?"

I was too much absorbed in my vain contemplation of myself, and in the foolish thoughts to which it gave rise, to notice that I was not alone in the room. Suddenly I was startled, as I deserved to be, by a harsh ironical voice breaking in upon the silence of the room,

"Yes, it's a pretty face enough now, and you do right to set store by it, for it won't last pretty long—not long; in a few years it will be all lines and wrinkles, and not worth looking at; and you'll turn away in disgust from the glass, thinking of how you used to look, and how the men used to look at you—the fools!"

I had turned, and was looking at Sarah's hard, cruel face as she stood, with Mona still in her arms, her eyes flashing scornfully on me as she hissed out the spiteful words. I felt ashamed of my vanity, though, after all, it seemed harmless enough; and I felt sorry for her, for she spoke so bitterly that I was sure she must be thinking of the changes a few years of anxiety and hard work had wrought in herself; so I said gently—

"I suppose we women all think more than we ought about our looks sometimes, Sarah; but, after all, they are a very important matter to every woman, and make a great deal of difference to her life. You know you must be glad not to be ugly, Sarah."

I own this was a little bit of innocent flattery, for I did think her very ugly—and I thought I had never seen her look so hideous as she did as she stood there glaring at me—but I was anxious to soothe her at all hazards, and I was thankful to see that the bait took.

"Handsome is that handsome does," she said less viciously; and, with a toss of her head she left the room.

CHAPTER VII.

Very soon after Sarah's somewhat harsh and uncalled-for reproof of my vanity, I began to suffer a punishment for it. The country air, which had brought unwonted roses to my cheeks while the weather was fine and dry, affected me very differently when, in the first days of September, the rain fell daily in a steady, continuous downpour that soon swelled the river and turned part of the marsh from a swamp into a stagnant unwholesome lake. The air round the house seemed never to be free from mist; the pond overflowed and covered the bricks that had formed the footstool of my nest; the lower part of the garden that touched the marsh was a bog; the moss grew greener and thicker on the pillars of the portico, the untrimmed ivy that clung round the house and made it so beautiful dripped all day long, and bright green stains grew broader and broader down the side of that wing of the house where Mr. and Mrs. Rayner's room was.

I often wondered why they slept there. I knew by the doors and windows that the ground floor of that wing contained two rooms, a large and a small one. My own was in the same wing, but on the storey above; and over mine was a turret that looked out high above the trees, but which was not used, so far as I knew. Haidee slept on the ground-floor in a cot in the dressing-room next to her parents' bedroom, I knew, while the nursery and servants' rooms and several spare-rooms were on the upper story besides my own. Why did not Mr. and Mrs. Rayner make one of these their own, and lift themselves out of the reeking damp which must be poisonous to delicate Mrs. Rayner? Even I, who slept in the upper storey, soon began to lose my color and my appetite, and to feel at first languid, and then really ill. I showed the change more quickly than any one, being less used to the place; but little fragile Haidee soon followed suit, and grew more wan and listless than ever, until the lustre of her large blue eyes and the unhealthy flush that began to burn in her thin little cheeks frightened me and drew me to the child as her strange reserve had prevented my being drawn before. She answered to the change in my manner as sensitive children do, and one day, putting her little dry hand in mine, she said—

"You are getting thin and white too, like mamma and me. We'll all go away and be angels together, Miss Christie, now you have begun to love me."

I burst into tears; I had begun to love the fairy-like little creature long before, if she had only known it. Now I took her up in my arms and rested her flaxen head on my breast, and she said her lessons there that day. And after that, without any more explanations or comment, the sympathy between the child and me was perfect.

But as, on the one hand, the little one's friendship was a great solace to me, so, on the other, it brought me fresh trouble. For in Mrs. Rayner's indifferent eyes I could see now a dull flame of jealousy whenever Haidee put her languid little head upon my knee, or came up and said, "Tell me a story, Miss Christie—about fairies and good Prince Carmel." I began from merely pitying, almost to dislike Mrs. Rayner. Why, if she was so fond of Haidee, did she not come into the schoolroom to see her, or take her out during her play-hours, instead of leaving her the whole day with me, without coming to see her until bedtime, when the child was put to bed in the room next to hers, while she herself went into the drawing-room? It was unreasonable to expect to keep the child's undivided love like that; and yet at meals, when we all met together, she seemed to look at Haidee with strained wistful eyes, as if she loved the child, yet dared not show it. But what was there to prevent her, except the shroud of reserve she seemed to have wrapped round herself?

The weather had been so bad that for two Sundays we had not been able to go to church at all, for which I was very sorry, more sorry than I can tell; one misses church dreadfully in the country. So we knew nothing of what was going on in the parish for two whole weeks. We did not have to wait until the church-porch gathering on the following Sunday, though; for on the second day after the weather had at last grown fine again, when we were all in the drawing-room reading the morning papers over our coffee, as we always did after our early dinner, we heard the sound of a horse's hoofs coming down the drive. Mr. Rayner threw open the window and stepped out on to the broad space of gravel before the front of the house.

"Hallo, Laurence, you are as welcome as the dove was to the ark! Come in, come in; the ladies will make even more of you than usual. We have had no visitors lately, but an occasional mermaid came up the river from the sea and overflowed into our garden."

"Can't come in, thanks, Mr. Rayner—I'm too much splashed; the roads are awful still. I've only come with a note from Mrs. Manners to Mrs. Rayner."

"Nonsense! Come in, mud and all."

So he tied up his horse and came in.

Mrs. Manners was the clergyman's wife, and generally sent her notes by one of her half-dozen boys; and I confess I thought, when I head what a flimsy sort of an errand had brought Mr. Reade, that perhaps—that perhaps some other silly motive had helped to bring him too. But my only half-acknowledged fancy was disappointed. Not only did Mr. Reade devote all his conversation to Mr. and Mrs. Rayner, with an occasional word to Haidee, but, when I made a remark, he did not even look at me. I confess I was piqued; I certainly did not want Mr. Reade to look at me or speak to me, but surely common courtesy, especially to a dependant, demanded that he should not ignore my presence altogether. So I thought I would take a small and impotent revenge by ignoring his, and, when Haidee got up and slipped out of the window to look at Mr. Reade's horse, I followed her. She was not a bit afraid of him, but ran into the house for some sugar, and then, flattening out her small hand with a piece on it, fed him, and talked to him in a language which he seemed to understand, though I could not.

"Would you like to give him a piece, Miss Christie?" she asked.

But I would not have bestowed such an attention on a horse of Mr. Reade's for worlds; and leaving the child and her four-footed friend to continue their conversation, I walked away to gather some flowers for the tea-table, as it was the day for renewing them.

I had my hands full by the time I heard the voices of the gentlemen at the window and the grinding of soft gravel under the horse's hoofs as Mr. Reade mounted him. I was near the bottom of the drive, pulling off small branches of copper beech to put among the flowers, when I heard Mr. Reade ride by behind me. I did not even look round until he called out, "Good afternoon, Miss Christie;" and then I just turned my head over my shoulder, and said stiffly "Good afternoon," and went on with my task. He had half pulled up his horse. I dare say he thought I wanted to talk to him. I was not going to let him make such an absurd mistake as that. So he rode on to the gate, and then he stopped, and presently I heard him utter impatient ejaculations, and I looked and saw that he was fumbling with his whip at the fastening of the gate.

"How stupid he is not to get off and open it with his fingers!" I thought contemptuously. "It is quite an easy fastening too. I believe I could do it on horseback directly."

However, he still continued to make ineffectual efforts to raise the heavy latch, but each time the restive horse swerved or the whip slipped, until I stood watching the struggle intently, and grew quite excited and half inclined to call out to him "Now!" when the horse stood still for a moment. It seemed to me that he deliberately missed all the best opportunities, and I was frowning with impatience, when he suddenly looked up and his eyes met mine. There was nothing for it then but in common civility to go and open the gate for him myself; so I walked up the drive very reluctantly and opened it wide without a smile.

"Thank you, thank you—so much obliged to you! I wouldn't have given you so much trouble for worlds, if only this brute would stand still!"

"Pray don't mention it. It is no trouble at all," I said icily, occupied in keeping my armful of flowers together.

And he raised his hat and rode off at a walking pace, while I shut the gate and turned to go down the drive again. I had such a curiously hurt and disappointed feeling—I could not tell why; but I supposed that, being a dependent, I was naturally very sensitive, and it was surely a slight on Mr. Reade's part not even to speak to me when we were all in the drawing-room.

"I dare say he wouldn't have let me open the gate for him if I hadn't been a governess," I thought as a lump came into my throat. "I wish I hadn't—oh, I wish I hadn't! I wish I had let him get off his horse, or jump over it, or anything rather than let me play groom for him."

And the flowers I was looking at began to grow misty, when again I heard hoofs behind me and the latch of the gate go, and, glancing round, I saw Mr. Reade on horseback inside the gate. He had opened it without any difficulty this time. He seemed to look a little embarrassed, "ashamed of his own clumsiness the first time," I thought severely; and, jumping off his horse, he led him towards me, saying—

"I must apologise for returning so soon, but I found I have lost a stone from my ring, and I think it must have dropped out while I was fumbling at the gate just now. It is much easier to open from the outside."

"Do you think so? We don't find any difference," I said simply.

He gave me a quick, inquisitive glance and a half smile, as if to see what I meant, and then, finding that I returned his look quite gravely, he turned back to the gate and began searching about in the gravel. Politeness obliged me to help him. He fastened his horse's rein round the gate-post and showed me the ring, and I saw the hole where there was a stone missing. Suddenly it flashed through my mind that, while we stood under the shed on that Sunday in the rain, I had noticed the very same hole in the very same ring, and I was just going to tell him that it was of no use for him to look, for he had lost the stone much longer than he fancied, when another thought, which brought the color swiftly to my face and made my lips quiver and my heart beat faster, flashed into my mind and stopped me. And the thought was that Mr. Reade must know how long ago he had lost that stone, at least as well as I did. And from that moment a spirit of daring mischief came into me—I don't know how—and I would not condescend to pretend to look about any longer; but I patted the horse's neck and glanced every now and then at his master, and though how foolish he looked hunting about so carefully for what he knew he should not find. Then he looked up, red with stooping, and caught me smiling, and he had to bite his lips in order not to smile himself as he walked up to me.

"I can't find it. It isn't of any consequence; I shan't look any longer," he said.

"Oh, but it would be such a pity to lose such a large stone, Mr. Reade!" I said boldly. "I'll tell the gardener to hunt for it, and Sam the boy, and——"

"No, no—indeed it doesn't matter."

"And Jane the kitchen maid. She has sharp eyes; she might spend an hour or two hunting," I murmured confidentially, while he protested.

And I think he began to suspect my good faith; and we both got into such a giggling excited state that it was very difficult to go on talking, and I was glad when some of my flowers fell down and Mr. Reade had to pick them up, and we had time to gain a little of our lost composure.

"You are fond of flowers, Miss Christie?"

"Oh, yes! But the best of them are over now; the rain has spoiled them all."

"The rain spoils a good many things here," he said with sudden gravity. "You don't look nearly so well as you did a fortnight ago, Miss Christie, and I expect it is the damp of this place. You might as well live in a cave, you know, as in that house in a rainy season," he added, dropping his voice. "Don't you find yourself that your health is affected by it?"

I hesitated.

"It is damp, I know; but it isn't half so bad for me, who am strong, as it is for Mrs. Rayner or little Haidee."

"But they can't help themselves, poor things, while it lies in your own power whether you will put up with it or not."

"You mean that I ought to go away?"

"No, no, I don't mean that," said he hastily.

"But that is what you advised me to do," said I looking up, surprised.

'Did I? Ah, yes? But, now that you have grown attached to—to—the place, and—and Mrs. Rayner——"

"No, indeed, I haven't," I interrupted. "I don't like her at all."

"Well, to Haidee, or the baby. You must have grown attached to something or to somebody, or you wouldn't talk as if you didn't want to leave the place," he said, with such abrupt earnestness as to be almost rude.

"I like the house, in spite of the damp, and I love the garden even when it is a swamp, and I like Haidee, and Jane the kitchen-maid, and Mr. Rayner," I said quietly.

With nervous fingers Mr. Reade began playing with his horse's bridle.

"You like Mr. Rayner, you say? Then I suppose our sympathies must be as far apart as the poles. For he seems to me the most intolerable snob that ever existed, and so selfish and heartless as to be almost outside the pale of humanity."

This tirade amazed me; but it also made me angry. I could not let him abuse a person whom I liked, and who had been consistently kind to me, without protest.

"You surely cannot judge him so well as I, a member of the household," said I coolly. "Whether he is a snob or not I cannot tell, because I don't quite know what it means. But I do know that he is kind to his wife, and his children, and servants, and dependents, and——"

"Kind to his wife, do you say? I should not call it kindness to shut up my wife in the darkest, dampest corner of a dark, damp house, until she is as spiritless and silent as a spectre, and then invent absurd lies to account for the very natural change in her looks and spirits."

"What do you mean? What lies?"

"The stories he told you about her when you first came. He would never have tried them on any one but an unsuspecting girl, and of course he never thought you would repeat them to me."

"I wish I hadn't!" said I indignantly. "You have known Mr. and Mrs. Rayner only during the three years they have lived here. What proof have you that the things he told me were not true?"

"No proof, Miss Christie, but a man's common sense," said he excitedly—"no more proof than of another fact of which I am equally certain, that he is as surely killing his wife as if he were making her drink poison."

"How dare you say such a thing?" I cried. "You have no right to utter it even if you think it. You are giving way to the most cruel prejudice against a man whose only fault is that he cannot contentedly lead the dull life his neighbors do. I suppose you think, like the villagers, that to play the violin is an impious action, and that it is a shocking thing for him to go to races."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Fishery Bounty of 1883 has been completely distributed by the Department of Marine and Fisheries on the basis already announced, and the department have under consideration the bounty of 1884 amounting to $150,000.

ERRORS OF THE PRESS.

How a Newspaper Forman Enlightened the Professor.

Professor Hindersey, has given up idea of publishing a reform newspaper has returned to the college, where he resume for a time, the work of teaching language to young men who contemp journalism. The professor's newspaper perience was not pleasant and he only iss one edition of the Weekly Iliad. He t the proof sheets, after his elaborate art had been set up, and read them carefu He did not demand a "revise," and course the foreman did not insist upon extra precaution. When the paper c out, the professor discovered with ho that he had been made to use many pressions not at all consistent with gramm In a rage he called the foreman.

"Look here!" he exclaimed. "You m me say, 'have took.' and 'had saw.' marked all of those errors and told yo see that they were corrected."

The foreman looked at the paper fo moment and replied:

"It is enough to make a man swear."

"It is enough to make an angel swea snorted the professor.

"I'd sue 'em," mused the foreman, m concerned and deeply grieved.

"Sue whom?"

"The parties that sold you the press.

"What have they to do with it?"

"Why, sir, they sold you an incorr press. No matter how your paper is set its correctness depends on the way the p makes the impression. You might go al for a year and not have a single error, again, you might have a dozen in paragraph."

"I never heard of such a thing," said professor in astonishment, wavering in t indefinable credulity, the inseparable c panion of impractical education.

"Oh, yes," continued the foreman, "something that catches the best of Walter, the great English newspaper man for years trying to get at some rule by w all presses might be corrected, but efforts only received the purple robe partial success. He could correct the W presses, but could do nothing with machines of other make. He had a g deal of trouble, for once, just as he was c gratulating himself, the press slipped a and called the king a fool and the chancellor a rapscallion."

"This is most extraordinary inform said the professor, thoroughly convinced the artful foreman. "I think that I s prepare a lecture on the errors of the pr

"A good idea, sir, the newspaper are loth to let the public into t confidence."

"Do you think that our press can corrected?"

"Not without great expense. You w have to get a man from New York and him largely."

"I am sorry that I went into this th Don't you think you could take the c and after awhile pay me what you thi is worth."

"The responsibility would be g sir."

"I know that, but you are willing to are you not?"

"Oh, yes. I'll try."

"You have shed a great deal of ligh my hitherto darkened pathway, and h given me a new insight into mechan philosophy. Assist me further in gettin data for my lecture, and I will make yo present of the office."

"It will require a deal of research an books and manuscripts stored in the arcani of typographical secrecy, but I'll undert the arduous labor."

"My enlightening friend, here is my ha and in after years, when I become famou a great lecturer, remember that to you latch string cover hangs on the outside. Arkansaw Traveller.

A Rejected Lover's Revenge.

A singular tragedy is just reported fr Morehouse Parish, Louisiana, just bey the state line. Two colored men, Sim Rowell and Samuel Adams, were rivals the affections of Ida Lewis, a beaut octoroon, of a decidedly coquettish position. One day last week Ida wen the cabin of an aged negress living near own house for the purpose of having fortune told. The girl had had a li quarrel with Rowell, one of her lovers, a or two prior to the visit, and he bribed old woman to reveal certain things to chief among which was the fact that she destined to marry him (Rowell); and if she refused or objected, she was to be duced to drink a mixture of love phil with which he had supplied the negr This programme was carried out when girl reached the hut; and she loudly protes when told that Rowell was to be her fu husband; whereupon the woman coaxed to drink the preparation. Having swal ed it, Ida was suddenly seized with vulsions and died in about twenty minu Rowell fled to the swamps, and is not li to be apprehended. The evidence aga him is clear and convincing. It is cla he paid the negress a silver trade d to aid him in carrying out his revenge.

Rich Wives.

It is quite a mistake, say The Lo World, to suppose that most Americans marry Englishmen are rich. A few are to do, some half a dozen are rich. L Harcourt has a large life income, a joint but her sister, Mrs. Sheridan, had no co erable fortune. Mrs. Arthur Paget probably some day have £10,000 a The son of Lord Augustus Loftus is ma to the daughter of a very rich Philadel lady. Lady Hesketh will have a very l fortune. Mrs. Elward Balfour prob has £100,000. Lady Mandeville and L Lister Kays assuredly were not marrie money. On the other hand, many Fr and Germans have rich American w The daughters of American Irishmen residents in Paris have married French n dees. The daughters of Mr. Fisher, a goods man, married Italian nobles. S ladies named Lee, the daughters of a N York wholesale grocer, have married the creme de la creme of Germany. O the wife of Von Moltke's adjutant, wh in fact, the second in command of army.

LADIES DEPARTMENT.

Woman's Work in a Mint

Fifty females employed in the mint at San Francisco, are called adjusters, and their pay is two dollars and seventy-five cents a day, counting week-days, and all holidays but Sundays. Their hours are from eight o'clock in the morning, until four in the afternoon, with the exception of Saturdays when they cease at two o'clock. These adjusters occupy two large rooms on the second floor of the mint. One is used for the adjusting of silver, and the other for that of gold. The floors are carpeted, and each lady has a marble-top table, a pair of scales, and a fine, delicate file. Before the gold is turned over to them to be adjusted, it goes through the process of being rolled, annealed, cut and washed. Then they take it in a state called "blanks," that is, perfectly smooth, and the weighing is done. It is weighed to see if each piece be of standard weight, which must be of 412½ grains for a silver dollar, a slight discrepancy being allowed on either side. If a coin is found outside of the limit after being weighed by an adjuster it is returned; if too light it is condemned, and must be remelted; if too heavy, it is filed to its proper weight.

This is the ladies' work, and an interesting sight it is to watch the small, white fingers deftly handling the shining pieces. A room near the adjusting room has been set aside for the ladies, who use it as a lunch room; two long tables are provided, and a waitress furnishes boiling water for making tea, and also keeps the place neat and clean. Several of the ladies have been in the mint over ten years.

The Open Door Fiend.

While the man who takes your umbrella has all seasons for his own, and the man who has a little story to tell fails not in seed-time nor in harvest, there is one particular fiend who becomes particularly numerous at about the time when there is coolness in the morning breeze and no steam in the radiator. We refer to the man who leaves the door open. He comes to the office on various ostensible errands, in fact on about every pretext, except to pay a bill, but always his actual purpose is to go away, leaving wide open the portal through which autumnal zephyrs come cavorting with glacial coolness, and bearing in their embrace full many a token of the pervasive dust from which we sprang and to which we will return.

It does no good to bawl after him to shut the door. Oh, no, He is meandering down the sunny street, watching the white-winged clouds playing tag in the deep-smiling heavens. But as we lay down the pen, and push back the chair, and walk to the door and close it softly and pensively, and then stoop to gather up the scattered papers that have been whirled about our feet like fading forest leaves, the blessed Serosch whispers of a coming time coming, and we are consoled with confidence that in the bright dawning there, our autumn days will be free from draughts, for the Man Who Leaves the door open must go.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Girl Everybody Likes

She is not beautiful—oh, no! Nobody thinks of calling her that. Not one of a hundred can tell whether her eyes were black or blue. If you should ask them to describe her they would only say: "She is just nice," and there it would end.

She is a merry hearted fun-loving being, without a spark of envy in her whole composition. She is kind and wants everybody else to be the same. She has always a kind word for the poorest and for the oldest man or woman in town. First of all she thinks of nothing so soulless as a sunbeam, which lightens everything it comes in contact with.

All day long she receives attention, from rich Mr. Watts, who lives in a mansion on the hill, to ragged Sam, the sweep. All look after her with an admiring eye, and say to themselves: "She is just the right sort of a girl!"

The young men of the town vie with one another as to who shall show her the most attention; but she never encourages them beyond being kind and jolly; so no one can call her a flirt; no, indeed, the young men all deny such an assertion as quickly as she.

Girls—wonderful to relate—like her, too; for she never delights in hurting their feelings, or saying spiteful things behind their backs. She is always willing to join in their little plans, and to assist them in any way. They go to her with their love affairs, and she manages adroitly to see Willie or Peter, and drop a good word for Ida or Jennie, until their little difficulties are all patched up, and everything goes on smoothly again—thanks to her.

Old ladies say she is "delightful." The sly witch—she knows how to manage them. She listens patiently to complaints of rheumatism or neuralgia, and then sympathizes with them so heartily that they are more than half cured.

But she cannot be always with us. A young man comes from a neighboring town, after a time, and marries her. The villagers crowd around to tell him what a prize he has won, but he seems to know it pretty well without any telling, to judge from his face.

So she leaves us, and it is not long before we hear from that place. She is there the woman everybody likes.

HONEY FOR THE LADIES.

When Grace put on a new pair of shoes which fitted very closely, and moreover had a low heel, she was asked how she felt. Her reply was: "They make me feel as though I wanted to walk like a grasshopper."

The young man who profusely thanked his "best girl" for a beautiful crushed strawberry penwiper, presented to him on his birthday, still continues the good old old style of using his coat sleeve for a pen-cleaner.

"She a great artist!" contemptuously ejaculated a prima donna: "Why there was no brass band on the tug boat that went down the harbor to meet her, and she wasn't even interviewed. And she thinks she can sing."

An advertisement in a Swiss paper says "Wanted, a servant who knows how to cook and take care of children." In the cannibal islands a domestic possessed of such a double gift would not long remain without employment.

Merited rebuke—First amateur (after a soprano tornado): "Thank goodness! That's over? Regular screech owl, isn't she?" Second amateur: "You idiot! That's just all you know about it. Why her father's worth trillions!"

Dentist—"The man who wins that girl will get a treasure." Customer—"She looks like a very charming creature, that is a fact. Is she wealthy?" Dentist—"Wealthy! Well, I should say so. She has $500 worth of gold in her teeth alone."

"No," said Mr. Grinnell, "I can't understand it. Snaggs' wife is dead, but he don't seem to show the least signs of grief; and yet he'll have to get up and build his own fires and split his wood now, and I can't understand his heartlessness."

A big box out on the sidewalk of one of our principal streets attracted a good deal of attention the other day. It was marked "Twenty gals," and the boys wanted to break it open and see whether it was a travelling female seminary or refreshments for the crowd.

"Mamma, Uncle James is very sick, isn't he?" asked a New York girl of her mother. "Yes, he can not recover, the doctor says; but he thinks he may live during the winter." "Well, mamma, don't you think I could put on half mourning for him? Black is so becoming to me."

When a Boston girl gets miffed at her husband she says: "Base tyrant, I shall leave thee and fly to my father." When a western girl is similarly affected she simply remarks: "Old man, I'm going to get up and get, and if you don't like it just climb up on your eyebrows and see if you can stop me."

When the high-school girl went to Tidioute to spend a week at Christmas she wrote a letter to Amy which nearly drove that young lady wild in the effort to ascertain her meaning. It began: "My visual organs were delighted to trace the inanimate lines of your chirography over the folloie surface." Amy is still quick sick.

An Austin lady recently returned from quite a protracted visit to the north, whither her husband, being closely confined by business was unable to accompany her. While unpacking her trunk her decidedly plain and vinegar-featured housekeeper thus addressed her: "Sure, and you have a jewel of a husband.' "Yes, I think he is pretty nice, but why do you consider him such a jewel?" "Why, during the entire time you were gone he niver said a word to me."

The high-school girl's brother Jim told her a new conundrum yesterday. It is this: "What is the difference between shooting a man and killing a hog?" The answer is: "One is assaulting with intent to kill, and the other killing with intent to salt." When she met Amy she prodounded the conundrum to her, but Amy gave it up. "Well, I'll tell you," said Mildred; "one is assaulting with intent to deprive of life, and the other is killing with intent to preserve the brine.' And Amy failed to see the point.

Carpets and Rugs

The attempt to introduce brighter colors and more set designs into carpets was not a successful one, and those persons who, yielding to the pressure, allowed themselves to become possessors of a carpet in which yellow or a bright shade of old gold was the dominant color, are rueing the haste with which they accepted a whim of a season for a genuine expression of taste, says the Boston Advertiser. The "yellow fever" ran high last year, and even carpets and upholstery suffered quite violent attacks, but the epidemic was stayed after it had had quite a furious run, and the public taste returned to a healthy normal condition. The low tones and subdued tints are again in favor, and the carpets in all grades, from Axminsters to ingrains, show the soft Oriental colors and designs which are copied from antique rugs. Indian effects are sought, and it is really surprising how well they are carried out with the modern dyes. This softness and harmony is specially noticeable in Axminsters and Wiltons, and are followed very closely in Brussels.

The most desirable ground for a nice carpet is a deep Indian blue, and on this is an irregular pattern in the dull reds, with a touch here and there of olive. Anything like geometrical regularity is avoided studiously, except on the borders, which all show a special design, which is, however, highly conventionalized. These effects are not only seen in the English carpets, those particularly known as the Morris carpets, but also in those of American manufacture. It is surprising, by the way, to see what long strides have been made in an artistic direction by American designers. One has only to examine the finest grades of carpets from the best of the domestic manufacturers to see the growth in this direction.

The present caprice in rugs, which have become very popular and common, is to use the long gallery rugs for stair carpets, with large rugs that harmonize in color and design for the halls. It takes two of the long carpets for a flight of stairs, and of course they must so nearly match that they can be used together as one carpet. Some of the modern oriental rugs are good, but there is a tendency to use the brilliant aniline dyes that spoil all the fine effects, and take from the eastern goods their peculiar character and individuality. The European rugs, which follow the antiques quite closely, are in high favor just now, and certainly some of them are very beautiful, going quite beyond the modern Turkey or Persian in artistic coloring, since they avoid as far as possible, the tendency referred to above in connection with the modern oriental carpets.

Among the most beautiful of the European rugs are the Saxony carpets, which were the first European rugs in market, and were called on their introduction Turkey carpets, and the Scotch Axminsters made by the Templetons of Glasgow, and but recently introduced to the public. The former have plain centres in Indian red, Japanese blue, old gold, or olive, with wide borders in Indian designs. They vary in size from the carpet large enough to cover an ordinary sized library to the hallway of the smallest size. The texture is heavy and yet fine, the pile is long, and a rug of this kind will outlast a generation and keep its beauty. The Scotch Axminsters are very accurate imitations of the best antiques, and have all the leading and distinguishing features of these rugs.

A BROKEN HEART.

An Interesting Breach of Promise Case Tried in London.

Mr. Justice Cave and a common jury, in the Queen's Bench Division recently, had before them the suit of Lees vs. West, an action to recover damages for breach of a promise of marriage, and the only question was one of damages.

The plaintiff, it was stated by her counsel, was a young lady who at the time the engagement commenced was about 19 years of age. She was then engaged in her studies, and she lived with her father, who had been for many years an independent minister at Epsom. The defendant was a clerk in the legacy duty office, Somerset house. He was also organist at Epsom church, and he at the time of the engagement was about 36 years old. There was a large mass of correspondence, which, however, he should not read to the jury, but he would say that there were in it expressions which, if possible, were warmer and more passionate than they were accustomed to hear even in cases of this kind; but at the same time there was not in it a word that should not have been written by a highly honorable man to a highly honorable woman. The defendant, notwithstanding the arduous nature of his duties in the public service, which he alluded to as being very heavy, still had time to write occasionally to the plaintiff, and to the length of several sides of foolscap. [A laugh.] The defendant, in his letters, called the plaintiff and "My own Aggie," and he described himself as "Yours affectionately," and the correspondence continued on these terms from June, 1880, to the autumn of 1882. In this latter year, however, the defendant grew cool. There was one of his on Oct. 20, in which he said: "If I can possibly join you at Dore's gallery to-morrow afternoon I shall be glad to do so, but I fear I shall not be able on account of the state of official work here. The work is very heavy just now, and in consequence of having to pay a visit to the organ builder's yesterday I am all in arrear. I expect to stay quite late on Saturday, and whether I may be able to join you or not I hope you will have a pleasant afternoon. Yours affectionately, Edmund." There was another letter from the defendant dated in November, 1882, addressed to "My dear Aggie," in which he said: "I feel that I ought to have written to you long since, and I can offer you no valid excuse for not having done so, and indeed I can only ask your forgiveness for the apparent neglect that must have caused you pain." Then, after some long statements, he said: "The conviction has grown upon me that through my own fault and defect we could not be happy together. I could not be happy, and therefore I could not make you happy. You have been not only blameless but so kind toward me that I feel myself a monster of ingratitude toward you. I do not say this with a view of refusing any reparation where all real reparation is impossible, but only from your disposition to blame yourself without a shred of cause," and he concluded by protesting that he had "no new attachment nor ever was likely to have. Believe me, yours very sincerely, Edmund." The plaintiff answered: "My dear Edmund: I can not tell you with what pain it was that I read your letter last night. I kept hoping that all might end right, but now it seems greater than I can bear.

"MY DEAR AGGIE,"

MY LOAD IS VERY GREAT;

but I can not bear any anger or nourish any ill-feeling, although you must know you have not acted fairly. My life now to me will be little worth living for. I feel wretched — Believe me, yours sincerely, Agnes Lee. P. S.—I only hope, as a last wish, that you may ever be happy, whatever befalls me." Mr. Lee next wrote, calling the defendant to account, and then Mr. Bockett, the clergymen of the church where the defendant played the organ, got into communication with the young lady, and no doubt she wrote: "My dear Mr. Rockett: I repeat what I said in former letters that I have authorized no one to bring an action against Mr. West, neither do I wish it." And she requested this letter to be forwarded to the solicitors. The learned counsel said that he did not know what influence had been brought to bear to induce the plaintiff to write this; but, however, there could be no doubt that now, at all events, the action had her assent.

Miss Lee, the plaintiff, was called, and said that she first meet the defendant at Christmas, 1879, and in the summer of 1880 he offered her marriage, and she accepted the offer. They were to be married in the spring of 1882. In March of that year the defendant said that he was looking out for a house, and he would furnish it.

Cross-examined: She now adopted this action, though she was not originally in favor of it being brought. The witness went into hysterics while in the witness-box and had to be removed from court.

No other evidence was tendered.

Mr. Grain, on behalf of the defendant, however, impressed upon the jury that it was much to be regretted that this action had ever been brought, for it was clear, even upon the correspondence, that the plaintiff herself had never desired it. As late as Feb. 3, 1883, she wrote to the defendant: "My dear Mr. West—It may be wrong of me to write under present circumstances, but I can not help that; indeed, I care very little now whether I disobey my father or not. I have heard that indirectly it is through you I may practice again on the organ. You know what music is to me, and I can not thank you enough. Another thing I wish to say, how ashamed I feel that your things have never been returned to you yet; but, believe me, it is not in my power to do so, or, you should have had them long since. Forget that you have heard from me, and please never allude to it in any way, for I know what trouble I shall get into." The jury would not forget the letter that the young lady wrote to the vicar, saying that she had never authorized the action, and there was also a letter from her to the plaintiff's sister, saying, likewise, that she had being brought, and, indeed, that it had been brought against her wish. The learned counsel added that his client had always been willing to pay the plaintiff reasonable damages if she should desire it—which, however, she did not—and he hoped that reasonable damages only would be awarded.

NEVER CONSENTED TO THE ACTION

Mr. Justice Cave said the principal thing for the jury to consider was the pecuniary position of the defendant. He was a clerk in Somerset house with £300 a year at the time of the engagement, and this would go on increasing periodically; he was also allowed to do extra work in the office for which he was paid, and he was paid for being organist at Epsom.

The jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff—damages £700.—London Telegraph.

Canes.

The manufacture of canes is by no means the simple process of cutting the sticks in the woods, peeling off the bark, whittling down the knots, sand-papering the rough surface, and adding a touch of varnish, a curiously-carved handle or head, and tipping the end with a ferule. In the sand flats of New Jersey whole families support themselves by gathering nanneberry sticks, which they gather in the swamps, straighten with an old vise, steam over an old kettle, and perhaps scrape down or whittle into size. These are packed in large bundles to New York city and sold to the cane factories. Many imported sticks, however, have to go through a process of straightening by mechanical means, which are a mystery to the uninitiated. They are buried in hot sand until they become pliable. In front of the heap of hot sand in which the sticks are plunged is a stout board from five to six feet long, fixed at an angle inclined to the workmen, and having two or more notches cut in the edge. When the stick has become perfectly pliable, the workman place it on one of the notches, and bending it in the opposite direction to which it is naturally bent, straightens it. Thus sticks apparently crooked, bent, warped and worthless, are by this simple process straightened; but the most curious part of the work is observed in the formation of the crook or curl for the handles which are not naturally supplied with a hook or knob. The workman places one end of the cane firmly in a vise, and pours a continuous stream of fire from a gas-pipe on the part which is to be bent. When sufficient heat has been applied, the cane is pulled slowly and gradually round until the hook is completely formed, and then secured with a string. An additional application of heat serves to bake and permanently fix the curl. The under part of the handle is frequently charged by the action of the gas, and this is rubbed down with sand-paper until the requisite degree of smoothness is attained.

A Prosperous Chinese Physician.

A celebrity among the Chinese of San Francisco is their great doctor, Li Po Tai. He has been in this country nearly thirty years and has a larger income from his profession than any white practitioner in the city. His patients all come to his office when able, and Li Po Tai sits up habited in gorgeous silks and brocades in a little den of an office overlooking the plaza, and feels pulses all day long. The patients are mostly white people who come to him after a varied round of their own physicians, or at the instigation of some of his resurrected and enthusiastic patients. Li Po Tai rests the patient's elbow on a blue silk cushion, and proceeds to feel his right pulse with his three hooked and long-clawed fingers. He feels his right pulse to ascertain the condition of the brain, stomach and kidneys, and then grasps the left wrist to find out about the heart, liver and lungs. Although he knows practically nothing of anatomy as our physicians know it, he makes a wonderful diagnosis of a case. He charges ten dollars a week for his services, including his medicines, and patients either come to his office and drink the tisanes, or take the packages of mysterious stuff home and make their own hot drinks.

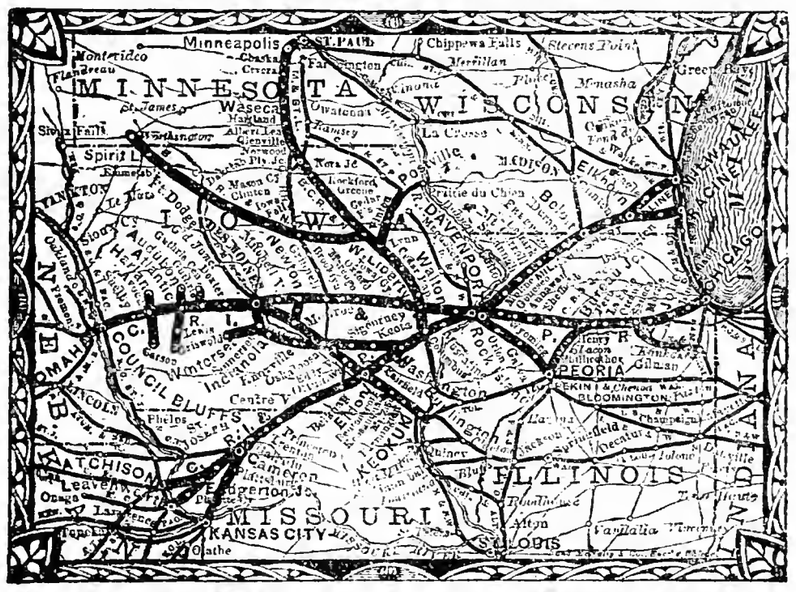
Li Po Tai has many notions that puzzle and interest the patients. He first treats them to a severe course of antidotes for quinine poison, if they confess to ever having taken that deadly drug. He next commands them to eat no shell fish or uncooked fruit, to let alone poultry, fried meats, eggs, watery vegetables, all liquors and everything sour. For these thirty years Li Po Tai has made his patients drink hot water, and dyspepsia, cancer and tumors are his specialities. His income from his profession is computed at more than $6,000 a month.

Warm Food For Poultry.

Those who are anxious to do all they can to minister to the comfort of their fowl, and thus induce them to she l out eggs during the cold, wintry months when eggs are so fearfully and wonderfully scarce, will do well to warm the food before giving it to the poultry, no matter whether the food is a soft, mixed mass or made up entirely of whole grain. It is not much trouble to do this for an average-sized flock of fowls, for the food can be put in a pan and set in the oven of the stove for a short time. If the grain does get a little brown, it will do no harm, but care should be taken not to feed it while it is too hot, else injury may result. If the mass is comfortably warm to the feeder's hand, it may be safely fed to the fowls, but hotter than that it is dangerous to feed it. On a cold winter's morning it is quite a sight to see with what eagerness and keen relish fowls will devour the warm feed. In connection with warm, comfortable winter quarters, warm food is one of the greatest aids to winter egg production that we can name and a trial will soon convince the doubting ones of the efficacy of warm food for poultry in cold weather.

Man and Evolution.

It seems that some of our scientists have become discouraged in the attempt to prove man to be the product of an evolutionary process reaching back millions of ages into the misty past and beginning with the monad of living molecule; and so they have adopted the view expressed in the following paragraph from a lecture by Prof. Winchell.



"Man, also, in his earliest European advent, was the equal of modern man. Nor do we find anywhere any links graduating from man toward the rank of the brute. The apes have a genealogical tree; we trace them back to the beginning of tertiary time. Man has no genealogical tree. He stands apart, as if he had been the product of an independent organization. However this may be, he is most closely related in plan of organization to the other kingdom. The facts, in short, are such that we may, with Wallace, hold to the evolution of the other animals, and yet not embrace the doctrine of the evolution of man."

It is the little that fret and worry us. A three-year-old boy may keep a man in perfect misery, whereas no such trial would accompany the presence of his eighteen-year-old sister.

An old colored "aunty" in Baltimore went to the church and requested to be baptized. "But you have been baptized," said the clergyman. "I knows it, massa," said she. "but it didn't take." Several other cases of that sort are reported.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundred of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JAN. 3, 1884.

VILLAGE POLICE.

Our new police have been elected to office, and now we will offer a few suggestions. It appears from past experience that the building of sidewalks and keeping the same in repair is one of the important duties of their office, it has at least been the chief question as regards expense, and for aught we can see, will continue so. We believe however this is the proper season of the year to lay down the plans for sidewalk building for the coming year, and would suggest the advisability of procuring cedar or pine instead of hemlock lumber, experience has taught us that a hemlock sidewalk wears but a few years at most, and something more durable should if possible be procured, however, whether any change is made or not in the material, one thing is certain, this is the proper time of the year to secure contracts for it, we would say ask for tenders for what will likely be required, the mills are now being stocked for the coming season and we have no doubt a very material saving can be made by contracting now for what will be required the coming summer. We want all the sidewalk we can get and that of a substantial kind for a certain amount of outlay.

NOMINATIONS.

In Glenelg the nomination was held in the town hall in the centre of the township, there was a good attendance the following were nominated: For reeve, F. McRae Esq. and Mr. Thos. Davis: for deputyreeve, Messrs. J. A. McMillan and Wm. Glencross; for Councillors, Messrs. Neil, Lamb, Dunsmore, Whitmore, and McCuaig.

In Markdale the following were elected by acclamation viz, Messrs. Wm. N. Haskett, Thos. Hill and A. Turner.

Holland.—Reeve, John Cameron, by acclamation; Deputy, A Shute, W Norton. Councillors—R McKinnett, James Galbraith John Gillespie, Thomas Williscroft, W Crawford, J Murray, M Howey, J C Kennedy, J Watters.

Bentinck Township.—Reeve, David McNichol; Deputy, Jacob Messenger, Henry Brigham; 2nd Deputy, John McCallum. Councillors—Dickson, Hurd. Lunney. Corlett. Willin.

Melancthon.—Reeve, Bailey, Hewitt; Deputy, August, Walker. Councillors—Gowan, Shook, Bales, Hogg, Thompson.

Owen Sound.—Meyor, David A Creasar by acclamation; Reeve, John Chisholm by acclamation; Fir t Deputy, John W Frost, Matthew Kennedy; Second Deputy, James C Miller by acclamation. Councillors—Bay Ward, Duncan Morrow, M Forhan, John Pearson, J C Griffith, Joe White, Geo Anderson; Centre Ward, Wm Manders, Jas H Little, Wm Barclay, Jas Sanderson, W J Patersou, John Tucker River Ward, James Brown, Samuel McLean, Robert Malcolm, Jas White, Robt Taylor, Owen Vandusen.

Osprey.—Reeve, Thos Gamey, Andrew McGirr, Josiah R Sing; Deputy, Archibald McIntyre, Edward Potts. Councillors—John Inkster, Jonathan Irish, Thos Neil Wm Phillips, Jas Sinclair, John Speers, Jos Taylor.

Orangeville.—For Mayor, John Geen, Joseph Pattullo, Robert McKeowan, Dr Henry; Reeve, John Gilchrist, Joseph Foster; Deputy, Robert Hewitt, James Bennett. Councillors—North Ward, Reid, Beatty, Bennett; South Ward, May, Mole; East Ward, Moore, Bell, Mortimer; West Ward, Kearns, Carbert.

St. Vincent Township.—Reeve, Jas Bowes, Jr, Cyrus R Sing; Deputy, Nicholas Read, Jas H Burnett. Councillors—McIntosh, Montgomery, Carson.

Shelburne.—Reeve, Wm Jelly, Councillors—E Berwick, J F Belfry, F A Campbell, G R Hannah, C Irwin, A B Noble, Wm Robertson, Jno Stewart, Jno Wilson.

Amabel.—Reeve, Jas Allen, D Porter; Deputy, P Anderson, Shell, Councillors—Baker, Smellie, Miller, Webb, Broadfoot, Phelp.

Meaford.—Mayor, Chas Watt, J J Johnson; Reeve, Alex Thompson, Robert Agnew, Councillors—West Ward, D L Layton, Hector McDonald, K Hurd; East, Elliott Thompson, Chas Little, James Hogg, J Sparling; North, John Groom, T C Wilcox, H T Law, Alex W Cooley, M Robinson, David McCann, Hugh Clelland.

Durham.—Mayor, D Jackson, Jr, J A Munroe; Reeve, G McKechnie. Councillors—North Ward, J Burnet, C L Grant, R McFarlane; East W Laidlaw, G Whitmore, J Dunsmore, A J Lowick; West, Dr. Jamieson, K Greenwood, O Gayner, W Tucker.

Artemesia.—Reeve, Dr. Christoe by acclamation; Ward No. 1, J. McArthur by acclamation; No. 2, A. Elliott by acclamation; No, 3, Thorp Wright and J. Blakely; No. 4, McKee and Pedlar.

Euphrasia,—Reeve, T. Gilray and R. Patterson; Deputy Reeve, J. Erskine and Wm. Fawcett; Councillors, D. R. Ellis, Jas. Boyd, H. Hurd, J. M. Davis, Jas. Elliott, J. Black, Mr. Blackwood, J. Clugston, W. J. Shepherdson.

What we may Expect,

A January thaw, and a freze.
And more snow.
Another wedding in town soon.
More than usual interest taken in Municipal elections.
And some of the defeated candidates exceedingly sore over it.
The coming session of the Dominion Parliament an interesting one.
The female franchise question discussed.
And the franchise extended to the dear creatures.
The college aid question considered.
And found to be a difficult question to grapple with.
A reduction in letter postage considered.
But no change made at present.
An insolvent law asked for and none given.

Personals.

A list under this head was mislaid last week and consequently did not appear.

C. W. Speers was in town a week ago.

G. White returned from St. Thomas recently.

Mrs. Rutledge, Sr., has returned from Alliston.

Mr. John Benson is in town this week from Toronto.

Mrs. Hall, of Dundalk, spent Christmas in Markdale.

Miss Wilson is home from college spending her vacation.

R. H. Whitby is home from Orangeville spending his holiday's.

Louis N. Thibaudeau is home from Berlin spending his vacation.

Ed. S. Rutledge returned from Manitoba the 22nd December.

Mrs. Freeman, of Georgetown, is visiting her sister Mrs. Bowes.

George Littlejohns is home from Owen Sound Business College.

Mr. John Porter, of Brainerd, Minn. machinist, was in town Saturday.

Mr. & Mrs. Thibaudeau of———— are visiting at Mr. J. B. Thibaudeau's.

T. W. Potter was in town a week, he returned on Friday last to his ranch in Texas.

Robert Benson and Wm. L. Davis of this village have gone to Belleville Business Collage.

Rev. Dr. Gregg preached the anniversary sermons in the Presbyterian church last sabbath.

Mr. and Mrs. Griffin and daughter of Dakota are spending their holidays with C. Reynolds, Esq.

Mr. Willard Porter, of the job department in the Mail office Toronto, gave us a call on Saturday.

Jake G. Keefer spent a few days in this place and Flesherton, he returned to St. Thomas last Wednesday.

Rev. J. Hart, of Holland Centre, filled Mr. Casson's pulpit while the latter took Mr. Hart's pulpit in Williamsford.

Our very highly esteemed friend Mr. Andrew McFarland, returned on Friday last having taken unto himself a wife in the person of Miss McPherson, We wish them long life and much happiness.

Correspondence.

Notice.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

VALLEY ROAD.

To the Editor of the Standard.

Sir,—In reply to Ratepayer, permit me to say that his communication shows many errors, besides an animus against myself unwarrantable. I state most emphatically that no deed was given to us for road through Hogg's land, upon condition that said road was to be continued to the town line. The township paid for this (Hogg's) road, about $40 to Plewis for right of way, to let him out by the terms of his agreement now before me. Mr. Flesher's ground for refusing his deed was well taken until he knew the relation the road bore to the boundaries of his lot or lots, the plans were returned to surveyor to obtain the desired information, without success. He was unfortunately incarcerated at the time. Mr. Flesher was not here when the survey of the road was obtained, but was here in 1879 when he was approached regarding it. He left suddenly in the fall of same year, and has not been here since. Mr. Hogg gave us his deed in September 1880, or a year after Mr. Flesher had been in England, yet he insists there has been negligence. But I presume it is not so much Mr. Flesher's deed that gives trouble, providing a case can be made against the Reeve. Mr. Hogg, it will appear did receive value for his lot, its extension was not the consideration, as was stated. I do not blame Mr. H. for his efforts to have the road opened, but I do blame him for his misrepresentations. I have no personal interest in it whatsoever, I only said that the people in proximity by their representative to the council insist against opening the road, unless Euphrasia joins to carry it further; and the writer does not express any one's views but his own and one other. As to other matters it is a pity he did not mention them, if as true as those already mentioned they will be easily answered. But as usual, whilst elected to do my duty to the whole township, I shall refuse to be dragged into schemes for expenditure of the township's moneys, creating taxes irksome to be borne, unless it be the desire of a majority of the ratepayers. Ratepayer seems to overlook the fact that Mr. Flesher's deed, or no deed, does not affect the opening of the road in the least, no more then does the absence of deeds from the other parties? But Flesher and the Reeve have got to take it nevertheless, I guess we will survive the shock.

W. S. Christoe.

A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT,

AN APPALLING ACCIDENT ON THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Sixteen Killed and as Many Wounded.

Wednesday morning the suburban train lett Toronto with two cabooses containing the workmen of the Humber bolt works and collided with a freight train on a sharp curve near the Humber. A most heart rending scene of mangled and torn, dead and dying was there witnessed. The accident was caused by the driver on the freight forgetting his orders.

Strange but True.

Great, and oftimes happy results hang on trifling circumstances.

Less than a year ago, and not a thousand miles from Markdale, a well-to do young man, an agriculturist attended a township show fair, he admired various improvements in the different classes of produce exhibited and was a good judge of things generally, but a package of butter arrested his special attention, various were his thoughts while halting to thoroughly test the quality of this particular exhibit. He doubtless thought to himself, "if I had a wife who could just make such butter" perhaps he thought out loud when an acquaintance informed him that a young lady in————township had made the butter, and he at once determined to make her acquaintance, many obstacles were in the way. She was a total stranger to him, had never saw her or perhaps her people, didn't even know where she lived, but one thing he did know, she could make good butter, he was determined to know more, the course pursued, how the wonderful progress was made, and obstacles surmounted has been to a great extent a mystery to the winter, but doubtless a satisfactory and happy point in the event was reached when a few weeks since their marriage appeared in the Standard.

The Cause of his Grief.

"What are you crying about?" asked a kind hearted stranger of a lad who was standing in front of a newspaper office weeping as if his heart would break.

"Oh dad's gone upstairs to lick the editor."

"Well, has he come down yet?" pursued the gentle Samaritan.

"Pieces of him have," explained the boy, indulging in a fresh outburst tears, "and I'm expecting the rest every minute."

The New County Assessment.

The gentlemen appointed by the county council to value the county for assessment purposes, having finished their labors, presented their report to the council at the meeting last week. After a long and warm debate the report was adopted. St. Vincent gains by the valuation a little over $400 per year. I here append the totals:

Artemesia	$1,496,317
Bentinck	1,774,874
Collingwood	1,857.576
Derby	930,026
Euphrasia	1.500,600
Egremont	1,752,136
Glenelg	1,311,378
Holland	1,331,470
Keppel	972,562
Normanby	1,931,740
Osprey	1,370.350
Proton	1,226,708
Sullivan	1,544,054
St. Vincent	1,960,264
Sydenham	1,545,620
Sarawak	273,000
Owen Sound	1,573,000
Meaford	627,000
Durham	248,000

Total value of County $25,327,159

Artemesia, Bentinck, Glenelg, Holland, Osprey, Proton, Keppel, Sullivan, and Sarawak lose by the valuation, the other townships gain more or less. St. Vincent gains most.—Meaford Mirror.

County Council.

From the O. S. Times,

The County Council met on Wednesday evening, 19th., D. McNicol, Esq., Warden, in the chair. The Warden addressed the Council, stating that the principal subject to come before them was the report of the County Valuators, now ready. A number of communications were read, amongst them one from the Women's Suffrage Association, asking for a petition in favor of female suffrage.

Mr. McRae moved that the Council petition the Legislature to give votes to women on the same terms as men. After some discussion the motion was withdrawn to allow the memorial of the Women's Suffrage Association to be considered by the special committee.

The Council then adjourned till Thursday afternoon.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

The Reeve of Durham introduced a by-law to change the place of holding the fair in that town.

Dr. Christoe presented the report of the committee appointed to form a new school section in Proton, which was adopted.

Messrs. Dunnington and Read moved that a memorial be sent to the Legislature to amend the assessment law by exempting all live farm stock, and by making an assessment good for five years when satisfactory to the Municipal Council, which was lost.

Messrs. McKechnie and Messenger moved to exempt all personal property, also lost.

Messrs. McKechnie and Paul moved to memorialize the Legislature to take the question of assessment of personal property into serious consideration, with a view to adopting an equitable scheme. This was also lost.

On motion of Messrs. Elliott and McColman, it was resolved to memorialize the Legislature to make it the duty of Township Councils to enforce sub-section 1 of 87, chap. 204, R. S. O., instead of the County Councils.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

Dr. Christoe presented report of County Property Committee, which was adopted.

After considerable opposition from the Dep. Reeve of Bentinck and others the by-law changing the place for holding fair in Durham was passed.

Dr. Christoe presented report of committee recommending that a petition in favor of female suffrage be presented to the Legislature.

Mr. McKechnie presented report of Finance Committee, recommending that the report of County Valuators be adopted, that the different Treasurers received 2½ per cent. for disbursing grant to volunteers, and that a number of accounts be paid.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole on report of Finance Committee, Mr. Frost in the chair.

After a lengthy debate on Valuators, Report, the report of Finance Committee was finally adopted in Committee of the Whole.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Messrs. Chisholm and Christoe moved that the report of the special committee in favor of female suffrage be adopted, Messrs. Totten and [illegible] moved to amend the report to restrict the franchise to widows and married women. The amendment was carried.

After some amendment in committee of the whole, the report of the Education Committee was adopted.

Messrs. McColman and Mi[illegible] moved to adopt the report of Finance Committee.

Messrs. Christoe and McGirr moved in ammendment a lengthy resolution setting forth in detail the reason why the Valuators' report should not be adopted. The amendment was lost on the following vote:

Yeas—Christoe, Elliott, McNichol, Messenger, McCallum, McRae, Carson, Shute, Totten, Clark, McGirr, McIntyre, McGregor, Agnew, [illegible] Naught—15.

Nays—McColman, Campbell, Stafford, Hewgill, Brien, Gilray, Erskine, Caulfield, Paul, Mullarkey, Bl[illegible] Schenck, Fisher, Dunnington, Vance, Bowes, Read, Lang, Gordon, Hemi[illegible] Chisholm, Miller, Watt, McKechnie 24.

Messrs. Totten and Clark moved to amend the report as far as Keppel was concerned, which was also lost. The report was then adopted.

Messrs. Miller and Chisholm moved that the Chairman of Road and Bridge Committee be instructed to advertise for tenders for bridge over the Pottawatamie, which was lost.

The thanks of the Council were presented to D. McNicol, Esq, Warden with $100, and $50 additional for incidental expenses.

Fifteen dollars was voted to Chairman of Public Property Committee, $10 to Chairman of Finance, and $5 each to Chairman of Education, Road and Bridge, and Printing Committee.

The Council then adjourned.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE TOWNSHIP OF GLENEL

Gentlemen,—At the request of a number of prominent ratepayers of the Township, I have consented to offer myself as a candidate for the office of councillor for the ensuing year. The time is now short and I will be unable to call on you personally and would take this means of asking your influence and vote, pledging myself, (if elected) to use my earnest endeavors for the best interests of the township.

I am gentleman,
Your obedient servant,
GEORGE LAMB.

MARRIAGES.

Seaton Little.—In Owen Sound, on the 19th ult., by Rev. A. H. Scott, Mr. James Seaton, of Holland, to Miss Mary Little, Owen Sound.

McFarland—McPherson—On the 26th ult. at the residence of the bride's father, Ringwood, Ont., by Rev. D. Mackintosh, Andrew McFarland, of Markdale, third son of the late Thos. McFarland, country Tyrone Ireland, to Mary, fifth daughter of Hugh McPherson, Ringwood Carriage Works.

Mercer—Foster—On New Year's day, by Rev. Wesley Casson, at the residence of the bride's mother, Alexander Mercer to Isabella R. Foster, both of Artemesia.

Waterson—Clark—At the P. M. Parsonage, Markdale, on the 25th ult., by the Rev. J. S. Corcoran. Mr. John Waterson of Glenelg, to Miss M. Clark, of Artemesia.

Seaman—Winters—At the residence of the bride's father, on the 25th ult., by the Rev. J. Chisholm, B. A., Mr. J. Seaman, of Collingwood, to Miss Sarah, daughter of John Winters, Esq., of Maxwell.

Thibaudeau—Mathewson.—By Rev. A. Wilson, at the Revere hotel Markdale on New Year's day, Mr. Louis Napoleon Thibaudeau, to Miss Martha Elizabeth Mathewson, both of Artemesia.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.05; Spring $0.[illegible] to $1 08; Barley, 40 to55; Peas, 66; Oats, 27 Butter, 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 35c; Hay $8 .00; Pork, 5.00 to 5.60; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

TORONTO MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.10; Spring, $1.0[illegible] to $1.12; Barley, 50c to 70c; Oats, 37c to 40 Peas, 70c to 73c; Hogs, $6.00 to $6.25; Potatoes, per bag, 90c to $1c; Butter, dairy, 18 to 20c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

FOR SALE. 25 Building lots in the village of Markdale. first class location good terms, apply to

M. ARMSTRONG,
Markdale

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK.

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personally, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

A heavy fall of snow Wednesday.

Mr. W. Benson has bought out Hull's livery.

Markdale School opens on Monday next the 6th.

First class oatmeal for sale at Barhead Mills, cheap.

Reynolds & Son's have just opened a branch store at Rocklyn.

M. Sullivan has purchased Dan. Blaney's brick block for $2,500.

A new arrival of that famous tea at Reynolds & Son's. It will pay you to purchase it.

There is nothing so tempting and refreshing as a cup of McFarlands pure japan Tea, try it.

A girl in Markdale is said to have fainted one night this week while asleep; mighty strange.

The next sittings of division court, No. 5, will be held in Flesherton, on Thursday January 24th, 1884.

The Markdale Standard has improved wonderfully of late in its editorial and other matter.—Thornbury Standard.

The party who took a new tin pail from the Orange hall, belonging to the Gymnasium Club, will please return it immediately.

The Markdale Literary and Gymnastic Club will give an entertainment in the Orange Hall on Thursday evening, the 10th January.

School Books. — Royal Readers, Canadian Readers, and all the ordinary text books at the Medical Hall A. Turner & Co.

The annual meeting of all township agricultural societies is the second Thursday in January, that will be next Thursday the 10th inst.

A cutter robe lost between Markdale and the back line east of here. The party finding it will be rewarded by leaving it at Reynolds and Son's store.

Those who did not attend the social in the Methodist church on Friday evening missed a treat, it was as good as two ordinary tea-meetings. A most enjoyable time was spent.

See Mr. Geo. Lamb's notice in another column. He is a candidate for councillor for Glenelg. is an intelligent honest respectable farmer and is worthy of your support.

Badly fooled.—A young man was engaged to be married at Markdale on New-Year's day, had purchased the ring, procured the license, invited the Minister and ordered dinner at the Markdale House, but dear-o-dear how fickle girls are, did'nt she go and marry another, feller the same day and fooled her intended as well as the minister.

The McAliste House.—Mr. W. E. McAlister has re-purchased his Hotel from Mr. R. Horn, and has taken possession again. Mr. McAlister is a popular hotel keeper, and has already received calls from hosts of friends.—Grey Review.

For first class axe handles go to Finnerty's shop, Elizabeth st., opposite the bank, Markdale. You can bring your own timber and have them made to order, or you can get them all ready made at the shop. Sign of the Big Axe Handle. 169-72

The Prize Clock.—Quite an interest was taken in the New Year's gift by our jeweller W. A. Brown, 81 guesses were sent in, the lucky one being Mr H. Gill of Markdale. The number in the clock was 640, Mr. Gill's guess 650, the next nearest being George Bowes which was 666.

A nice cloth Mantle, $1.75, at McFarland's; A satin trimmed mantle $2.50, at McFarland's; A rich satin and fur trimmed mantle $3.75, at McFarland's; A superb mattesso mantle $5.75, at McFarlands. The above prices are for only one week and are less than wholesale cost.

The anniversary entertainment of the Presbyterian church in this place which came off on New Year's evening was a success. The church was well filled and the best of order prevaild throughout. After tea was served Mr. Thos. Kells was called to the chair and an interesting programme gone through. Proceeds between $60 and $70.

Our Patrons who wish to subscribe, or renew their subscaiption for any of the following publications will do us a favor by handing the amount in to us at the Standard office, viz. Weekly Mail, or Globe, Family Herald and Weekly Star, monthly Farmers Advocate, American Agriculturist, any of the above with the Standard for $2.00 or singly for one $1. except the Agriculturist which is $1.50.

The excellent sleighing of the past two weeks has been a most welcome and valuable boon to the country, and never have we witnessed better use made of it. Every available team is at it early and late hauling grain, wood, timber &c. &c. The weather as well as the sleighing has been all that could be desired during the holidays thereby giving an impetus to trade, making many a bright countenance and happy heart.

Leap Year Penalties.—It is claimed by some young ladies that a silk dress is the penalty imposed upon young men who reject a leap year proposal. A sensible young lady rises to remark that she would prefer to do without the dress, if rejected, as it would only be tell-tale. Now then, girls, if you are seen wearing a silk dress this season, everybody will know you have made an unsuccessful proposal.

Our Gymnasium Club have conducted themselves very creditably in their practice, which is held from 8 to 10 p.m. three nights in the week. There are, no doubt, those who look upon such societies with disrespect and perhaps contempt, and no doubt say they might be better employed. Well, perhaps they might, but were it not for this organization many of our young men would doubtless amuse themselves in more questionable ways. Young people will have pleasure and those who stand at the counting tables, or sit on the shoemakers bench, or are following the many callings of indoor-labor have need of exercise and recreation and we see nothing wrong in a whirl on the bar or a round with the gloves, so long as a gentlemanly demeanor is carried out. Our boys, (consisting of many married men as well) have had good sport, together with healthful exercise, and we have no doubt at all they have thereby been prevented from falling into drinking and other bad habits. We hope they will favor us with an entertainment in Markdale shortly.

The Berkeley Sabbath School will hold their annual entertainment on Friday the 4th January in the Presbyterian church Berkeley. Several Reverend and other gentlemen are expected to address the meeting. Tea at 6 p. m. Admission 25 cents.

Canadian Almanac.—This depository of usefull knowledge is now in its 37th year, and contains its usual authentic commercial, statistical, astronomical, departmental, ecclesiastical, educational, financial, and general information. There is not as much useful and comprehensive information, published in any from of its size, and all for the pattry sum of 15 cents. It contains a map of Ontario worth twice the money. for sale at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store, Markdale.

Christmas Tree.—The Christ Church S. S. held their annual Christmas tree entertainment in the Orange Hall on Thursday evening last and was a complete success. The hall was packed full, and the program, consisting of music, dialogues, recitations, etc., was very interesting and well rendered. The tree was handsomely decorated and heavily laden with presents for the children, which were distributed by Santa Claus himself. Proceeds $22.

Cheese Factory Meeting.—The patrons of the Flesherton Cheese Factory met in Flesherton on the 24th ult., to wind up the business of the factory for the past year. The secretary laid before the patrons a statement of the business done by the factory. The total amount of milk furnished by the patrons 889,053 lbs. making 87,383⅔ lbs. of cheese which was sold for $8882,07 the total cost of running the factory was $1910,26, leaving $6971,81 to be divided among the patrons. Com.

The Flesherton Methodist S. S. Anniversary took place new year's night and was a decided success in every way. The tea was excellent, after which a program of recitations, dialogues, music, &c., by the school was carried through with promptitude thereby leaving a good margin of time to get home, for those from a distance, this was a commendable feature. The little folks took up their part admirably. The rendering of the Immanuel Cantata was something grand. The school report was read showing every department to be in a flourishing condition with over $50 in the treasury. Proceeds of anniversary $90.

The re-opening services of the Methodist church, Williamsford was conducted last Sabbath by Rev. W. Casson. The church was filled on each ocasion. On Monday evening a tea-meeting was held in Vogan's hall, when an abundance of good things had been provided by the ladies. After tea the friends proceeded to the church which was crowded to its utmost capacity, many being unable to obtain admission. The chair was occupied by Mr. Burchel. Mr. Casson delivered an able and interesting lecture on Prevalent Mistakes, of the day which was highly appreciated by the audience. The proceeds of sermons and meeting amounted to nearly $100.

Osprey.

From our own correspondent.

J. W. H. Millne, Student of Queens College, Kingston is home for his vacation and preached last sabbath for Rev. J. Chisholm.

The Presbyterians of Feversham had a Christmas Tree entertainment for the benifit of their Sunday school at that place on Xmas eve which was a grand success.

The Methodist tea-meeting at Maxwell on Christmas day was well attended and in every respect satisfactory.

Miss Annie McKinnon, the very popular school teacher at Feversham was the recipient of a handsome present and address on the 21st ult.

What to Do.

If you know the facts of a local item always report to the editor. Don't wait till the paper is published and then express surprise that the item did not appear. Editors cannot be in every place at the same time and must gather a great deal of news from others. Let each one feel it a pleasure to furnish an item for the paper whenever they can, and not wait for somebody else to report what they know. The editor of the paper can thus be asissted and the intrest of the paper greatly increased.

EXECUTOR'S NOTICE

TO THE CREDITORS OF

James Thompson.

Notice is hereby given that the creditors of James Thompson, late of the Township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, Farmer, who died on or about the 4th day of April, 1883, at the said township of Artemesia are, on or before the next, to send to either of the undersigned Executors at Flesherton, their Christian and Surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and the nature of the securities (if any) held by them. After the said Fourth day of January next the said Executors will distribute the assets of the said James Thompson, amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to such claims as the said executors shall then have notice of.

TENTH DAY OF JANUARY,

This notice is given in pursuance of Chap. 107, Sec. 34, R. S. O.

Dated at Flesherton this 11th day of December 1883.

(Signed) ISAAC SINCLAIR.
WILLIAM HILL.
171-74

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKER,

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand,

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169-90.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot 8 part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.
Oct.16.1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 89 and 90 second range west of T & S. Road, Glenelg, 100 acres, 85 of which are cleared and under cultivation fit for reaper and mower to work on. Buildings and fences in good repair, soil clay loam, well watered, and in a good state of cultivation. This is a desirable farm and well located being 2½ miles from the flourishing village of Markdale. For further particulars apply on premises or by letter to

162-72 WM. MUTRIE,
Markdale P. O.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery,

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST,

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia. Age, year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

BERKSHIRE BOAR.

An early spring pig for service at his pen, two miles south of Markdale. Terms, 75 cents at time of service, otherwise $1.

CHAS. LITTLEJOHNS.

TEACHER WANTED.

For Union School Section No. 1, Euphrasia and Artemsia, Female holding Second or Third Class certificate, duties to commence 2nd January 1884. Apply personally to Wm. Mathews, Robt. Carruthers or James Stewart, or by letter to

JAMES STEWART,
172-74 Eugenia P.O.

WINES AND LIQUORS

CHOICE BRANDS.

Brandy in Hogsheads.
Scotch and Irish Whiskey in Tr. Casks.
Holland Gin in Tr. Casks.
Jamacia Rum in Tr. Casks.
Fine Old Port and Sherry in Tr. Casks.
Native Wine in Tr. Casks.
Five-year-old Rye Whiskey in Barrels.
White Wheat Whiskey in Barrel.
Rye and Malt Whiskey in Barrels.
Domestic Whiskey in Barrels.
Liquors in Cases.
Bottled Ale and Porter.

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

GAMBLING IN OLD TIMES.

How the Lords and Ladies amused Themselves in the Last Century.

If, however, we are compelled to confess that a love for gaming, or, as some mildly call it, for speculation, is not likely ever to be eliminated from the human heart, it can not be denied that in these times there is more decorum among the habitual votaries of the whist table or of the board or green cloth than prevailed in London toward the close of the last century. Such books as "George Selwyn and His Contemporaries," by Mr. J. H. Jesse, or "The Works and Correspondence of Horace Wylpole," or "Wharton's Queens of Society," reveal that the worst form of card-playing enacted in London during the reign of George III., was due to the faro tables kept in their own houses by ladies of quality. In a highly spiced and satirical volume, called "The Female Jocky Club," we are told that the Countess of Buckinghamshire, Lady Archer, Lady Bessborough, who was sister to the celebrated Duchess of Devonshire, and Mrs. Crewe presided alternately at faro banks of their own, from which they reaped a golden harvest. The first bank at which the fascinating game of faro was played in London was set up at Brooks' club about the year 1780 by four partners, two of whom—Lord Cholmondeley and Mr. Richard Thompson, in Yorkshire—realized enormous profits. It is said that each retired with

A SUM NOT LESS THAN £300,000.

But the other two partners could not resist the temptation of playing against the bank, and thus they lost upon one side what they gained on the other. "The partners," says Mr. Thomas Raikes, "would not trust the waiters to act as croupiers, but dealt the cards themseles, one after the other, being paid three guineas an hour out of the joint fund for doing so. At this rate Lord Cholmondeley and other men of high rank were to be seen slaving like menials until a late hour of the morning. Before long this celberated faro bank had ruined half the town. A Mr. Paul, who brought home a large fortune from India,

LOST £90,000 IN A SINGLE NIGHT, and, being ruined, went back to the East to make another fortune." Lord Cholmondeley, in short, occupied the position which at a later period was filled by Crockford, seeing that both held mortgages upon houses, lands and property of all descriptions. It was said, indeed, that Mr. Coke, of Holkham—an estate which lay not far from Lord Cholmondeley's seat of Houghton—wrote to his rapacious neighbor to say that, "wishing to feel easy as to his own property, which he had inherited from a long line of ancestors, and knowing the various claims which Lord Cholmondely possessed upon the propertice of others, he begged leave to inquire what sum he would be contented to receive as an indemnity for any claim he might hereafter think fit to make upon the Holkham estate." The answer of Lord Cholmondeley was couched in the same satirical vein. "With every wish," he replied, "to tranquilize the mind of an old and much-loved friend, he did not think that, in justice to his own family, he could consistently enter into any arrangement with Mr. Coke which might hereafter be detrimental to that family's interests." Of the scenes witnessed at the female faro clubs, very piquant descriptions appear in the "Memoirs of Sir Nathaniel Wraxall," in "Moore's Life of Sheridan," and in other contemporary works. "About thirty years ago," wrote the anonymous author of a pamphlet which appeared in 1874, "there was but one gaming club in London. It was regulated and respectable. Few of the members betted high. Ladies were admitted, but there was only one that played, and she was regarded as an abomination. At present, however, how many females attend, and how many set up their own card-tables? The effects are too clearly to be seen in the frequent divorces which disgrace this country, and in the shameless conduct of ladies of fashion since they took to gambling."

The first check administered to the "Female Jockey Club" came from the lips of Chief Justice Kenyon, when in summing up he exclaimed: "The vice of gambling has descended to the very lowest orders of the people, who have caught the infection from their superiors. I wish the latter could be punished. If any prosecutions are brought before me and the parties are convicted I can promise them that, whatever may be their rank and station in the country—even though they should be the first ladies in the land—they shall stand in the pillory as a warning to others." That threat of the pillory killed the private faro tables kept by ladies. To them succeeded the famous clubs kept by Watier and Graham, upon the ruins of which Crockford's ultimately arose. Watier's club was established in 1807, by Lord Headfort and Mr. Maddox, of Cheshire. A house was taken in Picadilly, at the corner of Bolton street, and Watier, a superlative cook, was put in charge. The dinners were so excellent that all the young men of fashion and fortune were eager to become members. Macao took the place of faro, as, in our own time, baccarat has superseded all its predecessors, and thousands of pounds changed hands every night. The club lived until 1819. Mr. John Maddox, one of its founders, cut his throat, and Graham's club arose in its place. It was here that a nobleman of ancient lineage was accused and convicted of and huadreds of men owed their ruin to the mania for play which they found opportunities of indulging at Graham's and Crockford's. No clubs of similar position now exist, but who that knows the metropolis well can doubt that gambling is as rife among us as ever? If we cross the Atlantic the verdict will be similar. The late John Morrissey, the most celebrated gambler of the United States, is credited with the dictum that nowhere in the world has the art of cheating at cards been carried to such perfection as at New York and Washington. It has long been notorious that American card-sharpers are in the habit of haunting the steamers which ply upon the Mississippi, and also those which run from New York to Liverpool and back. The monotony of life on board ship predisposes passengers to kill time with cards, and the professional gambler turns his opportunity to good account. Not unfrequently the captain of a transatlantic steamer gives some young green-horn a hint that he is playing with a sharper, who will strip him of his "bottom dollar" if they play long enough; but the good-natured warning is often given in vain. So long as ships run across the Atlantic, it is certain that dupes will play card and bet heavily upon the issue, and occasionally some despoiled victim will betake himself to a police court and let the world know how many hundreds of dollars he has been foolish enough to drop on his passage out.—London Telegraph.

CHEATING AT CARDS,

Marital Vengeance.

Immediately below Paris there is a large island on the Seine which extends from the Point de Courbevoie to Suresnes, and which is not less than a mile long. It is now known as the Isle de Rothschild, because it belongs to the wealthy Jewish banker. This island was in the latter part of the last century the scene of an act of marital vengeance, whose hero died only a month ago at the age of 109 years. His name was Yves Coriedies, and he was the last survivor of the war of the Vendee, as well as of the bands of brigands who were the terror of France during the directory. This veteran was born in 1774, and, after having fought bravely under Cathelieu for the royal cause against the republicans, retired to Brest at the end of the war and married a cousin who had a small fortune, and there he opened a small grocer shop. One night his wife eloped with the contents of the till and a gendarme. Yves determined to find the fugitives, and followed their trace on foot as far as Chartres, where, under the pretence of starvation, he enrolled himself with a band of brigands, who, during several years, carried on a successful campaign in the environs of that city. The chief was at last captured and guillotined, and then the band dispersed.

Yves, who had not forgotten his revenge, had now a snug little capital saved up from his share in the the plunder of the band. Accompanied by two comrades, he again began a search for his faithless wife, and at last succeeded in tracing her and her lover, who had gone into the milling busines on what is now the Isle de Rothschild. Yves and his two accomplices succeeded in surprising the ex-gendarme and his wife, and, having stripped them naked and fastened them down to the floor, they filled the room with straw, which they set on fire, and then went away and left the couple to their fate. After having satisfied his vengeance in this horrible manner, Yves Coriedie succeeded in escaping to Belgium, thence to England, where he made a moderate fortune. After the restoration he returned to France and settled down at Vannes. It was only through a manuscript entitled "History of My Life," which he left to his heirs, that the facts which I have just related became known.—Paris Cor.

How Old may a Man Live!

In a Bessarabian province lives one Savtchuk, who, at last accounts, was one hundred and thirty years old. He is what is called a little Russian by birth. His eldest son is eighty-seven years old, and is far more decrepit than the father. The one family is multiplied into fifty families. The age of the Russian is, of course, not as well authenticated as that of old Parr, the Englishman. It has been noted that reported cases of extreme old age always occur in the ranks of the very poor, whose date of birth can rarely be verified, while kings, nobles and members of noted families, whose records are kept, in no age or country have ever lived a hundred years. Generalizing from this fact, a distinguished English writer, Mr. Lewes, gives it, as his judgment, that it is very doubtful if any human being can claim the distinction of being a centenarian. Yet from the analogy of the animal races, every child that is well born should live a century. The rule seem to be that animals live five times the length of their adolescence, that is, they ought to live five times longer than the period it takes to attain their full growth. There is no question but what the whole human race does not enjoy the health and vigor which it is possible to attain. There is some defect in the constitution of even the strongest of our race. In the golden age of humanity yet to come, every child will be well born. Its life and habits will conform to the scientific laws controlling our existence on this earth, and then men's environment will help him to achieve the highest possible physical vitality. To-day the great bulk of the human race are born with weak strains in their blood. They eat improper food, use hurtful stimulants as drink. They are poisoned by malarias and subject to contagions due to their surroundings. The two great objects of the best men and women in this life should be first to improve the race itself, morally and physically, and secondly, to make this earth on which man lives a fit abode for the superior people who will then occupy it.

Interested in Animals.

A four-year old boy was warned against eating meat for supper on account of its liability to produce bad dreams, but he still insisted on doing it. A few mornings ago the youngster was telling his last dream at the breakfast table. Bears had surrounded him, snakes had crawled down his back, a camel had turned a summersault over him, and a big elephant had assaulted him, etc.

"There," said his uncle, "I told you if you ate meat at tea time you would have bad dreams."

"I don't care," promptly replied the boy; "I guess I want to see a circus once in a while."

Bringing a Bashful Pair Together.

Jabez Lewis, of Williamstown, Mass., is 94 years old, has buried five wives, and says he would like to marry again if he could find a girl to suit him. We must send Jabez the address of Miss Sabra Phillips, a maiden of Norwood, R. I., who has just finished her 100th year, lives alone, does her own housework, saws wood for her own fire, and carries it home on her back from the woods.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

"When does a man become a seamstress?" "When he hems and haws." "No." "When he threads his way." "No." "When he rips and tears." "No." "Give it up." "Never, if he can help it."

BOUSEHOLD HINTS.

Here is a new way to preserve eggs. A rancheress of Washoe Valley, Nevada, has invented a novel method of preserving eggs for winter use. During the summer she breaks the eggs, pours the contents into bottles which are tightly corked and sealed, when they are placed in the cellar, neck down. She claims the contents of the bottles come out as fresh as when put in.

South America is destined to be the next great beef-producing region of the world. It is estimated that in two years from now the number of cattle in the Argentine confederation will number twenty-eight million against thirteen million in 1877. The enormons increase in the number of cattle has brought down the price so that good fat steers are selling at $6 to $8.

Little cakes, called "love knots," are nice for tea: Five cups of flour, two of sugar, one of butter, a piece of lard the size of an egg, two eggs, three tablespoonsful of sweet milk, half a teaspoonful of soda; rub the butter, sugar, and flour together fine, add the other ingredients, roll thin, cut in stripes one inch wide and five inches long, lay across in true love knots, and bake in a quick oven.

TO MAKE GOOD COFFEE.—Use a tin percolator. Take plenty of coffee, pour boiling water on it very slowly; meanwhile the percolator must stand in a hot place, so that the coffee does not get cold during the making. I grind my coffee at the last moment, and use no chicory. In France it is very usual to make at least two days' supply at a time, and to warm up the coffee when required, taking care not to boil it. I always do this and am frequently told how remarkably good my coffee is.

Bad Teeth and Dyspepsia.

While every one is liable to suffer at times with indigestion, no matter how well preserved their dental organs may have been, there cannot be found to-day one whose teeth are decayed, broken off, and out of order generally, that does not suffer continually with "heart-burn" or some of the multifarious gastric troubles incident to such a condition of the oral cavity.

Persons having no teeth, or those whose teeth have been neglected and allowed to become diseased, are unable to masticate their food properly, which is deficiently mixed with saliva (a very essential auxiliary in the digestion of solid substances,) and therefore, this food, being carried into the stomach without proper trituration and insalivation, imposes double duty upon the gastric apparatus—that of mastication and digestion.

Again, carious teeth serve for lodgment of particles of food which are retained in and about the organs until fermentation is set up. Friends, did you ever think of it, those whose teeth are rotten and rotting, that your mouths are regular cesspools? And this putrescent matter is conveyed into the stomach continually with the saliva, and consequently produces an irritation of the lining membrane, which is the worst and not uncommon form of dyspepsia, which is impossible to cure (not even with the 999,999,999 patent medicines now in the market), until the deutal organs have first received proper attention. Indeed, cases of dyspepsia of years' standing have been permanently cured by judicious attention to the oral cavity, and without medicinal agents to any extent; when, on the contrary, all the medicines that can be given will not effect a cure until the cause is removed.

Nay, more than this; in all mouths where there are tartar-covered and decaying teeth, there are millions of leptothrices buccalese (microscopic parasites), which are also carried into the alimentary canal, and, it may be, produces other complicated and serious diseases the origin of many of which are now unknown.

The Moral Influence of Good Cooking.

Some people may be inclined to smile at what I am about to say, viz., that savory dishes, hard-working man's ordinary fare, afford considerable moral, as well as physical advantage.

An instructive experience of my own, will illustrate this. When wandering alone through Norway, in 1856, I lost the track in crossing the Kyolen fjeld, struggled on for twenty-three hours without food or rest, and arrived in sorry plight at Lom, a very wild region. After a few hours' rest, I pushed on to a still wilder region and still rougher quarters, and continued thus to the great Jostedal table-land, an unbroken glacier of five hundred square miles; then descended the Jostedal itself to its opening on the Sogne ford—five days of extreme hardships, with no other food than flathrod (very course oatcake,) and bilberries gathered on the way, varied on one occasion with the luxury of two raw turnips. Then I reached a comparatively luxurious station, Ronnei, where ham and eggs and claret were obtainable. The first glass of claret produced an effect that alarmed me—a craving for more and for stronger drink, that was almost irresistible. I finished a bottle of St. Julien, and nothing but a violent effort of will prevented me from then order ing some brandy.

I attribute this to the exhaustion consequent upon the excessive work, and insufficient, unsavory food on the previous five days. I have made many subsequent observations on the victims of alcohol, and have no doubt that overwork, and scanty, tasteless food, are the primarysource of the craving for strong drink thatso largely prevails with such deplorable results among the class that is the most exposed to such privation. I do not say that this is the only source of such depraved appetite. It may also be engendered by the opposite extreme of excessive luxurious pandering to general sensuality.

The practical inference suggested by this experience and these observations, is, that speech-making, pledge-signing, and blue-ribbon missions can only effect temporary results, unless supplemented by satisfying the natural appetite of hungry people by supplies of food that is not only nutritious, but savory and varied. Such food need be no more expensive than that which is commonly eaten by the poorest Englishman, but it must be far better cooked.—Popular Science Monthly.

Why are babies like new flannel? Because they shrink from washing.

ALL SORTS.

What is it has a mouth and never speaks, and a bed and never sleeps? A river.

A goat ought to be a first-class material for oleomargarine. There is no better butter than the goat.

Laureate Tennyson wrote his first verses where the average saloon-keeper puts his reverses—on a slate.

Courting a girl is paying her addresses. Marriage is paying for her dresses and all the other fixings.

There is one good thing about leap year, and that is that leap year jokes can only be used once in four years.

A Yankee editor, observing that "the census embraces 17,000,000 women," asks: "Who wouldn't be a census."

Counterfeit silver dollars are floating about the city.—Hartford Times. Those that float are not good, of course.

The man who said that he "couldn't see it" when asked by his wife to buy her a pair of diamond ear-rings was stone blind.

A Western paper alludes to an opera star as a diamond-throated songstress. It probably alludes to the precious tones in her throat.

"Have you seen my dear love?" sings Ella Wheeler. We have indeed, and he was eating ice cream with another girl. There, now! Don't bother us any more.

Candid sportsman—"Boy, you've been at this whiskey!" Boy who has brought the luncheon basket—"Na! The cooark wadna come oot!"

The Chinese are badly in need of gunboats and it is possible that if we move quickly we may be able to trade our navy for a couple of genuine antique vases, which will hold water if they won't float.

A medical writer says that girls are so constructed that they cannot jump. If he is a respectable young man, let him propose matrimony to one of the girls, and he'll soon see her jump—at the offer.

A young man in Central Illinois lost six ounces of brain last week and still lives. Brain is a drug on the market in this State. —Chicago News. Not wholly a drug, we imagine, but badly adulterated.

"What will you think of your beautiful wife twenty or thirty years from now?—that is the question," according to Mgr. Capel, it is certainly a hard one, especially if a fellow has not one now as a basis for the computation.

The Indians who sell hay to the government out West have been detected placing large rocks in the bales. That comes of teaching the Indians to read, so they can study the daily papers and become posted in the tricks of the whites.

We read of a child, only 3 years old, who can speak the Chinese language distinctly. There are many persons in this country, 60 years old, who don't understand a word of that language. The child, by the way, has Chinese parents and lives in China.

A scientific journal says that "a psychic man does not receive what is pneumatic or spiritual." A "psychic" man doesn't have much appetite to receive any kind of food—pneumatic or spiritual—but when he recovers he should shoot the man who spell sick, "psychic." It is the worst orthographical outrage we ever saw.

Female Oddities.

Nor must we forget, says a writer in The Manhattan, that if there are women who strive to unsex themselves by becoming too masculine, so are there men who most effectually unsex themselves by a general emasculation of dress and manner, which would readily strike a stranger from another planet as representing a transition period between the sexes. If a mannish woman offends our good taste and judgment, a womanish men is an insipid embodiment of nothingness, and ought to be treated as a zoological curiosity representing some hitherto unknown family of the asinary genus. From these considerations it therefore follows that if there are female oddities who furnish the weapons of satire to those who are opposed to the advancement of woman, there are also masculine oddities who show how closely a man can sometimes resemble a monkey. Touching the important questions of life in the most remote and superficial manner, and representing a phase which can not be seriously treated, these peculiar creatures excite our risibility, and cause us to abandon ourselves to the calms of Democritus, the laughing philosopher. Much as the study of these superficialities may amuse us, they do not, however, and they can not, reach those strata of evidence from which we must draw our conclusions if we desire to be philosophical and consistent.

Shocking Cruelty to a Child.

At the Thames police court recently, Emma West and Willfam West, living in Lydia street, White Horse lane, Stepney, were brought up on remand charged with cruelly torturing and ill-using their nephew, Charles Martin, aged 9 years, and not providing him with adequate food and clothing. The prisoners had been formally remanded for a week to see how the unfortunate child progressed in Mile-end Infirmary, but as he had become worse it was thought requisite to take the boy's deposition in case of death. Mr. Biron, the magistrate, accompanied by Mr. Williams, the clerk, went to Mile-end Infirmary to take his deposition. The boy's statement, taken down by George Young, chief inspector of the H division at Arbour square, is as follows: "My name is Charles Martin, and I am eight years of age. I know when I am good I shall go to God, but if I tell a lie I shall not. I have lived with uncle and aunt for two years. My uncle has struck me on the nose with a slipper, and kicked me on the head. He held me and beat me, and kept me without food, because he wanted to get rid of me. He tied my hands with tarry ropes, and fastened me to a bedstead, and I was kept without food. My aunt helped to hold my hands, and held them over a lighted lamp, burning my fingers. The cuts on my hands and arms were caused by the ropes that my uncle and aunt tied me up with." Poobably the charge may resolve itself into manslaughter, and Mr. Biron again remanded the prisoners for a week to see how the unfortunate child progressed.—London Daily News.

TELL-TALE VENUS.

She Gives Away the Secret of the G ing Sunset.

For several weeks past there has be vast amount of speculation concerning causes producing the crimson glories o western skies at twilight's poetic h Sages have pondered long and deeply the mysterious problem; scientists wearied their practiced eyes gazing thr their spectroscopes upon the brilliant assumed by the tired day when abou sink into the arms of restful night; the ing and floating ashes of mighty volca the smoke from burning forests, hith unknown magnetic disturbances at frozen north pole, and various other the have been advanced as the cause of phenomena.

Learning that a professor at the Co Medical college had a theory, a Chronic porter proceeded to investigate it, so the public apprehension of dire cala being evolved from the luminous hea might be set at rest. At five o'clock evening the professor was found in an u room of the college building, waiting, a telescope in hand, for the star Ven emerge just above the crimson-hued at phere of the western horizon. Soon goddess appeared low in the sky, outshi in brilliancy all others of the starry soon to follow.

"We will observe Venus now through telescope before she is affected by the of crimson below," said the professor. " will observe that she now presents her u normal appearance of bluish-white, wi mild yellow glow similar to that of moon."

The star of the eve was found to s just as the professor predicted.

"Now," continued the professor, "I pose to show you what I believe to be cause of the rare crimson sunsets we hav perienced recently, and to do so by ob ing Venus later, as her light is refle through the intervening atmosphere, wh in my opinion, contains an unusual quan of aqueous vapor that acts as prisms. other words, we will find from her a tinuous spectrum. Spectrum in phy does not mean a ghost, as the word m dicate, but the rainbow colors obta when the light of the sun or any other liant object is allowed to pass through in a prismate form, through drops of liq or through vapor. Rain drops act prisms, and hence we have the spect in the sky in the form of a rainbow. light from Venus passing through this atmosphere is refracted, and we will see rainbow colors, red on one side, then yellow and blue. This to me is satisfac evidence that the red glow contains aqu vapors in larger quantities than usual."

After receiving this explanation from professor an hour was passed by the repo in star-gazing. Beauteous Venus was m nified by the telescope many times her parent size as viewed by the naked Sure enough, the evening queen took u herself the prismatic colors of the rain just as the professor had stated; at time her upper third would be a bright her lower third blue, while a band of yel divided the two; again, in a moment red and the blue would change places; a from the star would flash prismatic colo a triangle of varied hues would seem hang from her lower disc an instant to pear the next about her. So, until the light had deepened into darkness and glow in the west had become purple, di colors come and go, and the tell-tale V thus revealed the secret and vexatious blem of how the crimson sunsets are ca —San Francisco Chronicle.

How the Japanese Restore Faded Flowers.

After a bouquet is drooping beyond all r edies of fresh water the Japanese can b it back to all its first glory by a simple seemingly most destructive operation. recent visitor to Japan says: "I had rec d some days ago a delightful bundle flowers from a Japanese acquaintance. T continued to live in all their beauty nearly two weeks, when at last they fa Just as I was about to have them thr away the same gentleman (Japanese ger man) came to see me. I showed him faded flowers and told him that, tho lasting a long time they had now bec useless. 'Oh, no,' said he, 'only pu ends of the stem into the fire, and they be as good as before.' I was incredulo so he took them himself and held the ste ends in the fire until they were charred.

This was in the morning; at evening t were again looking fresh and vigorous. have continued so for another week. W may be true agents in this reviving pro I am unable to determine fully; whethe be the heat driving once more the juices into every leaflet and vein, or whe it be the bountiful supply of carbon nished by the charring. I am inclined h evdr, to the latter cause, as the full ef was not produced until some eight h afterwards, and as it seems that if the h was the principal agent it must have b sooner followed by visible changes.

The Duke and the Toll-Keeper.

When a Scot meets a Scot, then comes tug of war. The late Duke of Buccle on one occasion, preferred riding on ho back, and unattended. He came to a gate.

"The toll, sir, gin you please," said gate-keeper.

His Grace pulled up, and, while searc for the needful, he was accosted by the g keeper.

"Heard ye ony word o' the duke com this way the day, sir?"

"Yes," was the reply, "he will be way to-day."

"Will he be in a coach an' four, or in a carriage and twa, think ye?"

"In all probability on horseback," the rejoinder.

"In that case, do you think that he be offended gin I offered him back change should he gave me a sixpence shilling to pay wi' as he passed?"

The duke stretched forth his hand to ceive the balance, and, with an arch knowing look, replied:

"Try him, friend, try him," and poc ed his coppers, muttering to himself: " to be done in that way!"

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items of News from all Parts of the World.

CANADIAN.

A pilgrimage to the Holy Land is being organized by Rev. Able Provencher, of Three Rivers, and thirty names have been entered.

Sir Richard Cartwright has been unanimously elected for South Huron, and will take his seat at the opening of the next sessions of the House of Commons.

A railway from Sherbrooke, P. Q., to Magog, a distance of about a dozen miles, is about completed. Large calico printing works are being established at the latter place.

A man named Patrick McCarthy choked to death in Toronto while eating his Christmas dinner. A piece of meat stuck in his throat, and before relief could be procured he was dead.

They had to dispense with the organ music at Holy Trinity church in Toronto on Christmas. The water pipe in connection with the organ was frozen up and music was at a stand still in consequence.

A young son of the Rev. Dr. Wardrope, of Guelph, Ont., aged 19, was accidentally shot in that city. A man named Murray was showing his gun at the time. Another of the "didn't know it was loaded" accidents.

The Ontario and Quebec railway is rapidly approaching completion. The rails for the entire distance from Toronto to Perth have been laid. Trains have not been yet arranged for, and may not be until next spring.

A woman named Mrs. Moore was burned to death in Perth. When first seen her clothes were all aflame, and she was so terribly burned that she died a few hours later. It is supposed that she had been drinking. A husband was arrested as an accessory.

A young man, named James Yates, whose home is near Collingwood, stopped at the Queen's Hotel, Toronto, on his way home from Manitoba. He blew the gas out at night, and was discovered near suffocated that he could not be revived again, though he did all that could be done.

The town of Watford has had a house to house canvass for the last fifteen years with a total of 141 new; the total cost of erecting farm buildings, stock, implements, etc., $25,000. The number of failures for several years past range from one to five, with a cost of from twenty-five to eighty-nine and a half cents on the dollar.

Of the cause of the deafness of the Princess Louise Caroline Alberta, it is said that in the small village of Verennes there are 63 inhabitants of over 80 years old each. The ages of some of them are given as follows: Madame Pierre, of Contrecoeur, 95 years; Madame Bessy, of Chambly, 90; Madame Marie Louise of St. Sebastien, 85, and Madame Lefebvre, another sister, of the same age.

[illegible] was married near Toronto [illegible] Gibbs [illegible] Stouffville. She lived alone and [illegible] Thursday last. She was found [illegible] body across her own [illegible]. It is supposed murder had been committed [illegible] body was [illegible]. It likely is supposed to have been [illegible] the deed. The evidence [illegible] does not point very conclusively [illegible] any person known.

The shipping of cattle by export is getting to be a vast industry in Canada. It is now only second to the lumber trade, and during the past year has brought about $10,000,000 into the country. Such a good showing is highly encouraging, especially with the business yet in its infancy. Ontario is the home of fine cattle, but other parts of the Dominion, especially the North-west Territories, will yet vie with her in the production of prime beeves and in the possession of unexcelled stock raisers.

UNITED STATES.

In Chicago it is reported that there were not less than 720 divorces granted during 1883.

H. Henry Billings, a wealthy Vermonter, has given $10,000 for the new library building of the University of Vermont.

A big fire occurred at St. Louis, Missouri, on Christmas eve, destroying nearly half a million dollars worth of property.

Chicago spends some $50,000 a week in amusements. It contains eleven regular theatres, five museums, and thirteen concert halls of a respectable order, besides many low class show places.

An avalanche snow slide occurred at one of the mines near Ouray, in Colorado, burying a number of miners, who lost their lives. A relief party went to the rescue next day and after digging two wounded, they started for home with four dead bodies on a sleigh. They were struck by another avalanche and narrowly escaped death. The sleigh with the bodies was hurled over a precipice five hundred feet and must remain there until next spring.

At McDade, in Texas, three men were recently taken out of a saloon and lynched. One of the victims was under arrest for burglary and the other two were in his company at the time, one being under indictment for horse stealing. The next day six friends of the victims, came to the town to avenge the hanging. There was a fusillade of revolvers and three of the six were shot dead during the fray, the others making their escape. One young man, a resident of the place, was also shot dead. There were now five dead bodies in the town hall that night, and more trouble was feared.

A good story going the rounds of the European press is that of a traveller who found it necessary to excuse his inability to join in the hilarity of the other travellers because of his poverty. "Gentlemen," said he, "I know I'm more or less of a saturated idiot on this party, but the fact is, I'm a very poor man—steeped to the lips, I may say, in impecuniosity. When I tell you in strict confidence that this is my wedding tour, and I have been compelled to leave my wife at home, you can form an idea of the narrowness of my resources."

Poultry Raising as a Business.

There is just now much interest in poultry raiting, and a disposition to take it up on a large scale. The following extract from one of our recent letters will give an idea of the many inquiries made of us: "Is poultry raising a profitable business, and would you advise a young man to invest one thousand dollars in it?" This might be answered in brief: Poultry are profitable, and we would not advise a young man (nor an old one) to at once invest one thousand dollars in it. Farmers find the poultry yard the most profitable part of the farm, in proportion to the capital invested, Many reckon in this way: If fifty fowls are profitable, five hundred will be ten times as profitable. This is an instance in which figures do not tell the truth. As soon as the number of fowl is doubled, troubles are quadrupled. A range and houses which will keep fifty in perfect health, will be overcrowded with one hundred, and all the troubles due to a dense population will follow. While we believe that poultry keeping on a large scale may be made profitable, capital to purchase birds and build houses is not the only thing needful. Those who undertake the business must give their whole time and attention to it. One point is well settled—fowls cannot be kept together in large numbers and thrive. The whole matter requires careful study and experiment. The beginner should start in a small way, and increase as success seems to warrant it. The point to be determined at the outset is: Shall eggs or dressed fowls be the object? Each requires a very different management throughout, though the two may, in a measure, be united. Starting with abundant capital and no experience will surely end in failure. The best works upon poultry management insist upon keeping fowls in small flocks: this is regarded essential to success.—P. H. Jacobs, in Am. Agriculturist.

Strange Bible Facts.

The learned Prince of Granada, heir to the Spanish throne, imprisoned by order of the Crown, for fear he should aspire to the throne, was kept in solitary confinement in the old prison at the Place of Skulls, Madrid. After thirty-three years in this living tomb, death came to his release, and the following remarkable researches taken from the Bible, and marked with an old nail on the rough walls of his cell, told how the brain sought employment through the weary years.

In the Bible the word Lord is found 1,853 times: the word Jehovah 6,855 times, and the word Reverend but once, and that in the 9th verse of the exith Psalm. The 8th verse of the cxviith Psalm is the middle verse of the Bible. The 9th verse of the viiith chapter of Esther is the longest verse; 35th verse, xith chapter of St. John is the shortest. In the cviith Psalm four verses are alike, the 8th, 15th, 21st and 31st. Each verse of the cxxxvith Psalm ends alike. No names or words with more than six syllables are found in the Bible. The xxxviith chapter of Isaiah and xixth chapter of 2nd Kings are alike. The word Girl occurs but once in the Bible, and that in the 3rd verse and iiird chapter of Joel. There are found in both books of the Bible, 3,566,480 letters, 773,693 words, 31,373 verses, 1,189 chapters and 66 books. The xxvith chapter of the Acts of the Apostles is the finest chapter to read. The most beautiful chapter in the Bible is the xxiind Psalm. The four most inspiring promises are John xivth chapter and 2nd verse, John vith chapter and 37th verse, St. Matthew xith chapter and 28th verse, and xxxviith Psalm, 4th verse. The 1st verse of the lxth chapter of Isaiah is the one for the new convert. All who flatter themselves with vain boastings of their perfectness should learn the vith chapter of Matthew. All humanity should learn the vith chapter of St. Luke, from the 20th verse to its ending.

Woman's Lot in India.

Mrs. L. C. Griffin, who has been for years a missionary in Hindostan, recently returned to America to recuperate. To a reporter of the St. Paul Pioneer Press she described woman's life in India. She says: "The government of the house of Brahmin is strictly in the hands of the man; of the father during the youth of the family, and of the eldest son after he marries. The son always takes the son home to the paternal roof, and as the sons marry additions are built to the house until it often becomes a village in itself. In this place the women are imprisoned — literally buried alive. From the day of their marriage, which is at a very early age, they never see more of the outer world than the narrow expanse of sky and cloud that looks down upon them between the walls of their prison home. No men are allowed to enter the house but the members of the family and the priest, except on very rare occasions, and then unseen by the women. Married at 10 years—for spinsterhood is abominable—mothers at 12, they are faded and old at the beginning of their fifth lustrum. They die of sheer old age at about 30."

Mob Violence Threatened.

Henry L. Curtin, jr., aged 25, of one of the best families in Petersburg, Va., was murdered recently within sixty feet of his home. He clerked in a store, and was ap proaching the house when Charles Harvey, a loafer, who was concealed behind a tree fired two shots, which took effect in Curtin's head and killed him instantly. Harvey then robbed the body of some money and a watch and fled, but was subsequently captured and jailed. There was blood on his boots. There is much feeling against him on account of the estimable qualities of young Curtin.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere

Philadelphia ladies are learning base ball. One of them has caught her husband out several times already.

For brilliancy, durability, economy and simplicity of use, the Triangular Dyes stand pre-eminent. Equally reliable in dark and light shades. Try one package and be convinced. 10c.

THE BILIOUS,

dyspeptic or constipated, should address with two stamps for pamphlet, WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo N. Y.

Huxley says "there was a time when men walked on all fours." He probably alludes to that interesting time in the early life of us all when we approached a neighbor's melon patch from the back way.

Who has not seen the fair, fresh young girl transformed in a few months into the pale, haggard, dispirited woman? The sparkling eyes are dimmed, and the ringing laugh heard no more. Too often the causes are disorders of the system which Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" would remedy in a short time. Remember, that the "Favorite Prescription" will unfailingly cure all "female weaknesses," and restore health and beauty. By all druggists. Send three stamps for Dr. Pierce's treatise on diseases of Women (96 pages). Address WORLD'S MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

"A never-failing spring," as the boy remarked when the schoolmaster jumped from his seat, which had been previously inoculated with a bent pin.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have frequent headache, mouth tastes bad, poor appetite, tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver, or "biliousness." Nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." By all druggists.

Flies have their uses. Their persistency in lighting on unprotected noses lessens the amount of piano practice in summer time, when all the windows are open.

Creelsburg, Dakota, is just about one hundred days old, and has christened itself the Saratoga of Dakota, the inhabitants having noticed a very unpleasant taste in the water.

WHAT CHICAGO'S HORSE DEALERS SAY.—The unanimous opinion of all the principal dealers in horses in Chicago, who handle some 10,000 horses annually, is that the grade Percheron-Normans are superior to all other draft breeds for city use; that they sell for higher prices than the English draft, Clydesdale, or any other draft horse, and they advise the farmers of the West to breed the Percheron-Norman stallions if they wish to raise the most desirable horses for the Chicago market.—Chicago Tribune. M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, Ill., has imported from France and bred in their purity nearly 1,400 Percheron-Normans, 390 of which during the past few months.

A New York girl has made $150,000 by a single oil transaction. A can of it exploded and killed her rich aunt.

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

An exchange says that chickens can be bought in Florida for four cents apiece. It doesn't say how big the pieces are.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator, Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

In another column is published from a well-known gentleman, an acknowledgement of the benefit he derived from the use of Dr. Hoffman's German Bitters.

A. P. 158.

$10 TO $300 BUYS CANADIAN County rights to manufacture and sell valuable invention required in every house, etc.; endorsed by highest authority; no competition; profits 200 per cent; specially suited for woodenware trades. Address J. BADGER, Rockville Centre, Long Island, N. Y.

MATTHEWS BROS. & CO., 93 YONGE Street, Toronto. Mail prepaid, assorted packages of beautiful Christmas and New Year Cards.

25 cards, assorted,	mostly small,	$ 25
25 cards, assorted,	medium,	50
25 cards, assorted,	larger,	1.00
25 cards, assorted,	fine,	2.00

No two cards alike. Cash to be sent with order.

$100,000 TO LOAN

On first-class farm property at lowest rates. Farmers will save money by applying by mail direct to me,

E. E. KNOTT,
48 Adelaide St., East, Toronto.

F. E. DIXON & CO.,
Manufacturers of Star Rive
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto
Large double Driving Belts a specialty. en for Price Lists and Discounts.

1883-St. John Exhibition-1883

Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose, &c. Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas. The highest of all Awards for Leather Belting and Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the Judges at the St. John Centennial and Dominion Exhibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, over all competitors.

THE QUEEN'S LAUNDRY BAR.

ASK FOR IT AND TAKE NO OTHER.

Beware of Imitations.

TRADE MARK Made by The Albert Toilet Soap Co.

$11.90 —FOR— 25c. Extraordinary Bargain.

On receipt of only 25c we will mail, postpaid, 34 pieces comprising 48 pages of full size sheet music, bound together in one volume. Names of Vocal pieces:— All on account of Eliza; A Warrior Bold; The Country Lad; Nancy Lee; Chorus of Charity Girls; Drummer's Song; The Judge's Song; The Love-Sick Boy; Wnoa Emma; Two Bad Men; Man in the Moon; Johnny Morgan; The Gleaners; Torpedo and the Whale; I Saw Her in the Violet Time; Five O'Clock in the Morning; My Love She's but a Lassie Yet; Adieu, Dear Home; Dame Babble; and 15 pieces of Instrumental Music, comprising new and popular dance music, selections from different Operas, Marches, &c., &c. All the above and our handsome new Chromo Lithograph in colors of the Lord's Prayer and 10 Commandments, sent post-paid for 25c. As a holiday offer we will also send free 10 Christmas Cards, 50 money making receipts and a pack of Age Cards. Order quick. You get all the above for 25c, or 5 lots for $1.00; 1 doz. for $2.00. Cut this out and return with order.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical [illegible], generally, this great remedy has no [illegible]. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

PECTORIA! Pectoria, Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per Bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria; all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

"I understand that you referred to me as a pig, sir," remarked a pompous, elderly gentleman to a young man who had spoken disparagingly of him to a third person. "You have been misinformed, sir," replied the young man; "I hope that I know better than to refer to a person of your advanced age as a pig."

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

Dominion Line of Steamships.

Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every alternate Thursday during the winter months.

Ontario,	Dec. 27.	Sarnia,	Jan. 17.
Toronto,	Jan. 5.	Montreal,	Jan. 24.
Dominion,	Jan. 10.	Oregon,	Jan. 31.

Rates of passage: Cabin, Portland to Liverpool according to steamer and berth, $50, $60, $70, return, $90, $110, $130; all outside rooms and comfortably heated by steam. Intermediate $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus:* are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent, or local agents of the Company, or to

DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black silks, that is our dollar silk will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50, silk only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50, blanket for $4; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $1.75, net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL dry-goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures; all goods sold for cash only. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS! or a 10 cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, shirtings, grey flannels, table napkins A. B. FLINT 35 Colborne Street, Toronto

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS, silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and Cloored, cashmeres, tweeds, cloakings. A. B. FLINT, 25 Colborne Street, Toronto.

THE BEST

HORSE REMEDIES

are those made

TRADE MARK.

THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO

Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5. 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c.; 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment, 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th Street, N.Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to

ELLI SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.
PERCHERON HORSES
WORTH $2,500,000.00
Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,
35 miles West of Chicago on C. & N.-W. R'y.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION

Provides $2.50 to $10.00 a week in case of sickness or accident, at a cost of from $0.75 to $3.00 per quarter. For particulars enclose stamp to the secretary, Toronto, Ont.

AGENTS WANTED.

THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by

THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.,
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN TO grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hip, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church St., Toronto.

TINSMITHS' GOODS.

TIN PLATE—Different Brands and Sizes.
TINNED SHEETS— do do
CANADA PLATE—Pen and other Brands.
INGOT TIN—Lamb and Flag and Straits.
GALVANIZED IRON—"Davies," "Avon," &c.
And STAMPED GOODS, CHEAP.
For Sale by COPLAND & McLAREN,
MONTREAL.

BEAVER S. S. LINE.

WEEKLY BETWEEN
Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
Sam. Osborne & Co., 40 Yonge street Toronto.

ELM CITY HARNESS OIL

BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.

Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it.

F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONTARIO.
Sole Agents for the Dominion

AN ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Write to the Author if you wish.

Andrew Dinsmore, the well-known agriculturist of Grey County, Ont., one of the most extensive importers and breeders of thoroughbred stock, who resides on his fine stock-farm near Thornbury, writes: For over ten years I suffered intensely with dyspepsia and waterbrash, my life was one of misery. I procured advice and medicine from the best physicians in Canada, without benefit; my case was said to be incurable. I then gave a fair trial to almost every patent medicine recommended. None, however, relieved me until I tried Hoffman's German Bitters, the first dose gave me instant relief, it appeared to go to the right place, soothing and healing the soreness. I am able to eat almost anything I desire now. A fifty cent bottle has been worth thousands to me.

100 BEAUTIFUL SONGS 10c.

A new collection, embracing a number of the most popular songs of the day. Among them are, We Never Speak as We Pass By;—Over the Garden Wall,—Kerry Dance,—Warrior Bold,—Blue Alsatian Mountains,—Only a Blossom from her Grave,—Three Old Maids of Lee,—Flirting in the Starlight,—Grandmother's Old Easy Chair,—Don't Drink my Boy To-night, and 90 others, comprising Home songs, Comic Songs, Sentimental songs, Children's songs, etc. All are printed on nice paper, and are bound in a book with colored cover. Remember, we send the entire collection of 100 Songs for only 10c., three books for 25c., 1 doz., 75; 1c. or 2c. stamps taken.

JAMES LEE & CO, Montreal, P.Q.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
OF THE
WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among the Largest and Fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety, Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect: and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself.

For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto.

CONSUMPTION!

Asthma, Bronchitis, Throat Diseases, and Catarrh.

Together with diseases of the Eye, Ear and Heart, successfully treated at the

Ontario Pulmonary Institute, 274
276 and 278 Jarvis street, Toronto, Ont.
M. HILTON WILLIAMS, M.D., M.C.P.S.O.,
PROPRIETOR.

Our system of practice is by Medicated Inhalations, combined with proper constitutional remedies. Over 40,000 cases treated during the past 18 years.

If impossible to call personally for an examination, write for list of Questions and a copy of our new Medical Treatise. Address, ONTARIO PULMONARY INSTITUTE, 274, 276 and 278 Jarvis Street, Toronto, Ontario.

FUN AND MYSTERY

ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS.

Have you seen it? The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks, Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards;" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards: the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music; 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.

ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail, postpaid. Two Packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

Agents 1884 Wanted

READ THIS.

THE GREAT DOLLAR PAPER,

The Weekly Globe

FROM NOW TO END OF 1884

ONLY ONE—$1.00—DOLLAR.

The Foremost Journal in the Dominion.

THE * DAILY * GLOBE

THE GREAT CANADIAN PAPER.

Has the most extensive and influential circulation in British America, is noted for its extensive Cable and Telegraphic News, and is the great authority upon Commercial and Financial Matters throughout the Dominion.

SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year, . . . $7.00 | Half Year, . . . $3.50

Quarter Year, ... $1.75.

The Paper for the Farmer.

In order to increase our already large list of yearly subscribers to THE WEEKLY GLOBE, we make the following liberal and magnificent offer to every reader of this advertisement who wishes to take advantage of it at once.

For $3.50 we will send to any address in Canada or the U. S.,

THE WEEKLY GLOBE

from now to end of December, 1884, and in addition, A HANDSOME NICKEL OPEN-FACED STEM-WINDING WATCH.

The Watch is of convenient size; it is neat in appearance; it is a stem-winder, consequently requires no key; it is dust-proof, and a good time-keeper.

The above price includes postage upon Watch to any address in Canada or the United States. This offer only holds good until January 20th, 1884. We will start shipping watches on October 15th. Remittances should be sent at once, so as to enable us to procure necessary supply and fill orders with as little delay as possible. Address,

THE GLOBE PRINTING CO, (Limited),

TORONTO

The Great Dollar Paper.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

MARKDALE

Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-1y

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,

CHEESE, SALMON,

LOBSTERS, SARDINES

In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NORTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.				Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	3 30	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

MISCELLANEOUS.

Prejudice is the reason of fools.

Health is the vital principle of bliss.

Faith is a higher faculty than reason.

If we build high let us begin low and deep.

Discretion of speech is more than eloquence.

The great man is he who does not lose his child's heart.

Indolence is the rust of the mind and the inlet of every vice.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best Salve in the world for cuts, bruises sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by A. Turner & Co.

The weakest spot of every man is where he thinks himself the strongest.

The progress of rivers to the ocean is not so rapid as that of man to error.

That action is best that procures the greatest happiness for the greatest numbers.

A LIFE SAVING PRESENT.

Mr. M. E Allison, Hutchinson, Kan.: Saved his life by a simple Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, for Consumption, which caused him to procure a large bottle, that completely cured him, when Doctors, change of climate and everything else had failed. Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, it is guaranteed to cure. Trial bottles free at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store. Large size $1.00. 1

A certain amount of distrust is wholesome, but not so much of others as of ourselves.

Where we may not be able to expirate an evil, it is still our duty to do what we can to lessen it.

One distinguished mark of man's steady advancement is the increasing vigour of his warfare against evil.

AN ANSWER WANTED.

Can any one bring us a case of kidney or liver complaint that Electric Bitters will not speedily cure? We say they can not, as thousands of cases already permanently cured and who are daily recommending Electric Bitters, will prove. Bright's disease, diabetes, weak back, or any urinary complaint quickly cured. They purify the Blood regulate the bowels, and act directly on the diseased parts. Every bottle guaranteed. For sale at 50 cents a bottle by A. Turner & Co., Markdale. 1

Slumber not in the tents of your columns. The world is advancing, and you should advance with it.

Age is not all decay; It is the ripening, the swelling of fresh life within, that withers and bursts the husks.

The true grandeur of humanity is in moral elevation, sustained, enlightened, and decorated by the intellect of man.

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known. Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat ar acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

How many sighs and tears might be averted if kindness of hand, kindness of heart, and kindness of speech, were general.

Adversity is sometimes hard upon a man; but for one man who can stand, prosperity, there are a hundred that will stand adversity.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

We must, if we are wise, make some calculations in our life, and say what we can spend now, and what we shall keep for the future.

The permanence of marrage is indispensable to the security of families and families are the beams and girders which hold together the State.

John R. Vert, Hamilton, says: "McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia and Indigestion is cheap at fifty times the price asked for it. I am a commercial man, and travel continually, and would no more think of leaving home without a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure in my valise than I would of leaving my team at home and going on foot." Free trial bottle at Hill Bros. general store. Regular size, fifty cents and one dollar.

Monthly Fairs.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.

Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.

Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.

Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.

Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITU

FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Wait

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kep stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in change for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,

Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATIO

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods

IN

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes,

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Statio

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Galler

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which area not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERT

New FALL Importation

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock Ladies' Coats and Mantles in a the latest designs and patterns an very cheap.

Also in large variety Black an Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velve eens from 35cts. up, also Ladie Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trim mings and Shapes, Ladies Collar in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock complete and selling fast and chea

Another lot of that Famous 20c and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putt Glass, Hinges and builder's hard ware of all descriptions selling a the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugar cheap, also preserve and Gem Jar in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of mercha generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherto says his business is increasing daily, having more busin than he can possibly get through with with his large st of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 18. MARKDALE, ONT., JAN. 10, 1884. No. 174

The Markdale Standard

Is issued evesy Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequents insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

—JOB PRINTING.—

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill, Owen Sound. 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE,
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

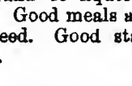
REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

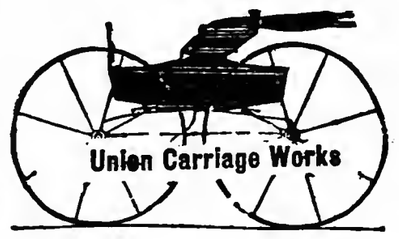


Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.



GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time
consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel. 159-3m

MARKDALE HOUSE,
MARKDALE, ONT.
MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

THE BEST PLACE
TO GET
A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!
North of Toronto, is at the
Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

THOS. MATHEWS,
HarneS EstaBlishmenT
MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills
Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.
GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND
Chopping Done Every Day.
Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.
LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.
Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS,
SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

O'DONNELL'S CONFESSION.

His Acknowledgement that His Crime was Deliberate.

THE TRUE STORY OF THE WHOLE AFFAIR. ALL THE ALLEGED CLAIMS ON THE MURDERER'S BEHALF PROVED TO HAVE BEEN FALSE.

Dublin, Jan. 4.—United Ireland publishes an account of the murder of James Carey, written by a gentleman who received it from Patrick O'Donnell under promise that it was not to be told as long as a chance remained to save O'Donnell's life. The account shows O'Donnell deliberately killed Carey. There was no struggle. Carey made no attack upon O'Donnell. Had Mr. Justice Denman permitted him to speak O'Donnell would have told the whole truth. O'Donnell was not acquainted with Carey on the voyage from England to the Cape of Good Hope. He was not a member of any society. He recognized Carey by a woodcut he saw at Capetown and resolved to kill him. He intended to go with him to a farm at Port Elizabeth which Carey had told him he was going to take and thus show that there was no spot where Carey could be safe. Finding himself, however, alone with Carey, he could not resist the desire to kill him. Carey perceived his danger and said: "Do you know me." O'Donnell replied, "You are Carey the informer, to hell with you." A bullet sped with the words and the deed was done. Carey clutched his own revolver, but too late. O'Donnell fired two more shots and Carey rolled to the deck. Nobody saw the encounter except O'Donnell's companion, who threw her arms around him, and filled the ship with her cries. He had told her that morning that he meant to kill Carey and would hang for it. When Mrs. Carey reached the scene O'Donnell said to her, "I had to do it."

Why Some People are Poor.

Silver spoons are used to scrape kettles.

Nice handled knives are thrown into hot water.

Rags, strings and paper are thrown into the fire.

Clothes are left on the line to whip to pieces in the wind.

Tubs and barrels are left in the sun to dry and fall apart.

Dried fruit are not taken care of in season, and become wormy.

Pork spoils for the want of salt, and beef because the brine wants scalding.

Coffee, tea, pepper, and spices are left to stand open and loose their strength.

The flour is sifted in a wasteful manner, and the breadpan is left with the dough sticking to it.

Potatoes in the cellar grow and the sprouts are not removed until the potatoes become worthless.

Bits of meat, vegetables, bread, and cold pudding are thrown away. when they might be warmed, and served as good as new.

The Political Outlook.

The Dominion Parliament has been summoned to meet for the despatch of business on the 17th inst., and the Local Legislature of Ontario assembles on the 23rd, so that in a very short time the caldron of political excitement will begin to boil furiously. There is every prospect that both sessions will be considerably more lively than usual. In Ottawa the Grits will muster their strength for an onslaught on the trade policy of the Government The touch of depression which we are experiencing strengethens their position—not logically, perhaps, but practically all the same. The Tories, by their absurd boasts of what the N. P. was going to accomplish, and their reckless optimism in regard to a measure which was largely experimental, have laid themselves open to the taunts of their adversaries on account of the tariff having failed to secure a steady continuance of prosperity. both parties are about as wrong headed and wilfully blind as possible in their mode of treating economical questions—which demand careful study and calm thought rather than the wild and random utterances of the stump. The re-appearance of Sir. Cartwright on the political stage, where he is a hindrance rather than a help, from every other standpoint than that of his knowledge of financial and trade questions, is a sure indication that the Grits mean to wage the conflict on the old lines and restate the same weary platitudes which they call their principles. Ephraim is joined to their idols—let him alone.

In the Provincial arena the tories, although their election over the elections of last spring has been somewhat dampened by later reverses, will make a determined effort to force the fighting. The chances of political conflict, the blunders, and the recent petty but glaring jobs of the Mowat Administration have put several powerful weapons into their hands. Nevertheless, they can hardly hope to make a wide enough breach in Mr. Mowat's majority, reduced though it may be, to permit them to capture the citadel. The chances are altogether in favour of the Government being able to hold its own, and if it does that successfully through the session the prestige of invulnerbility will bring it increased strength afterwards.—Toronto News.

The Adventures of a Snow Plough.

A runaway snow-plough on the Toronto, Grey, & Bruce Railway caused considerable excitement at Parkdale recently. The plough was taken up the track to clear the road of snow, and when being brought back to the city the coupling pin broke and the plough commenced the journey on its own account. The agent at Parkdale was notified by telegraph to look out for it and throw it off the track. The plough, however, passed the station before the agent could take action to check its mad career. It made the journey safely until it reached the roundhouse, where it crashed through the doors and would have doubtless committed much greater damage had not the turntable been a foot or two off the track, allowing the runaway to fall into the pit. A man who was working in the roundhouse at the time on a ladder only escaped by hanging to the pipes at which he was working.

RAILWAY CONSOLIDATION.

The Ontario and Quebec System to be Leased to the C.P.R for 999 years.

A meeting of the shareholders of the Ontario & Quebec and Canadian Pacific Railways was held at the office of Osler and Hammond yesterday, for the purpose of leasing what is known as the Ontario and Quebec system of railways to the Canadian Pacific Railway for 999 years. From what could be gathered from those who attend the meeting, there appeared to be no difference of opinion as to the advisability of making the agreement; but as the document embodying the lease was not ready for signature and a number of matters of detail were to be arranged, an adjournment was made until the 3rd of January. By the proposed arrangement the Canadian Pacific acquires the following lines of railway:—

Toronto, Grey & Bruce division, Toronto to Owen Sound, 122 miles; Orangeville Junction to Teeswater, 70 miles. Total, 182 miles.

Credit Valley division, Toronto to St. Thomas, Streetsville to Orangeville Church's Falls to Elora. Total, 183½ miles.

Ontario and Quebec, Toronto to Perth. 200 miles.

Making a total of 575½ miles already built.

In addition to this there is the uncompleted London Junction Railway, covering a distance of 12 miles, and the projected line from Smith's Falls to Montreal. the distance of which may be roughly given as 125 miles. The link between Perth and Smith's Falls is already built, and will be part of the new system; and the C. P. R. already operates a line from Perth to Ottawa. An office for what may now be known as the Ontario and Quebec division of the C. P. R. will be established in Toronto.—Globe.

How We Take Cold.

Years of study and observation have forced me to the conclusion that the disease which manifests the symptoms popularly supposed to indicate that a cold has been caught is to all intents and purposes a filth disease, arises largely from indigestion, and forms the basis, so as to say, or is in fact the first stage of all the so-called filth diseases. Whatever interferes with digestion or depuration, or depraves the vital organism in any manner, produces an impure condition of the body—a condition of the disease; and a continuance of disease-producing habits must inevitably result in periodical or occasional "eruptions," the severity of which will depend upon the degree of one's transgression. Among the causes of this impure bodily condition are (1) impure food, (2) excess in diet, (3) impure air. Our homes, offices, shops, halls, court houses, churches, and, with rare exceptions, all living rooms, private or public, are insufficiently or not at all ventilated; and, except while in open air, a very large proportion of our people, in all the walks of life, habitually breathe an atmosphere vitiated by being breathed over and over again; they are starving for the want of oxygen, and are being poisoned by carbonic acid. In default of sufficient oxygen the best food can not be transformed into pure blood—there will always be a corresponding indigestion; nor can the carbonic acid be eliminated freely in an impure atmosphere. We have, then, serious "interferences with the digestion and depuration," whenever we remain even for a single hour of the twenty-four in an "indoor" atmosphere, i.e., an atmosphere that is not intolerably free communication with the great body of air without. The only offset for restriction in oxygen is restriction in diet and exercise; but a combination of this character would produce enfeeblement of the system, though if a proper balance were maintained there would arise no febrile symptoms such as we are considering. We have plenty of people living in unventilated rooms who, so far as exercise is concerned, live a well-balance life; but seldom do these, any more than the robust and active, practise any sort of voluntary restriction as to quality or quantity of food—nausea and lack of appetite being the only safeguards. Persons of this class are great sufferers from colds.

Manual Training in Public Schools.

Supt. Sever, of the Boston public schools, says: Education through apprenticeship to trades has disappeared, and the time has been filled up with larger amounts of school-book instruction, and the consequence is that through lack of opportunity, the native aptitude of many boys for handcraft is thus ignored. There doubtless is in our city boys an ample fund of latent mechanical ingenuity, which only awaits proper treatment to bring it out and lead its possessors to the right occupations for using it.

My hope is that a public free school on the plan of the school of mechanic arts may be established in Boston. The place for it in our system is side by side with the high school. This can be done as soon as the taxpayers and their representatives at the City Hall see the wisdom of it. Let it not be supposed that the manual training proposed as a part of general education consists in learning this trade or that trade, nor yet in learning the fragmentary beginnings of a dozen trades; but rather that it consists in developing manual skill and mastering the fundamental processes applicable in many trades. For example, one who can use well the common wood-working tools—the hammer, saw, plane, auger, chisel and try square—is ready to enter several different trades with immediate advantage to himself, although he may not yet have learned the special details of any one of them.

Now, I am sanguine enough to believe that the introduction of the manual training element into school work would promote still more a salutary reform which seeks to abolish mere nominal teaching and replace it by real teaching, that is, a teaching that trains mental power rather than loads the memory that fills the mind with solid merchandise of knowledge and not with its empty packing cases. The one branch of our present school instruction, most largely to be improved by joining it with manual training, is drawing. Not many years ago drawing was made obligatory by statute. The reason was that drawing was important as a branch of industrial education, and industrial education was much needed by the people—especially the people of cities. Well, drawing has been introduced at great trouble and expense, and in spite of no little passive opposition. Is this expenditure of money and effort justified? Yes I think so. And the result satisfactory? No, not yet. And why? Because industrial education, through drawing alone, is work only half done. The other half, modelling, carving, anything having in it the constructive element, has hitherto been wanting. Delineation and construction are two parts of one whole; neither has full educational value without the other. As work in the chemical laboratory is needed really to possess one's self of the chemical knowledge which is only symbolized in the formulas of the books, so work at modelling and construction is needed to give precision and endurance to that knowledge of forms which drawings merely symbolize.

Gum Arabic.

In Morocco, about the middle of November a gummy juice exudes spontaneously from the trunk and branches of the acacia. It gradually thickens in the furrow down which it runs, assumes the form of an oval or round drop the size of a pigeon's egg, of different colors, as it comes from the red and white gum trees. About the middle of December the Moors encamp on the border as the forest and harvest lasts a full month. The gum is then packed in large leather sacks, and transported on the backs of camels and bullocks to the seaports for shipment. This is the gum arabic of commerce.

He Hit Him Hard.

"I met X on the avenue with his bride. They had just returned from their wedding tour."

"Where are they going to live?"

"I don't know. He told me he had been house-hunting since yesterday morning, and intended to take a flat."

"Ah! indeed! He has decided to follow his wife's example."

CHINESE SMUGGLERS.

Ingenious Devices for Eluding the Custom House Officers.

The Custom House searching force detailed for duty on the China steamers is an interesting study. Their suspicions are awakened by the most trifling circumstance. They have found opium in the soles of Chinese shoes, in pails which had false bottoms and hollow staves, in logs of wood, hollow broom handles and other unexpected places. The water-pail plan for a while was a favorite with Celestial smugglers. The pail was used for washing off the outside of the vessel or the decks, and filled with dirty water it did not look much like an opium receptacle. After being used it was allowed to stand on the mail dock until it was, as the result of an apparent accident, placed on some waggon and carted away. Then the Chinese tackled the chocking logs or blocks usually placed under the freight gangplank. One day the end of one of these blocks attracted a searcher's attention. It had been sawn off and smeared with grime, and looked like any other log which might naturally find its way to a ship, be used in rough service and then tumbled about the dock. But the peculiarity which attracted the attention of the searcher was a bright screw-head in the end of a log. Several blocks or logs of similar shape were at once taken in charge by the Custom House officials. The happy thought resulted in the discovery of a wooden box filled with opium fitted into the middle of each of the logs and held in place with a screw. The broom trick was near to that. A cargo of brooms went to Honolulu and were thrown on the wharf. The consignee, a China merchant, came down and saw them on the wharf. A charge for freight was made on them which the consignee refused to pay. There is where he made a mistake. The brooms lay on the wharf over night. Some one stepped on the pile and broke one. That revealed the trick. The lower end had been hollowed out and filled with opium and then the brush part was made over it.

A monotonous duty which sometimes comes to the searchers is to sit on the roof of the long shed over the mail dock for hours or on the elevated "bridge" of a steamer, to see that no opium is thrown on the shed roof from the ship. While the Peking lay at the dock, one attempt to smuggle the drug ashore in this way was detected. But if the searcher who sits on the "bridge" has a weary time, much more monotonous is the lot of the men who stand at the foot of the gangplanks, hour after hour, to search every one who comes from the ship, paying attention especially to the Chinese. This monotonous watch is maintained from the time the vessel first touches the dock until it sails again. To prevent any smuggling by water another searcher is compelled to sit, with relays, in a boat moored off the steamer some rods. Persistence cannot be better exemplified than by the Chinese attempts to smuggle fabrics ashore. How the traders wear several coats of silk, one outside of the other, over the gangplank, has often been alluded to of late. One or more of these coats is invariably taken from the "trader" by the searchers and a protest is always made, but about every trader tries his luck.—San Francisco Call.

New York State Statistics.

The Governor of New York State has just sent his annual message to the legislative. The Sun publishes the following statistics of the State, gleaned from the message.—The figures tell the story. For education the State Government received last year $13,000,000 and spent nearly $12,000,000. In the 115 active savings banks in the State a million depositors have accounts aggregating $420,831,000. There is the sum of $114,000,000 on deposit in the 84 State banks of discount. The increase during the year in the deposits in the 200 banks coming under the supervision of the State authorities has been more than $50,000,000. Two hundred insurance companies, fire, marine, life and casualty, have assets amounting to $646,000,000, of which $134,500,000 belongs to the respective surplus accounts. In its National Guard the State has an efficient army of nearly 12,000 men. There are 2,828 convicts in our prisons, less than for several years past, while the total population of all the State penal, reformatory, and protective institutions is about 15,000. There are 11,000 insane. The various charitable institutions own property amounting to $42,935,000, and they expended $10,291,000 last year in the relief of the unfortunate. During a season more than a month shorter than usual 5,778,631 tons of freight passed through the free canals. At Castle Garden, the chief gateway to the continent, there arrived last year 390,000 immigrants. In taxes from corporations, the Treasurer received $1,935,000. The debt of the State, less the amount on the sinking fund, is only $5,978,301, nearly all of which is on the old canal construction account. The tax rate last year was three mills and a quarter; this year, with economical management, it can be made smaller than at any time for a quarter of a century past. The assessed valuation of personal property and real estate in New York is almost three thousand million dollars.

How to Detect Oleomargarine.

There is much difficulty experienced by grocers in judging oleomargarine from butter. We here give two methods for so doing and we are sure they will be welcomed. Procure a vial of oil of vitriol (sulphuric acid) which will cost about five cents. Use a glass rod, and put one drop on the article to be tested. Pure, fresh yellow butter will turn almost white, while tallow turns to a crimson red. Lard gives diversified colors, showing all the colors of the rainbow. Here is another, and a very simple test: Melt a very small quantity in a shallow dish, which should be only large enough to hold the quantity, and put a piece of wick in the fluid. Now light the protruding end of the wick above the surface of the liquid, and after it burns a few minutes extinguish the flame. By inhaling the ascending smoke from the wick the odor of fried butter will designate pure butter, but if the odor is similar to that of a smoking candlestick you may rest assured it is oleomargarine.—Philadelphia Grocer.

The man who married a girl because she "struck his fancy," says she strikes him anywhere that comes handy now.

What the Khedive Says.

The Cairo correspondent of the London Telegraph reports an interview with the khedive at the Abdin palace. His highness was, as ever, affable and courteous, and spoke English, at his own desire, very fluently.

He expressed himself convinced that England was the best friend of Egypt, and said that personally he never could forget the consideration shown for his great difficulties. As for the present situation, it would have been good but for the mehdi's sudden successes. It was a gratifying fact that the people were prospering and contented. I asked what his highness thought of the character of the mehdi. The khedive declared him an obvious impostor. All Mussulmans did indeed expect a leader or reformer toward the end of the world, but the Koran said the true mehdi would appear at Mecca or in some city of the east, and that at first he would not be recognized, but finally met with universal acceptation. According to the teachers of Islam, he would not be of negroid extraction, nor a destroyer of moslems; but this false mehdi imposes upon the ignorant by specious gifts and personal marks and excuses, cruel massacres of the faithful; by pretending that the Turks are in reality Christians, and declaring that the Egyptian power has ended. His highness confessed ignorance at present of the mehdi's movements. The Mudirs, however, he told me, of Lenaar, Khartoum, and Berber have dispatched many spies, and the news received is that they are unable to trace the march of the main army. Detached bodies of about 10,000 have certainly been sent in various directions, and they may possibly have gone from Obeid to Darfur, or might be advancing direct on Dongola by the land route. "If," said the khedive, "such a force should reach the first, or even only the second cataract, it would become easier for Egypt to strike a decisive blow." His highness has received no message directly from the mehdi, and does not know what projects the pretender harbors. He has certainly been sending emissaries to every quarter and no doubt the revolt of the tribes to the eastward of the Nile, which were previously loyal and contented, is due to this propaganda. "If they have risen," said the khedive—"the tribes and sheiks—it is because they have been afraid and distracted between the mehdi and myself, and have been obliged to obey whichever authority seemed uppermost." Regarding the future policy of the government of Egypt, his highness remarked that they never could or never would withdraw from the Soudan. It had become the "back-gate of our house; a great portal by which the wealth of equatorial Africa would eventually enter."

Apropos of Sir Samuel Baker's suggestion, he himself was anxious to treat with Abyssinia in a friendly spirit, and would make large concessions with a view to rectify the frontier, but he would certainly not yield Missowah; it was a harbor essential to Egypt. On the west he had personally wished to restrict his country to her natural limits, and as a prince he had disapproved herein of his father's schemes of annexation. He was even now willing to make Darfour a tributary province under a native ruler, but must undoubtedly keep Kordofan.

Immediate operations would necessarily be limited, continued his highness, to holding the chief positions along the Nile. He felt confident that before very long Baker Pasha would be be able to clear the road from Saukin to Berber. What might afterword be determined upon it was at present impossible to foresee, but while holding the channels of the Nile strongly he and his supporters could afford to wait.

This, said the khedive, still quietly conversing, is mainly a religious revolt, but one fomented by the principal slave-dealers and by Soudanese traders who desire to monopolize the ivory traffic now so profitable. These unscrupulous people have fanned the flame of superstition, and to surrender territory to the mehdi would be to play their evil game. The khedive said he had greatly coveted the glory of giving its death blow to slavery, but that I was probably aware it formed a most profitable business in Central Africa, and that for its sake many degraded speculators retarded all progress. "God knowe," his highness went on, "I am anxious to spare my subjects the cost and misery of war and to leave the fellaheen in quiet to till our soil. The wars with Abyssinia and Darfour have cost us seven millions! How much better if they had been spent for the development of Egypt! Our country is not rich; nevertheless, with all these troubles, it is very well able to pay the interest on its debt, and that, too, with £180,000 sterling of surplus to devote as a sinking fund. I have the highest desire, notwithstanding, to reduce the debt, and to relieve our fellaheen of their load of taxation and usury."

The khedive expressed no opinion as to probable necessity of help from England, but professed himself assured of her good will. I hear from another source that frequent messages are passing between the khedive and Mr. Gladstone's government.

Cheshire Underground Salt Fields.

The activity in the salt trade of Cheshire, Eng., for some time past has produced its inevitable consequence. Throughout the district, houses and public buildings have been sinking, water pipes bursting and gas-mains constantly snapping. Christ Church, Winsford, was badly cracked, and then began to sink. Immediately steps had to be taken to save it from utter destruction. Gangs of men with huge jacks were engaged and have lifted the west end quite a foot; and the east end having a tendency to bow down, had to be got into perpendicular at once. The displacement taking place underground may be imagined when it is stated that in September sufficient brine was pumped to manufacture 108,000 tons of salt. The returns issued for October show an increasingly active demand has kept the stocks of Cheshire salt very low. Many works which had shut down pans in consequence of the brine being quite pumped out, have since made temporary arrangements to take their supply from deeper brine shafts belonging to other proprietors. The United States purchased during October 25,850 tons, against 19,719 for the corresponding month last year; the East Indies, 31,418, against 25,336; British North America, 5,087, against 2,959; Africa, 3,256, against 2,823; and Belgium, 2,838, against 5,438. Total exports from Cheshire to all parts of the world during October amounted to 96,706 tons, against 68,853 tons last year.

LITTLE KNOWN CITIES.

Some of the Marvels of the Magnitude of India.

The English are beginning in a vague way to realize the magnitude of India, and to comprehend that it contains some 50,000,000 more people than all Europe west of the Vistula. Few, however, are quite aware of the number of its cities, or believe that it includes sixty-two with more than 50,000 people, and twenty-two with more than 100,000, namely, Bombay, Calcutta, Madras, Hyderabad, Lucknow, Benares, Delhi, Patna, Agra, Bangalore, Umsitsur, Cawnpore, Lahore, Allahabad, Jeypore, Rangoo, Poona, Ahmedabad, Bareilly, Surat, Howra, and Baroda. We give them in order of population; but, properly speaking in the English way of counting, Howra, the Southwark of Calcutta, should be included in the capital, which with it contains above 866,000 souls, and it is the greatest, as it is by far the wealthiest, city in the Empire. Below the limit of 50,000 the towns become much more numerous, and there are hundreds with populations above 20,000. The majority of the latter are quite unknown to Europeans, an active magistrate or two excepted; and, so far as we are aware, there is no book in English which gives the slightest account of their organization, or of the life and people in them. Yet many of them have histories of 2,000 years, and in all flourish families which think themselves noble, and have long pedigrees and stirring tales to narrate. We hear every now and then much of Indian princes who, in India, are hardly mentioned, and of "educated natives," a scarcely perceptible class, but of the true "British India" as little is known at home as of the eastern provinces of Peru.—London Spectator.

The Defense of Khartoum.

Khartoum is naturally marked out by its situation as the capital of the Soudan. Built in the angle formed by the junction of the Blue and White Niles, the meeting point of the roads from Dongola and Egypt on the northwest and north from Suakim and Berber on the northeast, from Darfur on the west, from Kordofan, Sennaar, and the equatorial provinces on the south, it is the commercial centre of the whole region, and has ever since the conquest of the country by Egypt been the chief seat of the Egyptian power, and the residence of the governor-general of the Soudan. The town, near which are some ruins of the time of the Pharaohs, is built along the left bank of the Blue Nile, with the White Nile in its rear, in a wide, barren, and stoneless plain, and protected by dikes against inundation from the two rivers. It is 1,400 feet above the sea, and has some 50,000 inhabitants, of whom about two-thirds are slaves, for Khartoum was at one time the head-quarters of that iniquitous traffic, which, after the subjugation of the country by Egypt, rapidly supplanted the legitimate trade in ivory and other natural products of the Soudan, and is the fons et origo mali in all the wars which have constantly disturbed the country.

Khartoum is, from a military point of view, a position of great strength. It is protected by five ditched earthwork forts, but these are said to be weakly armed, and its most efficient protection are the broad rivers on either side of it. A force coming from the west would find it a matter of great difficulty to cross the White Nile in the face of an enemy; and, even if the movement were effected, the approach to the town across a plain which affords no shelter whatever to an attacking force, would be a very difficult operation in face of defenders armed with weapons of precision. The garrison of Khartoum is estimated at 4,000 men, all thus armed. It is true that the mehdi, since the capture of Obeid, must have a good many weapons of precision himself, but his troops are said, whether from fanaticism or ignorance, to be averse to using them. Col. Stewart, writing from Khartoum on Feb. 20, soon after the fall of El Obeid, declared that it was "very improbable the mehdi should venture" to Khartoum. In the course of the spring, however, the mehdi did venture, but was easily repulsed. It is likely, therefore, that after so great a success he will make another attempt on the capital, but it is not likely that he will do so without loss of time. The present season indeed is favorable to military operations, whereas the summer, and especially the months from June to September—the time of the rains and floods—greatly interfere with them.

But his movements hitherto have been characterized by anything but rapidity. It was two months after his victory over Yussuf Pacha in the spring of last year before he appeared at El Obeid, and seven months before he took it. One circumstance may cause him to hasten his movements. According to one of the mehdi's prophecies he would be proclaimed at Khartoum prophet and ruler of the Soudam on the 12th of this month, which was the beginning of the new Mussulman century of 1300 after Hegira. He may not wish to let this brophecy remain long unfulfilled.

Old Shoe Leather.

You probably think, if you look very sharply at an old shoe when you throw it away, you will know it again if it ever comes back to you. But that doesn't follow. One of these days you may button your dress with an old pair of slippers you once owned, comb your hair with a boot, or grasp a cast-off gaiter while at your dinner. This is not romance, for old shoes are turned to account by manufacturers in the following manner:—They are cut into very small pieces and kept for a couple of days in chloride of sulphur. The effect of this is to make the leather hard and brittle. Next the material is withdrawn from the action of the chloride of sulphur, washed with water and dried. When thoroughly dry it is ground to powder and mixed with some substance like glue or gum that causes it to adhere together. It is then pressed into molds and then shaped into buttons, combs, knife handles, etc.

A European who was about to start to America was asked by an acquaintance: "And do you think fried pigeons will fly into your mouth over there?" "Oh, no, I don't believe that; but if one should fly there I'll have the privilege of eating him myself. I'll not have to give two-thirds of the pigeon to the nobility and gentry, and the rest to the robbers."

YANKEE SARDINES.

How Small Herring are Made to Resemble the Famous Little Fish.

Nine-tenths of the sardines consu[med] the United States come from Maine. [A] few of the real French fish are importe[d]. These Yankee sardines are nothin[g] small herring put up in boxes with [fa]bles and French inscriptons. In E[as]t there are ninteen places where they [put] out sardines, besides three at Lubec, [two] Jonesport, and one each at Milb[ridge], Lamoine, and Robinston. In 1876 a York firm did a lucrative business p[ut]ting "Russian sardines" in Eastport. They were little herring packed in small w[ood]en kegs and preserved with spices of di[ffer]ent kinds. It occured to one member of the firm that these little fish might be utilized better advantage by cooking them and packing them in olive oil, like the French sardines. The experiment had been tried several times before without success. The difficulty to eradicate the taste of the herring, which gave rise to the couplet: You may spice it and may call it sardine if you will, but the taste of the herring will cling to it still.

It was easy to cook the herring, pack them in olive oil in tin cans, and seal them tight, but when they were opened they had not the rich, spicy flavor of the real French sardines. After a great many experiments, one of the manufacturers succeeded in producing a mixture of oils and spices which removed the difficulty.

The herring used for making sardines are about four inches long, and are taken in great quantities along the Maine and New Brunswick coast. They can be bought of the fishermen for about $5 a hogshead, though when the fish are scarce, as they often are in the spring, they bring as much as $10 a hogshead. To catch the fish small nets or bush are thrown into the sandy bottom of the sea, arranged in a line running out from the shore some seventy-five or a hundred feet, and then curved back in a horseshoe. Inside this trap is a net. When the tide is falling the net is raised, and the fish are taken out with hugh scoop nets. The catch is always very uncertain; sometimes only a bushel or two will be taken, and often so many are caught as to endanger the net.

There is another way of capturing the fish. Herring, like mackerel, go in schools, and for some reason, always follow a light. Two or three fishermen provide themselves with torches made of cotton batting saturated with kerosene, and on dark nights row along the shores with a torch in the bow of the boat. When a school is found the herring dart after the boat, coming so close that they are dipped up in nets attached to long poles.

After being captured the fish are taken immediately to the factory and laid in baskets upon long tables. The first thing is to decapitate and clean the fish. The dexterity with which this operation is performed astonishes the children who are employed, is remarkable. On an average seventy-five fish are cleaned and decapitated every minute by each child. Both operations are performed with one stroke of a sharp knife. A basket holding about a bushel lies at the left hand of each operator, and as the cleaning is completed the fish slides into this box. The price for this work is ten cents a box, and expert children make $1.50 a day.

After being washed, the herring are boiled for half an hour, and are then laid on trays and placed in a large drying-room heated by steam. After the fish are dried they are thrown into large, shallow pans of boiling oil and thoroughly cooked. They are then packed in tin boxes by girls and women, and in each box is poured a quantity of the patent mixture of oils and spices. Covers are then fitted to the boxes and sealed by the men. As air must be excluded, the cans when sealed, are placed in a tank of boiling water where they remain half an hour. They are then removed and placed on an inclined plane so that the air inside rushes to a corner of the box. This corner is punctured with an awl, the hot air escapes, and the can is made air-tight by a drop of solder. The boxes are then ornamented with attractive French lables, saying that the fish inclosed are Sardines a la Francaise;" some are labelled "a l'huille d'olive." The oil used is cotton-seed oil, such as is made in South Carolina. It is not always the best quality of oil. The best oil is used, however, for fish sold as "prime."

There are prepared at these factories other varities of fish known as "mustards," "mackerees," and "sea trout." The mustard are prepared like the sardines until they are packed in the cans. They are packed in a preparation made of mustard, vinegar, and spices, with a soupçon of spice. The mustards are larger fish than the sardines. The mackerees are packed in a sauce made of vinegar, spices, lemon, and sugar, and the sea trout are large herring put up in oval boxes with another sauce.

Almost the entire product of these factories is shipped to New York, whence it is sold to retailers all through the country. One of the Lubec houses prepares about 4,200 boxes a day. The actual cost per box, including all expenses, is about 5 cents. The price made by the packers is from 5 to 7 cents. The difference between these prices and what the consumer pays for the fish at the grocer goes into the pockets of the grocery man.—New York Sun.

The Industrial Census of India.

British journals bring interesting details of the census of India in 1881. The total population of the country is 253,891,821, of this enormous number only 85,514 persons are British-born subjects, and 56,646 of the 12,088 females. Practically less than 17,000 male civilians, wielding an army of 57,000 men control the vast empire. The whole number of Europeans returned is only 140,612. The occupations of 102,629,000 persons are defined, and of these 71,199,000 are engaged in agriculture or the care of animals. In industrial occupations 21,041,000 persons are engaged, 12,859,000 males and 8,182,000 females. The workers in cotton and wool number 5,485,452; in clothing, 2,815,2[00]; in vegetable food, 3,165,429; in stone, [lime] and earthenware, 1,850,974; in houses and buildings, 835,453; in guns and resins, 6[5]526; in bamboo, cane, rush, straw and leaves, 680,732; in gold, silver and precious stones, 472,956, and in iron and steel 4[7]3,361. Engaged in work of government, national, local and municipal, are 1,843,000 persons, of whom 315,000 are classed as belonging to the army. The professional classes embrace 1,451,000 persons.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items from all Parts of the World.

UNITED STATES.

Ten houses in Port Chester, Col., were destroyed by a cyclone and many persons were injured.

A locomotive on the New York and New Haven Railroad exploded killing both the engineer and fireman.

Twelve thousand employes in the different collieries of Northumberland county, Penn., are temporarily out of work.

A son of Congressman Whiting, a student at Williston Seminary, has been fined $57 for breaking a fellow student's nose.

By mutual consent, the wages of the men in the glass bottle making at Sunderland, Eng., have been reduced 2s. per week.

The majority of leading New York coal companies have agreed to cut down production one half from January 1 to April 1.

President Arthur was presented with six gold-headed canes on Christmas Day, and a number of umbrellas with gold and silver handles.

The coal mines in Monongahela Valley, Pa., have all shut down. Seventy five mines are involved and 6,000 men thrown out of work.

It is said that Mexico will not only soon cease to import petroleum from the United States, but become an extensive exporter of the article.

A Boston paper says that the Sunday before Christmas was, with one exception, the coldest day in that city on record for the last seventeen years.

George Bancroft the great American historian is credited with this observation:—A very dry Autumn is always succeeded by a rather warm and open winter.

A cage containing a number of convict laborers fell 204 feet in a mine at Birmingham, Ala., recently, killing and wounding nearly all its occupants.

It is alleged in New York that Villard has lost five millions by the depreciation of his stocks, and that he has mortgaged his Madison-avenue palace and Hudson River lands.

Delegations of influential property owners in Chicago have repeatedly asked Mayor Harrison to desist from prosecuting the gamblers whose places are either on or near their lots.

A Pittsburg, Pa., despatch says that the suspension of work in the nail factories of the west, which went into effect on Saturday night, throws 5,000 men out of employment for six weeks.

A New York Irishman has returned his naturalization papers and spurns American citizenship because the United States Government will not interfere to save O'Donnell from the gallows.

Quite a number of seals were seen floating on the ice near New York harbor recently. Some of the papers are quite humorous about sealskin jackets appearing so fashionable at that particular time.

During the past year 21,000,000 bushels of wheat, 25,000,000 bushels of corn, 5,000,000 bushels of rye, and 157,000 bushels of oats were exported from New York, but not one American vessel cleared for Europe with grain.

The lumbermen on the Penobscot River are now about all in the woods. The stock cut will be larger than was expected, owing to the efforts made to get as much of the timber that was blown down in the late tornado as possible.

A coterer in Buffalo, N. Y., cooks angle worms. He feeds them on milk for a few days, dusts them with flour, and drops them in to a pan of boiling oil or fat. They are served in drawn butter, with a little lemon juice and Worchestershire sauce.

The stables of the Forest Railway Company at Syracuse, N. Y., were burned, twenty-four horses were burned to death, and every street car but one was consumed together with a large stock of provender.

P. T. Barnum's will, which has been announced prior to the great showman's death, in order to prevent any litigation after his decease, provides for the distribution of real estate and personal property of the value of $10,000,000 among 27 heirs.

In consequence of the washing away of a bridge over the Blue River on the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railroad, near Salem, Indiana, recently a train ran into the washout, killing seven and injuring ten persons.

The executive committee of the colored men's convention have reported a memorial praying Congress to reimburse the unfortunate Freedmen's Bank dhpositors, on the ground that in winding up the affairs of that concern, the law of insolvency was violated.

New York.—At a meeting of Irishmen in Brooklyn Sunday night the use of dynamite was favored by O'Donovan Rossa and Robert Blissert. The latter stated that an Irish Crusaders' Club had been formed, and they expected soon to have 100,000 members.

San Francisco.—A ceremony representing the funeral of O'Donnell, recently hanged at London, took place here on Sunday. Efforts were made to make a grand demonstration, but the board of supervisors and the prominent Irish organizations declined to take part and only 300 persons were in line.

A very serious riot occurred in the City of Mexico over the introduction of the new nickel coins, which the lower classes did not take to very kindly. The rumpus finally resulted in a panic, and a mob ruled the city for a time, smashing windows and committing other crimes. The military was called out, and finally quelled the disturbance.

The press is now the well acknowledged power in the community. Not long ago a German newspaper called attention to the fact that more apothecary shops were needed in Berlin, and within two weeks steps had been taken for the establishment of nineteen new ones. Probably near all their stocks on hand will be drugs to them hereafter.

The convicts at the Massachusetts State Prison were granted the usual privileges and something more on Christmas Day, and two men were conditionally pardoned, one of them being John Noran who was serving a life term for the murder of his sweetheart in 1867, and the other, George H. Richardson, of Canton, who was convicted one year ago, of murder in the second degree, for shooting his father. It is said that evidence has come to light since his trial, tending to show that the shooting was accidental.

A Philadelphia dispatch says:—A slight improvement in the tone of the iron market has been developed during the close of the year. Prices have reached their lowest limit and careful buyers have taken advantage of special rates for foundry and forge iron, and bought allowances for thirty or sixty days. There are enquiries for large lots of steel rails at $35 per ton, and makers predict heavy transactions at that figure. The Western mills are now booking orders. At Pittsburg negotiations are in hand for large lots of steel rails and moderate sized lots of small railway material, for delivery during January and February.

Among the many reasons given for the divorce in Maryland the Detroit Free Press relates the following:—"A young woman in that State has brought suit to annul her marriage on the ground that her husband is a mulatto, while she is white. The marriage took place in 1879, and it was not until a year later that the wife discovered the fact as to her husband's ancestry. There is no claim that he used any deception. It simply did not occur to her to suspect that he was other than a white man until she accidently saw a tintype of his nephew, which bore unmistakable traces of negro ancestry. It will be difficult for most intelligent people to understand wherein the young woman has any grievance; but in this respect she does not differ from a good many woman who sue for divorce.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Three baronets and a peer, Lord St. Leonards, grandson of the eminent Chancellor, have recently helped to swell the list of bankrupts in England.

A parliamentary return just issued shows that the total taxation of Ireland in 1882 produced a sum of £3,534,679 which was an increase of £143,249, or 4½ per cent. on the amount levied in the previous year.

Recently published judicial statistics show that 447 of the inquests held in England and Wales in 1880 resulted in a verdict of "died from excessive drinking." This is 29 more than in the previous year, but it is below the average (481) for five preceding years.

Lord Lorne's attempts to acclimatise the Canadian moose-deer at Inverness, Scotland, have failed, the climate being apparently too moist, but the Canadian musk rats and other animals and birds imported are doing well, and the wild turkeys are flourishing.

The London Times says that the continued depression in trade is a puzzle to the community. The revival of 1879 was but temporary, and merchants now complain that their profits have either disappeared altogether or are extremely small, while great industries are admittedly in distress, and nowhere is there real prosperity. But it is merely the speculative trade which is depressed. The hand to mouth trade is fully maintained. The chief cause of the lengthened depression, the writer thinks, is to be found in the series of bad harvests.

The violence of language used by some of the leading Irish agitators of to-day may be inferred from the following in connection with the prohibition of a recent Nationalists meeting near Dublin. A proclamation from the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland was read forbidding such a meeting. Mr. Biggar, M. P., who was to address it, drove off when he saw the proclamation. At a dinner the same evening Biggar, in referring to the Lord Lieutenant, said he was not aware how Earl Spencer obtained the title to his property but unless some church robber amassed it years ago he would probably at the present day be a drunken housebreaker.

History of a Song.

Mr. Bennett, a music-writer, and Mr. Webster were intimate friends. The latter was subject to melancholy.

He came in to where his friend Webster was at business one day, while in a depression of spirits.

"What is the matter now?" said Bennett, noticing his sad countenance.

"No matter," said Webster; "it will be right by-and-by."

"Yes; that sweet by-and-by," said Bennett. "Would not that sentiment make a good hymn, Webster?"

"Maybe it would it," replied Webster, indifferently.

Turning to his desk, Bennett wrote the three verses of the hymn, and handed them to Webster. When he red them, his whole demeanor changed. Stepping to his desk, he began to write the notes.

Having finished them he requested his violin, and played the melody. In a few minutes he had the four parts of the chorus jotted down. It was not over thirty minutes from the first thought of the hymn before the two friends, and two others who had come in in the meantime, were singing all the parts together.

A bystander, who had been attracted by the music, and had listened in tearful silence, remarked, "That hymn is immortal."

It is now sung in every land under the sun.—Exchange.

Glasgow's Commercial Importance.

Many readers will be surprised to learn that Glasgow is the second largest city in Great Britain, and the third in commercial importance, In population and manufactories it almost equals Philadelphia, and for wet weather surpasses any American city, large or small, with which I am acquainted. The people are busy, thrifty, industrious and exceedingly polite, intensely national, but absolutely ignorant and indifferent about America and American affairs. I have not met any person so ignorant as the Italian count who asked whether it was not dangerous to venture out of New York on account of the Indians; but they do not seem to know or care that in the vicinity of the noble city of Towson there is a populous and thriving village of Baltimore.

Glasgow claims to have the largest locomotive works in the world and the shipbuilding yards extend along the Clyde twenty miles to Greenock, presenting a scene of ceaseless industry that astonishes even an American traveller. The Glasgow Cathedral is one of the most ancient and interesting churches in Great Britain. The present structure was built in 1181 and is in excellent preservation. The University of Glasgow made it a prominent place, even when the population was quite small.—Baltimore Day Letter.

A Minnesota Tornado.

The Norwegian poet and preacher Kristofer Janson gives the following account of a tornado which destroyed his house.

"We had built two wings on the church, you know, as a summer resort for me and my family, and we had just moved in. The church itself was not yet finished, the doors and windows not put in, and the carpenters and joiners busy at their work when the misfortune happened. The weather had been turbulent for many days, every night lightning and thundering with violent showers. It was on the morning of the 21st. We had just taken our breakfast, and had gathered out on the porch to look at the grand play of the elements performed before us. Around in the horizon there flashed lightning, and it thickened and darkened more and more. We foresaw a violent tempest. It seemed as if the storm moved away in the direction of New Ulm, and we wondered if that poor town should be drowned to death for the second time. It was swept away by a cyclone two years ago, you remember. A cloud, black as the raven's wing, appeared in the west. Suddenly it split, and between the two black trains expanded the most fearful, dismal sky I ever saw. The color was green—gray—yellow, and it darkened the sun, so it became dim as twilight. The carpenters had by-and-by gathered together with us on the porch. 'This must be a hail storm,' one of them said; 'now we will pretty soon hear of disasters.' Suddenly the cleft widened between the two black cloud-wings, and the upper one came with a terrible speed, hurrying back toward us. 'Let us walk in,' I said. 'It seems as if we, too, shall get a taste of it.' We went in, and our parlor looked quite dark. We had scarcely heard the roaring of the storm coming. In a moment we were surrounded by a white cloud, and the wind and rain lashed the house, which groaned and shivered all through. It was not rain, it was furious torrents of water mixed with heavy hail, which poured down from heaven. The storm tried to burst open the door, but five men pressed against it with all their might. The wall seemed to give way and stood in a bow; the building shook as in convulsions. I felt like a tightening of my heart every time the house seemed to be lifted from the ground and dropped down again. Twice we had these terrible shocks, then in a moment, house, men, furniture, were hurled through the air one hundred feet away. I do not remember anything before I found myself on the ground crawling among the debris of my new home. The first I discovered was my wife, with a child in each arm, lying at my side. Men and children were scattered around among lumber and sidings, whether alive or dead nobody could tell. A table and a staircase came flying through the air; some men met them and pushed them away, so they did not kill my wife and children; bits of wall and roof whirled round us; here it was impossible to remain. We crept and crawled, and ran for our lives down to the forest. As we found each other there were only six; a friend of ours, a farmer, had one of the small girls in his arms, my wife another, and one of my sons clung to me."—Christian Union.

The Queens of England.

England has been very fond of Queens, and has usually given them a good name. Of Matilda we know very little. But the faults of Mary were attributed in great part to her husband; while both Elizabeth and Anne have, perhaps with equal reason, been decorated with the names of "Good." It certainly has so happened that the reigns of the last three Queens who have occupied the English throne have been both happy and glorious. In all alike we see great developments of the national energy, the flowering of a brilliant and characteristic literature and the growth of new political and social ideas inaugurating new stages of progress. If we carry our minds back to the ascension of Queen Elizabeth, we find ourselves in a world which has, indeed, little resemblance to our own, but which was an entirely new departure from the world of the Plantagenets. Similarly, in the reign of Anne, we are face to face with a political and social regime wholly different in kind from that of the seventeenth century, the departing footsteps of which we look back upon through the reign of William. In our own time it is unnecessary to say that we live in a transition period from the stereotyped thoughts and habits of the pre Reform era to some unknown and unconjectured destiny. Thus all three reigns have been signalized by the same distinctive features: have each in some measure ushered in a new age, and have been distinguished by the same literary and intellectual activity. To which of them history will assign the supremacy is a question which we shall not touch. The Elizabethan, the Augustan, and the Victorian eras have each their special glories to boast of; and their comparative greatness must depend to a great extent on the character of the mind which contemplates them.—London Standard.

Gladstone as a Timber-Dealer.

Mr. Gladstone, it appears, includes among his numerous vocations that of a dealer in timber. We are not aware that he entered voluntarily into the business, but at all events an insight to it has been offered to the public. He was applied to by a Lambeth workingman who wanted to make some tables and chairs out of trees felled by the premier. Mr. Gladstone replied that he would make known the subject of the Lambeth workman's request to his son, "as he regulates matters of the nature referred to." About a month afterward—a most unbusiness like delay, we should imagine,—Mr. W. H. Gladstone wrote to the workman in these terms:—"In reference to your letter, I beg to ask you how many feet you require. We have a beech of about sixteen feet available, but I fear the carriage to London would be heavy." The offer was accepted, but the beech turned out to be eighteen feet long, so that the stock-book of the firm has evidently not been very carefully kept. It is understood that, in the letter in which Mr. Gladstone handed over the conduct of the transaction to his son, he expressed some desponding sentiments with regard to this branch of the family business. Gladstonian timber has not been in great demand lately, the last transaction having taken place in Leeds in 1880.

Mottoes for the Lime Kiln Club.

On the first of the year the following mottoes and greetings will be printed on cloth and hung on the walls of Paradise Hall:

"Credit am an enemy to entice you to buy what you doan' want."

"Dar am no danger of de well cavin' in if you keep on top."

"If life had no sorrows we should grow tired of hearin' each odder laugh."

"Gray ha'rs should respect themselves if dey want to be respected by odders."

"De man who eats apples in the dark mustn't let his stomach be too pertickler about worm holes."

"While color has mafflin' partickler to do wid treein' de coon, doan' pay too much fur a yaller dog."

"He who judges de character of a pusson by his clothes am buyin' a mule by de sound of his bray."

"De pusson who has no temptations am one of de biggest sinners in de crowd."

"Kind words cost nothin'! Dat's de reason so many of us am willin' to throw away such a heap of 'em."

"While honesty am de best policy, doan' be too fast to express you candid opinyun of your neybur."

"Bumps on a man's head may express his traits of character, but you kin find out all you want to know about him by goin' on one excursion in his company."

"What we do to-day am dun fur to-morrer. What we intend to do to morrer won't buy meat fur to-day's dinner."

Struck Oil.

It was a Woodward avenue car. A lady richly dressed sat in a corner of the car and said to some one with her,

"I smell kerosense oil."

"So do I," answered her friend.

One after another got into the car, and the lady in the corner sniffed suspiciously, and at last fixed her eyes upon a quiet looking little man near the door.

"I believe he's got the oil," she said in a stage whisper to her friend.

"I know it," replied the friend. "There ought to be a law against carrying kerosene in the street cars. Such an odor!" and she glared at the little man.

"I shall inform the Superintendent," said the first lady aloud.

"I shall inform the President of the road," said her friend with a fixed and glassy stare.

"Ladies," said the little man cheerfully, "hadn't you better move! The keorosene from that lamp in the corner of the car has been dripping down on ye ever since we started, but seein' ye both know so much I thought I wouldn't say anything."

Oyster is the name of a new postoffice in Pennsylvania. If the postmaster has not been appointed the lucky man is doubtless Mr. Cann.

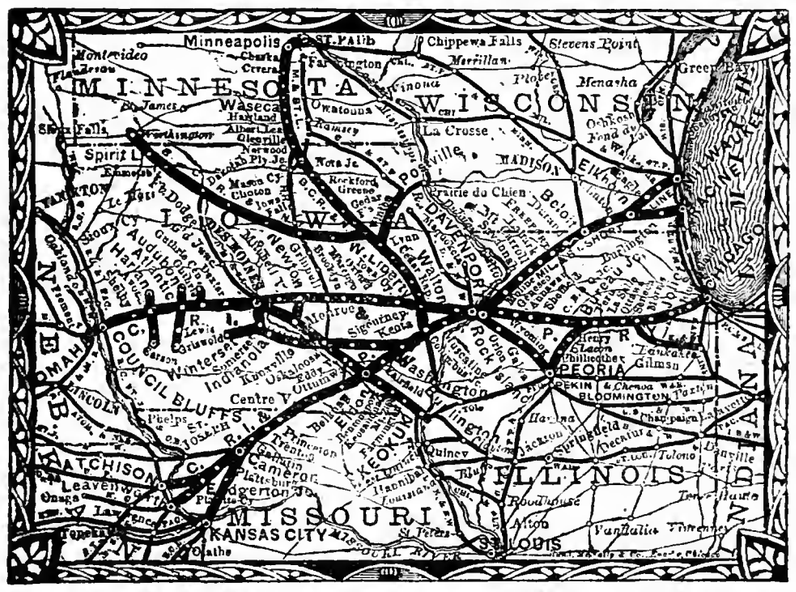
Private theatricals, according to an English essayist, have nearly lost their character as privacy. Even amateur companies of ladies and gentlemen perform in public; society has become stage-struck, and ladies and gentlemen are taking to the stage. "We hope the rising taste for amateur acting will be kept within reasonable bounds, and that it will be a long time before the stage is inundated with tyros, who, if ladies, could have done better anywhere else, and if men, should rather have taken to the forest or prairie."

A PAINFUL ACCIDENT.

An Entire Growth of Whiskers Torn from a Man's Chin, Together with the Flesh.

Henry Felkamp, is a cutter in the employ of a firm of wholesale clothiers, on the corner of Vine and Pearl streets. He is, or rather was the possessor of a magnificent beard fifteen inches long. Monday morning a spring on the cutting machine of the establishment broke and flew under a table near the rapidly revolving shaft of the machine.

Mr. Felkamp stopped and reached under the table for the spring, when suddenly the shaft caught his long beard. In an instant the beard was wrapped tightly around the revolving shaft, which threatened to dash his head to pieces in the machinery. Mr. Felkamp, with the desperation of a doomed man, threw out his hands and bracing himself against the machinery, pulled with all his strength against fate. His arms were stronger than his chin, and by main force he extricated himself by pulling the flesh off the greater part of his chin. A part of the whiskers broke off, some were pulled out by the roots, but his lower lip and the flesh of his chin were literally torn off, exposing the gums of his lower jaw.



He then called called for help, before his associates knew that an accident had occured. The proprietors and employes of the firm exerted themselves to their utmost when they found what a terrible fate had befallen their respected comrade, but the telephone was called upon unsuccessfully for some time in attempts to summon physicians. One finally arrived and put the lacerated flesh back over the wound and sewed it fast with ten or twelve stitches. In the meanwhile the victim never uttered a groan, but endured the surgical operation, which was scarcely less painful than the accident, with most wonderful fortitude. His handsome whiskers are a total loss, and all that remained of them he wrapped in paper and carried home in his pocket. He was taken in a hack to his home.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

Brother Gardner says:—"I tell you, my frens, de man who waits fur to-morrer to sharpen his ax, am sartin to do poor choppin'. De man who sots on de fence to wait fur a legacy will h'ar his wife scrapin' de bottom ob de flour barrel ebery day in de week. De man who lets himself believe dat de world owes him a libin' am gwine to eat some mighty poo' fodder afore he dies. De world doan' owe nobody nuffin. We am put heah to sot an' starve or git up 'n' dust. Providence won't pay house rent, buy our taters or keep de cook-stove hot.

Anthony Trollope as Julien Hawthorne saw him in 1879: A broad-shouldered, sturdy man of middle height, with a ruddy countenance, and snow-white tempestuous beard and hair. He wore large gold-rimmed spectacles, but his eyes were black and brilliant, and looked at his interlocutor with a certain genial fury of inspection. His voice was full-toned and powerful, though pleasant to the ear, and his words burst forth from beneath his white mustache with such an impetus of hearty breath that it seemed that it all opposing arguments must be blown quite away. He was an exceedingly fine-looking old gentlemen, and at the first glance you would have taken him to be some civilized and modernized Squire Western, nourished with beef and ale, and roughly hewn out of the most robust and least refined variety of human clay.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE,
Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN,
Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JAN. 10, 1884.

CHURCH FINANCES.

Every city, town and village have their churches, and every church organization its various funds to maintain. There is the minister's salary to raise, the missionary fund to replenish yearly, the Sabbath school to support, churches to be built and kept in repair, besides numerous minor wants to be provided for; and various are the ways and means adopted for collecting the necessary funds. We do not purpose commenting here on the propriety of many means resorted to in raising the desired funds, but would urge the necessity and desirability of introducing a better system of handling and accounting for moneys collected. There are but few who are not more or less interested in the prosperity and well-being of some branch of the Christian church, or at least in the maintenance of their minister; and the great majority, at least in this country, give of their substance to the support of the same, yet how seldom there is a satisfactory account given of how it is appropriated. Those who are entrusted with the handling of such funds are generally men of undoubted integrity, and the account given of their stewardship is perhaps, on the whole, satisfactory. Yet there is room for a great improvement in these matters, inasmuch as there is a want of system and thoroughness. We believe that the more thoroughly you can educate a man into the workings of a society or church the greater will be his interest therein, and his practical support will correspondingly increase. The system of having a financial report published once a year, by each congregation, showing the total amount collected from every source, and giving the name of each contributor, together with the expenditure of the same, and the supplying each contributor with a copy of the report is, we believe, a system well worthy a fair trial. It is certain to have the following favorable results, viz: to increase the receipts very materially, which in itself is important, of encouraging a more acurate and systematic way of keeping accounts and of increasing in members as well as adherents; a greater interest in the cause. The system adopted and carried cut by Rev. James Ward of this place, is a most satisfactory and commendable one, viz: He publishes a Mission Magazine in pamphlet form monthly, one page of which is appropriated to the accounts, or receipts and expenditures of the mission. In this he gives a detailed account from month to month of all moneys collected for the different funds, even the church and Sunday school collections are accounted for, making the magazine most interesting in this respect, and good value for double what it costs, (the regular subscription price being 50 cents per year.) We have yet to learn of a congregation whose church affairs are conducted with such system and satisfactory results as that over which Rev. Mr. Ward presides.

—From the News: The return of business failures in the United States for 1883 shows that last year was the most disastrous of any since 1878. There were 9,184 failures, with liabilities amounting to about $173,000,000 This is an increase of 36 per cent. in the number of failures as compared with 1882, while the liabilities show an increase of seventy million dollars over those of that year. The causes of this unhealthy condition of business are largely the same as those which have resulted similarly in Canada, viz: over-production and reckless speculation by traders in lines outside of their legitimate business. There is nothing in the situation to cause alarm but everything to inculcate prudence and caution in discounting the future.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE IN MARKDALE

BURNS' BLOCK IN ASHES.

Sarjeant's Dwelling House Consumed.

On Tuesday evening about quarter to nine smoke was discovered issuing from an upper room in the above block, which was occupied by R. Askin as dwelling and undertaking store. Mason's carriage works and McKenna as blacksmith shop. Owing to scearcity of water together with the difficulty of reaching the fire which was working between the walls of partitions, the devouring element soon became master of the situation; when part of the crowd by this time gathered, made haste in removing the contents of the different departments while a number faught the fire, staying its progress as much as possible. As the fire originated in the upper portion of the building it did not make such rapid progress as it otherwise would have done, consequently the great bulk of contents were saved, though as usual, much damaged. It was evident that Sarjeants dwelling must go as it almost joined the block, and it was also stripped of its contents, a desperate and successful effort was made to save Sarjeants butcher shop, many of those present proved themselves heroes in their determined and fearless efforts to save property and especially the butcher shop.

OWNERS AND LOSSES.

The whole block was a wooden structure, the corner portion belonging to W. J. McFarland, valued at about $1,000, no insurance, it was occupied by R. Askin whose loss is covered by insurance. The other portion of the block is owned by John Benson of Toronto, loss $800 with $300, of insurance, this was occupiep by Wm. Mason whose loss will be considerabl, His insurance expired last week and was not renewd. J. McKenna also lost considerable and his insurance had expired in November and was not renewed, Sarjeants house and contents were insured to the amount of $450.

The fire is supposed to have originated from a defective flue. There was a stiff breeze from the east which was the means of saving Haskett's block. We have not yet learned what the intention of the owners of the property is in regard to re-building. It is the intention, however, of R. Askin to open out in the store recently occupied by H. Foster. Mr. Sarjeant will resume business in the old stand, Mr. Mason will commence as soon as a place can be procured, and Mr. McKenna likewise. We regret to learn that Geo. Noble had his ankle put out of joint in the midst of the excitement and will be laid up for some time.

—From the Evening News: The working of the Scott Act in the County of Halton has been strengthened by an important decision recently pronounced at Osgoode hall. It has been the universal experience that the great difficulty in securing convictions for the illegal sale of liquor is in getting satisfactory evidence of breaches of the law. Usually the services of informers are sought; but men of reputable character will not be engaged in this business, and those who do take it up frequently prefer to levy blackmail upon illicit dealers on their own account. In a case tried in Milton the accused party, John Wallace, a former hotel-keeper of that town, was called on to testify as to whether he was guilty of the offence charged against him, and on his own evidence a fine of $120 was inflicted. An appeal was taken, and the judges sustained the decision, holding that defendants in such cases can be compelled to give evidence. This will greatly facilitate the enforcement of the Act.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

VALLEY ROAD.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR.—In reply to the Reeve of Artemesia, in your issue of the 3rd inst. I beg to say I was informed Mr. Flesher left for England in October, 1880, if it was in 79 I must be in error as to date which I regret, but that will not alter the length of time that has elapsed without the Reeve having obtained the free deed promised by Mr. Flesher, it cast no reflection whatever on Mr. Flesher in any respect, for the Reeve said late last fall that he had not asked Mr. Flesher for the deed nor would he do so because if the council took the deed from Mr. Flesher they would be obliged to go on with the road, why not the same as to taking Mr. Hogg's deed? Mr. Hogg claims that the compensation given him for his deed was the By-Law passed by the council defining and establishing the whole road to join Campbell's road from which a road was previously established to the town line, and the agreement referred to by the Reeve as held by him provides that this By-Law should be passed before the council could claim a deed from Mr. Hogg. The By-Law as passed was presented by the Reeve to Mr. Hogg as the councils claim for his deed and the council having accepted his deed in return it now remains for the council to fulfil the terms and conditions af the By-Law, I would respectfully ask every fellow ratepayer of the township who believes it his interest to do so to join one in urging the Reeve to loose no time in preparing and despatching a deed to Mr. Flesher for his signature and as soon as it returns proceed to procure titles from the other owners through whose land the road passes, then parties immediately interested in the road can take steps for having it made passable as early as possible, but as long as the Reeve holds back no progress can be made in the matter.

Yours Truly,
RATE PAYER.

THE LATE RAILWAY DISASTER.

HOW IT OCCURRED.

From Thursday's Globe, Jan. 3rd.

An awful accident opens the New Year for Toronto. Yesterday morning at five minutes to seven o'clock the suburban train on the Great Western Division of the Grand Trunk Railway was run into by a special freight from the west about 150 yards west of High Park Station. The result is not less than twenty-seven men killed and from twenty to forty, more or less, badly mangled, scalded and burned. The suburban train consisting of the "dummy" engine and two cars, had its usual load of about sixty men being conveyed to their work at the Bolt Factory, just east of the Humber. Through some error not yet explained, the freight train went past the last stopping place, Mimico, and came thundering down the grade. The engineers on the two trains saw the disaster was inevitable, that no human means could save those to whom the crash came. In a moment the worst had come. The heavy freight locomotive, with its train of laden cars behind it, drove the engine to which it was attached, and mounted both, piling freight cars still higher. What had before been a car full of strong, hearty men became in an instant a sickening death-trap filled with mangled, bleeding humanity. A second later the boiler of the dummy engine exploded and the steam and water scalded and carried death or more awful injuries to the majority of the poor creatures. But this was not all. Fire followed and completed the calamity. The air was filled with shreeks and groans. Those who escaped injury and were able to do anything at once set to work to extricate those who it was possible to save Agonies of sufferers were indescribable. Lying out in grey dawn of cold winter morning poor fellows piteously besought those near them to pour water upon their scalded limbs and bodies, to do anything to ease their intolerable pain. The wounds inflicted and injuries done were

CLEAN THROUGH THE CAR

AWFUL BEYOND TELLING.

Every possible phase of disfigurement was to be seen. Unless one witnessed the sights it would be impossible to believe that the human form could be made to assume such dreadful shapes Limbs cut, bruised, mangled, half eaten away by fire, swollen to enormous sizes by the action of the steam and water. No horror was left to the imagination; no nightmare of the wildest could show anything more awful than this scene. Word was at once sent to the Union Station and a relief train was quickly forwarded to the scene of the disaster. The work of bearing the injured from the wreck to the passenger car awaiting them was enough to appal the stontest heart. The relief party were obliged to almost tear men from under the wreck notwithstanding their groans and cries. They had to work slowly, while from every side came heartrending appeals for assistance from men who must simply await their turn, and waiting suffer untold tortures and injured were soon on its way to the Union Station. The news of the calamity had gone before, and a crowd of men was gathered, talking over the meagre facts of the case that had reached them. The ambulance waggon and several cabs and busses were in waiting. As the train came to a stop at the east end of the station a large crowd with blanched faces gathered to witnes the bearing away of the wounded. One man after another was tenderly taken out of the car and transferred to a conveyance. Many in the crowd turned away actually

A CAR LOAD OF DEAD

SICK AT THE SIGHT.

Strong men wept, brushing their tears away with their mittened hands. As each vehicle received its compliment of the injured it drove away to the General Hospital The wounded men bore their sufferings with great patience, a few groans being the only signs of suffering. When all the wounded were gone two frightful looking objects were taken from the car. They were borne to the baggage-room, as the crowd through whom they passed raised hats, awe-stricken at the presence of death. The baggage room held the remains of two corpses mangled and injured almost beyond recognition.

CONDUCTOR BARBER ARRESTED,

Soon after the disaster conductor Barber of the freight train was placed under arrest. and held to await the developements of the inquest. It is alleged that he was running on the suburban train's time, and should not have left Mimico without orders.

THE KILLED.

The following is a list of the dead:

David Cruthers, lived at 31 Taylor street. He was an elderly man and leaves a widow and grown-up family.

Joseph Keefer, of 219 Little Richmond street, recently came to Toronto from Buffalo. He leaves a wife and family; aged 35 years.

John Donoghue was a lad about 15 years old. He was not engaged at the Bolt Works, but is said to have been on his way thither seeking employment.

Wm. Turriff, was from Fifeshire, Scotland, and about 22 years of age. Single, and boarded at 28 St. Paul street. He was a heater for a drop hammer.

Richard Mulligan was an Irishman. He leaves a widow. Was a sergeant in the Grenadiers, and will receive military funeral. Lived on Niagara street.

Jas. White, an ex policeman, and lived on Stafford street. He leaves a widow and grown-up family.

Thomas Wells, fireman of the special freight is supposed to have lived at Stratford.

John Rowlett lived at 90 Bolton street. He was a young man recently married.

John Lynch lived at 388 Little Richmond street. Leaves a widow but no family, his only surving child having died a few weeks ago; was formerly a scene-shifter.

Chas. Spohn, formerly of Cleveland, Ohio, lived at 168 Front street East.

Joseph McDonald, lived at No. 12 Power street. was a young unmarried man.

Samuel Bayley, 567 King street West, between 50 and 60 years of age unmarried.

Geo. Prescott, Abbey-lane, was a young man of 19 or 20, and the chief support of a widowed mother.

John Kernoughan recently out from the North of Ireland, leaves a widow a sister un provided for; aged 33; packer by trade.

Charles Stanley, Markham street, Seaton village, aged 14 years.

John McKenzie, Seaton village, son of Alex. McKenzie, Ontario street, aged 15 years.

H. D. Kerman, 101 Bleeker street, badly burned and severe shock; native of Hanover, and about 36 years of age.

Geo. A. J. Seal, rooms at 224 Parliament street; his home is at Sweetsburg, Que., 60 miles east of Montreal; 17 years of age.

John Aggett, a hammerman, lived at 216 Niagara street; leaves a wife and family,

Fred Bothroyd, 146 Strachan avenue; badly burned and scalded; a young Englishman recently out to this country.

James Kelly, 147 Front street, terribly scalded; was an American; leaves widow and family.

Hugh Cunningham. Bolton street Riverside; a native of Scotland; about 40 years of age; leaves widow and family.

Eddie Robinson, a lad aged 14; the favorite of the men at the works; lived at 14 Beverly street.

Later—Charles McDonald, Matthew Walker and Patrick Norton have since died.

AT THE HOSPITIAL.

From the hour of nine o'clock the hospital has been crowded with anxious people looking for their friends. The first man arrived in the ambulance about that hour, and others followed in omnibuses, transfer wagons, and cabs. Three stretchers were used to move the unfortunate victims to the different wards. The full hospital staff immediately proceeded to undress them while the doctors were busily engaged sewing up wounds and dressing those who were terribly scalded. Some of these poor men were burned from head to foot with steam from the locomotive and the flames. A Globe report through the different wards with Student O'Reilly. The scene was a n able one. With the exception of o the faces of those in the hospital be recognized by their friends. victims, named John Rowlett, of 9 street, died shortly after his arri hospital. Both of his legs were cu he was terribly burned. Samuel 567½ King street west, presented sight. His face was blackened an and he also soon succumbed. Jo of 258 Little Richmond street, di after 12 o'clock. He was terribly One young man, William Fitzgerald six years of age, of 146 Berkeley st he was found under the cylinder o motive. His face is badly cut, b likely recover. Hugh Cunningha Kermar, Fred. Bothroyd, James Ke Kobinson, and John Aggett all di the night.

Municipal Election

The following is the vote p in Glenelg, giving each polli division and the total number polled by each candidate.

CANDIDATES.	WARDS 1	2	3	4
Davis	100	39	54	3
MacRea	39	71	72	8
Glencross	47	13	42	8
McMillan	84	95	68	3
Dunsmoor	95	14	9	9
Lamb	10	5	95	4
McCuaig	41	97	11	3
Neil	28	34	70	2
Whitmore	116	38	2	1

Result of Euphrasia voting following is the official sta giving the total number of vot ed by each candidates:

Deputy Reeve.
Fawcett
Erskine

Majority for Fawcett,

Councillors.
Boyd
Black
Hurd
Shepherdson
Ellis
Clugston
Elliott
Kerr
Hawkin
Davis
Hall

COLLINGWOOD.—Mayor, John Reeve, J Moberly; Deputy, Jo tleton. Councillors—Centre J W Archer, A McDermid, W J West Word, C E Stepheus, F E Stewart; East Ward, E B J Carscadden, P Henser.

DURHAM.—Mayor, D Jackso Reeve, G McKechnie. Counc North Ward, J Burnett, R McF C L Grant; East Ward, G Wh J Dunsmoor, W Laidlaw; Wes Dr. Jamieson, K Greenwo Tucker.

MEAFORD.—Mayor, Charles Reeve, Alex Thompson. Coun North Ward, T C Wilcox, H L Robinson; East Ward, J Spar C Little, E Thompson.

OWEN SOUND.—Mayor, D A C Reeve. John Chisholm; 1st D J W Frost, 2nd Deputy, J C Councillors—D Morrison, J C Jas White, S McLean, Jas R Robert Malcolm, James H Litt Manders, Thos Kennedy, John er. The poll for the latter two ed in a tie.

ORANGEVILLE.—Mayor, Jos Pa Reeve, John Gilchrist; Deputy Hewitt. Councillors—East W Mortimer, J Moore; North Wa Reid, Jas Beatty; West Ward, C Kearns; South Ward, Mole, Ma

SHELBURNE.—Reeve, Wm. Councillors—E Berwick, T F G R Hanuah, C Irwin.

ARTEMESIA.—Reeve, Dr. Chr Councillors, Elliott, McA Blakely, and Pedlar.

EUPHRASIA.—Reeve, Gilray; uty, Fawcett; Councillors, Hurd and Black.

HOLLAND.—Reeve, J. Came Deputy, Norton; Councillors, H Galbraith, and Williscroft.

GLENELG.—Reeve, McRae; D McMillan; Councillors, Duns Neil, and McCuaig.

PROTON.—Reeve. J. J. Middl Deputy, Rogers Councillors, I Shaw and Johnston.

OSPREY.—Reeve, Thomas Ga Deputy, A. McIntyre; Counci not yet heard from.

BIRTHS.

HULL—In Markdale, on New Year's da wife of Mr. J. H. Hull, of a son.

RICHARDS—In Markdale on New Year' the wife of Mr. C. Richards, of a son

MONTGOMERY—In Markdale, on the 6th the wife of Mr, Robert Montgomery, daughter.

DEATHS.

MURRAY.—Father of Mr. Thos. M Glenelg, on the 9th inst., aged 78 ye

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK.

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TORONTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clochs, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personaliy, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.95 to $1.05; Spring $0.60 to $1 08; Barley, 40 to55; Peas, 66; Oats, 27c Butter. 18c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes,[35c; Hay, $8 .00 ; Pork, 6.00 to 6.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

First class oatmeal for sale at Barhead Mills. cheap.

Annual Township Agricultural Society's meeting to-day.

The morning train going North was over three hours late yesterday.

Dr. Sproule M. P. and lady will leave on Wednesday next for Ottawa.

Our report of Euphrasia and Glenelg Municipal elections are the official figures.

The Meaford Mirror is reduced in size and changed in form to that of four-page double royal.

The next sittings of division court, No. 5, will be held in Flesherton, on Thursday January 24th, 1884.

If you have a bad cold or a weak stomach try a cup of McFarlands pure Japan tea, three times daily.

School Books. — Royal Reders, Canadian Readers, and all the ordinary text books at the Medical Hall A. Turner & Co.

One voice all over the land goes up from mothers that say McFarland sells the purest and best Tea in the county.

To improve your appearance, bring your razor to Smith, the barber and have it put in good trim, and then have a dacent shave.

Parties indebted to me by note or account will pay same to Wm. Lucas. immediately, as all accounts, notes &c., will be sued in next court unless paid. W. F. Doll.

DON'T forget the entertainment to be given to night in the Orange hall by the Markdale Literary and Gymnastic Club. An excellsnt time is expectad. Doors open at 7:30, tickets 25 cents.

The recent cold dip has had a wonderful effect on the wood pile. We have had considerable sour wood which is very annoying,and a host of promises for a further supply of fuel, which has been equally unsatisfactory.

J. H. Hull had a New Year's gift presented to him on the 1st January, a young son; and Charlie Richard's, not to be beaten, had a similar presentation the same day. We wish them many happy returns of the occasion.

A. O. U. W.—We understand the local members of this progressive order have secured the hall in the top story of the Berwick block for lodge purposes. The hall is very commodious, and is going to be well carpeted and finely furnished.—Shelburne Free Press.

The prospects are favorable for the establishment of a woollen factory in Markdale next summer. as a party is now corresponding with that view. There is an excellent opening for one and a splendid business can be done by the right man.

It is thought by a good many that John Chisholm, Esq., being an old and active member of the County Council, and popular with the members, will receive the honor of the Wardenship this year.—O. S. Times.

Business Change.—In a few days Mr. McNea will remove his extensive stock of groceries, wines and liquors into the new premises adjoining the old stand, which is being neatly and tatefully fitted up. Give him a call.

For first class axe handles go to Finnerty's shop, Elizabeth st., opposite the bank, Markdale. You can bring your own timber and have them made to order, or you can get them all ready made at the shop. Sign of the Big Axe Handle. 169-72

The first meeting of Township Council is fixed by act of Parliment, and is the third Monday in the year which will be the 21st inst. The County Council will meet the following day. The fourth Tuesday in January being the first meeting by statute.

The late storm was general, and we believe the most severe we have had for many years. Railway traffic on the various lines was checked, but have since resumed usual regularity, the roads however are in a bad, and in many places, impassable state, through the country.

A Secret.—The secret of beauty lies in pure blood and good health. Rejuvinater Bitters is the grand key that unlocks all the secretions. It cures all Scrofulous Diseases, acts on the blood, Liver Kidneys, Skin and Bowels, and brings the bloom of health to the palid cheek. Sold only by Smith, the barber.

Our Patrons who wish to subscribe, or renew their subscaiption for any of the following publications will do us a favor by handing the amount in to us at the Standard office, viz. Weekly Mail, or Globe, Family Herald and Weekly Star, monthly Farmers Advocate, Americau Agriculturist, any of the above with the Standard for $2.00 or singly for one $1. except the Agriculturist which is $1.50.

Not easily Discouraged.—Miss Burnside, a very highly respected young lady of this place was to be married on Wednesday in her friend's Mr Sargeant's house, the house was burned the night previous, but the happy event took place on the appointed day at Mr. J. R. Trimbles residence. Our best wishes follow them.

Accident.—Mr. Jno. Wilson, of Masonville, lost a valuable horse on Saturday last. Mr. W. was on his way home from Shelburne, and was turning the corner at Mr. John B. Dodd's place when the horse got his leg between a large stone and a culvert and broke it. Mr. Wilson killed the horse at once, as there was no chance of recovery.—Free Press.

Almost a Fire.—The new year in Shelburne was nearly being welcomed by a big blaze in Mr. John Lindsay's residence. Just about midnight, fire was discovered between the studding of a partition where a stove-pipe passes through; but prompt action by Mr. Lindsay and a few of the neighbors checked the blaze before much damage was done.—Free Prese.

A Beautiful Gift.—The Rock Island Route has issued a new and most comprehensive Cook Book, of 128 pages, filled with new and reliable receipts from the best caterers of this and other countries. No housewife can afford to be without it; and though worth one dollar, it will be sent to any address, postpaid, upon receipt of ten cents in stamps. As they will go like hot cakes send at once to E. St. John, G. T. & P. A., Chicago, Illinois.

Extensive auction sale of village lots in the village of Markdale, on Saturday, Feb. 2, by M. Armstrong. The above lots are all well situated in the best part of the village, commanding a good view and convenient to railway station. Terms, one third cash, balance in one and two years.

Mr. Norman McIntyre has opened a branch store in his brothers premises, in Markdale. Mr. W. P. Patterson has charge of it and if he is as popular in Markdale as in Durham he is sure to do a good business.—Durham Chronicle. Mr. W. P. has made a favourable impression to commence with, and we have no doubt he will be well patronized. We wish him success.

Artemesia District L. O. L. held their annual meeting in the town hall, Flesherton, on the 8th inst., when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: J Brodie, DM; Wm. Rutledge, DDM; Rev. T McGregor, DC; T H Firth, DKC; J Boland DFS; Jas Elliott, D Treas; Wm Wright, Lecturer; E Brodie, D Lecturer; J Blakely, Dir of Cer. This lodge contains eight primary lodges which were all represented.

Dr. M. Souvielle & Co., surgeons from the celebrated International Throat and Lung Institute will be at the Rutledge House, Markdale, on the 16th inst., where they can be consulted by physicians or patients suffering from catarrh, catarrhal deafness, bronchitis, asthma, consumption, or any disease of nose, throat, or lungs. These specialists use the spirometer, an instrument which conveys the medicinal properties of the medicine directly to the seat of disease. Invented by Dr. M. Souvielle ex-aide surgeon of the French Army. Consultation and trial of spirometer free. For further information write for list of questions and copy of International News to International Throat and Lung Institute, 173, Church St. Toronto.

George Lamb of 19 con., Egremont deliberately suicided lastFriday morning. He had been in Mt. Forest the previous day, and a gentleman who rode some distance with him, states that he even was in better spirits than usual, chatting jocularly all the way,yet there is no doubt but that he had in his possession at the time the rope purchased for the rash and fatal act. On Friday morning he went out as usual to feed the stock, and not returning, his boys went to see what was keeping him and were horrified to discover his lifeless body hanging by a rope attached to one of the rungs of a ladder which he had leant against the side of a straw stack. His feet was only about 2 inches from the ground and the ladder was within easy reach, so the deed was evidently premeditated and executed with terrible earnestness His financial position was sound and he was neither addicted to the use of nor under the influence of liquor.—Durham Chronicle.

AWFUL CATASTROPHE.

An Illinois Educational Institution Destroyed by Fre.

St. Louis, Jan. 5.—In the institute of the Immaculate Conception Sisters of Notre Dame, Belleville, Ill., destroyed by fire last night, were sixty pupils—all girls from 10 years to adult age—several teachers, and other inmates. After the fire started an attempt was made by the Sisters to extinguish it, and failing efforts were made to remove the pupils. The flames spread so rapidly that no order could be preserved, and a panic seized both children and sisters with wild confusion, and a rush to escape, Forty or more pupils are known to have got out, but several in their fright jumped from the windows, and were either killed or badly injured. It is reported that the fire started from the furnace in the basement, and the flame spread upward cutting off most of the exits.

Meaford Road.

From a correspondent.

At the annual school meeting Mr. Arthur Johnston was elected school trustee.

Wesley, son of Mr. T. Kells, accidently shot himself on Wednesday, while fooling with a revolver, Dr. Sproule was sent for and removed the shell of the bullet from the boys cheek. He will recover.

The wives of Messrs. W. J. Cooey, A. Johnston, and J. C. Buchanan have each presented their liege lord with a fine boy as Christmas and New Year's gift's.

Stormy weather and roads badly drifted, making travel in some places almost impassable. What has become of our pathmasters.

The family of Mr. J. Rowe intend moving to Manitoba in the spring.

The annual tea meeting in connection with the Sabbath school will be held in the Wesley church on the 15th inst.

Mr. T. Gilbert, sr., has been ill for some time but is now improving.

A daughter of Mr. Jas. Brodie, aged 17, has been very ill for several weeks with inflammatory rheumatism, she is yet in a critical condition and very little, if any improvement can be noticed.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

The cattle fair on Tuesday was fairly attended.

The question of incorporotion is beginning to agitate the minds of some of our citizens.

The band intend holding a grand concert on Thursday evening considerable foreign and professional talent has been engaged for the occasion.

Mr. T. Haney, one of our merchants removed to Luther this week. It is hoped his success or Mr. Wheeler will be more enterprising than Mr. Haney was.

The proprietor of our woollen mills has "done it up sly." He was married last week to Miss McCosh, of Melancthon, very sly Willie, but not so sly as you imagined.

J. J. Middleton, Esq., has been returned to the position he formerly occupied as Reeve of Proton. The band celebrated the event by serenading him at his residence on Monday evening.

Notwithstanding the large number of nominations very little interest was manifest in the election of police trustees. One of the four candidates resigned, leaving the other three masters of the field, viz: Thos. Hanbuury A. G. Hunter, G. R. Middleton.

Golden Wedding.—On the 29th of Dec., 1883, Mr. William Hunter aged 73 and his wife now 70 celebrated the fiftieth year of their married life. surrounded by a large circle of sons and daughters, sons-in-law, daughters in-law, grand children and great grandchildren. The marriage ceremony was repeated by the Rev. W. E. McKay, B. A., after which the rev. gentleman gave a very able and exhaustive address, during the delivery of which tears were shed by many of the friends. It is a striking coincidence that exactly a quarter of a century ago W. H. Hunter, Esq., their oldest son,was united in the bands of holy matrimoney to his present wife, then Miss Gillespie, and this was the first marriage ceremony preformed by Mr. McKay in this part of the country. After the feast which had been bountifully provided for the occasion was over, Mr. and Mrs. Hunter were made the recipients of many valuable presents. I may also state that Mr. and Mrs. Hunter have seventy-three grand children living and seventeen great grandchildren. It was a happy occasion and one that will not be soon forgotten by all who were present. Com.—Orangeville Advertiser.

The Toronto World, speaking of the new railway ticket just comming into use in the United States, says: "We are glad to hear that the Canadian Pacific Railway are contemplating the introduction of the system—have in fact decided on it, and that before long it will be in use on the main line and on the Ontario and Quebec division. The Grand Trunk, too, are in favor of it, but do not expect to adopt it before January 1st, 1885. The saying to the railroad and the convenience to the public therefrom will be almost incalculation Under this system a passenger buys a fifty mile, ticket mede up in a little book with a perforated section for each mile Each of these little sections is good for a mile in any direction or on any part of the road.

Credit Sale Register.

January the 12th, Saturday, on the premises of M. Patton,lot 21, con. 7,Euphrasia, a large quantity of farm stock, implements, &c. Sale to commence at 12 o'clock. Terms sums over $5.00 12 months on approved paper. J. W. Shepherdson auctioneer.

CARD OF THANKS.

Having sold my livery business to Mr. W. Benson, I beg to return sincere thanks for the very liberal patronage I have received at your hands while in the business, and would hereby solicit a continuance of the same for my successor.

J. H. HULL.

CARD OF THANKS.

Those who worked so bravely and successfully in battling with the fire and saving my household goods together with shop and contents will please accept my sincere thanks.

FRED SARJEANT.

NOTICE.

Those indebted to the undersigned will please call and settle without further delay. Owing to the late fire I am in need of all outstanding accounts.

R. ASKIN.

CARD OF THANKS.

My sincere thanks is due and hereby tendered to those who worked so faithfully in saving my goods and household furniture from the late fire.

R. ASKIN.

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia. Age, year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

TEACHER WANTED.

For Union School Section No. 1, Euphrasia and Artemsia, Female holding Second or Third Class certificate, duties to commence 2nd January 1884. Apply personally to Wm. Mathews, Robt. Carruthers or James Stewart, or by letter to

JAMES STEWART,
172-74 Eugenia P.O.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot 8 part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.
Oct.16.1883. 16

EXECUTOR'S NOTICE

TO THE CREDITORS OF

James Thompson.

Notice is hereby given that the creditors of James Thompson, late of the Township of Artemesia, in the County of Grey, Farmer, who died on or about the 4th day of April, 1883, at the said township of Artemesia are, on or before the next, to send to either of the undersigned Executors at Flesherton, their Christian and Surnames, addresses and descriptions, the full particulars of their claims, a statement of their accounts and the nature of the securities (if any) held by them. After the said Fourth day of January next the said Executors will distribute the assets of the said James Thompson, amongst the parties entitled thereto, having regard only to such claims as the said executors shall then have notice of.

TENTH DAY OF JANUARY,

This notice is given in pursuance of Chap. 107. Sec. 34, R. S. O.

Dated at Flesherton this 11th day of December 1883.

(Signed) ISAAC SINCLAIR.
171-74 WILLIAM HILL.

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER VII.—(CONTINUED.)

"If he did nothing worse than that I should think no worse of him than you do, Miss Christie. But I think that you will allow that a man who has lived within half a mile of another man for nearly three years must know more of his character than a young innocent girl who has seen him at his best only for a month."

"But you cannot judge a man fairly until you have seen him continually in his own home. I have seen Mr. Rayner among his family; I have played for him, walked with him, had long walks with him; and I must surely know him better than you, who have only an ordinary outside acquaintance with him."

Mr. Reade drew himself up very stiffly, and the color rushed to his forehead. He was getting really angry.

"No doubt, Miss Christie, you know him a great deal better than I do. I have never played for him, and I have not found either talks or walks with him particularly delightful. But then I dare say he did not try so hard to be agreeable to me as he did to you."

He said this in a sneering tone, which brought the hot blood to my face. I tried to answer, but my voice would not come. I turned away sharply, and left him, with an agony of anger and pain at my heart which would have made him remorseful indeed if he could have guessed what his words had inflicted. As it was, he followed me a few steps down the drive, with apologies to which I was too angry and too much hurt to listen.

"Don't speak to me now," I said—"I can't bear it;" and, running off rapidly into a side-path, I left him, and fled away through the alleys into the house.

Luckily I managed to keep back tears, so that I could return to the drawing-room with the flowers I had gathered before they began to wonder why I had been so long. Mrs. Rayner told me that the note from Mrs. Manners which Mr. Reade had brought was to ask that the articles which we were preparing for the "sale"—a sort of bazaar on a small scale which was one of the attractions of the annual school-treat—should be sent in to her within a week, as they had to be ticketed and arranged before the sale-day arrived, and whether Miss Christie would be so kind as to give her services at the stall; and, if so, whether she would call on Mrs. Manners during the next few days to settle what should be her share of the work. I was delighted at the thought of this little excitement, and, although Mr. Rayner warned me that I should have nothing nicer to do than to see the pretty trifles I had worked fingered by dirty old women who would not buy them, and to have hot tea poured over me by clumsy children if I helped at the feast, I would not be frightened by she prospect.

That evening I debated with myself whether it was not too damp and swampy still for me to go and peep at my nest and see if the water had subsided and left the top of the bricks dry. I chose afterwards to think that it was some supernatural instinct which led me to decide that I would put on my goloshes and go.

When I got there, I found on the bough which formed my seat a basket of Gloire de Dijon roses, and the stalk of the uppermost one was stuck through a little note. I never doubted those roses were for me; I only wondered who had put them there. I looked searchingly around me in all directions before I took up the rose which carried the note and carefully slipped it off. It contained these words.

"For Miss Christie, with the sincere apologies of one who would not have offended her for the whole world."

I did not know the writing, but I knew whom it was from. I think, if I had been quite sure that no one could have seen me, I should have raised the note to my lips, I was so happy. But, though I could see no one, the fact of the basket arriving so surely at my secret haunt seemed to argue the existence of a supernatural agency in dealing with which one could not be too discreet; so I only put the note into my pocket and returned to the house with my flowers.

The supernatural agency could not follow me there, so I slept that night with the note under my pillow.

CHAPTER VIII.

"You are getting pale again, my dear child," said Mr. Rayner to me the next morning—he met me, at the foot of the stairs, dressed for my walk with Haidee. "We must find some means of bring those most becoming roses back to your cheeks again. You work too hard at those self-imposed evening tasks, I am afraid."

"Oh, no, indeed I don't, Mr. Rayner! I am getting very lazy; I haven't done anything for two or three nights."

The fact was that I had felt too languid even to sit down and write, and I had wasted the last two evenings listlessly turning over the pages of a book I did not read.

"Ah, then you want change of air! Now how to give it you without letting you go away—for we can't spare you even for a week! You will think me a magician if I procure you change of air without leaving this house, won't you, Miss Christie? Yet I think I can manage it. You must give me a few days to look about for my wand, and then, hey, presto, the thing will be done!"

I laughed at these promises, looking upon them as the lightest of jests; but the very next day I met a workman upon the stairs and Mr. Rayner asked me mysteriously at dinner whether I had seen his familiar spirit about, adding that the spirit wore a paper cap and a dirty artisan's suit, and smelt of beer. That spirit pervaded the house for two days. I met him in the garden holding very unspiritual converse with Jane; I met him in my room taking the measure of my bedstead; I met him in the passage carrying what looked like thin sheets of tin and rolls of wall-paper, and I heard sounds of heavy boots in the turret above my room. Then I saw no more of him; but still there were unaccustomed sounds over my head, sounds of footsteps and knocking, and I met sometimes Jane and sometimes Sarah coming out of a door which I had never known unlocked before, but which I now discovered led to a narrow staircase that I guessed was the way to the turret.

On the fourth day, when I went to my room to dress for tea, I found it all dismantled, the bed and most of the furniture gone, and little Jane pulling down my books from their shelf and enjoying my discomfiture with delighted giggles, not at all disconcerted at being caught taking an unheard of liberty.

"What does this mean, Jane? I can't sleep on the floor; and what are you doing with my books?" I cried in one breath.

"I don't know nothing about it, miss; it's Mr. Rayner's orders," said she, with another irrepressible snigger at my bewildered face.

I was turning to the door to wander forth, I did not know exactly whither, to try to find an explanation of this most extraordinary state of things, when Sarah came in, her dark frowning face offering a strong contrast to that of the laughing Jane.

"Sarah, can you tell me what this means?" said I.

"Mr. Rayner has ordered the room in the turret to be prepared for you," said she shortly. "Perhaps you will be kind enough to manage down here till after tea, as it's his orders that you shouldn't be shown up till the room is quite ready."

I answered that I could manage very well, and they left the room. I said nothing at tea about my adventure, reflecting that perhaps some surprise for me was intended, which would be sprung upon me at a fitting time. And so it proved. While I was quietly writing in the schoolroom, after tea, Mr. and Mrs. Rayner and Haidee, who had not yet gone to bed, came in and conducted me in a formal procession up-stairs, up the narrow winding turret-staircase that I had so often wanted to explore, and, opening the door of the one room the turret contained, Mr. Rayner, in a short but elaborate speech, begged to instal me without further ceremony as the "imprisoned princess of the enchanted tower."

I gave a cry of delight. It was an octaganal room, the four sides which overlooked the marsh containing each a window, while in one of the other sides was a small fireplace with a bright fire burning. The carpet was new, the wall-paper was new; there were two easy-chairs, one on each side of the fire, a writing-table and a Japanese screen, besides the furniture of my old room. It looked so bright and so pretty that my eyes danced with pleasure at the sight, and I could not speak while Mr. Rayner explained that now I should be high and dry out of the damp, and he expected me to become red-faced and healthy-loooking immediately—that he had had tinfoil put behind the paper in one of the cupboards which was considered damp, that the picturesque ivy had been torn down—all but a little bit to hide the unsightly chimney—and that I was to have a fire whenever I liked now, and one every day when it began to grow colder.

"I don't know what to say. I don't know how to thank you," said I, almost pained by the extent of the kindness showered upon me.

I tried to include Mrs. Rayner in my thanks; but she hung back almost ungraciously, and she seemed to have been drawn into this demonstration against her will. She was the last of my three visitors to leave the room, and in the moment that we were alone together, before she followed her husband and child down stairs, she said, seeming to be moved out of her reserve by the unaccustomed little excitement, and casting upon me a keen look from her great eyes—

"Are you not afraid of sleeping so far from every one? Or do you prefer it?"

I am not at all nervous; but I was enough impressed by her almost eager manner to answer rather shyly—

"No, I don't prefer it. But there is nothing to be afraid of, is there?"

She glanced toward the door, and, saying hurriedly, "Oh, no, of course not! I hope you will be comfortable, Miss Christie," she left the room.

Afraid! No, of course I was not afraid; I never had minded sleeping away from everybody else; and, if burglars were to break into the Alders, they certainly would not expect to find anything worth stealing in the turret. I wished Mrs. Rayner had not put the idea into my head, though. I was not so strong-minded as to be proof against fear even at second-hand, and ever since the sensation caused by that jewel-robbery in Derbyshire I had been very careful to hide away my watch, my one bracelet, and my two brooches under my pillow at night. But I was too happy in my new abode to trouble myself long with idle fears. I found that, by opening out my screen in a particular position, I could completely hide the wash-hand stand, and make myself a sitting-room; then I sat down by the fire in one of the arm chairs and gave myself up to the enjoyment of this new piece of good fortune; and I was still gazing into the fire, with my feet cosily warming—the nights were already cold enough for that to be a luxury—on a hassock close to the fender, when I heard Sarah coming up the stairs. I knew her footstep, and I would rather not have heard what I considered her ill-omened tread on this first evening in my new room. For I knew that Sarah disliked me, and even the fact that she had brought me up some coals to replenish my fire, which was getting low, did not reconcile me to her presence; I could not help thinking of the grudging manner in which before tea she had announced to me my change of residence. I tried to be friendly, however, and, when I had thanked her for her trouble, I said—

"I wonder this nice room has been neglected so long. Has no one ever used it, Sarah?"

"Mr. Rayner used to use it for a study," she said shortly. "I don't know why he gave it up; I suppose it was too high up. That was six months ago, before you came."

"It is a long way from anybody else's room, Sarah, isn't it?"

"Mine is the nearest, and I have ears like needles; so you needn't be frightened," said she, in a tone which really sounded more menacing than consoling.

"It will be rather lonely on a stormy night; the wind will howl so up here," I said, my spirits beginning to sink under her sharp speeches.

"Oh, you won't want for company, I dare say!" she said, with a harsh grating laugh.

"Why all the company I am likely to get here is burglars," I answered lugubriously, with my chin between my hands.

The start she gave startled me in my turn.

"Burglars! What burglars? What are you talking about?"

I looked up amazed at the effect of my words on Sarah, whom, of all people in the world, I should have considered strong-minded. It was promotion for me to be soothing Sarah.

"Why, I have more courage than you!" I said, laughing lightly. "I'm not afraid of them. If they came, they would soon go down again when they found there was nothing to take. Would you be afraid to sleep up here alone, Sarah?"

But she hardly took the trouble to answer me except by a nod; her black eyes were fixed upon me as I spoke, as if she would, and almost as if she could, penetrate to my inmost soul. Then, as if satisfied with the result of her scrutiny, she relapsed into her usual hard, cold manner, and, answering my good night shortly, left me alone.

Then I made up my mind definitely on a point that had often occupied me vaguely, and decided that Mrs. Rayner and Sarah were, in different ways, without exception, the two most unpleasant and disagreeable women I had ever met. And after that I went to bed and dreamt, not of a burglar, but of quite a different person.

The next day was Sunday, and there were two strangers in church who attracted the attention of all the congregation. They were two fair-complexioned, light-haired girls who sat in the Reades' pew, and who had evidently spared no expense on rather tasteless and unbecoming toilettes. I caught myself feeling not sorry that they were ill-dressed, and glad that one was plain and that the one who was pretty was dreadfully freckled; and I wondered how it was that I had grown so ill-natured. Mr. Laurence Reade sat between them, and he shared his hymn-book with the pretty one; and I did so wish it had been with the plain one! And when we came out of the church, and he and his two sisters and the two girls trooped out together, the breaking up of the group left him to pair off again with the pretty one.

I remember noticing, as Haidee and I walked home together, that the midges teased me more than they had ever done that summer, that the sun was more scorching, and that it was just as dusty as if we had not had any rain at all. It was a horrid day.

Mr. Rayner asked us, at dinner, if we had noticed the two girls with the pretty hair in Mr. Reade's pew, and said that he had heard that the one with the blue eyes was the future Mrs. Laurence Reade, and that it would be an excellent match for both of them.

"I noticed that he paid her a great deal of attention in church, and afterwards they paired off together quite naturally," said he.

And that afternoon the heat and the midges and the dust were worse than ever.

Mr. Rayner complained on the day after this that I was looking paler than before, and threatened to have me sent back to my old room if I did not look brighter in two days from that date. Luckily for me, my spirits improved a little. The next day Haidee and I passed by Geldham Park in our walk, and saw over the fence Mr. Reade, his sisters, and the two strangers playing lawn-tennis. None of them noticed us that time; but, as we were returning, I observed that Mr. Reade jumped up from the grass where he was lounging in the midst of the adoring girls, as I thought contemptuously, and shook out of his hat the leaves and grasses with which his companions had filled it; as for them, they were too much occupied with him to see anything outside the park.

Haidee and I had to go the village shop with a list of articles which I felt sure we should not get there. But it was one of Mr. Rayner's principles to encourage local trade, so we had to go once a week and tease the crusty and ungrateful old man who was the sole representative of it by demands for such outlandish things as wax-candles, bloater-paste, and floselle. I had been tapping vainly for some minutes on the little counter, on which lay four tallow "dips," a box of rusty crochet-hooks, and a most uninviting piece of bacon, when Mr. Reade dashed into the shop and greeted me with much surprise. When he had asked after Mr. and Mrs. Rayner, and heard that they were quite well, there was a pause, and he seemed to look to me to continue the conversation; but I could think of nothing to say. So he roamed about, digging his cane into the cheese and knocking down a jar of snuff, which he carefully scraped together with his foot and shovelled back, dust and all, into the jar, while I still tapped and still nobody came.

"He must be at dinner," said I resignedly. "In that case we shall have to wait."

For I knew Mr. Bowles. So Mr. Reade seated himself on the counter and harpooned the bacon with one of the rusty crochet-hooks.

"Convenient places these village-shops," said he, not thinking of what he was saying, I was sure.

"Yes, if you don't care what you get, nor how stale it is," said I sharply.

He laughed; but I did not intend to be funny at all.

"I came in only for some"—here he looked round the shop, and his eyes rested on a pile of dusty toys—"for some marbles. I thought they would do for the school-treat, you know."

I thought it was a pity he did not return to his lawn-tennis and his fiancee if that was the errand he came on, and I was determined not to be drawn into another tete-a-tete with him, so I turned to leave the shop. But he stopped me.

"Old Bowles can't be much longer over his bacon, I'm sure," said he, rather pleadingly. "I—I wanted to ask you if you were any better. I thought last Sunday you were looking awfully ill."

"Last Sunday?"—and I thought of those girls. "I was never better in my life, thank you. And I am quite well. Mr. and Mrs. Rayner have put me into the turret to keep me out of the damp. It was very, very kind of him to think about it. It is the best room in all the house."

"Best room in the house? Then Mr. Rayner doesn't sleep in the house at all," said he, in a low voice, but with sudden decision.

I got up from the one chair and turned to my pupil, who was deep in an old story-book she had found.

"Come, Haidee!"

"No, no; that is revenge—it is unworthy of you," said he, in a lower voice still. "Don't let us quarrel again. Mr. Rayner is an angel. No, no, not that!"—for I was turning away again. "He has his faults; but he is as near perfection as a man can be. Then you are very happy at the Alders now?"

"Yes, thank you."

"And you have no great troubles?"

"Yes, I have—Sarah."

"Sarah? That is one of the servants, isn't it? A gaunt, shrewd looking person? I've often met her on the road to and from Beaconsburgh."

"Yes. She goes out when she likes, I think. She is a very important person in the household, much more so than Mrs. Rayner."

"Oh! And she is a trouble to you?"

"Yes; I'm afraid of her. She doesn't like me. And whenever I used to give her letters to post I never got any answers to them."

"Does Mr. Rayner like her?"

"Like her? I don't think any one could like Sarah, except, of course, her 'young man.' That doesn't count. But Mr. Rayner thinks a great deal of her."

"So the young man's liking doesn't count?"

"Of course Tom Parks is prejudiced in her favor," said I, preferring that the talk should remain personal.

"Surely it is a compliment to a woman that a young man should be prejudiced in her favor?" said he, preferring that the talk should become abstract.

"He must have finished by this time!" I cried; and a vigorous thump on the counter did at last bring in Mr. Bowles, who declared it was the first sound he had heard.

I was sorry to find that he had several of the things I wanted, as everything he sold was of the worst possible quality; and, while he was doing them up, Mr. Reade found an opportunity to whisper—

"You got my flowers?"

"Yes, thank you; it was very kind of you to send them."

"Bring them," corrected he, "What did you do with them?"

I remembered the fair-haired girl and my resolve to be discreet.

"I put them in water, and when they were dead I threw them away."

"Threw them away?"

"Yes, of course; one doesn't keep dead flowers," said I calmly; but it hurt me to say so, for the words seemed to hurt him. It is very hard to be discreet.

He said no more, but took his parcel and left the shop, saluting me very coldly. I had taken up my parcel, and was going out too, when Haidee's soft voice broke in.

"You've got Mr. Reade's marbles, and he has gone off with mamma's wool and curtain-hooks, Miss Christie."

I had not noticed this.

"How stupid of him!" I exclaimed.

He had marched off so fast that I had to run down the lane after him before he heard me call "Mr. Reade!" We laughed a little at the embarrassment he would have felt if he had produced a ball of wool and curtain-hooks as the result of the morning's shopping, and I if I had gravely presented Mrs. Rayner with a bag of marbles. And then, remorseful and blushing, I said hurriedly—

"I did keep one of the roses, Mr. Reade—the one with the note on it;" and then I ran back to Haidee, without looking up. Whether he was engaged or not, I could not be ungracious about those lovely flowers.

Then Haidee and I went home to dinner. I had met Mr. Reade quite by accident, and I had done nothing wrong, nothing but what civility demanded, in exchanging a few words with him; but I was glad Haidee was not one of those foolish prattling little girls who insist upon chattering at meal-times about all the small events of the morning walk.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

WASTING AWAY.

The Living Skeleton Ready to Yield His Body to the Cause of Science.

Isaac S. Sprague, the living skeleton, who is 40 years old, and has been reduced by atrophy to forty pounds weight, said to a correspondent, in regard to a rumour that he had given his body, in the interests of science, to the Harvard Medical College: "Yes, the story is true, and all the arrangements have just been completed. I have agreed that when I die they shall have my body; they will first cut it open and make a post mortem examination to find out, if possible, why I am so thin; then they will put the body in alcohol and place it in the museum of the college, where it will remain, but I'm going to need it myself for the present; they can't have it till I get through with it. My body will be preserved in the museum there as that of Calvin Edson is in the Albany museum. Edson died at the age of forty-five, weighing only forty-five pounds. The doctors, when they cut him open, found that his thinness was caused by narrowing of the thoracic duct, a trouble with which other members of his family were affected. His face and neck were emaciated like the rest of his body, but mine are not, so my thinness is probably due to something else. The physicians pronounce it to be an extreme case of progressive muscular atrophy. It has been going on for thirty years, while the longest other case on record is that of a man who died after having the complaint for ten years."—Albany Argus.

The Freak of a Birmingham Chimney Sweep.

Recently a strange scene in one of the principal Birmingham thoroughfares was the subject of magisterial proceedings. A sweep named Cheshire ran up a ladder on to the roof of a gentleman's house, and, for the edification of a large crowd, stood upon his head on the top of a chimney pot, at the same time performing with his legs a variety of fantastical movements. The chimney collapsed and fell into the street, doing damage to the extent of a sovereign, and causing several persons to have narrow escaped from injury, while the adventurous performer of the freak rolled into the water-spout, and had a narrow escape from what must have been instant death. Ultimately he was rescued through a skylight in the roof. The prisoner said he supposed he had been playing the fool. The Clerk—And you will have to pay for it. Cheshire was fined 5s., and 20s. damages.—London Telegraph,

Philosophy of Eating.

Were men to exercise the same judgm in reference to their own food that th in feeding domestic animals, there woul less illness on account of diet. For a m ter of such universal importance it has the subject of many absurd theories.

The world seems to be divided betw those who "eat to live" and those "live to eat," The proper line may drawn somewhere between these extre There is little to choose between a glu and one who eats too little from a se mental notion that it is vulgar to eat; that the less one can eat and still pre to live, the more refined and spiritual comes. If a man has no control over h pet", and no judgment as to the qua of food he requires, it would have better had he belonged to a lower cre animals, subject to the control of a hi intelligence. Neglect or refusal to pro of sufficient food to sustain the body i full vigor should be regarded as evidenc disease, requiring the attention of a c petent physician. Nature will not pati submit to be abused or cheated.

The quantity and the quality of food quired in each individual can depend the size and health of the person and o occupation. A person of sedentary h should regulate the diet to the requirem of the system, remembering that it is to err on the side of eating hardly en than too much. Over-eating produce cumulations of fat, which is a disease self, and increases the quantity of bl rendering one liable to heart disease apoplexy; and paradoxical as it may s insufficient food tends to produce the disease. Either condition causes derang ments in the circulation that may in the same troubles.

If we follow the indications of na are safe as to foods. What the app craves is usually best for us; the sto notifies us when we require food and w we have eaten enough. It is often last mouthful that invites an attac dyspepsia.

"Variety is the spice of life." In not is this more applicable than as to foods. lect a list of foods that experience has ta us are most acceptable, and then from list get a variety for each day of the w Salt meat should be used sparingly, be they are more indigestible than fresh. and rich puddings try the digestive or severely, and cannot be safely indulge by adults, except they have vigorous door exercise. The quantity and quali food should depend upon what is req of the individual; just as the amoun fuel requisite depends on the work a engine has to peform.

A wise regulation of the food sup be made to supersede the use of medi to a very good extent.

The remote cause of a majority o ordinary ailments is taking cold: the n al functions of the body are retarded, waste material is retained in the sy long enough to do mischief. The remedy is to take a cathartic or a lax in order to remove it. But a more con ent and a more more natural plan, in ary cases, is to cut off the food supp twenty-four hours, and to trust to nat do the rest. Instead of food, a few spoonsful of hot water drunk during day will hasten the desired re Whenever the bowels become costi there is an uncomfortable feeling in system, often accompanied by restle and anxiety of mind. The above sug tions, if followed strictly, will bring more promptly than medicine, and wit its inconveniences.

On the other hand, there is a large of persons who are borne down by con fear of eating too much, and who are anxious least what they are compell eat in order to sustain life may do misc It would not be inappropriate to spea such people as "dietetic cranks." are probably the most unreasonable troublesome patients the practising p cian has to deal with. If he favors theories, there can be no improvement, if he opposes them he loses their confi and their patronage. There is as much health caused by underfeeding as by feeding. The man who has lived too f may generally moderate his course an gain his health; but through a long c of semi-starvation the digestive organ came weakened, and the stomach tracts so that it cannot properly per its work; the body cannot be sufficie nourished. These abnormal condi generally result from mismanagement ing childhood. The child who is restr to three meals a day comes to the table a ravenous appetite, and with the corr that a long fast awaits him after h finished his repast. These two incon naturally lead to gluttony.

The child who is permitted to eat w ever it wishes, at all times, becomes victim of disease, because an unnatura petite is formed, and it craves those t that derange the digestive organs, but tain but little nourishment. No child ever injured by plain and wholesome no matter how freely or how often it have been partaken of. When a child year old it should be allowed a pretty discretion as to foods of this sort. T meals a day are not sufficient for chil All the operations of the system are active than with the adult, and the supply requires more frequent replenis Allow children to eat of plain, whole food, as often as they desire to, if you to escape responsibiliy for impaired he which is certain to follow a strict adh to absurd rules respecting diet.

The Hog Crop.

According to the Cincinnatti Price rent, the number of hogs packed in summer season, ending November 1, w 770,000, against 3,210,000 last year, increase of about seventeen and a half cent. Besides this there has been a increase in the average weight of marketed, the exact returns of which not yet available, but a close approxim makes the average increase about eig and a half pounds per hog. On this the hogs packed in the West since Ma have aggregated 905,000,000 pounds g compared with 710,872,000 pounds last or an increase of over twenty-seven cent. The average weight of hogs rec in Chicago during October was 250 po against 235 pounds for the correspon month last year, and 242 pounds in Oct 1881.

VICTORIA.

The Capital of British Columbia.

Much has been written and said as to the natural beauty of the Queen City of the Northern Pacific Coast—Victoria—and her surroundings her great natural advantages for shipping and manufacturing purposes, as well as her wonderful climate. Many of the your readers will recollect the opinions I expressed in the summer of 1881 as to the truthfulness of much that had been circulated in the East concerning Canada's inheritance on this coast. My experience and observations then were of the spring and summer seasons. Being now in the country I am in a position to say something of the fall and winter months. Such of your readers as may be of the notion of emigrating to this Province can rely on such statements as I may now, or in future letters, make, as being reliable.

THE CITY OF VICTORIA is situated on the south east corner of Vancouver Island, in lat. 48° 25m. 20 sec. north, and west long. 123° 22m. 24 sec. On the south east and west are the Straits of Fuca, on the north the ever green hills of Vancouver. The present harbor is not a very commodious one—sufficient, however, to accommodate vessels not drawing over 18 feet of water. A outer harbor is now being utilized. A large, substantial dock and wharf has been constructed, at which the San Francisco ocean steamers load and unload their cargoes, while at the unrivalled harbor of Esquimalt, 3½ miles distant from the city, excellent anchorage is to be found for the largest vessels afloat. Here is located the only naval station Her Majesty has on the North Pacific Coast. The supply of stores and ammunition in the several buildings is very extensive. Vessels carrying the largest armaments can be equipped for long voyages on short notice. Repairs can likewise be attended to, as the machine shop contains such ponderous machinery as is necessary in connection with naval architecture and mechanism. One or more men-of war are always in port. The older portion of the residents of the city are from England and Scotland, with a slight mixture of Irish, Americans, and foreigners. The younger portion are principally Canadians.

Slow but sure has been Victoria's motto in the past. Her growth has been steady. No inflation or bubble to cause an unwarranted advance in real estate has visited this city since 1858. Then it was equally as crazy as the worst days Winnipeg ever saw, without, however, the immense country to sustain a great city that was tributary to the City of the Plains. During the last two years much substantial progress has been made by the city in way of buildings, wharves, and other improvements, and the introduction of electric light. Real estate has increased slowly, and at present is is at it going up, the advance in some cases being twenty five per cent. in a year. In all property is now at its full value, possibly in further than facts will warrant its being held at. Rents are fair. Business premises on Government, Fort Johnston, and Yates streets are hard to be obtained. Outside property, a mile from the postoffice, is held at prices ranging from $800 to $1,500 per acre, according to location, at which figures considerable can be procured. The houses are all full, none can be had at any reasonable figure, and the erection of a large number during the incoming spring and summer is a certainty and an equally safe investment. The hotel accommodation is being extended. In a word, the onward progress of the city is very marked. By many a "boom" is anticipated on the completion of the railway, but I fear many will be badly "left." Streets are being extended and outlying properties formerly farmed opened into city lots. Many of these are admirably adapted for suburban residences, as trees are already well advanced. Good pure water is everywhere obtainable.

THE WEATHER.

Victoria's balmy climate has attained a world-wide fame. At this date occasional warm showers have the tendency to keep the streets moist, the grass green, and impart a freshness in general to the heritage. One reads with wonder the records of the thermometer in other portions of the Dominion indicating a degree of freezing that astonishes those who have resided on this coast for years, ranging from 10° to 40° below zero. Here it rarely freezes. A slight flurry of snow causes every conceivable remark, and a new comer is assured that this is a rare occurrence and hitherto unknown at that particular season of the year. Two days since in my meanderings around the suburbs of the city, I plucked gowans, daisies, and wild roses on vacant lots, while in gardens I beheld all the varieties of roses, fuchsias, geraniums, ivy, and honeysuckles. In the fields the Chinese are cultivating all the vegetables, such as potatoes, turnips, carrots, parsley, celery, onions, and delivering them daily to the city. This is, indeed, a great contrast with the weather most of your readers are now experiencing east of the mountains and the great lakes.

On the streets many of the ladies appear in gossameres, and a few in garment trimmed with fur. Fur overcoats are worn by the gentlemen. The store doors are open, and the display of goods and merchandise inviting. I am free to confess that all this to my mind has the effect of making people listless as compared with the sharp, clear, bracing weather of other portions of the Dominion.

The Ink Plant.

There is in New Grenada a plant, Coryanta Thymifolia, which might be dangerous to our ink manufacturers if it could be acclimatized to Europe. It is known under the name of the ink plant. Its juice, called chanchi, can be used in writing without any previous preparation. The letters traced with it are of a reddish color at first, but turn to a deep black in a few hours. The juice also spoils steel pens less than common ink. The qualities of the plant seem to have been discovered under the Spanish administration. Some writings, intended for the mother country, were wet through with sea water on the voyage; while the papers written with common ink were almost illegible, those with the juice of that plant were quite unspoiled. Orders were given in consequence that this vegetable ink was to be used for all public documents.—New York Star.

The Chinese People.

The following memorandum was drawn up by Gen. (Chinese) Gordon in 1881 for the information of the Chinese Government, and has many points of interest in the present situation:—

"In spite of the opinion of some foreigners, it will be generally acknowledged that the Chinese are contented and happy, and the country is rich and prosperous, and that the people are au fond united in their sentiments and ardently desire to remain a nation. At constant intervals, however, the whole of this human hive is stirred by some dispute between the Pekin Government and some foreign power. The Chinese people, proud of their ancient prestige, applaud the high tone taken up by the Pekin Government, crediting the government with the power to support their strong words. This goes on for a time when the government gives in, and corresponding vexation is felt by the people. The recurrence of these disputes, the inevitable surrender ultimately of the Pekin Government, has the tendency of shaking the Chinese people's confidence in the central government. The central government appreciate the fact that little by little their prestige is being destroyed by their own actions among the Chinese people; each crisis then becomes more accentuated or difficult to surmount, as the central government know; each concession is another nail in their coffin. The central government fear that the taking up of a spirited position by any pre-eminent Chinese would carry the Chinese people with him, and therefore the central government endeavor to keep up appearances and to skirt the precipice of war as near as they possibly can, while never intending to enter into war.

"The central government residing in the extremity of the middle kingdom, away from the great influences which are now working in China, can never alter one iota from what they were years ago; they are being steadily left behind by the people they govern. They know this, and endeavor to stem these influences in all ways in their power, hoping to keep the people backward and in ignorance, and to retard their progress to the same pace (sic) they themselves go, if it can be called a pace at all.

"It is therefore a maxim that 'no progress can be made by the Pekin Government.' To them any progress, whether slow or quick, is synonymous with slow or quick extinction, for they will never move.

"The term, 'Pekin Government' is used advisedly, for if the central government were moved from Pekin into some province where the pulsations and aspirations of the Chinese people could have their legitimate effect, then the central government and Chinese people having a unison of thought, would work together.

"It may be asked. How can the present state of things be altered! How can China maintain the high position that the wealth, industry, and innate goodness of the Chinese people entitle her to have among the nations of the world? Some may say by the revolt of this Chinaman or of that Chinaman. To me this seems most undesirable, for, in the first place, such action would not have the blessing of God, and, in the second, it would result in the country being plunged into civil war. The fair, upright, and open course for the Chinese people to take is to work, through the press and by petitions, on the central government, and to request them to move from Pekin and bring themselves thus into more unison with the Chinese people, and thus save that people the constant humiliations they have got to put up with owing to the seat of the central government being at Pekin. This recommendation would need no secret societies, no rebellion, no treason. If taken up and persevered in, it must succeed, and not one life need be lost.

"The central government at Pekin could not answer the Chinese people except in the affirmative when the Chinese people say to the central government:—'By you residing aloof from us in Pekin, where you are exposed to danger, you separate our interest from yours, and you bring on us humiliation which we would never have to bear if you resided in the interior. Take our application into consideration, and grant our wishes.'

"I have been kindly treated by the central Pekin Government and by the Chinese people; it is for the welfare of both parties that I have written and signed this paper. I may have expressed myself too strongly with respect to the non-progressive state of the Pekin Government, who may desire the welfare of the middle kingdom as ardently as any other Chinese; but as long as the Pekin Government allows themselves to be led and directed by those drones of the hive, the censors, so long must the Pekin Government bear the blame earned by those drones in plunging China into difficulties. In the insect world the bees get rid of the drones in the hive."

How Bismarck Divided the Eggs.

How to divide five eggs between three people is a problem which might fairly puzzle a philosopher, but the practical genius of Prince Bismarck has solved that, as it has many other difficulties which have proved too much for profound thinkers. The only wonder is that, as he made the discovery as many as thirteen years ago, it should only now have been given to the world in the pages of the Deutsche Revue. It appears that it was on the evening of Gravelotte, after a day when the prince, like everybody else had had nothing to eat, and was hungry—hungrier, we may presume, than anybody. He had, however, the good fortune to secure five eggs for twenty francs, and the generosity to share them with two of his companions. But foreseeing the mathematical difficulty which would arise were he to attempt an equal division, he took the precaution to eat two of the five himself first, and then dashed off to his comrades, and with a great show of magnanimity made a fair distribution of the remaining three, keeping to himself all knowledge of the two he had so conveniently got rid of. A rapacious statesman would have kept all the eggs, and a Quixotic statesman would have kept only one of them. But it is Prince Bismarck's peculiar distinction to combine sedulous attention to the interests of number one with an effective display of unselfishness. He has divided countries ere now on the principle on which he dealt with the five eggs.—Pall Mall Gazette

A GALILEAN VILLAGE.

Some Jews Who Have Never Been Dispersed.

In one of the most remote and secluded valleys in the mountains of northern Galilee lies a village, the small population of which possesses an interest altogether unique. As I looked down upon it from the precipitous and dangerous path by means of which I was skirting the flank of the mountain I thought I had rarely seen a spot of such ideal beauty. It was an oasis—not actually in a desert, for the rocky mountain ranges were covered with wild herbage—but in a savage wilderness of desolation, in the midst of which the village nestled in a forest of orange, almond, fig, and pomegranate trees, the tiny rills of water by which they were irrigated glistening like silver threads in the sunlight, and the yellow crops beyond contrasting with the dull green of the hill verdure long deprived of water, and the gray rocks which reared their craggy pinnacles above it.

The name of the village was Bakoia. I had heard vaguely of the existence of a spot in Galilee where a community of Jews lived who claimed to be the descendants of families who had tilled the land in this same locality prior to the destruction of Jerusalem and the subsequent dispersion of the race; and as it had never been suspected that any remnant of the nation had clung to the soil of their fathers from time immemorial, and as it is certain that this is the only remnant that has, I took some trouble to ascertain the name of the village, and felt that it was worth a pilgrimage to visit it. Although hitherto known to Europeans and tourists, it has been for many years a spot much frequented by the Jews of the Safed and Tiberias, and this summer, especially, when the cholera panic prevailed in the country, there was a perfect rush of the wealthier Jews and rabbis of those towns to its pure air and bracing climate. In a small way it is a sort of Jewish sanitarium.

Ladies Who Smoke Cigars.

"I want two cigars," said a well-dressed and lady-like looking person in a west end drugstore. "Not too strong—there, that is the box," she said, indicating a brand of bright-colored "Cabannas."

The two chocolate-hued rolls of tobacco were duly wrapped up, delivered and paid for. The lady paid for them with as much unconcern as though it were a bottle of cologne she was carrying off.

"Do you have much call for cigars by ladies?" asked the reporter, who was waiting for some patent brain food.

"We sell as many, either to ladies or on their order by messengers, as we do to men," answered the compounder of prescriptions from strictly pure drugs and chemicals.

"What kind do they call for mostly?" demanded the reporter.

"Mostly mild five-centers, though there is a run on tens of full flavor by old hands. Cigarettes used to go in that direction, but they color the fingers of the fair smokers too much, and they don't know enough to use 'smokers.'"

"Do they buy them ostensibly for home consumption, or are they procured for 'my brother?'"

"Oh, there is little attempt at concealment after the first few purchases. Excuse me," replied the pill man, as he started for a remote corner of the store where a fair thing in sealskin was modestly waiting attention. No visit was paid to the cigar case but she took away a supply done up in an unsuspicious package.

'She is a new customer, and I keep 'her brother's box' under the counter with the pills and things, to save her blushes. After a while she will not mind."—Washington Post.

She Had Been Waiting.

In a certain Sunday School in this city there is a young lady teacher who is as pretty as she is good. Last Sunday she read to her class of girls the parable of the wise and foolish virgins, and, as is the custom with Sunday School teachers, she sought, when she had concluded the reading, to impress a moral lesson upon the infant mind,

"Now girls," she said, "what do we learn from this parable?"

And there was a silence for the space of one minute, and then the eldest girl in the class said:

"We learn that we should always be ready and waiting for the bridegroom to come."

And somehow, the young and pretty lady teacher thought that she had never seen it in that light before. And she blushed, and concluded that no matter what scoffers might say, that there is wonderful consolation in the Bible.—Winnipeg Siftings.

OUR PROGRESS.

As stages are quickly abandoned with the completion of railroads, so the huge, drastic, cathartic pills, composed of crude and bulky medicines, are quickly abandoned with the introduction of Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets," which are sugar-coated, and little larger than mustard seeds, but composed of highly concentrated vegetable extracts. By druggists.

"I hev often noticed," says Josh Billings, "that the man who would hav done such wonderful things ef he had bin thare, never gets thare."

TENNYSON'S MAY QUEEN.

Who knows that if the beautiful girl who died so young had been blessed with Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" she might have reigned on many another bright May-day. The "Favorite Prescription" is a certain cure for all those disorders to which females are liable. By druggists.

A frightful-looking creature, standing erect, with long, shaggy hair, is striking terror into the hearts of the people at Calcutta, O. Has anybody lost a poet?

If the blood be impoverished, as manifested by pimples, eruptions, ulcers, or running sores, scrofulous tumors, swellings or general debility, take Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Sold by druggists.

"Yes," said Mr. Brickhandler, "my bulldog has wonderful artistic taste. He wouldn't attack a tramp the other day because the cloth of the man's trousers wouldn't harmonize well with the color of his jaws."

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

FOR THE

kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. Therefore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver and Urinary troubles; for the distressing diseases of women; for Malaria, and physical debility generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

PECTORIA! Pectoria! Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria, all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

"Woman is the Sunday of man." It would be terribly monotonous to have Sunday come every day in the week.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

"Overcome by gas" is the head line on a daily paper. We know those tremendous gas bills would kill somebody sooner or later.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West, Toronto, Canada.

Christmas is a great institution. It makes a boy live all the year on the hope of getting a painted top in his stocking on the 25th day of December.

10c. will buy a package of the Triangle Dyes, containing sufficient dye of any color for 1 to 4 pounds of any goods, according to the shade wanted.

Sleety pavements are always a good sign of falling weather.

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you: cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

A.P. 159

F. E. DIXON & CO.
Manufacturers of Star Rivet
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto.
Large double Drivin Belts a specialty. Send or Price Lists and Discounts.

BEST BOILER PLATE.
For sale low, the following sizes suitable for Boilers, Safes, Flumes, Tanks, &c., &c., 5-16 inch thick, 6x2, 8x2, 9x3, 10x3, 6x2½, 7x2½, 8x2½, 9x2½.
SEND FOR PRICES
Copland & McLaren,
Corner Wellington & Grey Nun Sts., Montreal.

The Queen's
LAUNDRY BAR
ASK FOR IT, AND TAKE NO OTHER.
Beware of Imitations.
TRADE MARK. Made by The Albert Toilet Soap Co

THE LILY
is a perfect gem, equa to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

$100,000 TO LOAN
on first-class farm property, at lowest rates. Farmers will save money by applying by mail direct to me.
E. E. KNOTT,
48 Adelaide St., East, Toronto.

FUN AND MYSTERY
ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS.
Have you seen it? The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards;" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards; the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music, 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.
ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail postpaid. Two Packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest again ever offered. Return this with order to void mistake.
JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION
Provides $2.50 to $10.00 a week in case of sickness or accident, at a cost of from $0.75 to $3.00 per quarter. For particulars enclose stamp to the secretary, Toronto, Ont.
AGENTS WANTED

ELM CITY HARNESS OIL.
BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL,
Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it
F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONTARIO.
Sole Agents for the Dominion

BEAVER S. S. LINE,
WEEKLY BETWEEN
QUEBEC, MONTREAL, AND LIVERPOOL
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For owest rates and all particulars apply to
Sam. Osborne & Co., 40 Yonge street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black silks, that is our dollar silk will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50 silk only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50 blanket for $4; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $2.75 net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL dry-goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures; all goods sold for cash only, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne St., Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS—or a 10 cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, shirtings, grey flannels, table napkins. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS, silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and colored, cashmeres, tweeds, cloakings. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

100 BEAUTIFUL SONGS 10c.
A new collection, embrasing a number of the most popular songs of the day. Among them are, We Never Speak as we Pass By;—Over the Garden Wall,—Kerry Dance,—Warrior Bold,—Blue Alsatian Mountains,—Only a Blossom from her Grave,—Three Old Maids of Lee,—Flirting in the Starlight,—Grandmother's Old Easy Chair,—Don't Drink my Boy To-night, and 90 others, comprising Home songs, Comic Songs, Sentimental songs, Children's songs, etc. All are printed on nice paper, and are bound in a book with colored cover. Remember, we send the entire collection of 100 Songs for only 10c., three books for 25. 1 doz., 75; 1c. or 2c. stamps taken.
LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

Dominion Line of Steamships.
Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every Thursday during the winter months.
PORTLAND TO LIVERPOOL.
Dominion, Jan. 10. | Oregon, Jan. 31.
Sarnia, Jan. 17. | Ontario, Feb. 7
Montreal, Jan. 24. | Toronto, Feb. 14.
Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $90, $108, $117, $141, according to steamer and berth. Intermediate, $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent, or local agents of the Company, or to
DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal.

THE BEST
HORSE REMEDIES
TRADE MARK.
are those made by
THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.
Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5; 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c.; 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th St., N Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years, and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quitcy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to
ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
50 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York

$11.90 —FOR— 25c.
Extraordinary Bargain!
On receipt of only 25c we will mail, postpaid, 34 pieces comprising 48 pages of full size sheet music, bound together in one volume. Names of Vocal pieces:—All on account of Eliza; A Warrior Bold; The Country Lad; Nancy Lee; Chorus of Charity Girls; Drummer's Song; The Judge's Song; The Love-Sick Boy; Whoa Emma; Two Bad Men; Man in the Moon; Johnny Morgan; The Gleaners; Torpedo and the Whale; I Saw Her in the Violet Time; Five O'Clock in the Morning; My Love She's but a Lassie Yet; Adieu, Dear Home; Dame Babble; and 15 pieces of Instrumental Music, comprising new and popular dance Music, selections from different Operas, Marches, &c., &c. All the above and our handsome new Chromo Lithograph in colors of the Lord's Prayer and 10 Commandments, sent post-paid for 25. As a holiday offer we will also send free 10 Christmas Cards, 50 money making receipts and a pack of Age Cards. Order quick. You will get all the above for 25c, or 5 lots for $1.00; 1 doz. for $2.00. Cut this out and return with order.
JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal P. Q.

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.
PERCHERON HORSES
WORTH $2,500,000.00
Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,
25 miles West of Chicago on C. & N.-W. Ry.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.
390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States.
Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.			Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	Toronto	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	Cardwell Junc.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	Orangeville...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	Mount Forest..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	Teeswater	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	Flesherton	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	Markdale,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	Owen Sound....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNicoll, Gen. Pass. Agt. Edmund Wragge, General Manager

MARKDALE

Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the Lowest Living Pr...s.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-1y

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BooT & ShoE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,

161-75 Toronto, Ont.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

GRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

WINES AND LIQUORS

CHOICE BRANDS.

Brandy in Hogsheads.
Scotch and Irish Whiskey in Tr. Casks.
Holland Gin in Tr. Casks.
Jamacia Rum in Tr. Casks.
Fine Old Port and Sherry in Tr. Casks.
Native Wine in Tr. Casks.
Five-year-old Rye Whiskey in Barrels.
White Wheat Whiskey in Barrel.
Rye and Malt Whiskey in Barrels.
Domestic Whiskey in Barrels.
Liquors in Cases.
Bottled Ale and Porter.

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKER,

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand,

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169-90.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The average price of locomotives is $9,000, dining cars $10,500, first class passenger coaches $2,500, baggage and mail cars $2,200 freight cars $520.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best Salve in the world for cuts, bruises sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by A. Turner & Co.

"How can a woman tell?" is the title of a recent poem. Humph! How can she help telling?

KRAMS'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known. Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat ar acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

There is no period in a fond mother's life when she is happier than immediately after the baby has successfully cut his 1st 2th.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

Pickwick's words are always sensible:—"Ven you're a married man, Samivel, you'll understand a good many things as you don't understand now; but vether it's worth while going through so much to learn so little, as the charity boy said ven he got to the end of the alphabet, is a matter o'taste. I rayther think it isn't."

John R. Vert, Hamilton, says: "McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia and Indigestion is cheap at fifty times the price asked for it. I am a commercial man, and travel continually, and would no more think of leaving home without a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure in my valise than I would of leaving my team at home and going on foot." Free trial bottle at Hill Bros. general store. Regular size, fifty cents and one dollar.

C. V. R. Station.—On and after Monday next the passenger trains of the C. V. Railway will arrive at and depart from the T. G. & B. station.—Orangeville Advertiser.

EXCITED THOUSANDS,

All over the land are going into ecstasy over Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. There unlocked for recovery by the timely use of this great life Saving remedy, causes them to go nearly wild in its praise. It is guaranteed to positively cure Severe Caught, Colds, Asthma, Hay Fever, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Loss of Voice, or any affection of the Throat and Lungs. Trial bottles free at A. Turner, & Co's Drug Store. Large size $1.00 2

"Well, may I hope, then, dearest, that at some time I may have the happines of making you my wife?" "Yes, I hope so, I am sure," she replied: "I am getting tired of suing fellows for breach of promise.

A BLESSING TO ALL MANKIND,

In these times when our Newspapers are flooded with patent medicine advertisements, it is gratifying to know what to procure that will certainly cure you. If you are billious, Blood out of order, Liver inactive, or generally debilitated, there is nothing in the world that will cure you so quickly as Electric Bitters. They are a blessing to all mankind, and can be had for only fifty cents a bottle at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store. 2

Sad Accident.—On Saturday Dec. 21st as Mr. D. Gill, and wife, and Mr. Joseph Hunter, were returning from Orangeville, nearing the residence of Neil McGill the horses took fright and ran away throwing out the occupants. Mr. Hunter received fatal injuries and died on the Sunday following. Mr. McGill had one of his arms broken in two places. Mrs. McGill escaped injuries being thrown on a snow bank. Hunter was 26 years of age.—Orangeville Advertiser.

Monthly Fairs.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.

Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.

Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.

Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.

Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.

Old Woman Frozen to Death.

Collingwood, Jan. 5.—On Thursday night an old woman living alone in a tumbled-down house in the East Ward, and known as Mrs. McLachlan, was frozen to death. She was found on Friday morning by neighbors frozen stiff. The weather has been exceedingly cold the last few days.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITU

FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiti

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kep stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in change for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,

Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATIO

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods

— IN —

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes,

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Statio

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Galler

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERT

New FALL Importation

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock Ladies' Coats and Mantles in a the latest designs and patterns ar very cheap.

Also in large variety Black ar Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velve eens from 35cts. up, also Ladie Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trir mings and Shapes, Ladies Colla in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock complete and selling fast and chea

Another lot of that Famous 20c and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putt Glass, Hinges and builder's har ware of all descriptions selling the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Suga cheap, also preserve and Gem Ja in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of mercha generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Fleshert says his business is increasing daily, having more busin than he can possibly get through with with his large s of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 19. MARKDALE, ONT., JAN. 17, 1884. No. 175

The Markdale Standard

s issued evesy Thursday, at the cffice, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if et paid within three months.

Profes-ional and business cards one inch pace and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column.....	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column.....	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space.....	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first nsertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent nsertion. nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents ach subsequents insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for 1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve mes.

—JOB PRINTING.—

THE STANDARD offic has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill Owen Sound 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University. Vict. College. " " New York, and Hon. Graduate, of the same, " " Aylcth Medical Institute. " " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y. Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeon s, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883. 122-74

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.

ALFRED FROST. J. W. FROST, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

E. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYances, &c. &c.

OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in MARKDALE; Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.

Funds to lend on reasonable terms.

JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.

Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.

Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.

N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Jan, 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE,
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSESHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
C. H. MATTHEWS, PROPRIETOR.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the markct affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

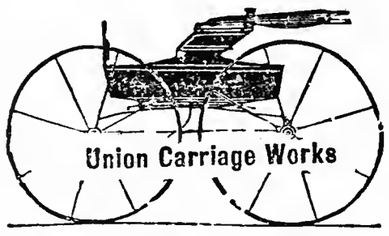
GIBSON & McMILLAN,
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attent.on.

Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail



{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.

159-3m

MARKDALE HOUSE,
MARKDALE, - - ONT.
MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

THE BEST PLACE
TO GET
A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!
North of Toronto, is at the
Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

THOS. MATHEWS,
HarnesS EstaBlishmenT
MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!
IN CONNECTION.

EUGENIA
Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted
69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

ROBT. ASKIN,
MARKDALE,
Has opened out a First-Class
UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,
And therefore has supplied a want long felt,
COFFINS,
CASKETS, SHROUDS,
and all
FUNERAL FURNISHINGS
supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse
for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—
PICTURE FRAMING
Done on short notice.
ROBT. ASKIN.

SOME DAY.

Some day for me the sun will cease to shine;
Some day the light of Heaven will sure be mine;
Some day the grief, the pain will all be past;
And I shall see my Saviour's face at last.

Above my pulseless heart the sweet birds' song
Will chant my requiem, the whole day long;
The fragrant flowers their perfume sweet will shed;
And summer rains fall soft upon my head.

The changeles stars their silent watch will keep;
The loud winds roar above me as I sleep;
The winter snows lie deep upon my brest:
Yet not disturb my calm and peaceful rest.

Therefore I labor on, from year to year,
Trusting in him, with never doubt or fear;
Content to bear my burdens all the way,
If I may share His blessed rest 'some day.'

WM. I. SMITH.

Artemesia Council.

Council met to-day—members all present. The Reeve in the chair.

Minutes of last session read and confirmed.

Communications as follows presented and read. From the clerk of Euphrasia, re Valley Road, G. A. Hutchinson, re drain, a pamphlet and blank from of a petition of the Land Loan Amendment Association.

Accounts as follows:—W. T. McRae, services on the Town Line duration, Euphrasia, $3; Wm. Mitchell, work on hill at station $3; Insurance on Town Hall $12,50; R. Cook, repairing scrapers $1.25.

By-Laws 354 and 355, appointing deputy returning officers and places for holding Municipal elections, and extending time for returning the Collectors Rolls, were introduced and passed in the usual form.

Mr. M. Richardson, personally waited upon council regarding his lot in Flesherton.

Moved by Mr. Wright, seconded by Mr. Elliott, and resolved, That where as it has been represented by Mathew Richardson, that a small triangular gore known as Lot 1, at the corner of Durham and Sydenham Streets, in the village of Flesherton, now and for several years past owned and occupied by him, was in or about the year 1856, agreed upon between John Flesher, previously owner thereof, and W. K. Flesher who then became owner thereof to be thrown open for public use as a road of thorough-fare, Market fair or pleasure grounds, and that doubts have arisen respecting his title thereto in consequence of such agreement, and whereas the said land was never accepted or used by the Municipal Council of the Township of Artemesia, or by the public as a road or thorough fare, Market Fair or Pleasure Grounds. Therefore be it resolved That the Council do declare that the said land was not at any time, and is not the property of this corporation as a road or thoroughfare. Market Fair or pleasure grounds, nor open to public use as such, and the council do and hereby does expressly refuse and desclaim the same.—Carried.

Mr. Elliott moved, seconded by Mr. McArthur, That the Reeve be authorized to sign the petition to the Ontario Legislature, playing for the adoption of the Torrens or some other system of Land Transfer in this province.—Carried.

Orders for the Trustees' rates for the different school sections, were authorized to be issued.

Mr. McArthur moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, That the following accounts be paid:—Insurance on Town Hall. $12,50; W. Mitchell repairing hill, $3; R. Cook, repairing scrapers $1,25; N. Boyles, refund of taxes he being in indigent circumstances $2.06.

Mr. McKee moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, That S. Pedlar be paid twenty-four dollars and 87 cts. being Artemesia share erecting bridges on town line duration, Artemesia and Euphrasia. Also James Stewart $3. 50 for job on same duration.—Carried.

Mr. Elliott moved, seconded by Mr. McArthur, that James Johnston be refunded $3.28 cents, being taxes charged in excess on account of error in assessment.—Carried.

Mr. McArthur moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, That Mr. T. McKee be paid $3 for letting and inspecting jobs on the deviation Artemesia and Euphrasia.—Carried.

Mr. Wright moved, seconded by Mr. McArthur, That the Reeve issue order in favor of Isaac Sinclair for $12, being road jobs in Ward No. 3.—Carried.

Mr. McKee moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, That L. Williamson be paid $15 for job on 35 side road, Ward No. 4.—Carried.

Mr. McKee moved, seconded by Mr. Wright, That J. M. Webster, be refunded $1.50 statute labor returned and after wards performed.—Carried.

Order for this day's session and Indigents monthly allowances were issued

Mr. McAathur moved, seconded by Mr. McKee, that the thanks of this Council be tendered to the Reeve Dr. Christoe, for the very able and impartial manner in which he has presided over the council, and discharged its duties as Reeve of the Township for the year which is now about closed.—Carried unanimously.

Council adjourned.

W. J. BELLAMY,
Tp. Clerk.

Town Hall, Flesherton, Dec. 3rd, 1883.

Euphrasia Council.

The council met pursuant to adjournment on the 28th day of December, 1883.

Members all present.

Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

The sum of $4 charged to John Hunter for statute labour, was struck off the roll, as said labour was performed.

The sum of $7.68 charged in error to William Neely, as arrears was struck off the collectors roll.

The taxes charged against Robert Robinson on the collectors roll, amounting to $1.53, was remitted on account of age and affliction.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz:

David Wilson $7, labour on 4th line; Samuel Pedlar, $24.87, work on town line, Artemesia; Thomas Abercrombie $50, grant to agricultural society; Joseph Howey, $3, work on crosway; John Devins, $1.10, dynamite for blasting rock; $1, overcharge in statute labour; William Abercrombie $51.74, choping and clearing road; John Conn, $22.50, work on 3rd line; Francis Eaton, $26.87, road work; James Thurston, 50 cents, work at bridge; Robert Dunlop, clerk, $20, postage and balance of salary, and extra services $130, total $150.

The amounts paid to members of council as indemnity for attending meetings of council, and all other services during the year, as follows: Thomas Gilray, Reeve, $86.40; Jas. Erskine, Deputy Reeve, $52.50, Jas. Boyd, Councillor, $50.60; D R. Ellis, Councillor, $61.10; J. C. Paterson, Councillor, $52 50.

On motion being made and seconded the council arose.

ROBERT DUNLOP,
Tp. Clerk.

Reuniting With the County.

PRESCOTT. Ont., Jan. 8—A vote was taken yesterday by the freeholders of Prescott to pass a by-law effecting a reunion of the town with the counties of Leeds and Grenville, from which it has been separated some fifteen years. The by-law was carried by about seventy votes.

Monthly Fairs.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.

Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.

Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.

Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.

Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER IX.

Mr. Reade's cruel and prejudiced accusations against Mr. Rayner had not in the least shaken my faith in the kindness and goodness of the master of the Alders; but I felt anxious to prove to myself that the charges he brought against him were groundless. Mr. Reade's suggestion that he let his family sleep in the damp house while he passed his nights elsewhere, for instance, was absurd in the extreme. Where else could he sleep without any one's knowing anything about it? I often heard his voice and step about the house until quite late; he was always one of the first in the dining-room to our eight o'clock breakfast, and even on the wettest mornings he never looked as if he had been out in the rain.

It often seems to me that, when I have been puzzling myself fruitlessly for a long time over any matter, I find out quite simply by accident what I want to know. Thus, only the day after my talk with Mr. Reade in the shop, I was nursing Haidee, who did not feel inclined to play after lesson-time, when she said—

"Do you ever have horrid dreams, Miss Christie, that frighten you, and then come true?"

"No, darling; dreams are only fancies, you know, and never come true, except just by accident."

I said this because everybody considers it the right answer to give to a child; but I do believe just a little in dreams myself.

She went on gravely—

"But mine do. I'll tell you about one I had two nights ago, if you'll bend your head and let me whisper. I must'nt tell mamma, because she always stops me and says I mus'n't speak of what I see; but I can say it to you; you won't tell, will you?"

"No, darling. I won't tell," said I, thinking it kindest to let the child speak out about her fancies, instead of brooding over them, as the shy little thing was too prone to do.

"You know that day when we took you up to your new room in the turret?"

"Yes, dear," said I.

"Hush! Whisper," cooed she. "Well, that night Jane put me to bed, just as she always does, in my little room, and then I went to sleep just like I always do. And then I dreamt that I heard mamma screaming and crying, and papa speaking—oh, so differently from the way he generally does; it made me frightened in my dream! I thought it was all real, and I tried to get out of bed; but I was too much asleep; and then I didn't dream any more, only when I woke up I remembered it. I didn't tell anybody; and the next night I wondered if I should have the dream again, and I didn't want Jane to go away; and, when I said it was just because I'd had a dream, she said dreams were stuff and nonsence, and she wanted to go and dream at having supper. And then she went away, and I went to sleep. And then I woke up because mamma was crying, and I thought at first it was my dream again; but I knocked my head against the rail of my bed, and then I knew I must be awake. And I got out of bed, and I went quite softly to the door and looked through the keyhole, for there was a light in her room. When she has a light, I can see in quite plainly through the keyhole, and I can see the bed and her lying in it. But she wasn't alone like she generally is—I could see papa's hand holding the candle, and he was talking to her in such a low voice; but she was crying and talking quite wildly and strangely, so that she frightened me. When she talks like that, I feel afraid—it doesn't seem as if she were mamma. And then I saw papa put something on her face, and mamma said, 'Don't—don't! Not that!' and then she only moaned, and then she was quite still, and I heard him go out of the room. And presently I called 'Mamma, mamma!' but she didn't answer; and I was so frightened, I thought she was dead. But then I heard her sigh like she always does in her sleep, and I got into bed again."

"Were you afraid to go in, darling?"

"I couldn't go in, because the door was locked. It always is, you know. I never go into mamma's room; I did only once, and she said—she said"—and the child's soft whisper grew softer still, and she held her tiny lips closer to my ear—"she said I was never to say anything about it—and I promised; so I mustn't, even to you, Miss Christie dear. You don't mind, do you, because I promised?"

"No, darling, I don't. Of course you must not tell if you promised," said I.

But I would have given the world to know what the child had seen in that mysterious room.

Haidee's strange story had roused again in me all the old feeling of a shadow of some kind hanging over the house on the marsh which had long since worn away in the quiet routine of my daily life there. The locking of the mother's door against her own child, her wild talk and crying, the "something on the face" that her husband had had to administer to calm her, and the discovery that he himself did not sleep in the same room, all united to call up in my mind the remembrance of that long talk I had had with Mr. Rayner in the schoolroom soon after my arrival, the story he had told me of her boy's death, and the change it had made in her, and his allusion to "those outbreaks which sometimes cause me the gravest—the very gravest anxiety."

I had understood then that he feared for his wife's reason, but, never having witnessed any great change in her cold listless manner myself, and having seen on the whole very little of her except at meals, all fear and almost all remembrance of her possible insanity had faded from my mind, in which she remained a background figure. But now Haidee's story caused me to wonder whether there was not an undercurrent in the affairs of the household of which I knew little or nothing. What if Mr. Rayner, bright, cheerful, and good tempered as he always seemed, were really suffering under the burden of a wife whose sullen silence might at any moment break into wild insanity—if he had to wrestle in secret, as, from the child's story, seemed to have been the case quite recently on two successive nights, with moods of wild wailing and weeping which he at first tried to deal with by gentle remonstrance (Haidee said that on the second night, when she was fully awake his voice was very low and soft), and at last had to subdue by sedatives!

And then a suggestion occurred to me which would at least explain Sarah's important position in the household. Was she perhaps in truth a responsible guardian of Mrs. Rayner, such as, if the latter's reason were really feeble, it would be necessary for her to have in her husband's absence? I already knew that the relations between mistress and servant were not very amicable. Though she treated her with all outward signs of respect, it was not difficult to see that Sarah despised her mistress, while I had sometimes surprised in the wide gray eyes of the other a side-glance of dislike and fear which made me wonder how she could tolerate in her household a woman to whom she had so strong an aversion. That Mr. Rayner was anxious to keep the scandal of having a mad wife a secret from the world was clear from the fact that not even Mr. Lawrence Reade, who seemed to take a particular interest in the affairs of the household at the Alders, had ever shown the least suspicion that this was the case. So the secluded life Mrs. Rayner led came to be ascribed to the caprice—if the village gossips did not use a harsher word—of her husband, while that unfortunate man was really not her tyrant, but her victim.

The only other possible explanation of what Haidee had seen was that Mr. Rayner, kind and sweet-tempered to every one as he always was, and outwardly gentle and thoughtful to a touching degree towards his cold wife, was really the most designing of hypocrites, and was putting upon his wife, under the semblance of devoted affection, a partial restraint which was as purposeless as it was easy for her to break through. This idea was absurd.

The other supposition, dreadful as it was, was far more probable. I was too much accustomed by this time to Mrs. Rayner's listless moods and the faint far-off looks of fear, or anger, or suspicion that I sometimes saw in her eyes, to be alarmed even by the possibility of a change for the worse in her—the thought that she was scarcely responsible for her words and actions reconciled me somewhat to her cold manner to myself and to the jealousy of the hold I was surely getting upon Haidee's affection. But my strongest feeling was not for the half-witted wife nor for the unfortunate husband, but for the child herself, the unsuspected witness of her mother's outbreaks of incoherent words and cries. It was strange that these attacks should occur only at night, I thought at first; but then I remembered that these when I had read Adam Bede aloud to her in the drawing-room, the tearful excitement into which, apparently without any cause, she had fallen, which her husband's entrance had as suddenly subdued—at least for the time; for how could I tell what had followed when he had led her away into that bedroom of hers which was beginning to have for me the fascination of a haunted chamber?

The immediate result of the child's confidences to me was a great increase of my love for and interest in herself. We became almost inseparable in and out of school hours; I encouraged her in talk; and she soon fell into the habit of telling me, whether I was listening or not, those long rambling stories which have no beginning, no sequence, and no end, which are the solace of children who have no companions of their own age. When my attention was wandering from these incoherent tales, I sometimes had it abruptly brought back by some flight of her childish fancy, which set me wondering if it had been suggested by some half-forgotten experience. Thus one day, when I was working, and she was sitting on a footstool by my side, with two or three twigs bearing oak-apples which represented, as far as I could judge from her severity to some and her tenderness to the others, the personages of her story, my attention was arrested by the words—

"And so the Prince said to Princess Christie"—the heroine of the story, so named in honor of me—"'I've brought you some jewels much finer than yours.' But Princess Christie cried and said, 'I don't want them. Where did you get them? I know where you got them. You are a naughty bad Prince, and I won't wear my jewels any more'"

And I thought of what Mr. Rayner had told me of his wife's hearing, on her return home from a ball, of her baby-boy's death and of her saying she would never wear jewels again. But Haidee had been but a baby-girl at the time; her words must be but a mere coincidence. But some of the coincidences of her narrative were less difficult of explanation, for she went on—

"And so Prince Caramel said, 'Very well: I'll send you some more roses if you won't throw them away, and some marbles. But you mustn't cry, you know. I won't have a Princess that cries. I sha'n't look at you in church if you cry. If you don't cry, I'll let you have some jam too as well at butter, and you shall have a ride on the butcher's horse up and down the back-yard. And then I'll put you in a fairy-boat, and we'll fly away—fly away right over the trees and over the marsh, and past Mr. Bogget's and up into the clouds, and live in a swallow's nest, and never do any lessons.'"

And so on, going off in a wild and unexpected way into all sorts of extravagances, while I thought, with burning cheeks, that my demure little maiden had heard and seen more than I had suspected, and marvelled at the tangle of fancy and reality that grew up from it in her innocent mind. And sometimes she would say, "Let us sing Miss Christie;" and I would sing some ballad, while she would coo an irregular but not inharmonious accompaniment. And we were occupied in this fashion, sitting by the open window one afternoon, when Mr. Rayner appeared in the garden.

"Go on, go on; I have been listening to the concert for ever so long. It is as pretty as birds."

But of course we could not go on in face of such a critical auditor; so Mr. Rayner, after complaining that he had taken a ticket for the series, and was not going to be defrauded like that, told me more seriously that I had a very pretty voice, and asked why I did not take pity on their dulness and come into the drawing-room after tea sometimes and sing to them.

"And you have never tried secular music with the violin, Miss Christie. I believe you're afraid. Sacred music is slow, and you can't read fast; is that it?"

He was trying to pique me; but I only laughed and pointed out to him that he had had a visitor on the evening when he was to have tried my skill, but that I was quite ready to stumble through any music he liked whenever he pleased, if it were not too difficult.

"I know it is too bad of us to want to trespass upon your time after tea, which we promised you should have to yourself. But it would indeed be a charitable action if you would come an let us bore you by our fiddling and our dull chat sometimes, instead of slipping up to your turret-chamber, to be no more seen for the remainder of the evening. What do you do there, if I may ask? Do you take observations of the moon and stars? I should think you must be too close to them up there to get a comprehensive view. Or do you peep into the bird's nests upon the highest branches and converse with the owners?"

"I do nothing half so fantastic, Mr. Rayner. I do my tasks and read something improving, and then I sit in one of my arm-chairs and just think and enjoy myself."

"Well, we are not going to let you enjoy yourself up there while we are moped to death down-stairs; so to night you may just come and share our dulness in the drawing-room."

So after tea Mr. Rayner got out his violin, and I sat down to the piano; and we played first some German popular songs and then a long succession of the airs, now lively, now pathetic, now dramatic and passionate, out of the old operas that have delighted Europe for years, such as The Huguenots, La Traviata, Rigoletto, and Balfe's graceful Rose of Castile and The Bohemian Girl. Mr. Rayner played with the fire of an enthusiast, and again I caught the spirit of his playing, and accompanied him, he said, while his face shone with the ecstasy of the musician, as no one had ever accompanied him before.

Doctor Maitland, as an old gentleman who, Mr. Rayner privately told me, was now resting from his labors with the proud consciousness that he had seldom failed in "killing his man," came in while we were playing. He was our nearest neighbor, and he often came in the evening to play chess with Mr. Rayner, who always beat him. He listened to the music with great astonishment and some pleasure for a long time, until he learnt that I was reading at sight, and that I had accompanied Mr. Rayner only once before. Then he almost gasped.

"Good gracious! I should never have believed it. You seemed to have the same soul!" he cried, awe-struck.

And after that his astonishment evidently outweighed the pleasure he took in our performance. Mr. Rayner gave me a strange smile as the doctor uttered his quaint speech, and I laughed back, much amused at the effect of our efforts on a musically ignorant listener. When he had finished, and Mr. Rayner was putting his violin into its case, he suddenly discovered that the corner of the latter was damp.

"This will never do," he exclaimed, with as much affectionate concern as if a friend's well-being had been threatened. "I might as well keep it in the garden as in this den," he went on, quite irritably for him—music always wrought him to a high pitch of excitement. "Here, Sarah," he added turning towards the table where she had just placed the candles. "Take this to my room—mind, very carefully,"

So his room could not be damp, I thought, or he would not allow his precious violin to be taken there. I had said good night, and was in the hall, just in time to see Sarah, carrying the violin, disappear down the passage, on the right hand side of the staircase, which led to the study. Now the wing where Mrs. Rayner's room was was on the left hand side of the staircase. Did Mr. Rayner sleep in the study? I could not let my curiosity lead me to follow her, much as I should have liked to solve this little mystery. I knew all the rooms on the upper story, and, except the nursery where Mona and Jane slept, the cook's room, Sarah's, and the one I had left, they all bore distinctly the impress of having been long unused. So I was obliged reluctantly to go up-stairs. When I got to the foot of my turret staircase however, which was only a few steps from the head of the back-staircase that the servants used, I heard Sarah's quick tread in the passage below, and, putting down my candle on the ground, I went softly to the top of the stairs—there was a door here also, but it was generally open and fastened back—and looked down. I saw Sarah, much to my amusement, give a vicious shake to the violin-case, as if it were a thing she hated; and then I saw her take a key from her pocket and unlock a door near the foot of the stairs. That, then, was Mr. Rayner's room. But as the door went back on its hinges and Sarah took out the key, went through, and locked it behind her, I saw that it led, not into a room at all, but into the garden.

So far, then, Mr. Reade's guess was right. But there still remained the question—Where did Mr. Rayner sleep?

CHAPTER VII.

It was the elfish baby-girl Mona who first put me on the track of the solution of the mystery about Mr. Rayner's room. This ill-cared-for little creature, instead of resenting the neglect she suffered, prized the liberties she enjoyed of roaming about withersoever she pleased, and sitting in the flower-beds, and in the mud at the edge of the pond, and making herself altogether the very dirtiest little girl I had ever seen, and objected vehemently to the least attempts at judicious restraint. The little notice she got was neither consistent nor kind. Sarah or Jane would snatch her up, regardless of her shrieks, to shut her up in an empty bedroom, if she showed her grimy little face and tattered pinafore anywhere near the house in the afternoon, when callers might come. But, if they did not see her, they forgot her, and left her to talk and croon to herself, and to collect piles of snails, and to such other simple occupations in her favorite haunts till tea-time, when she generally grew hungry of her own accord, and, returning to the house, made an entrance where she could.

The day after the violin-playing was very wet, and, looking out of the window during lessons with Haidee, I caught sight of her small sister trotting along composedly without a hat in the fast-falling rain. I jumped up and called to her; but she took no notice; so I ran to fetch my umbrella and set off in pursuit. After a little search. I saw her steadily teddling up a side-path among the trees which led to the stables; and I followed softly without calling her again, as, if irritated by pursuit, she might, I knew, plunge among the trees and surrender only when we were both wet through.

The stables were built much higher up than the house, close to the road, but surrounded by trees. I had never been near them before; but now I followed Mona close underneath the walls, where she began dancing about by herself, making hideous grimaces at two windows on the upper storey, and throwing up at them little stones and bits of stick that she picked up, all wet and muddy, from the moist earth. I seized and caught her up in my arms so suddenly that for the first few moments she was too much surprised to howl; but I had scarcely turned to take her back to the house when she recovered her powers completely, and made the plantation ring with a most elfish yell. I spoke to her and tried to reason with her, and told her it was all for her good, when one of the upper windows I have mentioned was thrown open, and Mr. Rayner appeared at it.

"Hallo, what is the matter? Kidnapping, Miss Christie?"

"Oh, Mr. Rayner, she will sit in the mud and open her mouth to catch the rain without a hat, and it can't be good for her!" I said piteously.

"Never mind. It doesn't seem to hurt her. I believe she is half a frog," said her father, with less tenderness than he might have shown, I thought.

For the child was not old enough to know that it was wrong to dislike her father, while he was quite old enough to know that it was wrong not to be fonder of his child.

"But you will get your own feet wet, my dear child," said he, in quite a different tone. "Come up here and sit by the fire, while I fetch your goloshes. You have never seen my studio. I pass half my time painting and smoking here when it is wet and I can't get out." He had a pallette on his thumb and a pipe in his mouth while he spoke. "You don't mind the smell of turpentine or tobacco, do you?"

"Oh, no, Mr. Rayner! But I won't come in, thank you. I am at lessons with Haidee?" said I.

"Happy Haidee! I wish I were young enough to take lessons: and yet, if I were, I shouldn't be old enough to make the best use of my time," said he, in a low voice, with mock-modesty that made me laugh.

He was leaning a long way out of the window in the rain, and I had work to do indoors; so, without saying anything more, I returned to the house with my prize.

It was to his studio then that Sarah had taken his violin. I had never heard of this studio before; but I knew that Mr. Rayner was very careful about the condition of his stables, and I could imagine that this two-windowed upper room, with its fire, must be a very nice place to paint in—dry, warm, and light Could this be where Mr. Rayner slept? No; for in that case he would hardly have asked me to come up and look at his painting. And I should not like to think that he had made for himself a snug warm little home here while his family slept in the damp vapours of the marsh at the bottom of the hill. But that would not be like Mr. Rayner, I thought, remembering the pains he had taken to provide a nice dry room for me, the governess. Yet I should have liked, in the face of Mr. Reade's tiresome suspicions, to be sure.

That night I was so anxious to find out whether Mr. Rayner did really sleep out of the house, as he had been accused of doing, that I had the meanness to leave my own bed-room door wide open, as well as that at the bottom of the turret staircase, and listen for footsteps on the ground floor, and the sound of a key in the garden door through which Sarah had taken the violin. But I had heard nothing, though I was awake until long after the rest of the household must have gone to bed. And I felt almost as much relieved as if it had been my own father proved innocent of a mean action imputed to him.

On the following night there was a high wind, which shook and swayed the trees and whistled round my turret, and made the door which stood always fastened back at the top of the kitchen stairs rattle and creak on its hinges. At last I could bear this last sound no longer. I had been sitting up late over a book, and I knew that the household must be asleep, so I slipped down stairs as softly as I could. I had got to the top of the back staircase, and had my hand on the door, when I saw a faint glimmer of light coming along the passage below. I heard no sound. I drew back quickly, so quickly that my candle went out; and then I waited, with my heart beating fast, not so much to see who it was, as because I did not dare to move. The faint light came along swiftly, and, when close to the foot of the stairs below me, I could see that it was a shaded lantern, and could just distinguish the form of a man carrying it. Was he coming up-stairs? For the next few moments I scarcely dared to breathe, and I could almost have given a cry of joy when, by some movement of the head, I recognized Mr. Rayner. He did not see me; he put the key in the lock, turned it, took the key out, went through and locked it after him so quickly and so entirely without noise that a moment afterwards I could almost have thought that I had imagined the dim scene. It had been so utterly without sound that, if my eyes had been closed, I should have known nothing about it. I made the door secure with trembling fingers, and went back to my room again, not only profoundly sorry that Mr. Reade's surmise was correct—for I could no longer doubt that Mr. Rayner did sleep over the stables—but impressed with an eerie dread of the man who could move about in the night as noiselessly and swiftly as a spirit.

When I awoke however in the fresh morning, with the wind gone down, and the sun shining in through my east window, all unpleasant impressions of the night before had faded away; and, when Mr. Rayner brought into the drawing-room after dinner a portfolio full of his sketches and panels, and was delighted with my appreciation of them—I knew something about pictures, for my father had been a painter—I felt that it was not for me to judge his actions, and that there must be some good motive that I did not know for his sleeping far out of the damp, as for everything else that he did. He proposed to paint me, and I gave him a sitting that very afternoon in the dining-room, which had a north light, though there was not much of it; and he said that he must finish it next day in his studio, and, when I objected to neglect my lessons again, he said the whole family should emigrate thither for the morning and then perhaps I should be satisfied.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

CHRISTMAS IN MEXICO.

Stately Rites Mingled With Sta Merry-Making.

The holiday season in Mexico shows strong a contrast with the celebration in country as Providence presents it in cli and people. It has religious traits that attractive, and many of them dramatic. fact, every phase of life in that Cat country is singularly tinged with the f of religion. During Christmas-tide the shown in their best lights. Like all munities that worship their patron sa Their holidays begin earlier and last longer than ours. The celebration of birth of Christ begins there with the grimage of Joseph and Mary from Naz to Bethlehem, where the child was For nine days before the natal day e thing is given up to the first act of this Passion play. The lower classes spend of their time in worship at home and in churches. But those who are weal take upon themselves the duty of celeing every stage of the pilgrimage of 1,900 years ago. Those moving in the circle of society gather in groups each ing and go as a surprise party to the of one of their circles. They sing and rap orously at the door, when those within

"Who seeks admittance?"

"The virgin Mary and St. Joseph lodgings in your house."

The doors are thrown open, and the tors are welcomed and conducted to nacimiento, a little alter erected in the vate residences of the better classes, senting the birth of Christ. Here eac repeats a prayer with the rosary. simple religious services over, all are in to the parlor, where refreshments are se and the host makes proclamation that honored by the presence of Mary and Jo and invites them all to make merry. and dancing succeed eating and drin and there is prolonged merry making.

To make the representation com these visitors are first denied admittan a sort of by-play, to carry out the hi trials of the mother of Christ in her jo to Bethlehem, where she and Josph often denied shelter and food. The call is the posada, or halt, in the pilgri Each night until Christmas Eve this esting custom is continued, a different being visited each evening. The class freshments served depends upon the a and hospitable inclinations of the mast the house. Often the entertainment is orate, including wines and other expe liquors, but tequila, a sort of brandy d ed from the maguey plant, is nearly al on these boards. Sometimes sotal tak place. This is also a furious drink—a s brandy which is distilled from the plant, a species of the Spanish da These are the national drinks.

Christmas eve ushers in a new scene most dramatic and beautiful of all the day season. The richer people, who represented the long pilgrimage, give to the poorer classes, who now take u celebration by giving the "Pastorela" matic representation of the birth of C The largest room that can be procur the village is fitted up for the repres tion, and the humble people, who have wants and little to supply them with, in to represent the characters in the d

The shepherds in the field observing Star of Bethlehem, are cleverly repres as in their journey under its guidance. birth in the manger, the historic cow angels and St. Michael are all shown i simple, picturesque, but impressive, The spectators who witness and applau humble players, who are thus properly senting those who welcomed the birth Saviour, are sometimes those who mad emblematic visits of the previous nine ight, generally the play is for the p classes. This charming introductio Christmas Day ends a little before midn when those who have witnessed it ar pected to entertain the performers. all classes go to midnight mass, where greatest crowd of the year, except Week, are seen. The food furnished these representations consists usual buñuelos, a wheat flour cake cooked like our doughnuts, and tecquino, a ki beer or fermented drink, of which the p classes partake freely during holiday

Christmas day is celebrated in a way. Nothing of the boisterous jovial the American day is apparent. Gifts friend to friend are rarely intercha The servants often get their [aguina Christmas present, but even this custo not general. Hearty and happy as i Mexican's Christmas, it is enjoyed mor religious festival than as a feast. feature is to do honor to their faith these devotions, as in all others in country, women delight to bear the bu Worship is the dominant impulse of shy, cautious and often beautiful crea Their whole lives would be a mystery American girls, for they know little unconventional freedom our women They are lovely in their quietude, a their seeming half dreamy mildness a to be charming enough to be wooed.—B. in the Philadelphia Press.

The Omnipresent Scotchman.

"Go where you will," said the Marq Lorne recently, "it is very difficult away from Scotchmen. I was on the of Labrador, visiting an encampment dians, and being then young in Ca service, I wanted to see a pure-blood dian. I said to the friend who was wit 'Make the man of purest blood among come here;' upon which he shouted French, 'Come here, McDonald.' near the Rocky Mountains, I saw in Indian lodge a beautiful baby, and I to whom the baby belonged—was it dian baby. 'Part Iojun,' was the and it turned out that it was partly th duct of a Scotch engineer. In Nova I found a Highland woman, who coul nothing but Gaelic, cultivating a very cessful farm, while her husband could nothing but Italian. I have no doub the successful management was due fact that they had the ordinary Ca family of about twenty children, w doubt were able to act as interpreters.

aid the whole family her for the morning,
ould be satisfied.
NTINUED.)

IN MEXICO.

gled With Stately Making.

in Mexico shows as the celebration in our e presents it in climate eligious traits that are of them dramatic. In life in that Catholic tinged with the forms
Christmas-tide they are ights. Like all com-ip their patron saints, earlier and last much ne celebration of the s there with the pill Mary from Nazareth
the child was born,
the natal day every-he first act of this crude wer classes spend most ip at home and in the se who are wealthier
the duty of celebrate pilgrimage of nearly ose moving in the same
r in groups each even-se party to the house
They sing and rap vig-en those within ask—tance?'
and St. Joseph ask
."
open, and the visi-
nd conducted to the er erected in the pri-better classes, reprerist. Here each one the rosary. These s over, all are invited
efreshments are served,
roclamation that he is e of Mary and Joseph,
o make merry. Music eating and drinking,
merry making.
resentation complete,
denied admittance, as arry out the historic f Christ in her journey
she and Joseph were and food. The first halt, in the pilgrimage.
istmas Eve this inter-
nued, a different house ning. The class of repends upon the ability
tions of the master of e entertainment is elab-
s and other expensive
a sort of brandy distillplant, is nearly always metimes sotal takes its furious drink—a strong stilled from the sotal
the Spanish dagger.
drinks.
rs in a new scene, the autiful of all the holi-her people, who have pilgrimage, give way who now take up the the "Pastorela" a dra-
of the birth of Christ.
t can be procured in up for the representa-people, who have few pply them with, come aracters in the drama.
the field observing the re cleverly represented nder its guidance. The the historic cow, the el are all shown in the but impressive, play.
fitness and applaud the are thus properly repre-
elcomed the birth of our es those who made the
the previous nine days, play is for the poorer ning introduction to a little before midnight,
ve witnessed it are ex-
the performers. Then lnight mass, where the the year, except Holy e food furnished after s consists usually of dour cake cooked much and tesquino, a kind of nk, of which the poorer y during holiday time.
ebrated in a quiet
e boisterous joviality of ppparent. Gifts from rarely interchanged.
get their aguinaldo, a it even this custom is and happy as is the
it is enjoyed more as a n as a feast. Every or to their faith. In in all others in that ght to bear the burden.
mant impulse of these ten beautiful creatures.
uld be a mystery to our they know little of the om our women enjoy.
their quietude, and in reamy mildness appear gh to be wooed.—F. A.
Press.

sent Scotchman.

ll," said the Marquis of s very difficult to get
n. I was on the coast
g an encampment of In-en young in Canadian see a pure-blooded In-friend who was with me, rest blood among them
hich he shouted out in e, McDonald.' Very ntain, I saw in a fine ciful baby, and I asked elonged—was it an Inlojun,' was the reply;
t it was partly the pro-
gineer. In Nova Scotia woman, who could talk cultivating a very suc-
er husband could speak
I have no doubt that gement was due to the the ordinary Canadian nty children, who no ct as interpreters."

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Tad's Visit to the Quangle Wangle.

On the top of the Crumpetty Tree
The Quangle Wangle sat;
But his face you could not see
On account of his beaver hat;
For his hat was a hundred and two feet wide,
With ribbons and bibbons on every side,
And bells and buttons, and hoops and lace,
So that nobody could ever see the face
Of the Quangle Wangle Quee.

This is what sailor Ben sang to Tad Heber, a brown-eyed 6 year old, who was trying to help mend the net, and begging for songs and stories.

Old ocean was calm, the afternoon was warm, mamma Heber, with the other ladies at the hotel, was fast asleep.

Tad forgot that he wanted to keep his pretty white linen suit nice until papa came home on the four o'clock train from the city.

Tad played in the shining sand, tumbled his yellow curls, then lay down on the beach to listen to Ben's song of the Quangle Wangle's Hat.

"Was there ever such a Hat, Ben?" inquired Tad.

"I dunno. The song says so," and he droned on, in a low voice:

The Quangle Wangle Wangle said
To himself, on the Crumpetty Tree:
"Jam and jelly and bread
Are the best food for me;
But the longer I live in this Crumpetty Tree,
The plainer than ever it seems to me
That very few people come this way,
And that life on the whole is far from gay."

"Jam and jelly and bread ought to be company for the Quangle Wangle. I know it would be for me," said Ted.

"Well the next verse will tell about his visitors."

But there came to the Crumpetty Tree
Mr. and Mrs. Canary;
And they said: "Did you ever see
Any spot so charmingly airy?
May we build a nest by your lovely hat?
Mr. Quangle Wangle grant us that.
O please let us come and build a nest
Of whatever material suits you best,
Mr. Quangle Wangle Quee."

"Now listen, Ted—

And, besides, to the Crumpetty Tree,
Came the Stork, the Duck and the Owl,
The Snail and the Bumble Bee,
The Frog and the Fimble Fowl,
And all of them said: "We humbly beg
We may build our homes on your lovely hat,
Mr. Quangle Wangle, grant us that."

"The little chap's asleep," said Ben, as he stopped to brush away an inquisitive wasp from Tad's nose, then he sang the little boy's favorite "varse," as he called it—

And the golden Grouse came there,
And the Pecple, who has no toes,
And the small Olympian Bear,
And the Dong with the luminous nose,
And the Blue Baboon who played the flute,
And the Orient calf from the land of the Tute,
And the Attery Squash and the Bisky Bat—
All came and built on the lovely Hat
Of the Quangle Wangle Quee."

Just then a queer thing happened, the net slipped from Ben's hands, his mouth flew open, and he too was asleep. When papa Heber came he found them so,

"Wake up, lazy Taddy," called Mr. Heber, and the little fellow rubbed his eyes and said:

"Oh, please don't scare away the Fimble Fowl and Attery Squash."

"Why, my son, you are dreaming."

"No, papa; I have been to see the Quangle Wangle, and they all danced by the light of the mulberry moon, to the flute of the Blue Baboon."

"It was only a dream, Tad," said papa Heber, as he brushed the sand from the yellow curls.

"I saw them just as plain," said Tad, half crying.

By this time Ben was aroused.

"I think the little chap was only half asleep, while I wor a-singin' to him, and he partly heard and dreamed those onreasonable things."

Mamma listened to Tad's story, then gave him a bath and nice supper of bread, fruit and milk.

Papa and Aunt Flossie, a mischief-loving young lady, teased him about the "People who had no toes," and the Fimble Fowl, but Tad was firm in his belief that he had been to see the Quangle Wangle.

Sailor Ben and Tad often went fishing, boating and bathing in company, but the little boy never again saw the Quangle Wangle, or the queer creatures dance by the light of the mulberry moon, to the flute of the Blue Baboon, on the broad green leaves of the Crumpetty tree.

Bad Air.

When a person has remained for an hour or more in a crowded and poorly ventilated room or railroad car, the system is already contaminated to greater or less extent by breathing air vitiated by exhalations from the lungs, bodies and clothing of the occupants. The immediate effect of these poisons is to debilitate, to lower vitality, and to impair the natural power of the system to resist disease. Hence it is that persons who are attacked by inflammatory diseases, as pneumonia or rheumatism, can generally trace the beginning of the disease to a chill felt on coming out of a crowded room into the cold or damp air, wearing perhaps thin shoes and insufficient clothing. If these facts were generally understood and acted upon, thousands of lives might be saved every year.

It is a well known fact that men who "camp out," sleeping on the ground at all seasons of the year, seldom have pneumonia, and that rheumatism, with them, comes as a rule, only from unwarrantable imprudence.

There are two facts that should learned by every person capable of appreciating them, and they should never be lost sight of for a moment. One is that exhalations from the lungs—the breath—is a deadly poison, containing the products of combustion in the form of carbonic acid gas, and if a person were compelled to reinhale it unmixed with the oxygen of the air, it would prove as destructive to life as the fumes of charcoal. This is an enemy that is always present, in force, in assemblies of people, and only a constant and free infusion of fresh air prevents it from doing mischief that would be immediately apparent.

The other fact is that pure air is the antidote to this poison. The oxygen of the air is the greatest of all purifiers. Rapid streams of water that pass through large cities, receiving the sewage, become pure again through the action of the air after running a few miles. Air is the best of all "blood purifiers." Combined with vigorous exercise to make it effective, it will cure any curable case of consumption.

A Romance of Los Angeles.

The December Century contains the following romance: 'Of all Don Antonio's graphic narratives of the olden times, none is more interesting than those which describe his adventures during the days of this contest. On one of the first approaches made by the Americans to Los Angeles, he went out with his little haphazard company of men and boys to meet them. He had but one cannon, a small one, tied by ropes on a cart axle. He had but one small keg of powder that was good for anything; all the rest was bad, would merely go off 'pouf, pouf,' the senora said, and the ball would pop down near the mouth of the cannon. With this bad powder he fired his first shots. The Americans laughed; this is child's play, they said, and pushed on closer. Then came a good shot, with the good powder, tearing into their ranks and knocking them right and left; another and another. Then the Americans began to think. these are no pouf balls; and when a few more were killed they ran away and left their flag behind them. And if they had only known it, the Californians had only one more charge left of the good powder, and the next minute it would have been the Californians that would have had to run away themselves, merrily laughed the senora as she told the tale.

'This captured flag, with important papers, were intrusted to Don Antonio to carry to the Mexican headquarters at Sonora. He set off with an escort of soldiers, his horse decked with silver trappings, his sword, pistols—all of the finest: a proud beginning of a journey destined to end in a different fashion. It was in winter time; cold rains were falling; by night he was drenched to the skin, and stopped at a friendly Indian's tent to change his clothes. Hardly had he got them off when the sound of horses' hoofs was heard. The Indian flung himself down, put his ear to the ground and exclaimed, 'Americanos! Americanos!' Almost in the same second they were at the tent's door. As they halted, Don Antonio, clad only in his drawers and stockings, crawled out of the back of the tent, and creeping on all fours reached a tree up which he climbed, and sat safe hidden in the darkness among its branches listening, while his pursuers cross-questioned the Indian, and at last rode away with his horse. Luckily, he had carried into the tent the precious papers and the captured flag: these he entrusted to an Indian to take to Sonora, it being evidently of no use for him to try to cross the country thus closely pursued by his enemies.

"All night he lay hidden; the next day he walked twelve miles across the mountains to an Indian village where he hoped to get a horse. It was dark when he reached it. Cautiously he opened the door of the hut of one whom he knew well. The Indian was preparing poisoned arrows; fixing one on the string and aiming at the door he called out, angrily:

"'Who is there?'

"'It is I, Antonio.'

"'Don't make a sound,' whispered the Indian, throwing down his arrow, springing to the door, coming out and closing it softly. He then proceeded to tell him that the Americans had offered a reward for his head, and that some of the Indians in the rancheria were ready to betray or kill him. While they were yet talking, again came the sound of the Americans' horses' hoofs galloping in the distance. This time there seemed no escape. Suddenly Don Antonio, throwing himself on his stomach, wriggled into a cactus patch near by. Only one who has seen California cactus thickets can realize the desperateness of this act. But it succeeded. The Indian threw over the cactus plants an old blanket and some refuse stalks and reeds; and there once more, within hearing of all his baffled pursuers said, the hunted man lay, safe, thanks to Indian friendship. The crafty Indian assented to all the Americans proposed, said that Don Antonio would be sure to be caught in a few days, advised them to search in a certain rancheria which he described, a few miles off, and in an oppposite direction from the way in which he intended to guide Don Antonio. As soon as the Americans had gone, he bound up Antonio's feet in strips of rawhide, gave him a blanket and an old tattered hat, the best his stores afforded, and then led him by a long and difficult trail to a spot high up in the mountains where the old women of the band were gathering acorns. By the time they reached this place, blood was trickling from Antonio's feet and legs, and he was well-nigh fainting with fatigue and excitement. Tears rolled down the old women's cheeks when they saw him. Some of them had been servants in his father's house, and loved him. One brought gruel; another bathed his feet, others ran in search of healing leaves of different sorts. Bruising these in a stone mortar, they rubbed him from head to foot with the wet fibre. All his pain and weariness vanished as if by magic. His wounds healed, and in a day he was ready to set off for home. There was but one pony in the old women's camp. This was old, vicious, blind in one eye, and with one ear cropped short; but it looked to Don Antonio far more beautiful than the gray steed on which he had ridden away from Los Angeles three days before. There was one pair of ragged shoes of enormous size among the old women's possessions. These were strapped on his feet by leathern thongs, and a bit of old sheepskin was tied around the pony's body. Thus accoutered and mounted, shivering in his drawers under his single blanket, the captain and flag-bearer turned his face homeward. At the first friend's house he reached he stopped and begged for food. Some dried meat was given to him, and a stool on the porch offered to him. It was the house of a dear friend, and the friend's sister was his sweetheart. As he sat there eating his meat the women eyed him curiously. One said to the other, 'How much he looks like Antonio!'

"At last the sweetheart, coming nearer, asked him is he were any relation to Don Antonio.

"'No,' he said.

"Just at this moment his friend rode up, gave one glance at the pitiful beggar sitting on his porch, shouted his name, dashed toward him, and seized him in his arms. Then there was great laughing and halt weeping, for it had been rumored that he had been taken prisoner by the Americans.

"From this friend he received a welcome gift of a pair of trowsers, many inches too short for his legs. At the next house his friend was as much too tall, and his second pair of gift trowsers had to be rolled up in thick folds around his ankles.

"Finally, he reached Los Angeles in safety. Halting in a grove outside the town, he waited till twilight before entering. Having disguised himself in the rags which he had worn from the Indian village, he rode boldly up to the porch of his father's house, and in an impudent tone called for brandy. The terrified women began to scream; but his youngest sister, fixing one piercing glance on his face, laughed out gladly, and cried:

"'You can't fool me; you are our Antonio,'"

TOLOACHI.

A Mexican Poison Which Produces Insanity.

Speaking of paupers recalls a sad case, that of an old man—known only as Antonio—who long haunted the house which for several months had been my home in Saltillo. Though filthy beyond description, bare footed, bare-headed, and clad in scanty rags that left breast and limbs uncovered, he had a refined, even courtly manner, all the grace of politeness which is the heritage of his race, and a handsome face which showed occasional gleams of intelligence. He was a harmless lunatic, his mania being to collect bits of rags and papers, and hoarding them like so many diamonds in a great bundle, which he always carried in his arms. Occasionally we found this singular mendicant writing in a fine, beautiful hand, or humming sketches of Spanish and Italian operas, and when suddenly aroused from slumber he imagined himself in far-away places, developing an intimate knowledge of distant cities which could only have come from actual residence. His faithful dog (what beggar was ever without one)—with more of reasoning power than his master, never left his side for a moment, sleeping in his arms upon the precious bundle at night, guarding him with vicious snaps and snarls by day. When the sun shone both were happy, and spent the long days in the sunny court among the flowers which the old man loved, and were fed by the kindhearted folk of the case. One chilly morning, after a long, cold rain, Antonio failed to make his appearance at the usual breakfast hour. Later in the day the children discovered him—his poor, gray head thrown backward among the flowers, the pitiful bundle still clasped in his stiffened arms—stone dead!

Soon afterward, somebody going to one of the remote cities of which the strange old wanderer had often babbled, took the trouble to trace his history. He was of good family—his surname being one well known in the republic—college-bred, and with plenty of money in his youth. Years ago some enemy [it was never discovered who, or for what cause] gave him some of the poison toloachi, the effect of which is worse than death, entire and incurable loss of reason. This poisonous weed grows everywhere in Mexico, but more thriftly in the tropical region of the tierra calienta. It is a harmless-looking plant, precisely like the milk-weed of the north, and all too dangerously convenient in a land where suspicion rules and jealousy amounts to madness. A few drops of the tasteless white juice of the toloachi, mixed with milk or other food, does its diabolical work with inexorable certainty and can not be detected except in its effects. It does not kill, but acts immediately upon the brain, producing at first violent madness and then hopeless idiocy. It is whispered that poor Carlotta had hardly landed at Vera Cruz on her sorrowful mission to this country, before some of it was adminstered to her, and her deplorable fate is cited as one among many similar instances. Of all the dangers in Mexico this is one of the most appalling. Any political enemy, jealous rival, or offended servant, may thus revenge himself in a more fiendish manner than with the stilleto, and without fear of detection.

The Walled Lake.

John Gregg, a commercial traveller, thus describes to the New York Sun a prehistoric reservoir:—I've seen a good many wonderful things in my travels, but the Walled Lake of Iowa rather lays over everything that I ever saw. Just imagine a body of water, covering nearly 9,000 acres, with a wall built up all around it, not a stone in which can be less than 100 pounds in weight, and some as heavy as three tons, and there's not a stone to be found within ten miles of the lake. The wall is ten feet high, about fifteen feet wide at the bottom, and perhaps five on top. The country is prairie land for miles round, except a belt of heavy timber that encircles the lake. This timber is oak, and it is plain that the trees were planted there. They are very large. The belt is probably half a mile wide. The water in the lake is twenty-five feet deep, as cold as ice and as clear as crystal. What I would like to know is, who built that wall, and how did they hold the water back while they were building it? And how did they cart those immense stones for ten miles? If you ever go to Iowa don't fail to visit the Walled Lake. You'll find it in Wright county, 160 miles from Dubuque. The cars will take you almost to it.

A Thoughtful Husband.

A Detroit lady, who is subject to heart disease, took tea last Sunday with a neighbor, and while sitting at table her husband rushed in without a hat and in his shirt sleeves.

"Be calm!" he exclaimed hurriedly to his wife; "don't excite yourself; you know you can't stand excitement, and it might be worse."

"Good heavens!" cried the wife: "the children!"

"They're all right! Now, Mary, don't get excited. Keep calm and cool—it can't be helped now; we must bear these visitations of providence with philosophy!"

"Then it's mother," gasped the wife.

"Your mother's safe; get on your things, but don't hurry or worry. It's too late to be of any use, but I'll fly back and see what I can do. I only came to tell you not to get excited."

"For mercy's sake!" implored the almost fainting woman, 'tell me the worst?'

"Well, if you will have it, the consequence be on your own head, Mary, I've tried to prepare you, and you will know—don't excite yourself—try and survive—but our chimney's on fire, and the whole department and all the neighbors are in our front yard!"

She survived.

Croup.

Croup is a congestion of blood in the arteries of the windpipe congested to such an extent that the more watery portions of the blood exude and spread and thicken, until the windpipe is so nearly closed that breathing is difficult, and as the filling up increases and the breathing becomes more labored a kind of spasmodic contraction of the top of the windpipe takes place, and the child is dead.

Croup is the result of cold, especially as connected with damp clothing or wet stockings. No mother should ever put her child under seven years, to bed without feeling the feet, and if they are not warm by all means warm them, as it may end in croup before morning.

Being out of doors after sundown from November to May is a very frequent cause of croup in small children; in playing about their feet are apt to get wet, or they get over-excited in their little play, are overheated, and are very much inclined to stand in the wind, or at a corner on damp ground, or sit on a cold stone.

Croup usually comes on with a slight increase in the frequence of breathing, about sundown or bedtime. The next morning it seems to better, and the mother is hopeful; but at night it is worse. and the third night or sooner it is the regular croup; the child is restless, uneasy, it breathes hard and fast-the chest heaves, there is a kind of wheezing, barking, suppressed cough, which does not seem to relieve.

If mothers would apply remedies the first night, croup is as easily cured as a common cold, when taken in time. The instant croupy threatenings are observed the child should be kept indoors; should eat very light food indeed, and not much of that, until the symptoms have abated. Hydropathists invest the throat immediately with cloths wet with water, very cold, ice-cold if possible, but not so as to dribble about; the wet cloth should be covered with a dry flannel one. These cloths should be renewed every two or ten minutes, according to the violence of the symptoms, to be continued, by all means, until the breathing is comfortably easy.

If there is not much fever, or if the skin is dry, put the child into a tepid bath of seventy five degress, and then well wrap up in a blanket until perspiration takes place. But if there is much fever and a hot skin, use the wet pack sheet and renew until the fever abates. The bowels should be emptied at once with a warm water enema. By all possible means keep the feet and hands warm. If there is no expectoration, and the child seems to be almost suffocating, give warm water copiously, until the use of a feather to tickle the throat induces vomiting. It is sometimes wonderful to see the good effects of this warm water vomiting in cases of croup in children.

Some physicians consider nauseating remedies indispensable. Mix half a teaspoon each of powdered alum and ipecac in half a glass of tepid water, and give it as quickly as possible. If it does not cause the child to vomit in ten minutes repeat the dose, with a teacup of warm water every five minutes, until a feather or the finger in the throat produces vomiting.—Dr. Hall's Health at Home.

Religion stands like two pillars, namely: What Christ did for us in His flesh, and what He performs in us by His Spirit. Most errors arise from an attempt to separate two.

Colds.

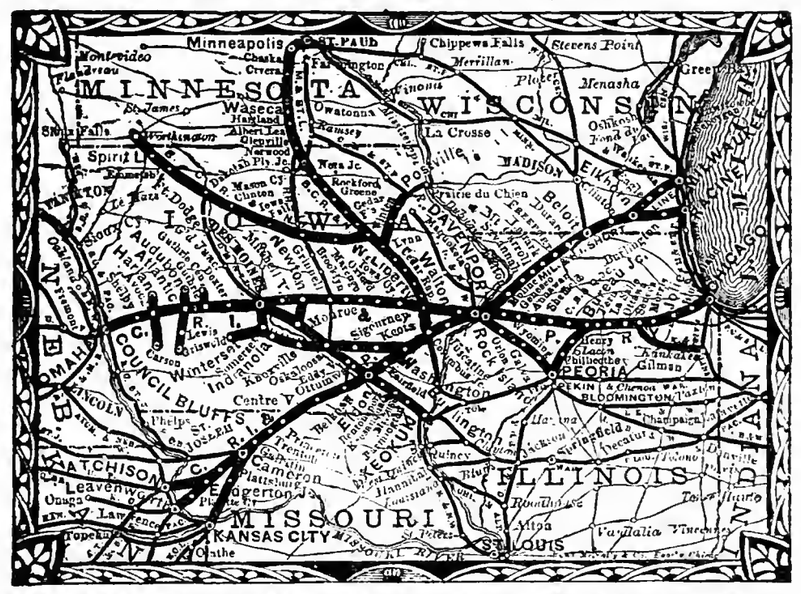
The most prevalent of all ailments are colds, affecting various parts of the body; "they have all seasons for their own," and are the beginnings of more diseases than all other causes combined.

It becomes, then, a matter of the first importance to know how to avoid colds, and how to get rid of them speedily when they attack us.

The most frequent cause of colds is wet feet, or feet that remain for a long time damp and chilled from wearing too thin stockings and shoes. It is probable that half of the diseases peculiar to women are induced in that way. It is not the wetting of the feet that gives colds, but the gradual evaporation of the moisture, which carries of the natural warmth of the body, thus causing the blood to be chilled. The effect of chill is to close the pores of the skin, so that the waste particles of matter cannot escape from the body in this direction but are thrown back and thus poison the blood.

When it is not possible to take off the shoes and stockings, and dry and warm the feet promptly after getting them wet, it is better to let them remain wet until we can attend to them properly. To dry them in the sun or before a fire, without taking off shoes and stockings and substituting dry ones, is extremely hazardous. There is but little danger of taking cold after wetting the feet if we walk rapidly enough to keep up the natural temperature of the body, and keep on walking until we reach some place where we can take off shoes and stockings and thoroughly dry them or change them for dry ones. A cold is less likely to result from a thorough drenching of the whole body than from wetting the feet alone.

People seldom take cold when they are exposed to sudden lowering of the temperature of the air while they are out of doors; they may have their hands and feet frost bitten, and become almost unconscious from freezing, and yet escape the dangers of an ordinary cold.



A cold in the head may frequently be cut short if treated at once, by snuffing up the nose the fumes of spirits of camphor, ammonia or bay rum. This remedy must be applied every few minutes to be effective. In the meantime the patient should remain in a warm room, and avoid draughts of air. If the cold is not cured in twenty-four hours, it will continue ten or twelve days in spite of treatment, or if neglected its effects may last a lifetime, Colds result in serious and fatal diseases only when neglected. We have so often given directions for treating neglected colds that it is hardly worth while to repeat them here. Remain in the house, and if necessary in bed, until the cold has disappeared, and then venture out cautiously at first, as the system is sensitive to fresh attacks for several days after recovery.—Journal of Health.

God compels us to learn many bitter lessons, that, by knowing and suffering, we may also know the eternal salvation.

When a pump tube freezes solid do not pour on hot water in the common way with the hope of thawing. The hot water will stay at the top, and that will be the end of it. But procure a lead tube, a gum or any other kind of pipe, place the lower end directly on the ice in the pump, and pour a funnel pour hot water in at the top. The weight of the water in the pipe will cause it not against the ice, the pipe sections as fast as the ice melts, and the whole will be thawed out in an incredibly short time.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Caliatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JAN. 17, 1884.

TOWNSHIP COUNCILS.

Next Monday, the 21st, the various newly elected councils will meet (as per statute) when a number of appointments will have to be made, and we would suggest that (othar things being equal) those having experience in the duties of the office to which such appointments are made, have the preference. We have not here, any object in view in advocating such a course, but it is evident to those who have given such matters any consideration, that the value of practical experience is unquestioned, and should be taken into account in the appointment of such as auditors, assessors, treasurer, clerk, road commissioners &c. In fact we would go as far as to say a township clerk and treasurer should not be changed so long as the party holding such office discharges his duty faithfully and satisfactory, of course it would be impossible for any one to please all, and besides there are many who advocate a change simply for the sake of change. An officer who makes an error from ignorance is not as apt to repeat the wrong as one who has had no experience, this theory holds good in personal and private matters as well as public affairs, and we hope it will have its due weight.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

GLENELG.

The annual meeting of this society was held in the Orange Hall, Markdale, on Thursday the 10th inst. The auditors report was read showing the society as being in good financial circumstances, and congregulating the society for the same. The directors report was also received and adopted. A resolution was passed in favor of adding fifty per cent to the value of prizes to be offered the coming year over that of the past, this will doubtless have the effect of greatly improving the fall show. The following were elected officers for the ensuing year :

President, Wm. Douglass ; Vice President, Thos. Elliott ; Directors, Shepard Boyce, Thos. Townsend, Ed. Rutledge, Wm. Haskett, Hugh McKee, Robert Walker, Adam Sheil, Richard Watson and James Nelson ; Auditors, C. W. Rutledge and Wm. McLaughry; A. Turner, Sec. Treas.

ARTEMESIA.

The annual meeting of this society was held in Flesherton, on Thursday the 10th. The auditors report is as follows : Total receipt for the year $322.54, dispursements $245.60, leaving a balance on hand of $76.94 exclusive of members subscription for the current year. The following are the officers elected for 1884 :

President, Robert Oliver ; Vice President, John McArthur ; Secretary Treasurer, James Brodie. Directors, Donald McMillan, Thomas Conkey, David Harrow, Joseph Aussum, John McLeod, Alexander Stewart, R. Plant, James Stewart and James H. Stewart.

COM.

Personal Liberty.

Speaking of "personal liberty," so far as indulging in alcoholics is concerned, for example, it may sound very fine to talk of, but it is becoming more and more dangerous to allow any man the personal liberty to incapacitate himself for a single hour. The humble railway switchman, or the honest railway navvy, or the more pretentious engine driver, or conductor, may think it rather a hard thing for any one to question his privilege to give himself the enjoyment of a few glasses of whiskey or brandy when his day's service is over, or even at some time during his day's service. He may feel that it is nobody's business but his own ; but there is a very great deal of danger that it may turn out otherwise. All are willing enough now to admit that the lives of the people are in danger when the switchman, or the engine driver, or the conductor, has taken a couple of glasses even though he may not feel its effects. All are aware that his judgment is not so good, and his brain as clear because of the stimulants taken ; but the after danger of these indulgences is not realized at all as it should be. It ought to be much better understood that the man whose brain has been stimulated at night has not as safe and clear a head for next day's duty. It ought to be well understood that the man who was up past reasonable hours, and has not enjoyed his full amount of sleep and rest, is not as safe a man next day. The habits tolerated generations ago cannot be safely tolerated now.

More Election News.

COLLINGWOOD TOWNSHIP.—Reeve, Thos. McKenny ; 1st Deputy, Arch Campbell ; 2nd Deputy, W Hewgill. Councillors—Jas Lunan, John Irwin.

AMABEL.—Reeve, Allen 208 ; Porter 170 ; Deputy, Reeve, Schell 232; Anderson 134 ; Councillors—Webb 178 ; Philp 154 ; Broadfoot 144 ; Raker 140 ; Smellie 112 ; Miller 62.

ST. VINCENT.—Reeve, Jas. Bowes by 26 maj. ; Deputy, Reeve, N. Read 68 maj. ; Councillors—Montgomery, McIntosh and Carson were elected by acclamation.

BENTINCK.—Reeve, D. McNicol ; 1st Deputy, J. Messenger ; 2nd Deputy, J. McCalum. Councillors—S. Dickson, H. Willis.

SYDENHAM.—Reeve, W. Lang, Councillors—H. Gordon, C. Hemming, W. Lemon, G. D. Ward.

DERBY.—Reeve, John Robertson ; Deputy Reeve, Wm. Brien. Councillors—Solomon, Reiley, David Hilts, R. Henderson, SULLIVAN.—Joseph Dunnington, Reeve, Jas. Vasey, Deputy Reeve. Councillors—John Elheron, John Proud and James Thomson.

Osprey.

From our own correspondent.

Osprey council for 1884.—Thomas Gamey, A. McIntyre, Jos. Taylor, T. Johnston and Speers.

The Osprey Agricultural association met at Maxwell on Thursday of last week, when the following officers were elected : Pres., Wm. Guy ; 1st vice Pres.. R. Burk ; 2nd vice, H. McDonald ; Directors, Wm. Ingster, J. Kerton, W. H. Kolques, Joseph Gamey, James Winters, John McKinnon, Meil McLean, Andrew McGirr and J. R. Sing.

The Soiree in connection with the Presbyterian church, at McIntyre, on New Years day, was in every respect a perfect success, the dainty nature of the refreshments and their abundance called forth expressions of delight from every quarter, and the varigated and refreshing nature of the entertainment, formed a subject of comment for many days after. The amount cleared by tickets was $81.

The Sabboth School festival and tree, held in the same place, on Monday the 14th, was also a maryel of success. Presents to the amount of $60 were distributed from the tree to the children.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

The band concert which was to have been held on the 10th inst., will be held to-night, Thursday.

If the Markdale Literary and Gymnasium club visit us to give an entertainment, they will doubtless have a good house. We are informed it is their intention to come.

Mr. Crowle, our post office clerk, has removed from our midst. Oh how lonesome ! Don't it.

Rev. W. Casson, preached the Methodist Missionary sermons here on Sabboth last to an attentiv audience.

We can guess where our good looking undertaker has gone, and for what purpose. Just wait a while there may be more than one 'Jewell' in Dundalk shortly.

Mrs. Robert Oliver died very suddenly on Sabboth last, and was buried on Tuesday.

The rink is the only place of amusement or recreation our young people have. The band plays their every Friday evening.

The Presbyterian congregation intend to extend a call to a minister shortly.

Collapse of the Shields Libel Case.

TORONTO. Jan. 8.—The action of Shields v. the Globe, having reference to the contract B. scandal, was yesterday dismissed for lack of prosecution, Shields to pay all costs of the application.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsib'e for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

MARKDALE STILL AHEAD.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR.—It is gratifying to know that the Markdale school still holds amongst the schools of the country, the distinguished place which it attained a few years ago. You will doubtless have noticed that four out of the five pupils from Markdale who wrote at the entrance examination last December, passed with flying colors, and what is more remarkable two of these very young boys aged respectively 12 yrs. 3 months and 12 yrs and 2 months, stood 2nd and 3rd on the list of those who passed at Owen Sound. It speaks volumes for the energy and ability of our late teacher Mr. Dunbar, for be it remembered these pupils who passed so creditably may be said to have obtained their entire training at that gentlemans hands, as with one exception none of them had ever attended an examination before.

WM. BROWN.

INSPECTORS OFFICE, SOUTH GREY.

Priceville, January 14th 1884.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR.—I would respectfully beg to remind school trustees and teachers, that while they are allowed to re-open the schools two weeks before the end of summer vacation, yet it is positively unlawful to make any record of attendance at such schools during any part of vacation on the registers or the returns under the heavy penalties referred to on the printed books of the half yearly returns. Several glaring as well as minor cases having recently come before my notice, seem to indicate the necessity for thus calling attention to the matter through your widely read paper,

Yours Respectfully,
W. FERGUSEN.

Credit Sale Register.

FRIDAY JAN. 25th, at Mr. Richard Sparling's Lot 27, con. 10, Euphrasia, a large quantity of farm stock, implements &c. Sale to commence at 12·30. Terms, 12 months on approved paper. W. J. Shepherdson, auctioneer.

BIRTHS.

Notices of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, twenty five cents.

RICHARDS.—In Markdale, on the 15th inst., the wife of W. G. Richards, of a son, SPEERS.—In Winnipeg, on Christmas, the wife of Mr. C. W. Speers, of a son.

SPEERS.—In Markdale, on the 12th inst., the wife of Mr. Arch. Speers, of a son.

HAWKEN.—In Euphrasia, on the 5th inst., the wife of Mr. Luther Hawken, of a son.

MARRIAGES.

BURNSIDE—BURNSIDE.—In Markdale on the 9th inst., by the Rev. Wesley Casson, Mr. Robert Burnside, of Holland, to Miss Mary Jane Burnside, of Markdale.

HOLMES—EMERSON.—At the residence of the brides father, on Jan. 9th, by the Rev. J. Chisholm B. A., Mr. Eli. Holmes, of Stayner, to Miss Sarah Jane Emerson, of The 30th con. Osprey.

MOFFAT—PARK.—At the residence of the brides father, on Jan. 16th, by Rev. J. Chisholam, B. A., Mr. Wm. G. Moffat, of the 8th con. Osprey, to Miss Margaret Park, daughter of Mr. James Park, 10th Con., Osprey.

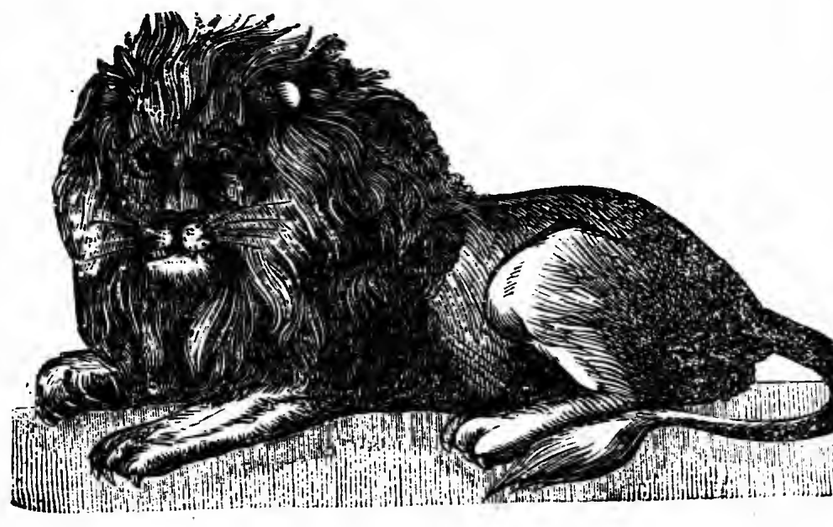
DEATHS.

ABERCROMBIE.—In Euphrasia, on the 13th inst., A. M., infant child of Mr. John Abercrombie, aged 11 months 15 days.

WELSH.—In Artemesia, on the 11th inst., Mrs. Welsh, mother of Mr. Patrick Welsh, of Artemesia, aged 101 years.

NOTICE. All parties indebted to the undersigned are hereby requested to pay the same to A. Turner, Markdale. He is the only person in Markdale authorized to receive monies due me and to give receipts therefor.

175-77.. T. S. SPROULE, M. D.



NOTICE. All who are indebted to the undersigned, are hereby notified to settle the same either by cash or note, at once, as I am obliged to make close collections owing to the recent fire.

JOHN McKENNA.

FOR SALE. Dwelling House, shop, Suitable for grocery store, or other business, with dwelling above, and stable on the lot, on mill street, corner lot, good business site, apply to S. DAMUDE, Flesherton, or C. W. RUTLEDGE, Markdale.

FARM FOR SALE. Lot 118; con. 1, West T. & S. R., Artemesia, containing 50 acres, more or less, all cleared and under cultivation. A good bank barn, and log dwelling house on the premises, also a thriving young orchard just commencing to bear, situated about 2½ miles from the thriving village of Markdale. For Terms and particulars apply at this office or to

JOHN HAZARD,
Flesherton Station,

Auction Sale

Auction Sale Auction Sal

GOING,
GOING,
GONE.

TRIMBLE & WRIGH

—WILL SELL BY—

PUBLIC - AUCTIO

—IN—

REID'S BLOCK,

MARKDAL

—ON—

Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 23rd and 2

A large consignment of Dry Goods, consisting of M Made Clothing Tweeds, Cloths, Flannels, Blankets, S Mantles, Mantle Cloths, Ribbons, Caps, Muff's, G Mufflers, Scarfs, Men's Under Clothing, and other ar too numerous to mention.

All of which will be sold with reserve, as we are giving up general business in Markdale.

Sale will Commence at O'Clock Sharp each da

TERMS - CAS

TRIMBLE & WRIGH

LOOK HERE.

SPECIAL THIS WEEK.

DressStuffsTweeds

Dress stuffs in all the latest shades, varying in price from 10 cents up.

Tweeds in English, Scotch and Canadian, in the newest and most fashionable styles.

Groceries.

Teas and general groceries always up to the mark and at the lowest living prices.

Blankets, Wincies.

Blankets, White and Grey at prices heretofore unheard of.

Wincies in plain and fancy at rockbottom prices.

Underclothing.

Ladies' and Gents' Fall and Winter Underclothing in great variety suitable for all classes.

Boots and Shes.

A large, varied and attractive lot of Boots and Shoes for the Fall and Winter trade, which for style, quality and price cannot be excelled.

'TO) NTO HOUSE,' — — — — WILIAM BROWN

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personaliy, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Easter Sunday comes on the 6th April.

Mr. Askin, is opening out in Reid's Block.

The Ontario Legislature will meet on the 22nd.

The Dominion parliment meets today, Thursday.

The local election in Renfrew Co. comes off on the 18th.

Marriges were very numerous in last week's exchanges.

Publishers ought to have something for inserting such items.

No. 1 Coal Oil only 25 cents a Gallon, at McFarlands.

It is said that girls who sing "Baby mine" seldom get married.

Mr. Benson has removed to his new premises opposite the Furniture factory.

What is it that has a mouth and never speaks, a bed and never sleeps? a river.

J. H. Hull is travelling for Alex Kay, Markdale Harvest glove Manufacturer,

The remains of the late Capt. Webb were exhumed and reinterred at Oakwood Cemetery, Niagara, last Thursday.

The lady employees of the Markdale House gave a leap-year assembly one evening last week which came off very successfully.

To improve your appearance, bring your razor to Smith, the barber and have it put in good trim, and then have a decent shave.

Tis just one month since I swore off drinking any tea except McFarland's, and my friends say I am much improved in appearence.

The ice is in good order and the rink well patronized, we may expect the proprietor, Mr. Montgomery to give a Masquerade shortly.

The snow is so deep on parker street, Meaford that the men who reside on it carry their wives home from church on their back; So says the Mirror.

J. McKenna is opening out in the building in rear of the burn't block where he will be pleased to meet his old, customers who need anything in the blacksmithing line.

Our Patrons who wish to subscribe, or renew their subscaiption for any of the following publications will do us a favor by handing the amount in to us at the Standard office, viz. Weekly Mail, or Globe, Family Herald and Weekly Star, monthly Farmers Advocate, American Agriculturist, any of the above with the Standard for $2.00 or singly for one $1. except the Agriculturist which is $1.50,

Pure honey for sale at the Medical Hall.

Those indeted to the Standard will oblige by paying the same before the 28th January.

If you wish a sweet breath and clear complection, drink McFarlands pure Japan Tea.

Mr. J. Hickling of Osprey will please eccept thanks for a two lb. bottle of pure honey.

The next sittings of division court, No. 5, will be held in Flesherton, on Thursday January 24th, 1884.

Alex Kay is pushing the Harvest glove business and expects to sell this season 1,000 dozen pair, Clever.

Wes. Bowler has a large quantity of good red brick on haud, Those, who anticipate building next season should see him.

Our new head teacher has made a good impression, and quite an improvement is already to be seen in the management.

Money is very close yet not sufficiently close to be available, accept perhaps Matri-Money, which appears quite plentifull.

School Books. — Royal Reders, Canadian Readers, and all the ordinary text books at the Medical Hall A. Turner & Co.

The Inspectors were in town on Wednesday and satisfactory settlements were made in reference to the losses in the late fire.

Mr. John Deavitt, who has been a Councillor in Holland for a number of years left this week with his family for the Northwest. We wish him success.

Trincle & Wright will have an auction sale of store goods. on Wednesday and Thursday next week, commencing at 11 o'clock each day. See their advertisement in this paper.

The Mt. Forest Confederate is one of our best exchanges, but it is generally so poorly printed we have great difficulty in reading it. Please send us a good exchange brother.

Mr. John Cameron Reeve of Holland is spoken of as likely to be warden for 84. His claims are good and ought to be favorably considered. He is a staunch man and we would like to see him get the position.

About 40 subscribers to the Standard have promised to fetch us wood for their subscription, and yet we were three days this week without a stick, our next neighbor had a supply however, which he cheerfully divided.

For first class axe handles go to Finnerty's shop, Elizabeth st., opposite the bank, Markdale. You can bring your own timber and have them made to order, or you can get them all ready made at the shop. Sign of the Big Axe Handle. 169-72

The first meeting of Township Council is fixed by act of Parliment, and is the third Monday in the year which will be the 21st inst. The County Council will meet the following day. The fourth Tuesday in January being the first meeting by statute.

The Berkeley Sabbath school tea meeting, which was advertised for the 4th January was, owing to the severe storm, postponed until Monday the 7th when there was a good attendance and a pleasant time was spent, $30 was realized which will be applied in behalf of the School.

Sabbath Observance.—One of the subscribers to the Globe was made happy on Saturday last, by receiving through the post, one of those celebrated Globe watches, and to his joy, as well of that of his family, found that on Sabbath morning no amount of coaxing, pursuasion, or threats, would make it go, and thus be guilty of Sabbath desecration. We wonder if all the Globe watches are so scrupulously pious.—Dundalk Herald.

Why is love like a potato? Because it shoots from the eyes.

Mrs Sproule will not accompany the Dr. to Ottawa this year as stated in the Standard last week.

It is understood that the girls have adopted the following as their motto for leap year:—"If you see what you want, ask for it."

The Chesely Enterprise came out in a new dress last week which gives it quite an improved appearanc. The Proprietor has been elected Councillor for the Village of Chesley.

No matter how badly your watches & clocks are out of order if yon want them repaired leave thme with me. I will carefully,honestly, & practically put then in time keeping shape W. A. Brown, Jeweller Markdale.

W. B. Johnston, Esq., of the Busy Times has been re-elected reeve of Port Elgin. Mr. J. H. Little of the Owen Sound Advertiser. and Mr. J. Stephens of the Chesley Enterprise have also been elected to the council in their respective towns, They will accept our congratulations.

We acknowledge receipt of subscriptions from H. McLaughlan. Manitowaning, $2. which pays to 16th Aug. 84. G. M. Anderson, Shelburne, $1. for 84. W. H. Best, Woodford, per. S. Wiley, $1. for 84. R. McConnell, Alpena, Mich., $1. for 84. Wm. Crawford, Millbank, $1. for 84.

Extensive auction sale of village lots in the village of Markdale, on Saturday, Feb. 2, by M. Armstroug. The above lots are all well situated in the best part of the village, commanding a good view and convenient to railway station. Terms, one third cash, balance in one and two years.

Mr. F. Sarejnt has sold his butcher business in this place and will remove to a farm 10 miles from Barrie, where he intends to engage in agriculture, We regret to loose Fred, as he is a good citizen, a pushing business man and honerable in his dealings, we hope however change will be his gain.

A Secret.—The secret of beauty lies in pure blood and good health. Rejuvinater Bitters is the grand key that unlocks all the secretions. It cures all Scrofulous Diseases, acts on the blood, Liver Kidneys, Skin and Bowels, and brings the bloom of health to the palid cheek. Sold only by Smith, the barber.

Parties desirous of procuring a good reliable watch for its real value cannot do better than deal with W. A. Brown, Markdale. He is handling a superior line of watches in gold and silver cases, and giving excellent satisfaction. He understands thoroughly his business and besides, his integrity is unquestioned.

Enterance Examination.—At the recent Entrance Examination to the High School held here, 76 candidates presented themselves, 45 of whom were successful. The following is the list of successful candidates, with the number of marks taken by each:—

Hattie Cain 397, Maggie Reid 393, Elizabeth Bowes 386, Emily Boddy 370, Martha Somerville 370, Fanny Notter 346, Fanny Wightman 334, Maggie McDougall 329, Bessie Richardson 318, May Trotter 315, Martha Frost 310, Bertha Grady 310, Isabel Dobie 307, Aggie Kennedy 305, Corbet 304, Winnifred Grady 304, Alice E. Todd 301, Marion Beatty 296, Amelia Squire 293, Mary Ireton 291, Jane Telford 283, Mary J. Walker 282, Annie Webb 280.

David R. Dobie 459, John H. Brown 432, Geo. C. Bowes 411, Jas. A. Dodds 392, Samuel Douglass 381, Walter Ferguson 377, Fred Dennison 368, Wm. T. Armour 362, Francis J. Walker 352, Geo. Wain 351, Howard Ireland 333, Hy. DeLaMatter 331, Wm. Crow 325, Arch. McNab 318, Stephen Jones 311, Jos. Gibbs 306. Hy. A. Scott 306. Matthew Kennedy 305, D. W. Ferrier 293, W. A. Bridget 239, D. A. Sinclair 282, James Cram 280.—O. S. Times.

The Kimberly L. O. L. will hold their annual soiree and oyster supper in the Orange Hall, Kimberly on Friday evening the 25th January, Preparations are being made for a good time, and a cordial invitation is extended to all, Tickets 25 cents. Several good speakers are expected. See pasters for further particulars.

Euphrasia District L. O. L.—This lodge met at Rocklyn, on the 12th inst., when the following were elected office hearers for the ensuing year: District Master, T. Gilray; D. D. M., Jas. Loughead; Chaplain, Chas. G. Deavitt; R. S., Thomas Abercrombia; F. S., Jas. Knott; Treas. Thos. Reid; Lecturer, Wm. Guthrie; Director of ceremonies, S. Braidner.

Proton district L. O. L. held their annual meeting in the hall of L. O. L. No. 797 Dundalk, on the 8th inst. officers elected for current year: District Master, Geo. Rutherford, Shelburne; D. D. M., D. K. McArthur, Hopeville; D. Chap., John Abbott; D. S., Samuel Edgerton, Ventry; F. D. S., Wm. Booth, Dromore; D. T., Neil McDonald Hopeville; D. D. of C., Alick McConnell, Dundalk; D. Lecturers, re-elected, Thos. Hanbury and J. W. Morrow. Com.

We saw a good instance the other day of the singular notion some people have of economy. A man came into our office and stopped his paper alleging as his reason the "hard times." Half an hour afterwards the same party "set them up" at the McAlister House and invited us to imbibe. Towards evening the "economist" left for home in a "salubrious" state. He had "saved" two cents a week by robbing himself and his family of a welcome weekly visitor and squandered at least two dollars.—Chronicle.

How to Make Scandal.—Take a grain of falshood, a handful of runabout, the same quantity of nimble tongue, a sprig of the herb backbite, a teaspoonful of don't-you-tell-it, six drops of malice and a few drachms of envy; add a little discontent and jealousy, strain through a bag of misconstruction, cork it up in a bottle of malevolence, and hang it up on a skein of street yarn; shake it occasionally for a few days and it will be fit for use. Take a few drops before walking out, and the desired result will follow.

The Markdale Literary and Gymnasium Club gave an entertainment in the Orange Hall, on Thursday evening last which was well attended. The bar performance by nine of the Club was something remarkable for amateurs and drew from the audience repeated applause. The music which continued throughout by Organ and three Violin's was highly appreciated, while prof. Sproule proved himself master of his profession as a step dancer. With a little more drilling the Club will be able to take the cake from anything of the kind in the Dominion.

Osprey Election 1884:

REEVE.

Gammey, 219.
McGirr, 173.
Sing, 116.

DEPUTY REEVE.

McIntyre, 267.
Potts, 184.

COUNCILLORS.

Inkster, 177.
Irish, 83.
Johnston, 210.
Neil, 29.
Phillips, 52.
Sinclair, 81.
Speers, 221.
Taylor, 239.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.60 to $1.00; Spring $0.00 to $1 00; Barley, 40 to55; Peas, 66; Oats, 20c Butter, 15c; Eggs, 22c; Potatoes, 35c; Hay, $8 .00; Pork, 6.00 to 6.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5 00; Wool 17 to 20.

Our Elevator.—Mr. White, Manager of the railway, accompanied by the Chief Engineer, has been in town this week, in connection with the elevator; and our citizens will be pleased to learn that while here he let contracts for the stonework to Mr. Chambers, and for timber to Messrs. Thos. Johnston and John Harrison. He says the work will be pushed with all possible speed to be ready for the opening of navigation. We have never had our prospects in railway and shipping matters look so bright as at present; and the new manager is creating a favorable impression by the energy with which he takes hold of matters and pushes them on. —O. S. Times.

Personals.

Dr. and Mrs. Washington, were in town this week.

J. W. and Arch. Speers, of Alexandria, Minn., were in town this week.

Willie Lyons arrived from Manitoba last week, he will return in a few weeks.

Mr. Thos. Gamey, Reeve of Osprey, gave us a call on Monday.

Mr. Gilray, Reeve of Euphrasia, called on us this week.

Mr. Thos. McGee, of Kimberly, returned a short time ago from Colorado, he gave us a call this week.

CARD OF THANKS.

To The Public.—Having sold my business, and decided to remove from Markdale I take this method of returning thanks to my numerous customers for their patronage during the two years I did business in this place. I would also solicit your continued patronage for my successors, Messrs. Sarjeant & Burnside, who will doubtless supply the wants of their customers in a satisfactory manner.

Respectfully Yours,
Fred Sarjeant.

N. B. Those indebted to the undersigned will please call and settle without further notice.

Fred Sarjeant.

The New Year.

The new year opens disastrously, so far as accidents are concerned. During the first weeks Toronto had to mourn the loss of twenty-eight of its citizens, all young and strong men, by a single railway accident, and at nearly the same time in Belleville Illinois, an equal number of fair young women suffered an equally cruel death. Last year was remarkable for the wholesale destruction of human life by various kinds of accidents and misfortunes. Let us hope and pray that the present year may not bring in its train so many terrible calamities.

Preparing to Double Track.

Kingston, Jan. 8.—The Grand Trunk have laid down a large quantity of rails at different places along the line, intend for use in the laying of of a second track. At the Kingston station there are deposited about 20, 000 rails, and a similar quantity at Gananoque.

NOTICE.

Those indebted to the undersigned will please call and settle without further delay. Owing to the late fire I am in need of all outstanding accounts.

R. ASKIN.

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia. Age, year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are cleared and under ultivation. Lot 8 part 15, con. 12, Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.

Oct. 16. 1883. 16

CALGARY.

Bow River, Kicking Horse, Selkirk Rogers Pass and Eagle Pass) to Junction with Onderdonk's Contract.

Calgary, the future Sacramento of the North-West, is situated on the Bow river, 127 miles from the summit of the far-famed Kicking Horse pass, and 177 miles from the east crossing of the Columbia river. Approaching Calgary from the east the traveller is struck by the peculiar beauty of its situation. It seems to nestle at the foot of the serrated snow peaks that appear to overhang the town, though they are forty miles away. The Bow river, clear as crystal, winding thruogh the grass-covered flats, and the back-ground of timbered slopes reaching up to the eternal, making a fairy picture. Sunrise and sunset at Calgary are too gorgeous and grand a display ever to be adequately described, and when the silver moonbeams tip the icy peaks sentiment runs riot. Far away to the east stretches, and the winding valley of the Bow with its tree-covered slopes completes the picture.

THE BOUNDLESS PRAIRIE

So much has lately been written on mountain passes with so vast a divergence of geography and opinion that it might be well to give a description of the valley of the Bow river to the mouth of the pass and continuation. The Bow river is a stream about 300 feet wide, and flows with a velocity of four to five miles an hour at Calgary. It cuts its way through the foot hills in a series of bends, and is too shallow for navigation above Calgary, though below that point it might be used during floods for steamers of two-feet draught.

The construction of the railway line to the entrance of the Bow river pass was a very timple matter; the writer, then in the employ of the C. P. R. Co., recommended the crossing and recrossing of the Bow to avoid excessive work, but generally that the line be carried up the right or south bank, where it is at present constructed. The is exceedingly easy, and thence continuing up the Bow river almost to the summit, a distance of 70 miles from the mouth of the pass (Padmore's) the work is very little heavier than ordinary prairie work. (The writer had access to the profiles of this work in October, 1882).

ENTRANCE TO THE PASS

Directly the summit is passed the Kicking Horse river commences to tumble down to the Columbia, and here some difficult and excessively heavy work was met with, but nothing at all impracticable to the east crossing of the Columbia river, a further distance from the summit of 50 miles. In the writer's experience it has always been easy to obtain any altitude for a railway line with fair work in any portion of B. C., but when it came to the descent a great many rungs were wanted in the ladder. In other words the whole bottom of the country appeared to drop out, and it is the clinging business that costs. Mountains do not present regular slopes and the numerous streams that flow down their sides present deep ravines that in descending become wider and more formidable. This is always the case on the interior slopes of the Rockies, the Selkirks, and the most of all the Cascades. The now differs little from many others, excepting, perhaps, that it is more costly to build a road through owing to its abrupt descent. Major Rogers fixes its altitude at 5,309 feet, and taking the crossing of the Columbia river at 2309 feet above sea level, we have a descent of 3,000 feet to make, and a distance of 50 miles to make it in. This would give, roughly, 60 feet to the mile, a fair gradient. So much much for the Kicking Horse, the crossing of the Columbia being a simple matter of bridging. The line the commences to scale the Selkirks. Mr. Sanford Fleming, late engineer, has reported on the across the Selkirks, and he doubtless not only had complete access to the plans and profiles, but had aneroid and other means of trying if the impossible existed; though very often the engineer, through practice and training can readily determine by mere inspection the feasibility of any route. The total distance across the Selkirks is 63 miles, and again the Columbia river is crossed at the entrance to Eagle pass. There is nothing at all formidable in this last pass. This writer has carefully examined it throughout; it has no abrupt descents. either east or west; its length is 45 miles to the great Shaswap lake. From this last point there are no great engineering difficulties to vicinity of Kamloops, some 80 to 85 miles more from this last point. Thorough surveys made by Government have determined the perfect feasibility for road making connection with the present contract (Onderdonk's) at Savona ferry.

FAMOUS KICKING HORSE PASS

FEASIBILITY OF THE ENTIRE DISTANCE

The distance of road to be built next year would be from summit of Rockies to Columbia river, east crossing, 50 miles across the Selkirk range; 65 miles to west crossing Columbia: west crossing Columbia to Shuswap lake 45 miles: total to be built to connect with the navigable water system of the Shuswap lakes. Thompson river, and Kamloops lake to Savona ferry, end of Onderdonk's contracts, 160 miles; water stretch Shuswap lake to Savona ferry, about 115 miles; total mileage the Canadian Pacific railway have to complet to reach the Onderdonk contract, 275, say 280 miles. In 1882 the company and this year over 500 miles. Mr. Van Horn can make good his boast of closing in 1885, if he uses the force he had in 1882 and works from both east and west; but in no other case. In the event of working solely from the eastern end the time of completion would be prolonged for very likely a year and certainly for six months. And now another matter. The writer has little reason to thank the syndicate for any favor while in their service. Yet truth demands and the fact remains, that they have carried on their operations with commendable energy and an apparent desire to fulfill not only the letter but the spirit of their agreement with the Government. The reasons, or rather one reason for the many conflicting newspaper accounts, is that when the relocating engineers arrived on the ground last spring it was found that many important changes could be made and these changes are still in course of operation. It is possible for any one engineer to better to some extent the work of his predecessors; this is acknowledged among all practicable men; so much for the "jealousy report," unless indeed the syndicate have boy engineers, in which case, no doubt, constant trouble would arise owing to inexperience, etc. During my two years' service in the company I saw no jealousy, and felt none; each man did his best and that was the end of it.

BUILT OVER 500 MILES

Another reason for injurious reports would be the fact of the company closing down and stopping work for the winter. This is very easy of explanation; they have ample time to complete their contract with the Government. Van Horn believes in improving alignment and curvature by employing different engineers to the very last moment; in fact, taking every foot of advantage the ground affords, and he is right.

It is to be hoped that a more patriotic spirit will animate the various members of the press, and that calculated to injure, not only the Canadian Pacific Company, but the prestige of our whole country, will not be allowed to find places in the columns or obtain the countenance of the great lever that controls the nations.

UNFOUNDED REPORTS

Brigandage in Sicily.

A Naples dispatch to the London Telegraph says: "The duke of Calvino, who was captured by brigands on the evening of the 4th of November in the neighborhood of Trapani, has been released by his captors on payment of a ransom of 160,000 francs by his family, who never expected to see him alive again, he being very obese, advanced in age, and afflicted with a nervous malady. He had passed thirty-five days with the brigands, and, strange to say, the treatment he had received, though by no means pleasant, has had the effect of completely curing him. The duke relates that in the night when he was taken he was put on horseback and made to ride till morning, when the brigands stopped at a kind of warehouse. There he remained the first day, and wrote at his captors' dictation, a letter to his family, asking them to send the above named ransom. In the evening, the journey was resumed, and, as the rain was falling in torrents, the duke was clad in some tarpaulin, and a sack was thrown over his head to protect him. The second night the party reached an abandoned shed, where the duke was left, with a guard outside the door. The third night the journey was continued, and ended at the place destined beforehand for the duke's concealment. He had to enter this retreat on hands and knees, through a narrow opening into a cave, and then through a second hole into a subterranean grotto. Here he remained for thirty days without any light, lying on a bundle of straw which was never changed. His food consisted of bread and cheese, and water. The brigands left him alone, only returning to bring him food. By the light of a lamp, which was lowered from above, they forced him to write other pressing letters to his family, and dictated what he should say.

His family, to obtain his release, used their utmost influence to prevent the military authorities from pursuing the brigands until the ransom had been safely paid and received. The band liberated their victim after having conducted him on foot for a considerable distance, to the territory of Castellamire, where a peasant's house had indicated to him, whence he would be conducted by the inmates to Trapani, about twenty miles distant.

The Evils of Hot Bread.

There is no law in this country to prevent the consumption of hot bread but the law of common sense, and unfortunately that is a dead letter as a governing principle in the lives of a great many people. That hot bread in nine cases out of ten will produce dyspepsia is no newly discovered fact, and especially is this terrible result sure to follow persistent indulgence on the part of those whose pursuits are quiet, in-door and sedentary. And yet the reformers, or those who call themselves such—the men and women who work themselves into a white heat over the sale of a glass of cider—will go on year after year, not only making no outcry against this pernicious indulgence, but actually filling themselves up day by day with the hot and poisonous gases of the oven. This servant of the housewife can be made as terrible a stomach-destroyer as the distillery, and the sworn foes of the latter are apt to be its best patrons. Dyspepsia paints the nose and sours the temper as surely as dram drinking, and many sufferers from the former, though by their own willful acts, inveigh the most loudly against the latter. A well-defined case of jim-jams is the climax to a course of intemperance and warns the victim that his alternative is death or immediate reformation. But the dyspepsia that hot bread, mince pie and kindred abominations cause has no sudden warnings. The man who uses them goes on making both himself and those around him wretched, and refuses to acknowledge that he is a sinner above these whose lighter faults he fiercely condemns —American Miller.

"A Subject Not a Slave."

At the present moment Brazil has a slave population of about 1,300,000. Besides these she has a large population of blacks, and from 250,000 to 300,000 free-born children of slaves. The future of these people is a question of no slight importance to Brazil, for it is the alternative between transforming them into free laborers, or permitting them to drift into a life of idleness, beggary and crime. Thus far the planters have been considering only their selfish, immediate interests, and have overlooked the problem of what is to be done with the emancipated slaves in the future. Elsewhere they have made the same mistake —as in the West Indies—and they have paid dearly for the error. The immediate success of the Cantagallo colony is an eloquent proof of how easily these ex slaves can be transformed into free laborers, and if this one example does not lead to others of a similar character it will be because the planters are both blind and perverse and do not want their old slaves to get on in the world.—Rio de Janeiro News.

Our Lord God is like a printer, who sets the letters backward. We see and feel him set the types well, but we cannot read them. When we are printed off yonder in the life to come, we shall read all clear and straight. Meantime we must have patience.

LASSOING A LIONESS.

A Hand-to-Claw Fight With the Vicious Creature.

From Texas G. W. Palmer came to Colorado and began to hunt antelope and deer for a livelihood. He throws the lasso with the accuracy of a rifleman. Up on Hard-scramble Mountains a few days ago he halted before a half-eaten deer that had been killed by a mountain lion. With a knowledge of the beast and its habits, Palmer concluded that there were a lioness and her cub near by, and he determined to capture her, and, returning to his cabin, a short distance away, he procured several ropes. Fully equipped, he proceeded cautiously, and finally discovered the lioness with her cub beneath a projecting rock.

It was then that he motioned to his son, who followed at his heels, to stop, and instructing him to make his appearance at a signal from him, he left the path to mount the rock that sheltered the beast. Reaching the summit, he uncoiled the rope from his arm and prepared to make the battle. The signal was given to the brave young fellow, who made his appearance a short distance from the lair. The beast was about to leap forward, but the father sent the loop over her head. There was a brief struggle, in which the noose was slipped, but in a second more it was secure upon the hind legs. The end of the rope had been previously thrown over the limb of a tree whose boughs spread around, and the contest began in earnest.

After a terrible struggle, Palmer succeeded in suspending his prize in the air, and, fastening the rope securely, he sprang from the rock and proceeded to tie the remainder of the limbs. Accomplishing this, he thought it about time to bag the cub, and reached down to grasp it; but the little fellow turned as quick as a cat upon his back and fastened his claws in his throat. He held on like a leech, while the father, who had found it impossible to extricate himself, shouted to his son to use a club. This was ineffectual, however, and throttling the infant lion with his left hand, he pressed down with all his might, and it was not until he had almost killed the animal that the son was enabled to release the claws from his father's neck. Yesterday Mr. Palmer arrived in the city with both of the animals, and caged them in Schloss's old building.—Leadville Democrat.

A GERMAN ROMANCE.

Herr Rummel's Daughter Takes His Gold and Comes to America with a Girl Friend and the Latter's Lover.

Ever since his birth there has lived in Munich, the old capital of Bavaria, a staid and respectable barber, named Johann Rummel. He reared a fine daughter, named Gretchen, who, when she became 18 years of age, had a firm friend in the daughter of a neighbor, named Bertha Kraus. Bertha had a sister who several years ago came to America and married a young farmer, Long, at Collamer. She prospered well and sent glowing letters of her new home to her people in Munich. Bertha also had a lover, who, being poor, thought he could win a fortune in the land of the free. Gretchen Rummel read many of the letters, and also became fired with a desire to come to America. Bertha Kraus was, of course, willing to accompany her, and the lover was eager to depart at once. None of them had money enough to support them during a week's journey, and Gretchen, whose father is considered wealthy, was looked to as a refuge in this, their time of financial trouble. She confirmed their good opinion by stealing about 1,500 marks, or $975 in American money, from her father. The fond old father's surprise and grief can better be imagined than described when he awoke one fine morning in last July to discover that his daughter had fled with some of his money. Margaret generously paid the passage of both her companions to this country. They arrived in Cleveland, and went to the home of Mrs. Long. By this time Margaret had only $75, so lavishly had she expended the money on her friends during the journey through the States. There was no room for her in Mrs. Long's family, and she took up her abode at a boarding house, the location which she has forgotten. To make the matter worse, she deposited her $75 with the proprietor of the place, and went to Collamer to accept a position as servant in the family of a farmer. Meanwhile, Herr Rummel, in Munich, was wearing away his surplus flesh in worrying about the fate of his beloved daughter. A month after she had disappeared he received a letter from her stating that she was well and happy, but not mentioning the town in which she was living. He answered, directing his letter to Cuyahoga county, the only name he could decipher on the envelope. Of course it never reached the girl. Finally he resolved to go in search of his daughter, and started for this country, arriving in Cleveland last Monday. He sought out an old friend in this city, and, by inspecting the postal-mark on the letter from the girl with a microscope, they were able to make out the word Collamer. Yesterday they drove to Collamer and found the truant girl without difficulty. She was sincerely penitent, and her father was forgiving. The meeting between them is said to have been quite affecting. It was not long before the girl agreed to go back to fatherland with her parent, and they will leave the city tomorrow.—Cleveland Leader.

HOT DRINKS.—Dr. James H. Salisbury and Dr. Ephraim Cutter, of New York, have strongly recommended the drinking of hot water as a cure for special diseases of the digestive organs. The London Lancet, on the other hand, says that too frequent fomentation with hot water may permanently congest the mucous membrane of the stomach and intestines, and do a lasting injury. It may be quite possible that much of the prevalent indigestion and other stomach diseases of to-day are attributable to the common use of hot tea or some other hot drink, at every meal.

Love is a habit. God has given to us the love of relations and friends, the love of father and mother, brother, sister, and friend, to prepare us gradually for the love of God.

It soothes and cools a feverish patient to bathe him in warm water in which a little saleratus has been dissolved.

TOWARDS THE ROCKIES.

The Character of the New North-West

One sees little anywhere from a railway carriage, and when the country is pretty much of a dead level, covered with a uniform net of thick grass, green or russet, according to the time of year, the view from the window ceases to interest, and no one regrets that he misses 200 or 300 miles of it during the night. And we learn as little by hearing as by seeing. The information picked up by the way, chiefly in the odd minutes at stations, is not of the most reliable nature; and nowhere is it so difficult to get at the truth as in the North-West on either side of the boundary line. Of course, it is part of every man's religion that the country, and his section in particular, must be cracked up. And when you point to indifferent crops, or tell of hardships your friends encountered, or drawbacks undeniably connected with the North-West, these are at once put down to some malign genius indifferently known as "the government," or "the syndicate," or "the banks." A man with these to fall back upon is armed at all times. He has a complete Ready Reckoner, and is saved the trouble of thinking, while he has the comfort of knowing that somebody—against whom he has no personal ill-will—is to blame for every calamity. His casual judgment is satisfied, and at the same time his patriotism and self-respect are preserved intact. Fortunately, I was not dependent for information on the only sources open to flying visitors. I had visited the country three times and spent several weeks chiefly in farmers' houses, and had learned something of the hard facts of the case. It is no use blinding our eyes to the truth that the sun of the North-West has its spots. Ten or eleven years ago I could get few to believe that there was anything good there. Two years ago few would allow that there was anything bad. By and by we shall understand that like every other country it is a mixture of good and bad. We may be thankful for enormous areas of good land, vast fertile plains that shall be an inheritance for our children's children, unless we go on begging strangers—in mercy to us—to come and enter on possession of 160 acres apiece, without necessarily fancying that it is better than Ontario of Nova Scotia. I, for one, would be very thankful for another Ontario. The North-West has many disadvantages. The one that will be felt most sorely for many a day was the "boom" of two years ago that unsettled values and demoralized the people. Floods, grasshoppers, early frosts, monopolies and chameleon land policies have been small evils compared to the drinking and gambling, the rage for speculating engendered, the laying out of imaginary town sites and consequent cheating by wholesale, the formation of wildcat companies, the fictitious value everywhere, the attempt to build up towns before there was any country to support them, and all the other evils connected with the craze to get money suddenly, to get it without working, and to get it at other people's expense. Gray-haired men seemed to lose not only their old-fashioned honesty, but their senses. They talked as if half a million or a million people could be poured into a country by one road in a year of five or six months, and a wilderness of stubborn glebe turned into the garden of the Lord by affixing names to town sites and locating railway stations. The settlement of the North-West will take time, and the more time it takes the better for the country in the end. Intending settlers, too, had better make up their minds to endure hardships or stay at home, for they need not expect to escape what has been, and always will be, the fate of the average immigrant. The men who made Ontario and the other older Provinces were of the right stuff. So are the men who settled in Minnesota and Dakota, hardy Norwegians, Swedes, Welshmen, Canadians, who lived at first on potatoes and milk, and were blind to the necessity for completing railways before they had obtained patents for homesteads. The change wrought by them on the appearance of these prairie States in ten years is marvelous. Men of the same stamp have gone into our North-West, and unless we flood the country with a baser sort, like will draw to like. But it cannot be told too plainly that for years to come nobody need go to the North-West but workers, and that almost the only workers needed are farmers. There is hardly any honest way of making a living there except by taking it out of the ground. —Rev. Principal Grant in The Week.

A Baffled Ape.

A crowd of spectators were recently amused by the gambols of a large ape that was lording it over a number of small monkeys confined in a great iron cage in the Jardin des Plantes. Fruit and many other things were thrown into the cage and the ape was always the first to seize them. Some one threw in a small mirror. The ape flourished this like a hammer, but, suddenly perceiving the reflection of himself in the glass, he stopped, and for a moment looked puzzled. Then he darted his head behind the glass to find the other ape. Astonished at finding nothing he apparently thought that he had not been quick enough. He then proceeded to raise and draw the glass nearer to him with great caution, and then, with a swifter dart, looked behind. Again finding nothing, he repeated the attempt once more. He next passed from astonishment to anger, and began to beat the frame on the floor of the cage Then the glass was shattered and pieces fell out. Continued to beat, he was suddenly surprised to see his image in the piece of glass in his hand. Then, as it seemed, he determined to make one more trial. More circumspectly than ever the whole first part of the process was gone through with—more violently than ever the final part was made. His fury over his last failure knew no limit. He crunched the frame and glass together with his teeth, beat them on the floor, and crunched them again till nothing was left but splinters.

Gardeners understand the good effect that turning up the soil late in the Fall has upon the next year's crop; but there are many others—those who have small gardens, and in this class are many of our well-to do farmers—who, by neglecting this work, only raise half a crop of vegetables, and these of an inferior quality, and then they wonder why their more knowing neighbors do so much better.

THE COMET OF 1812.

Growing Brighter—The Accura Which Its Visit Was Time

The comet of 1812 is now visible sighted persons without the aid of te It will grow brighter for a month and will probably attract general in January. But the chief interes by this visitor from space will be d its brilliant appearance, for unle thing extraordinary happens to it at its best, be a comparatively incon object, but to the fact that it has c as astronomers many years ago said do. Moreover, it has returned ve at the predicted time, although its but toward the stars and back near has occupied over seventy years. be admitted that the astronomers great deal about things beyond t when they are able by watching th of a comet through a very small po its orbit, to tell how far it will go sun, although the distance is hun millions of miles, and in how many will return, although the time is three quarters of a century. On th hand, while men of science have b to predict the wandering course of which turned its tail and fled from about the time when Napoleon fl Russia, and has only just now re winging its way back, the same students of nature have failed to sat ily account for the phenomena whic present, and are not in accord as comets consist of.

Jean Louis Pons, the discoverer comet, and whose name it bears, di than fifty years ago. He was less fo than some other astronomers who ha overed comets of short period, an been able to see them several times their return to perihelion. But the comet has a much longer journey o space to make, and it is a more int object than the little telescopic which course about the sun in short and are never seen except by astrono

The Deadly Oil.

Kerosene becomes more deadly e as the hours of evening lamplight le and the frequent lighting of fires be daily duty. The fact that these a are utterly unnecessary renders th more lamentable. In the hope of p ing some of these accidents, we stat facts which everybody ought to know

It is not the kerosene that explod the invisible gas that arises from it.

If the oil is poured into a lamp tha filling, this gas rises out of the lamp or both, and explodes, often with force, if there be any fire within reac

Pouring oil from a can upon a bur or into a lighted lamp ought to be f by a terrible explosion. Sometimes pens that no explosion occurs, but t is frightful.

The only safe rule is never to pour a burning fire or into a lighted lamp.

Now, you may give Bridget positive with regard to the fires, but when n at hand in the morning hours, the t tion is strong to assist the smoulderin by the aid of a little kerosene. S done it without injury formerly, why it again? So the nose of the can is over the range or grate, there is a fi scream, and poor Bridget will never chance to disobey orders. Perhaps it be better, if Bridget must not be allow cess to the can at oil—the suggestion idly made—to show her how she may fire with comparative safety. All sh to do is to pour the oil from the cup the fire. It is not likely that she wil much injury from the comparatively explosion that may follow.

A Neglected Disinfectant.

When the household of our grandm was threatned with infection the co practice was to sprinkle brimstone on shovel or on hot coals on a shovel, and the burning result through the house. now this simple method of disinfecti gone out of fashion without any goo sufficient reason. The principal re neither good or sufficient, viz, that n can patent it and sell it in twenty-fiv fifty-cent bottles. On the 18th of Sept last M. d'Abbadie read a paper a French Academy on "Marsh Fevers, stated that in the dangerous regio African river mouths immunity from fevers is often secured by sulphur fo teel on the naked body. Also that the workers in low-ground sulphur mines much less than the rest of the surrou population from intermittent fevers. Fouque has shown that Zephyria (o volcanic island of Milo or Melos, the westerly of the Cyclades), which had a lation of 40,000 when it was the cen sulphur mining operations, became depopulated by marsh fever when th phur mining was moved further east a emanations prevented by a mountain reaching the town. Other similar cases stated.

Inter-Provincial Trade.

It is gratifying to note the steadily rapid growth of inter-provincial tra Canada. There is probably no secti this wide Dominion that has not experi a great change in this respect within past few years. Nowhere, however, i change more apparent than along the inter-provincial highway known as the colonial Railway.

The amount of the products of the m facturing establishments of the Mar Provinces passing over the Intercol for Quebec, Ontario, and points fu West, has grown to large dimensions. this is, perhaps, the most gratifying fe of trade that presents itself just now. market for probably more than half o products of the six cotton mills now run in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia is f in the Upper Provinces and the West, the same may be said of our sugar fineries. Nor are there industries altog exceptional; for we find that the produ the lock factory at Moncton, the hat fa at Truro, the skate factories, the nail w and the starch factories all find a r market in the West, and in the aggr the benefits derived are not inconsider Moncton Times.

NEWS SUMMARY

Interesting Items of News from all Parts of the World.

UNITED STATES.

In the past twelve months over $600,000,000 passed through the Sub-Treasury in Wall Street.

The list of failures in the United States during the past year is very heavy, over ten thousand having occurred.

During the past year Police Justice Walsh, of Brooklyn, tried 7755 cases and collected fines to the amount of $4,348.25.

The statement is made that New York, Brooklyn and Boston contributed $5,000 to Matthew Arnold's slender purse.

Cook, who murdered his wife at Springfield, Mo., has been sentenced to ninety-five years' imprisonment for the crime.

Ex-Gov. English, of Connecticut, who started out in life as a carpenter, is now worth $6,000,000, and is the richest man in his State, Strawberries are in the Savannah market. Although very early in the season, the fruit is grown in the open ground just east of the city. The market opens at $1 per box.

At Kansas City 32,000 acres of land in Stafford county, Kansas, have been sold for $160,000 to capitalists of Staunton, Virginia, who intends to colonize Dunkards on the land.

The Secretary of the Treasury had decided in the case of the Chinaman who was brought to New York on the ship "Resolute," that he cannot be landed in United States, but may be transferred to any other vessel going to a foreign country.

All the nail mills controlled by the Western Nail Association have been closed. There are upward 5,000 workmen who will be affected by the stoppage, which has been ordered for the purpose of restricting production and decreasing the stock on hand.

After the settlement of all claims by fishermen interested in the Fortune Bay award, the payment of lawyer's fees, and commissions, and interest, a balance still remains in the hands of the U. S. Government, which is to be divided pro rata among the claimants.

Detroit recognises the value of an efficient fire department. It has now one of the best brigades, if not the best brigade in the United States. Through its skill and activity during 1883, with a total of 275 alarms, the city has suffered a loss of only $208,977 from fires.

A few days ago a very fine pair of black horses were sold by the Customs authorities at Buffalo, seized and confiscated because they had been smuggled from Canada. The driver, Fred Cotton, fled when he learned there would be trouble, but he was arrested and imprisoned for the crime.

There has been a great loss of life and property on the lakes during the season and a number of insurance companies have been very much pressed with payment of their losses. On the great lakes fully one hundred crafts of all descriptions have become total losses, and the aggregate damage to shipping will reach $3,000,000. On Lake Ontario thirty-seven crafts were lost, three tugs, one steamer, four barges, six propellors, and twenty-three schooners, the loss amounting to $303,000.

The statisticians of the Agricultural Department has completed a preliminary estimate of the principal crops of the country for the year. They show that potatoes as well as all other roots, and oats have grown luxuriantly and yielded abundantly. The average yield of corn per acre is nearly 23 bushels or 12 per cent. less than an average. The quality of corn north of the 40th parallel, however, is worse than for many years. The wheat crop is slightly in excess of 400,000,000 bushels, and the cotton product about 6,000.000 bales.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Queen Victoria will leave England for Baden-Baden at the end of February.

The Empress of Austria is coming to Bath to take the waters in the hope of curing herself of sciatica.

The patrons of the Tichborne claimant have bought the celebrated Granville Hotel for him. The claimant will shortly be released.

Miss Vera Manning, a niece of Cardinal Manning, has entered a convent at Rochampton. She is an heiress to £2000 an nually.

In the matter of music the English and most other European nations are far behind the Teutons. According to statistics recently published, there are 300 towns in the German empire possessing orchestras and choral societies that give concerts in the season.

The rooms at Windsor Castle which for many years were occupied by John Brown are henceforth to be kept locked up, and will not be used by his succestor or personal servant and page, or by any one else. During the past autumn the staircase at Windsor leading from the octagon to the ante-room of the royal gallery of the Private Chapel has been entirely altered, in order to make the ascent of it more easy for the Queen.

Reports are being published respecting the shipbuilding trade on the Clyde. These show that trade has been prosperous during the past year. The enormous aggregate of 293,023 tons new shipping has been launched by the various firms on the Clyde. Several firms this year will surpass all their previous efforts. One firm will launch 40,000 tons, another will complete nearly 30,000, while an unusually large number of firms will launch over 29,000 tons each. The prospects for this year, however, are by no means bright. Inquiries for new vessels are not numerous. Great difficulty is experienced in "booking" new contracts, while one or to two firms are already making arrangements to curtail their establishments. Should there be a revival of general trade, a large amount of new tonnage wil be ordered; otherwise the Clyde shipbuilding will experience a notable reaction.

CANADIAN.

The number of letters delivered by letter carriers in Toronto during the first week of the new yeor was 150,548, including 3,683 registered, and 37,589 newspapers. This is more than 25 000 increase on the corresponding week last year.

Chinese Science.

From ancient times the Chinese have taken note of natural phenomena. Their record of solar eclipses is perhaps the most ancient and accurate in the world. They have more or less elaborate works on astronomy, mathematics, botany, zoology, mineralogy, physiology, and many other sciences. Yet there is scarcely any true science in them. Classification, even in regard to plants and animals, there is none. Mineralogy is mainly a description of curious stones. Nor is there any progress, for the more ancient works are generally the best, and as a consequence the Chinese to-day are as their fathers were thousands of years ago. The superstitions respecting natural phenomena, which are as living, active truths today for all classes in China, remind us fo man in his state of barbarism rather than of the ancient culture and civiliztaion of the middle kingdom. The sun and moon are to the Chinese as they were to primitive man, living things, gods to be worshipped. The stars in their courses powerfully influence, if they do not absolutely determine, all human events In them the wise men may read as in a book the destiny of man and the fate of empires. Their combination make lucky and unlucky days, and we shall do well to note carefully their signs and silent warnings. Comets are the precursors of famine, pestilence and war—progrostictors of the wreck of empires and the fall of kings. Eclipses are the periodic effects of the dragon fiend to destroy the lights of heaven, and every notice of an approaching eclipse sent by the imperial astronomer to the provinces is accompanied by a government order to employ the usual methods of gong-beating, and so forth, in order to rescue the threatened luminary. Again, thunder is the roar of the anger of Heaven, and to be smitten by a thunderbolt is to be marked as a thing accursed. Wind is born in the heart of great mountains, whence it issues at the command of the wind dog. Most districts have their wind mountains. That at Lung-Shan, in the northren province of Chilhi, is the most remarkable. It has a cave at each of its four sides. The spring wind issues from the cave on the eastern side, the summer wind from the southern, and so for the others. Wind eddies or whirl-winds are raired by the hedgehog in his rapid passage from one place to another. the dust serving to screen him from the vulgar gaze. Rain is produced by the dragon god, who carries up vast quantities of water from the lakes and rivers in his capacious jaws, and pours it down in showers over the earth. Every mountain has its spirit or genus, every valley its nymph, every spring its naiad. Hence mountains and rivers, old trees and curious rocks, become objects of worship.—Nature.

Getting Even With the Conductor.

"The last time I went to Boston," confided a thin, consumptive-looking traveller of the Eastern road to the New Haven Register, "the conductor grew monotonous. He insisted on examining my ticket at every station, and grew restless as we passed watering troughs. This time," the traveller continued, as he looked anxiously toward the car door, "we play a change of programme and the boxes are all taken." As the conductor entered with a pompous "tickets please," the stranger quietly presented a single trip ticket to the next station. The next time he entered, the unknown handed him a milage ticket, following it later with a sportsman's ticket for Labrador. As the conductor was passing him on the next round, the traveller pressed an emigrant's ticket for Puget Sound into his hand, and then tried to get him to take a first-class passage to Sing Sing with sleeper check. "Didn't I just punch a Puget Sound ticket for you?" demanded the astonished conductor. "Must have been another party," quietly replied the traveller, burying himself in Harper's. Again "tickets please," echoed through the car, and the stranger confronted the conductor with a "Florida for the winter," excursion via the Richmond boats. "See here," said the enraged official, "What does this mean? I have punched tickets for you for all parts of the globe. Haven't got a child's ticket to Patagonia or Hong Kong cattle show excursion, have you? If you give me any more tickets to punch I'll punch your head." "Yes," replied the passenger, with painful dignity, "I usually travel on this," presenting a director's pass, "but we understand that passengers on your train get lame in the arm showing their tickets, and have no time to take in the scenery; so I am instructed to notify you that there is a good vacancy on the night freight unless we hear of an improvement." and the director returned to Puck and the frightened conductor passed two tramps 100 miles, not daring to call for tickets.

Three Wedding Gowns.

Some rich wedding toilets just completed in this city are worthy of note by reason of their extreme beauty and novelty as models for brides. An exquisite robe designed for a prospective bride in Washington, is made of heavy white velvet, trimmed with heavy white flounces of duchesse lace, headed by downy bands of white ostrich feather trimming. The effect of the fall of exqusite, delicate and rich lace over the soft white velvet is exceedingly lonely, the whole dress proving much more becoming to ordinary complexions than opaque white satin. A second bridal dress is made of white Ottoman silk, brocaded with tiny golden roses and leaves. The petticoat is of pale gold satin, hand painted in clusters of white lilac and full blown white roses. The lower edge of the court train is battlemented—i. e., cut into square blocks and faced. Underneath these blocks is set a ruffle of gold lace, falling over a second one of kilted silk. The Josephine corsage is cut out very much in the neck in casement shape and trimmed to match the edge of the train. Lastly for a very youthful bride is a charming toilet, composed of plain white Ottoman silk and made in regular Grecian style, the chaste and artistic arrangement of each softly draped fold and curve giving a most graceful and atatuesque effect to the whole. The trained skirt is perfectly plain, but the lace drapery of the Grecian bodice is to be fastened with a magnificent diamond clasp, and the square neck and edges of the half-open sleeves are finished with rare old point lace. —N. Y. Post.

Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery cures every kind of humor, from the common pimple or eruption to the worst scrofula.

Four to six bottles cure salt-rheum or tetter.

One ro five bottles cure the worst kind of pimples on the face.

Two to four bottles clear the system of boils, carbuncles, and sores.

Five to eight bottles cure corrupt or running ulcers and the worst scrofula.

By druggists, and in half-doxen and dozen lots at great discount.

Scotch advertisement—"Wanted a female who has a knowledge of fitting boots of a good moral character."

Weak lungs, spitting of blood, consumption, and kindred affections, cured without physician. Address for treatise with two stamps, WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

Archbishop Whately, describing commonplace preachers, said, "In their sermons they aim at nothing, and hit it."

"A DROP OF JOY IN EVERY WORD."

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Three months ago I was broken out with large ulcers and sores on my body, limbs and face. I procured your "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Purgative Pellets" and have taken six bottles, and to-day I am in good health, all those ugly ulcers have healed and left my skin in a natural, healthy, condition. I thought at one time that I could not be cured. Although I can but poorly express my gratitude to you, yet there is a drop of joy in every word I write.

Yours truly, JAMES O. BELLIS,
Flemington, N. J.

"Discovery" sold by druggists.

The garb of old Gaul—"A man with uncurtained legs," is the description of a kilted Scotsman given in a San Francisco paper.

The universal success of the Triangle Dyes is attracting notice throughout the country. They are without question the most remarkable dyes, and have given abundant evidence of their reliability in all shades. 10c.

How is it possible to proceed in two opposite directions at the same time? By walking from the forward to the aft part of the vessel while in motion.

Important

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

A thunder storm is almost always a very high-toned affair.

PECTORIA! Pectoria! Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per Bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria, all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

Paper with the largest circulation—Bank notes.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

What is that which nobody wants and nobody wants to lose?—A lawsuit.

$2 500,000.00 IN HORSES.—This vast amount represents the value of the Percheron-Normans imported from France by M. W. Dunham, "Oaklawn Farm," Wayne, Ill. Nearly 1,000 of these horses have been distributed to every part of the United States and Canada for breeding purposes, adding untold millions to the wealth of these countries. At present Mr. Dunham has on hand about 500 Percherons, having imported 390 this year,

A lady was asked the reason why she always came so early to church. "Because it is part of my religion never to disturb the religion of others."

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure it at one with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it nevertains. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

In announcing a late visit of Her Majesty to Scotland, a Scottish paper said: "Preparations are now being made for her reception. Several tradesmen have received orders to be immediately executed at Balmoral."

PASSENGER STEAMERS AND PLEASure Yachts for sale, great speed up to 20 miles an hour. Send for circular. R. DAVIS, Builder, Kingston, Ont.

F. E. DIXON & CO.
Manufacturers of Star Rivet
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto.
Large double Driving Belts a specialty. Se for Price Lists and Discounts.

THE LILY
is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET TORONTO.

1883-St. John Exhibition-1883
Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose, &c. Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas. The highest of all Awards for Leather Belting and Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the Judges at the St. John Centennial and Dominion Exhibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, over all competitors.

BEAVER S. S. LINE
WEEKLY BETWEEN
Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
H. MURRAY, BEAVER LINE, Montreal, Que.

RENNIE'S
SELECT Field, Garden
AND Flower
SEEDS ARE
THE BEST
THE HANDSOMEST
AND MOST COMPLETE
CATALOGUE FOR 1884
FREE TO ALL INTENDING PURCHASERS.
WM. RENNIE, TORONTO.

FOR THE
Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.
THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Disbetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

Music by Handel—That of the organ-grinder.

A P. 160.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION
Provides $2.50 so $10.00 a week in case of sickness or accident, at a cost of from $0·75 to $3.00 per quarter. For particulars enclose stamp to the secretary, Toronto, Ont.
AGENTS WANTED.

BOOKS FREE! Send five cents and get a sample copy of TRUTH, the best 28-page Weekly Magazine published. See the big list of books given FREE to each yearly subscriber and club raiser. S. FRANK WILSON, 33 & 35 Adelaide Street, West, Toronto, Canada.

$100,000 TO LOAN
on first-class farm property, at lowest rates. Farmers will save money by applying by mail direct to me.
E. E. KNOTT,
48 Adelaide St., East, Toronto.

100 BEAUTIFUL SONGS 10c.
A new collection, embracing a number of the most popular songs of the day. Among them are, We Never Speak as we Pass By;—Over the Garden Wall,—Kerry Dance,—Warrior Bold,—Blue Alsatian Mountains,—Only a Blossom from her Grave,—Three Old Maids of Lee,—Flirting in the Starlight,—Grandmother's Old Easy Chair,—Don't Drink my Boy To-night, and 90 others, comprising Home songs, Comic Songs, Sentimental songs, Children's songs, etc. All are printed on nice paper, and are bound in a book with colored cover. Remember, we send the entire collection of 100 Songs for only 10c., three books for 25c., 1 doz., 75; 1c. or 2c. stamps taken.
J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

Dominion Line of Steamships
Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every Thursday during the winter months Sailing dates from
PORTLAND TO LIVERPOOL.

Dominion, Jan. 10.		Oregon, Jan. 31.
Sarnia, Jan. 17.		Ontario, Feb. 7.
Montreal, Jan. 24.		Toronto, Feb. 14.

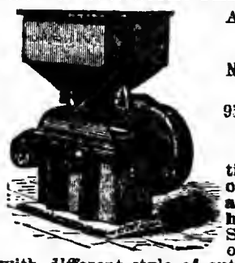
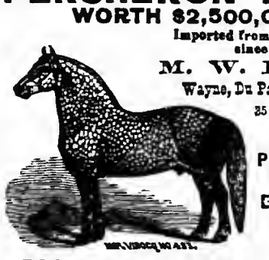
Rates of passage: Cabin, Portland to Liverpool $50, $60, $70. Return $90, $110, $130, according to steamer and berth, all outside rooms and comfortably heated by steam. Intermediate $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent or local agents of the Company, or to
DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal.

THE QUEEN'S

LAUNDRY BAR.
ASK FOR IT AND TAKE NO OTHER.
TRADE MARK.



BEWARE OF IMITATIONS
— MADE BY —
THE ALBERT TOILET SOAP CO.



THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
—OF THE—
WHITE STAR LINE
Are all of them without exception among the Largest and Fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accomodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect; and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario, or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street Toronto.

ELM CITY HARNESS OIL!
BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.
Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddlers for it.
F. F. DALLEY & CO., Hamilton, Ont.,
Sole Agents for the Dominion.

TINSMITHS' GOODS.
TIN PLATE—Different Brands and Sizes.
TINNED SHEETS— do do
CANADA PLATE—Pen and other Brands.
INGOT TIN—Lamb and Flag and Straits.
GALVANIZED IRON—"Davies," "Avon," &c:
And STAMPED GOODS, CHEAP.
For Sale by COPLAND & McLAREN,
MONTREAL.

FUN AND MYSTERY
ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS
Have you seen it The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks, Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards:" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards; the Star Puzzle: 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music, 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.
ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail postpaid. Two packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.
JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

The Newell Patent Universal Grinder,

Award of Gold and Silver Medals.
NEWELL & CHAPIN
Proprietors,
95 St. James-st. west
Montreal.
These Mills save time, grind any kind of grain very fast and without heating. Larger Size Mills working on same principle with different style of cutter, grinding phosphates, gold and silver ores, quartz, plaster, clay, bones, fish-scraps, bark, &c. Please call or write for particulars.

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.
PERCHERON HORSES
WORTH $2,500,000.00
Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,
35 miles West of Chicago on C. & N.-W. R'y.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.
390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue NO. 20.

$11.90 —FOR— 25 Cts.
Extraordinary Bargain!
On receipt of only 25c we will mail, post-paid, 34 pieces comprising 48 pages of full size sheet music, bound together in one volume. Names of Vocal pieces:—All on account of Eliza; A Warrior Bold; Tee Country Lad; Nancy Lee; Chorus of Charity Girls; Drummer's Song; The Judge's Song; The Love-Sick Boy; Whoa Emma; Two Bad Men; Man in the Moon; Johnny Morgan; The Gleaners: Torpedo and the Whale; I Saw Her in the Violet Time; Five O'Clock in the Morning; My Love She's but a Lassie Yet; Adieu, Dear Home; Dame Babble: and 15 pieces of Instrumental Music, comprising new and popular dance music, selections from different Operas, Marches, &c.. &c. All the above and our handsome new Chromo Lithograph in colors of the Lord's Prayer and 10 Commandments, sent post-paid for 25c. As a holiday offer we will also send free 10 Christmas Cares, 50 money making receipts and a pack of Age Cards. Order Quick. You get all the above for 25c. or 5 lots for $1.00; 1 doz. for $2.00. Cut this out and return with order.
JAS. LEE & CO Montreal, P. Q.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR DOLLAR tweeds makes the price 90 cents; these goods are worth $1.50, and make beautiful ladies' Ulsters. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR CELEBRATED black Silks, that is our dollar silk, will cost you only 90 cents; our $1.50 silk, only $1.35; all goods marked in plain figures. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF OUR ALL-WOOL Jersey blankets; our $4.50 blanket for 4; see our Dungannon coverlets, weight 7 lbs., only $1.95, or $1.75 net cash; this discount is allowed on all parcels of one dollar and over. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT OFF ALL DRY goods, including new fall stock, all goods marked in plain figures; all goods sold for cash only. A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF GREY COTTONS—or a ten cent cotton for nine cents; sheetings, Shirtings, grey flannels, table Napkins, A. B. FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

10 PER CENT. OFF ALL DRESS GOODS silks, satins, velvets, brocades, black and colored, cashmere, tweeds, cloakings. A. B FLINT, 35 Colborne Street, Toronto.

THE BEST

Horse Remedies
TRADE MARK. are those made by
THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.
Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5; 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment, 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th St., N Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to
ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
50 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH.				GOING SOUTH
Read Down.				Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25		Toronto	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00		Cardwell Junc.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45		Orangeville...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44		Mount Forest..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15		Teeswater	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30		Flesherton	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45		Markdale,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55		Owen Sound....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.			A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the

Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23. 1882. 80-1y

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,

161-75 Toronto, Ont.

J. W. FORD

Is giving splendid satisfaction in

CRISTING,

By the New Process at the

Markdale Flouring Mills.

Special attention to parties from a distance so that they may have their grist home the same day.

WINES AND LIQUORS

CHOICE BRANDS.

Brandy in Hogsheads.
Scotch and Irish Whiskey in Tr. Casks.
Holland Gin in Tr. Casks.
Jamacia Rum in Tr. Casks.
Fine Old Port and Sherry in Tr. Casks.
Native Wine in Tr. Casks.
Five-year-old Rye Whiskey in Barrels.
White Wheat Whiskey in Barrel.
Rye and Malt Whiskey in Barrels.
Domestic Whiskey in Barrels.
Liquors in Cases.
Bottled Ale and Porter.

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

JOHN MONTGOMERY BAKERY.

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand,

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169 90.

MISCELLANEOUS

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best Salve in the world for cuts, bruises sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by A. Turner & Co.

KRAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known. Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat ar acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

John R. Vert, Hamilton, says: "McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia and Indigestion is cheap at fifty times the price asked for it. I am a commercial man, and travel continually, and would no more think of leaving home without a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure in my valise than I would of leaving my team at home and going on foot." Free trial bottle at Hill Bros. general store. Regular size, fifty cents and one dollar.

A WIDE AWAKE DRUGGIST.

Mr. A. Turner is always wide awake in his business, and spares no pains to secure the best of every article in his line. He has secured the agency for the celebrated Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. The only certain cure known for Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Hoarseness, Asthma, Hay Fever, Bronchitis, or any affection of the throat and lungs. Sold on positive guarantee. Will give you a trial bottle free. Regular size $1.00.

THOUSANDS SAY SO.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kan., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and Liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by A. Turner & Co.

We understand that the Crowfoot Indian Bitters Co'y have entered an action of libel against the Hanover Post. The trouble came about in this way. Mr. Ketchum contracted with the Crowfoot Co'y for certain advertising. Payments were to be made quarterly. Mr. Ketchum fulfilled his part of the contract and rendered an account. No notice was taken of it. In a few weeks he rendered another account. No reply. Then he wrote three separate letters and received neither money nor reply. Then Mr. Ketchum published the firm as frauds, through the Post, and a week or so afterwards the Co'y sent the money and entered the action. These we understand are the facts of the case, and all we have to say is, fight it out Seneca if it takes all summer. We have a couple of similar accounts on our books, and if the firms interested do not pay up we will publish them as frauds if they enter a libel suit in every court in the Dominion. It is time that patent medicine firms understood that newspaper publishers have certain rights, and the County of Bruce Printers' and Publishers' Association proposes to ascertain exactly what those right's are. Go for them Ketchum, and we will back you.—Bruce Herald.

Glascott.

From a correspondent.

A number of visitors have been snow bound in this neighbourhood during the recent blockade, some are from a distance.

Threshing is just finished for the season in this locality, we had five machines working inside of two miles, we give Rowe Bros. the belt for being the best and fastest threshers.

We hope our new council may see it their duty to improve the roads in this section, as they need it very much.

Our old neighbour James Carter, who removed to Minnesota is, we are glad to learn, doing well, and is getting good health. His return of grain this, his first year, is about 1,900 bushels besides corn and roots, he is pushing ahead the erection of cattle barns as he did in Glenelg. He is missed here very much as he gave employment to a number of hands the year round. We wish him every success in his new home.

SAY!

If you want to hire a good livery rig, go to Benson.

MARKDALE

PLANING, SASH, DOOR AND FURNITU

FACTORY.

Lumber Planed or Matched While Waiti

Sash, Doors, and Mouldings always on hand or made Order. All kinds of lumber, Lath and Shingles kep stock. Furniture of all descriptions to be seen at Warerooms. Lumber and cordwood will be taken in change for Furniture.

George Grant & Co.,

Proprietors.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATIO

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods

— IN —

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes,

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Statio

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Galler

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which area not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERT

New FALL Importation

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock Ladies' Coats and Mantles in a the latest designs and patterns ar very cheap.

Also in large variety Black ar Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velve eens from 35cts. up, also Ladie Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trir mings and Shapes, Ladies Colla in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock complete and selling fast and chea

Another lot of that Famous 20c and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putt Glass, Hinges and builder's har ware of all descriptions selling a the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Suga cheap, also preserve and Gem Ja in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of mercha generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Fleshert says his business is increasing daily, having more busi than he can possibly get through with with his large s of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 17. MARKDALE, ONT., JAN. 24, 1884. No. 176

The Markdale Standard

Is issued evesy Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

TERMS—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion, 5 cents each subsequents insertion.

Stray animals &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

JOB PRINTING.

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill Owen Sound 122-35

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS. CONVEYANCES, &c. &c.
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
☞ Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

JOHN NOBLE,
MARKDALE,
GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING
A SPECIALTY.

A PIONEER POEM.

SIR,—The accompanying poem was given as reading at the anniversary of the United Sabbath School, Meaford Road, on the evening of 15th Jan. 1884. Rev. Mr. McDowell objected to it, stating that it contained infidel sentiment, thereby throwing the committee appointed by the school, to select matter for said entertainment, in a very unpleasant position before the public. Will you kindly give the poem to the public through the columns of your popular paper. The said committee do hereby respectfully request Mr. McDowell to show wherein the infidelity lies supporting his views by scripture proof and give the answer through your paper, and thereby oblige and enlighten all concerned,
Wm. Buchanan Jr. Chairman of committee.

If we accord an honored place
To benefactors of our race,
A noble record will be read
Of those who bravely went ahead
And led our forest armies on
From Plymouth Rock to Oregon.
Fighting their way through smoke and fire
And savage beasts and savage ire,
Across this continent entire;
Changing the savage wilderness
To the fair homes we now possess.
We have assembled here to-day
A tribute of respect to pay
To those whom we may well address
As veterans of the wilderness.
To these our local pioneers
Whose patient toil in by-gone years
Wrought out from nature's stern array
These well tilled farms we see to-day
And that we may appreciate
The blessings of our present state.
Compare our present situation
With theirs in pioneer relation,
Compare the fields you're tilling now
With those your fathers' had to plow;
Your farming implements compare
With their old stile of farming ware.
Your roads o'er which you glide with ease
With theirs amongst the stumps and trees,
Compare your dwellings large and fine
With their rude cabins seven by nine,
Sometimes so small as to require
To cook before an out-door fire;
Compare your tables now supplied
With luxuries from land and tide,
With theirs, in pioneering days
When the best meal that they could raise
At sundry times was Johnny cake
Mixed with cold water from the lake.
Think of men selling first grade wheat
Fitted for market all complete
Two weary days upon the road
For marketing a single load.
For forty cents per bushel paid,
And even that in store pay trade.
Think of men working half a day
To get ten cents with which to pay
The postage on a single letter,
Because they couldn't do any better.
What would you think to pay a ten
And walk eight miles to get it then.
Now you have markets, shops and stores
And mail brought even to your doors;
These things we name in part to show
The obligations that we owe
To those who pioneered the way
For these advantages to-day,
And may their children ne're forget
Their obligations, or the debt
For where we owe a sacred claim,
And have not means to meet the same.
It helps somewhat to bring content
To make a fair acknowledgment
But this you can in part repay
By filial kindness every day
And by preserving in your turn
What they there worked so hard to earn
These noble farms the homesteads dear
On which they toiled for many a year
And leave a sacred trust to you
Transmit them to your children too.
The tree beneath whose sheltering shade
In early childhood you have played
Preserve it with especial care
Because your father set it there.
The handiwork your mothers made
For household ornaments displayed,
Save it, preserve it to the last
A sacred relic of the past.
You see these aged pioneers
Are bending with the weight of years
These frosty locks so thin and gray
Were thinned by many a toil-spent day,
And nights of watchfulness and care
Have furrowed the brows that once were fair.
A few more tide-waves ebb and flow
Will bear them on where all must go.
They'll leave behind a monument
The record of a life well spent.
In these fair farms their hands have cleared
In buildings that their hands have reared,
In these green fruit trees everywhere
Planted and cultured by their care.
An when upon the burial plain
They rest; These records shall remain
In witness of their grand success
In battling with the wilderness.
Oh! make the evening of their days
Light with affection's filial rays
Steady their steps as they descend
On life's last grading to its end
Doing as you'd have children do
When you are old and feeble too.
But will these ladies be content
Without one word of compliment?
Didn't these old mothers do their share
Of pioneer work everywhere.
Bearing with perfect resignation
Toil, sickness, hardship and privation,
In the rude wilderness to make,
A home for their dear childrens sake?
In all the toils and cares of life
A man's real helper is his wife.
And these old fathers would have died
Had not their wives stood by their side.
Now in these modern, social fights,
I take the side for woman's rights.
Although to-day I'll not declare
Entirely what I think they are
I know St. Paul has strangely said
The man should always go ahead,
In other words should have his way
And that the woman should obey;
And further seemed the thought to carry
That 'twas not best for men to marry.
If Paul had been a pioneer
And had your forest lands to clear
After he'd tried it for a year,
Had had old fashioned ague shake him,
And bilious fever overtake him,
With no one near to soothe his woes,
Or hold the camphor to his nose,
Do you suppose he would have said
It was not best for men to wed?
I cannot say, I do not know,
About their wives so long ago,
They may have been so worthless then
They were a nuisance to the men,
And he had reason in his head
No doubt for saying what he said.
But if St. Paul were here to-day,
To look upon this fine array
Of faithful and devoted wives
Could read the record of their lives
Could look upon these lovely girls
Their sparkling eyes and glossy curls,
He'd doubtless say,—I do declare
I must have been mistaken there;
And then acknowledge to his credit
He had dyspepsia when he said it.
For if there is a heaven below
Where purest draughts of nectar flow,
'Tis where two pure congenial hearts
Are wedded fast by cupids arts,
And beat in perfect unison,
Their hopes, their joys and sorrows one.
Yet it requires peculiar skill
To run the matrimonial mill
Smoothly and kindly year by year
And have no clashing in the gear.
To selfishness we all incline
We have too much of me and mine
Too much I wont! too much I will!
To clog the matrimonial mill.
And discord, too, is sometim'es made,
About the stock each puts in trade,
The wife may bring a smaller sack
Of corn to mill upon her back.
Still if she does the best she can,
Call it our meal and be a man.
Allow no jealousy or strife
To sour the very meal of life,
Let all the products of the trade.
A sort of common stock be made,
And use it only as you should
In common for the mutual good;
Have no dividing wall or line.
Let all be ours, not mine and thine.
A man may say my boots, my plow,
But he had better say our cow.
To make a proper application,
I give you here an illustration;
A gentleman but newly wed,
One morning to his new wife said,
"I now propose my plans to vary,"
"And think I shall enlarge my dairy,"
"Our dairy, dear," the wife replied,
"Would sound much better to your bride."
"My dairy," said the man of cows,
"Our dairy," say, replied his spouse,
"My dairy." still the man persisted,
"Our dairy, sir," the wife insisted.
Her eyes were snapping sparks of fire,
She seized the broomsick raised it higher,
And on his luckless head and back
Blow followed blow; whack followed whack.
The man had heard old people say,
That he who runs from fight away
May live to fight another day.
And hoping thus to save his head
He quickly dove beneath the bed.
He saw at once the wife He'd got,
Was dressed for business on the spot;
Was even pleased to find that trait
So well developed in his mate,
And further saw it was not best
With such a spirit to contest,
And wisely thought it best to yield,
To her the well contested field;
Then cautiously put out his head
From neath the covering of the bed,
"What do you wont she fiercly cried?"
"I want our hat" the man replied.
That was enough, the fight was done
Thenceforth their interests were one;
They'd no more jarring, balks or hitches
'Twas our cows now, our boots, our pantaloons,
Let husbands learn our cows to say,
Before the broomstick comes in play.

Glascott.

From a correspondent.

Many of the readers of the STANDARD are doubtless ignorant as to where Glascott is. It is a post-office on the line between Glenelg and Holland township about 4 miles South West of Berkley, on the T. G. & B.

Cold stormy weather since the year came in.

Times are dull owing to the late summer frost and, low market for grain.

Mr. Wm. Williamson is prepairing to erect a fine bank barn the coming season.

Messrs. Francis and Charles Boyle will also build frame stable's.

Quite a number of horses have the distemper.

Your other correspondent was perfectly right last week in reference to our roads, they have certainly been neglected. a greater effort might have been expected on the part of some of the ratepayers when they have a chance to remedy the evil.

Our school is now being conducted satisfactory by Mr. Oxenden.

Williamsford.

From our own correspondent.

Times are some what dull recently yet a vast improvement has been experienced this winter over that of previous ones. chiefly owing to the fact of having a grain Market in our village, many thanks to our enterprising merchant Mr. Foster.

Quite a flutter was evident on Monday last when our little parliment met here, this being the capital.

Mr. Wm. Norton, the newly elected Deputy-Reeve was unable to qualify, owing to begin under contract to the township as collector of taxes. The consequences are not yet known but a new election for that office is probable.

The annual meeting of Holland Centre Agricultural Society will meet here on Tuesday the 29th for the election of officers &c. a full attendance is expected.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

Cold weather.

Deep snow.

Drifted roads.

News scearce.

Proten Council held their first session on Monday last. They were said to be well pleased with their efforts on that account. The reeve and Deputy reeve are now in attendance at the County Council.

Mr. H. Dryden, left on Monday last for New-Brunswick, The Band loses on excellent player, his friends entertained him before he left the oysters were served up at sangley.

Mr. R. Montgomery died on Saterday last after a lingering illness.

The Band concert was not so well attended as it should have been.

Miss Reynolds has formed a class here for instructins in instrumental music.

Bills are extensively circulated announcing for an entertainment by the Markdale Gymnasium Club on Tuesday next.

East Grey Agricultural Society.

The anual meeting of this Society was held in the Town Hall, Flesherton, on Wednesday afternoon, when the following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—

Thos. Kells, President.
J. Abbott, 1st Vice-President.
D. R. Ellis, 2nd Vice-President.

Directors.—S. Damude, A. Munshaw, Wm. Hewgill, H. Hurd, John, Cameron, S. Stokes, A. S. Vandusen, John Johnston, and George Richardson.

Auditors.—R. J. Sproule and J. I. Graham.

Mr. Hugh Reid was nominated for representative of this Division at the Council, of the Association.

It is decided to hold a Spring Show on the Society's grounds, Flesherton, on the 29th April next, for sire stock.

At a meeting of the Directors held subsequent to the annual meeting, S. Damude was re-elected Secretary and Treasurer.—Advance.

South Grey Agricultural Society.

Officers for the year 1884 were elected as follows:—

James Edge re-elected Prasident. James Murdoch 1st Vice-President; H. J. Middaugh, 2nd Vice-President; Directors—Chas. Moffat, Geo. Binnie, Harry Willis, Quinten Campbell, Geo. Stewart, Jno. Booth, Peter Dickson, Wm. Lawrence, and Dr. Jamieson.—Grey Review.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
TUCK & McLEOD PROPRIETORS.

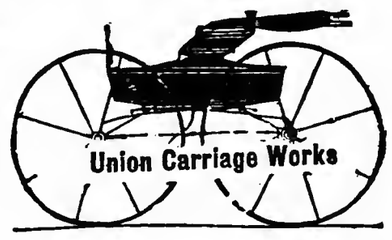
The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

JOSEPH GIBSON
CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.



Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

wi receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time
consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.
159-3m

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER X.—(CONTINUED.)

So the next day, at eleven o'clock, he came into the schoolroom with Mrs. Rayner, who wore her usual air of being drawn into this against what will she had, and we all four crossed the garden to the stables, and went up through the harness room to the big room over the coach-house, which looked even more comfortable than I had expected.

For the floor was polished, and there were two beautiful rugs, a handsome tiger skin, and a still handsomer lion skin with the head attached, which Haidee crept up to, drew upon her lap, and nursed all the time we were there. At one end of the room was a partition, and behind this partition I guessed that Mr. Rayner slept. There was a bright fire burning in the tiled fire place, and there were soft easy-chairs, rather worn by constant use, but very comfortable, and there were pictures on the walls, and there was a dark carved oak cabinet full of curious and beautiful things, and a writing-table; and lastly there were the easel and a great confusion of portfolios and half finished sketches and studies. Altogether the room contrasted very favorably with the mouldy looking drawing room. Perhaps Mrs. Rayner thought so as she sat down, with one eagar look round the room, as if she had never seen it before; and then, without any remark, she took out her knitting and worked silently, while I posed again as I had done on the previous day, with my head on one side, and my hands, as Mr. Rayner had placed them, clasped under my chin, while he painted and talked.

"You like those sketches I took in Spain, Miss Christie?"

"Yes—only there are too many nasty black priests prowling about in them."

"Oh, you little bigot! Those black figures are just what the hot, rather glaring Spanish scenes want, to relieve the monotony of bright colors and sunshine. You must tolerate them from a picturesque point of view."

"Very well, but from no other. They remind me of the Inquisition. They look like Jesuits."

"And where is the harm in looking like a Jesuit? I have a partiality for Jesuits myself."

"Oh, not really?"

"Really. Why not?"

"They are such sneaking, cowardly creatures, always working by indirect, underhand means, and leaving their poor tools to bear the storm they themselves have excited."

"But the poor tools are fit for nothing else. It is the daring, clever brain of the Jesuit that weaves the plot; it is on him the chief responsibility lies; and that his part of the work has its dangers is proved by the persecutions and martyrdom that many of his order have suffered. You cannot conquer everything in this world by the fists alone; every clever man who has ever made his way—'got on,' as the phrase is—is a potential Jesuit."

"Well, then, I like the poor fellows who don't get on, and who have only their fists, better," said I, decisively.

Mr. Rayner looked at me with a half smile.

"Most women begin like that," said he drily.

Of course I felt rather indignant, as every girl does, at being classed with "most women;" so I said no more, but only pursed up my lips; and I saw in the white face of Mrs. Rayner, who had been listening intently to this dialogue, a faint look of amazement at my presumption.

After two hours' work, Mr. Rayner called us to look at his sketch, which represented a very lovely girl with dark gray eyes a little larger than mine, a red-lipped mouth a little smaller, teeth a little whiter, and a complexion a little creamier in the white parts and a little rosier in the red; and the brown hair coiled on the top was just a little glossier and smoother than mine ever was. It was just a little like me, all the same; and I was rather hurt when Mrs. Rayner summoned spirit enough to say that he had flattered me, although I knew it quite well. But Mr. Rayner said gravely that it was impossible for a portrait to flatter a handsome woman, and Mrs. Rayner raised her thin shoulders in a slight shrug, and turned to leave the room. Haidee rose to follow her, but paused on the threshold to give a last fond gaze at the lion and look round for me.

"You are an excellent model, you sit so still. It is a pleasure to paint you for that and—for other reasons," said he slowly and deliberately, as, without looking up, he went on putting finishing touches to the head. "What shall I give you as a reward for remaining so long without blinking or yawning as all professional models do?"

"Nothing, Mr. Rayner: I like having it done. It flatters one's vanity to sit to be painted: and flattery is always reward enough for a woman, they say," said I, laughing and following Haidee to the door.

"I shall find something more substantial than that," said Mr. Rayner, in a low voice, as if half to himself, looking up with a very kind smile as I left the room.

That afternoon Haidee had just run out of the schoolroom at the conclusion of her lessons, when Mr. Rayner came in. He held in his hand an old and shabby little case.

"The poor painter has not forgotten his promise, if he dares to call it a promise," he said, with mock humility. "Now see what you have earned by sitting still."

He drew me to the window and opened the case, keeping his eyes fixed upon my face as he did so. The case was lined with old and worn red velvet, and had evidently not been made for the ornament it contained. This was a large pendant in the form of a heart, which was a blaze of what seemed to me the most magnificent diamonds I had ever seen. The sight of them inspired me not with pleasure, but terror. I drew a long breath of surprise and admiration.

"It is the most beautiful thing I have ever seen," said I at last, not quite able to take in yet the fact that it was meant for me, and hoping against hope that it was not.

"You like diamonds?" said he, in a low voice.

"They are lovely—the most beautiful of jewels, I think," said I, with a break in my voice.

"Would you like to have your hair and neck and arms covered with diamonds, like a duchess at Court?" he asked, still very quietly, but so that I did not know whether he was speaking seriously or not.

I looked up and laughed with rather an effort.

"I? Oh, no! I shouldn't care for diamonds myself; I should look absurd in them. Diamonds are for great ladies, not for governesses."

"Governesses become great ladies sometimes, don't they?" said he, returning to his usual light tone.

"I think most of them don't," said I in the same manner.

"Well, without being a great lady, a governess may wear an ornament she has fairly earned, may she not?"

"Yes, if it has been fairly earned," said I, trying to keep up a little tone of talk, though my heart was beating fast.

"And so you can accept this pretty little thing as the reward of your services to a grateful painter and a souvenir of our pleasant morning all together in the studio."

"Oh, no—oh, no—I can't indeed!" said I, earnestly, pushing from me gently the case he was trying to put into my hand. "Don't be offended—don't be angry with me, Mr. Rayner; but the very thought of possessing anything so valuable would be a burden to me night and day."

Mr. Rayner burst into a long laugh.

"Oh, you simple little creature! I did not think a London lady would be so unsophisticated as to mistake very ordinary paste for diamonds," said he, with much enjoyment. "This pendant, the enormous value of which frightens you so much, is worth about fifteen shillings. It wasn't even worth having a case made for it; see, I had to put it into an old case which once contained a brooch. No, no, my dear child, you need not be alarmed at the mere money value of the thing, which is very little. It has a value in my eyes, but for a different reason. Look here."

He turned it over, and I saw on the back a monogram, and the date 1792.

"What are the letters of the monogram?"

I read—"R. G. D."

"'G. D. R.,'" corrected he—"Gervas D. Rayner—my own initials and those of my father and grandfather before me. That this belonged to my grandmother make sits only value. But I have plenty of relics of her; my wife has jewels enough at the bank which she never wears; so you are robbing nobody and pleasing one old friend—I may call myself an old friend already, may I not?—very much by accepting this. In full family conclave at tea, you shall hear me announce the presentation, and then you will be satisfied, won't you, you modest little girl?"

"But I can never wear such a thing as this, if it is only what you call paste," I objected.

"Wear it under your dress, and then the blaze of it will dazzle nobody," said Mr. Rayner, bending over me and laughing kindly at my reluctance.

So I took it with most ungracious feelings, which I tried to hide, and thanked him as well as I could. True to his promise Mr. Rayner said to his wife at tea-time—

"I have with the greatest difficulty prevailed upon this proud Miss Christie of ours to accept as a reward of her services as a model a twopenny-halfpenny trinket, which she almost told me was not fit to wear."

"Oh, Mr. Rayner!"

He was putting such a different color upon my reluctance, as if I had not thought it good enough. And there is a great deal of difference between fifteen shillings and twopence-halfpenny. I saw Sarah, who was in the room, look at me very sharply, as if she thought governesses had no business to wear trinkets at all; and Mrs. Rayner did not look pleased.

Altogether the beautiful ornament that I had admired so much, but certainly not coveted, had brought me more annoyance than pleasure. It procured me one more little trial that very evening. When I got upstairs, I sat down in the arm-chair, which had its back to the door, took the case out of my pocket, and looked at the ornament. It certainly was very splendid, and I thought as I looked at it and made it flash in the setting sun that, if this were paste and worth only fifteen shillings, it was a great waste of money to buy real diamonds, which cost so much more and looked so much better. And, as I was holding it up to the light and feeling at last a thrill of pleasure in its possession, I heard a voice behind me say—

"So that's the twopenny-halfpenny trinket, is it?"

Of course it was Sarah. She had come up to bring me some water, and I had plenty in the jug. Her ironical tone and the hard little sneering laugh with which she finished her speech were too much for my temper. I shut up the case, and said coldly—

"Of course Mr. Rayner would not give anyone a thing which really cost only twopence-halfpenny."

"No, miss, not for such services as yours."

And she said it in such a nasty tone that, when she had left the room, I threw the case down upon the table and burst into tears.

CHAPTER XI.

When I had dried my tears and sat down in my favorite arm-chair to consider my grievances against Sarah, I wondered what had made her take such a strong dislike to me as she seemed to feel. It was true that her manners were not very pleasant or amiable to anybody; but there was a malignity in the way she looked at me, and a spiteful coldness in her tone if she only asked me if I would have any more coals, as if she thought it was a great deal more than I deserved to have a fire at all. But she had never been so rude and harsh before as she was on this night, and I began to think that the reason for all her unkindness was her annoyance at the great consideration shown to me, for I was, after all, only a new-comer, while she, who had been in the family for years, was left in her room on the upper storey and was not asked to sit for her portrait. It seemed a very silly feeling in a woman so old and sensible as Sarah was supposed to be, and who was certainly very well off for a servant, to show such a mean jealousy of a governess, who is always supposed to be a lady, even in those cases when everybody knows that she is not one. That is only fair, as her work is generally so much harder and so much more unpleasant than that of a servant. Then I thought of the experiences of the other governesses I had known, and I came to the conclusion that Sarah must have lived in families where the governess was snubbed and neglected as some of my friends had been by their pupils' parents, and so she thought it a shame that I should be so much better treated than most of my sisterhood.

"She is only a crumpled rose-leaf after all," I thought to myself. "I am getting spoilt, and it is as well that there is some one to let me know that I am no more deserving than other people—only more fortunate. I suppose I ought to be thankful for Sarah!"

Then I thought of what Mr. Rayner had said about wearing the dazzling heart under my dress; and it was really so beautiful, and I was so grateful to him for his kindness—for it was not his fault that the gift had already brought down so much discomfort upon me—that I should have liked to do so; but two reasons prevented me. The one was that if I had fastened it round my neck by a bit of ribbon and it had accidently been seen by some one—Mrs. Rayner, for instance, not to mention Sarah—I should have felt rather guilty and uncomfortable, as if I had done something to be ashamed of, that wanted excuses and explanations; and that feeling is, I think, a pretty sure sign that one is doing what is not quite right. The other reason was that I already wore a souvenir round my neck under my dress, fastened to a watch-guard; it was a little case that I had made out of the back of an old purse, and it contained the bit of paper with Mr. Reade's apology which I had pulled off the rose that evening when I had found the basket of flowers in my "nest."

Now, if I went on stringing round my neck all the letters and gifts that I received I should some day have as many trophies round my person as a wild Indian—only I should not take the pride in displaying them that he he did. So I decided to lock up my pretty sparkling heart in my desk, and be content with the less showy pendant I already wore. Sarah had seen it, of course—at least she had seen the cover, one evening when I had a cold, and she had brought me a cup of arrowroot, by Mr. Rayner's orders, while I was undressing. I had seen, by the eager way in which she had fixed her great black eyes upon it, that she was dying to know what it contained, and I was mischievously glad that she could not.

Mr. Rayner had given me the pendant on a Saturday. The next day, when service was over, and we were standing about in the churchyard as usual, before Mr. and Mrs. Rayner's departure gave Haidee and me the signal to go home, Mr. Laurence Reade left his party and stood looking at the gravestones, until the gradual moving on of the stream of people who were slowly coming out of the porch brought us past him. Then, as Mr. and Mrs. Rayner stopped to speak to some person, Mr. Reade said—

"Haidee, I'll give you a penny if you can read that epitaph"—pointing to one in worn old English characters. "Miss Christie, I believe it is as much as you can do; it is more than I can."

And we stepped on the grass, and Haidee knelt down and slowly spelt it out aloud. Mr. Reade kept his eyes fixed on the inscription as he bent over one side of the tombstone, while I looked at it from the other; but what he said was—

"It seems such a long time since Tuesday."

Tuesday was the day on which he had bought the marbles. I could not laugh over a tombstone before all those people; so I said gravely—

"It is just five days."

"Yes, but they have been such long days,' said he, in a low voice.

"Not really," I answered. "The days are getting shorter now."

"Don't you know how long a day seems when you want to see a—a person, and you can't? But perhaps you see the persons you like best to see every day?"

"I like to see my mother best, and she is a long way off," said I gravely.

"Ah, yes, of course! But I wasn't thinking of one's family."

"Perhaps you were thinking of the pretty girls who were in your pew last Sunday?"

"The Pinches—Ethel and Katie? Oh, no, I wasn't! I see quite enough of them. They're coming again, too, to the school-treat Don't see why they can't be contented with their own tea-fights. No, I was thinking of somebody quite different. Can't you guess who?"

He was looking at me now, and not at the inscription at all. And in the pause which followed his words I distinctly heard Mr. Rayner's bright voice saying archly—

"Laurence seems to have a great admiration for our pretty Miss Caristie; doesn't he, Mrs. Reade?'

I did not hear her answer; but it was given in a displeased tone; and a minute afterwards she called her son sharply and said that they were waiting for him. But they all stayed in the churchyard for some minutes after that, and then I noticed that Mr. Rayner was still talking to Mrs. Reade, and that she seemed very much pleased and interested by what he was saying. I just heard her mention "the Bramleys" and "our branch" in her answers; so I guessed that they were what Mr. Rayner called "up the genealogical tree" together.

This was to be a busy week in the parish. The school-treat, which had been put off this year, first on account of sickness in the village and then because of the wet weather, was now fixed to take place on Saturday; and the following day was to be harvest festival. This was not a very great occasion with us, being signalized only by a special sermon, the harvest thanksgiving hymns—which would be rather inappropriate this year, as the farmers were grumbling more than usual at the damage done by the late heavy rains—and bunches of corn, which those same "thankful people" rather grudged us, in the church windows and round the pulpit. The Misses Reade had undertaken most of the decoration of the church, as the Vicar's wife had enough to do in preparing for the school-feast and accompanying sale.

The next day Haidee and I took a longer walk than usual; and, when we returned, Jane met me with a mysterious air in the hall.

"Oh, Miss Christie, young Mr. Reade called while you was out and asked to see you. He said he had a message for you. And, when I said you was out and offered to give it you, he said he had better write it, as it was important. So he wrote a note for you; and please it wasn't my fault, but Sarah got hold of it, and she took it to Mr. Rayner I told her it was directed to you; but she wouldn't take no notice."

I went up stairs very much annoyed at this fresh indignity offered me by that hateful Sarah, and hurt and sorry beside, for I was longing to know what the note said. As soon as I got into the dining room, however, Mr. Rayner came up to me smiling, and put it into my hands.

"Here is a billet doux which has been left for you, Miss Christie. Now, whom do you expect one from?"

"From nobody, Mr. Rayner," said I blushing very much.

This was not a story, because I knew the letter could not be at all the sort of communication he implied, but would contain, probably, some formal message from Mrs. Maitland.

I opened it at once to show that I did not think it of any consequence. It only said—

"Dear Miss Christie,—My sisters find there is so much to be done for the church that they are afraid they won't be able to do it all. Would you be so very kind as to undertake part? If you would not mind, I will ride over with the work to-morrow after luncheon, about a quarter-past two.

"Yours sincerely,

"LAURENCE READE."

I think I was a little disappointed in the note; but it was all the better, as I could repeat in quite a careless way what it said; and then, just as I was wondering whether I should tear it up to show that I did not care, I saw that there was something written on the inside leaf, and I put it back into the envelope as if I did not notice what I was doing, and slipped into my pocket.

Dinner was long that day; when it was over, I went into the schoolroom and drew out my letter again. The words on the inside leaf were—

"Why were you so unkind on Sunday?"

I had no way of sending back an answer; I could only wait till next day at a quarter past two. But I think I could have sung through the lessons like the heroine of an opera that afternoon.

I had not thought it necessary to mention to Mr. Rayner the time at which Mr. Reade had said he should bring the work; at a quarter past two we were always in the drawing-room all together. But the next day, the day of all others when it was important that I should stay and hear the explanations about the work I had to do, Mrs. Rayner asked me, directly after dinner, if I would mind writing some letters for her, to go by that afternoon's post. I should have sat down to write them in the drawing-room but Mrs. Rayner said—

"You would like to be undisturbed, I know. Shall I send your coffee to your room or to the schoolroom?"

I said, "To my room, if you please," and went up stairs trying to swallow the lump in my throat.

It was silly of me; but I liked that half hour in the drawingroom after dinner, and reading the papers over my coffee, and Mr. Rayner's amusing comments on the news—it was such a pleasant rest.

I had got through one stupid letter—they were not at all important—when there was a knock at the door, and Jane came in, giggling and excited.

"Oh, miss, I've brought you a parcel, and I have made Sarah so wild!" and she laughed delightedly. "I answered the bell and there was Mr. Reade on his horse with this; and he said, 'Take it to the schoolroom, please; it's for Miss Caristie;' and then he got off, and I showed him into the drawing-room. And I saw you wasn't in there, nor yet in the schoolroom. So, when I got into the hall, thinks I, 'I'll be beforehand with old Sally this time!' when out she comes, and says, 'Give that to me. I'll give it to Miss Christie.' 'Never mind,' says I, half way up the stairs—'don't you trouble.' And she made a grab at me, but I was too quick for her, and up I ran, and here it is, miss."

And she slapped the parcel down upon the table triumphantly.

"Thank you, Jane," I said quietly. "It is only some work for the church from Miss Reade."

Jane's face fell a little; and then, as if struck by a fresh thought, she giggled again. I cut the string and opened the parcel to prove the truth of my words, and showed her the red flannel and the wheat-ears, which were to be sown on in letters to form a text. But in the middle was another note, and a box wrapped up in paper, both directed to "Miss Christie;" and at sight of these little Jane's delight grow irrepressible again.

"I knew it!" she began, but stopped herself and said, "I beg your pardon, miss," and left the room very demurely.

But I heard another burst of merriment as she ran down-stairs. Then I opened the note; it only said—

"Dear Miss Christie,—I take the liberty of sending you a few late roses from a tree in a sheltered corner where the rain cannot spoil them. I hope they won't smell of cigars: I could not find a better box. I will call to fetch the text, if you will let me know when I can see you.

"Yours sincerely,

"LAURENCE READE."

(TO BE CONTINUED).

More Luxury.

An enterprising Chinaman has recently opened a restaurant in Paris, and is now endeavoring to educate the Western palate to appreciate the subtile excellence of rotten eggs and bird's nest soup. In order to prepare the former luxuries in their full perfection fresh duck's eggs are covered with a mixture of cinders, chalk, lye, soda, powdered liquorice root and oil, and are then left for several months, until their yolk becomes first green and finally black. The darker the yolk the greater the delicacy. The bird's nest from which the far-famed soup is made are built by a species of swallow that abounds on the coasts of Java, Ceylon and Borneo, and practically consist of a gelatinous substance obtained from marine plants. The nests are boiled either in chicken broth, or in milk of almonds; and the result very much resembles vermicelli soup, save that it is far more costly. The Chinese restaurateur also offers his customers smoked sharks' fins, dried cuttle-fish, and salted rats; but whether he will make a living by the sale of such toothsome dainties as these to the Parisians is more than doubtful.

CHEAP LIVING.

How a Nutritious Diet Can Be Enjoyed at Trifling Cost.

A contributor to the London Times writes: Allow me to bring under the notice of your readers some experiments I have just concluded, to solve the difficulty of feeding our poor in London and elsewhere. The cry is that food is so dear the poor can scarcely live. This cry is true if they want to live on luxuries, but if they will live on wholesome but plain and healthy fare they can do so for very little. A little over a month ago I determined to give up all expensive articles of food and live almost as cheaply as possible. Having left off flesh foods for nearly two years, and lecturing frequently on the question of food, I knew what to select. Looking over my food accounts, I found milk, butter, eggs and cheese, with tea and coffee, were fairly expensive articles and none of them necessary, so I gave them up for a time to see results. On Oct. 19 I begun my experiment; my weight was then 9 stone 8 ounces. I continued this pure vegetarian diet for a month, when my weight was 9 stone three pounds and 12 ounces, or a gain of 4¼ pounds. My friends said I looked well; I felt well, and did my usual work the same as ever. I walked from ten to fifteen miles daily, seeing patients or taking exercise. Here is an account of my dietary, which cost me little more than sixpence a day, and I could easily live for less without luxuries. Breakfast consisted of a basin of porridge, made from a mixture of oatmeal and wheatmeal, which I found more palatable than either singly. This I usually eat with bread to insure thorough insalivation. Then came bread fried in refined cotton seed oil, or fried vegetable haggis. For drink I had a cup of cocoa or fruit syrup, with warm water and sugar. The cocoa used was an ordinary one with plenty of starch in it, which makes a thick drink, and no milk is thus required. Dinner consisted of a thick vegetable soup and bread, potato pie, savory pie, vegetarian pie, vegetable stew, stewed rice and tomatoes, etc. For a second course I had bread plum pudding, stewed rice and fruit, baked sago, tapioca and apples, stewed prunes, figs, raisins and bread. Tea meal consisted of bread and jam, stewed fruit, or some green stuff, as watercress, celery, tomatoes, etc. I had only three meals a day, and frequently, when very busy, I had only two, and a cup of cocoa and a biscuit for supper. I always use the wholemeal bread, as it is a laxative and contains a good deal of nitrogen, which is thrown away with the bran. The cotton seed oil is a cheap and good cooking oil, and is impossible to detect. This diet is continued for a month, and now I only take the animal products when out, not having them at my table.

Now compare this diet to one of flesh or a mixed one. The latest analysis shows flesh to contain from 70 to 74 per cent. of water, the dry residue being very rich in nitrogen, and it contains a little carbonaceous or fatty matter. Hence, to live on meat alone, as much as eight pounds a day is necessary. Then there are to be considered the diseases of animals, which are communicable to man if that flesh be not thoroughly cooked all through; and, as very few of our animals live a perfectly natural life, most of them are more or less diseased, especially the fat ones. The excess of nitrogen taken into the system in eating flesh meat has to be got rid of by the liver, kidneys, and lungs: hence these organs are overtaxed, and much disease is the consequence. In fact, were it not for the flesh food we doctors would have very little to do. Man living in towns can not afford to eat much flesh, because he does not get sufficient exercise and oxygen to burn up the excess of nitrogen. If he does eat this flesh, and if he eat much, then he must suffer from many complaints, such as indigestion, bilious attacks, congested liver, hemorrhoids, gastric catarrh, and other gartric troubles. If the habit be continued in, gall stones or urinary calculi may follow, or rheumatism and gout. Then the kidneys become diseased and more work is thrown on the heart, which becomes also diseased: the end is death by one of the lingering diseases, which shows a diseased organ somewhere. Even epilepsy and many nervous diseases are aggravated by flesh. Cancer is on the increase, and from some observations I have made it may be indirectly traced to flesh. Consumption has only a remote connection with flesh, it being due chiefly to want of fresh air. Vegetable food is cheap, contains an abundant supply of nutriment at first cost, and our system are so formed as to use it with least expenditure of vital force. We use no cruelty in obtaining our food, and can easily see if it be wholesome or in a rotten state.

By means of our diet much disease is prevented, and even most chronic cases of present disease can be alleviated by it. If we want a cheap dietary we have the following foods to choose from: Wheat, oats, barley, maize, rice, sago, tapioca, semolina, hominy, peas, beans, lentils, etc., are all concentrated foods, very rich in nutriment. Potatoes, parsnips, carrots, turnips, onions, cabbage, sprouts, etc., give the variety, bulk and flavor; to these may be added the sweet herbs for making savory dishes. Apples, pears, currants, gooseberries, plums, strawberries, rasps, blackberries, and other fruits, with melons, peaches, grapes, etc., are higher priced but wholesome fruits. The dried fruits, as dates, figs, applerings, currants, raisins, etc, are cheap and good. To these may be added tinned goods. Thus one can see the immense variety of tasty things we have, and these to suit all purses. We can add to these milk, butter, cheese, eggs, and honey, which are got without killing animals. But if we take animal food, then fish is least injurious then beef and mutton, while veal, pork, game, etc., are very indigestible and ought to be avoided.

T. R. ALLISON, L.R.C.P., etc.
84 Claremont Square N.

The tramp prefers summer scents to winter quarters.

Stanley has discoveaed a river in Central Africa called Kissmelongæ. It can not be very far from Lake Nyum-nyum.

Considerable discussion has been held of late in certain social circles as to the finest private residence in New York City. The house of William K. Vanderbilt, on Fifth Avenue, is probably the most elaborate residence in America.

AGRICULTURAL.

The Young Lambs.

Although it is rather soon for estimating upon the number of lambs due, in a few more weeks some of the ewes will come in, and if the farmer desires to push them forward rapidly he must pay some attention to the dams now. The ewe must endure the cold, be deprived of her natural green food, and nourish the coming lamb in such a manner as to bring it forth strong and vigorous. The early lambs are the ones that bring the highest prices when sent to market, but an early lamb is a nuisance and unprofitable when it is stunted and dwarfed by cold and insufficient food. If the ewe is sound and healthy, and has been well-fed on a variety of food, she will have no difficulty in lambing or providing for the lamb; but the trouble is with the farmers, who invariably leave the ewes to themselves during that period and give them no attention at a time when it is mostly required.

The ewes are naturally protected by their wool covering, but when lambs come into the world on a cold, bleak day or night, they are too delicate to be left to the care of the ewe alone, and the farmer who expects early lambs should be on the alert by penning the ewes that are liable to come in, and giving them good shelter and dry bedding. The first care of the lambs is one-half the difficulty removed, and if they get a good supply of milk they will do excellently, but that is something, too, to be noticed. Feed the ewes liberally on all the hay they will eat, and give them a small allowance of mixed ground grain, such as corn-meal and oats, with some roots. Should milk fever occur, feed on oats and hay alone, inducing the lamb to draw as much as possible by placing it occasionally at the udder. Give ewes that have lost their lambs others that are twins, which may be done if not postponed too late, thereby allowing only one lamb to the ewe.

The Cost of Dogs

An Iowa man has figured up the cost of keeping dogs in his State, and finds that they eat enough annually to feed 100,000 workmen, and counting in the damage they do to the sheep farmers, the dogs cost the State $9,000,000, while the education of all the children in the State is less than half that sum.

A Tennessee man makes out a similar condition of affairs in his State. He finds there are 300,000 worthless dogs, which consume food enough, if fed to hogs, to make 30,000,000 pounds of bacon, which would be equal to feeding meat to 100,000 able-bodied men a whole year. At ten cents per pound the bacon would be worth $3 000,000, and if in silver would load down 94 two-horse waggons, and make a wagon train more than half a mile long. Again the worthless whelps prevent farmers from keeping 2 000,000 sheep; the mutton and wool from which would be worth $5 000 000. Including the sheep now annually killed, the whole expense for keeping the dogs of the State amounts to the pretty sum of $9,000,000. Tennessee expends $3 000,000 for educating her children. Three dollars for dogs. One dollar for children.

Another writer after making careful estimates of the damage done by dogs in the Northern States alone, finds it costs not less than $83 000 000 annually to support our dogs, a sum that would buy 165,000 farms at government prices for land, or it would purchase 132 000 neighborhood libraries of 200 volumes each.

Preservation of Hen Manure.

We can hardly overvalue the manurial product of the hen-house, or exercise too much care in its preservation. If thrown into the compost heap, deposited with hog manure, nearly all its good qualities would be retained very likely, but I advise a different course. Nearly every farmer wants a little fancy manure for special purposes in the spring, and instead of buying guano and superphosphates of doubtful quality, he can manufacture his own at far less cost, if he keeps a considerable number of fowls, by utilizing their droppings for that purpose.

It has been my practice to sprinkle dry earth under the roosts, or, what is fully its equal, road dirt or scrapings from the highway, collected during dry weather. It is gathered in places where the soil is of a loamy character and from sand, and put away in boxes or barrels for use in winter and spring. By using this three or four times a week, and oftener in warm weather, all bad odor is prevented and the escape of the fertilizing properties of the manure is arrested.

The accumulation under the roosts should be removed as often as once a week, and this, shoveled in a pile, will begin to ferment and generate more or less heat as the weather grows warm in spring. If closely watched and shoveled over when undue heat is liable to be generated, the process will add to its value for the spring crops, as the manure becomes decomposed by fermentation and its particles are separated and mingled with the earth used as a deodorizer and its crudeness is changed so as to be readily available for the growing plants.

Last year I used some fifteen bushels of this kind of manure and found it a very active fertilizer. For potatoes and corn I applied it in the hill, mixing with that used for potatoes one-fourth its bulk of unleached wood ashes, dropping it in the row and covering it immediately. As there will be considerable moisture present in such manure the addition of ashes sets free the ammonia to some extent; hence no time should be lost in getting it underground as the earth absorbs the fertilizing properties of the manure set free in the form of ammonia by the addition of the alkali. On garden vegetables this manure has a very marked effect. Nearly every farmer, by taking a little pains, can make enough of such fertilizer to go some ways in the garden. It has the advantage of being free from the seeds of grasses and weeds.—Rural New Yorker.

Mr. Adam, formerly of the English Legation. Washington, and who married Miss Palmer, of Georgetown, D. C., is now secretary of the English Legation at St. Petersburg. Mr. Adam, who is a very distinguished linguist, won the prize for mastering the Russian tongue within the prescribed time allowed by the English Government.

Moslems and the Mehdi.

The Cairo correspondent of the London Standard says that the religious side of the Soudan question seems very generally misunderstood, and the following remarks on the pretensions of the mehdi by a learned Moslem may throw some light upon them: He was amongst those who signed a fetva, or species of excommunication act, against Mohammed Ahmed Shemseddeen El Mehdi, and I asked him what he would do if the invader should take Cairo and find out the fact. "I should say, of course, that I had only signed under compulsion, and I should at once recognize in him the mehdi." "But you cannot really believe he is such?" "No! Neither does he believe it himself, if he knows anything about his religion—and he has studied for years at the holy mosque of El-Azhar. I doubt, inded, if he pretends to be the mehdi. Any man who raises a religious enthusiasm and leads on a host is a mehdi, or leader, and the present rebel in the Soudan is a mehdi. But our religion teaches that before the advent of the last mehdi seven men shall successfully arise in various parts of the Moslem world, and by religious propaganda shall prepare the way for him. Each of these seven men shall be called either Ahmed or Mohammed. In my opinion this Soudan mehdi is the third. Lenoussi was the first, Arabi the second, and he the third agitator bearing one or other of the prescribed names. The real mehdi shall appear at Mount Ararat at the time of the Howaf, or Sacred Procession of the Haj. His coming will be foretold by the dumbness of the seven mams, who shall in turn attempt to recite the Rhubeh and fail. Then the mehdi will ride out from the crowd of worshippers on a white horse, and he will at once be accepted by the whole Moslem world. There will then remain forty years' domination of Islam after conquest, during which your Christ will come again from Syria and rule our empire. Then we believe that our last decadence will set in, and some nation from the farther east will occupy our countries—probably the Chinese." "Then you do not think any good Moslem can accept the Soudan pretenaer as the mehdi?" "No, not as the last mehdi; but as his forerunner, yes: and the mass of the ignorant believers will probably even go so far as to believe him to be the true mehdi. They look at results and success, and they will argue that the poor native of the Nubia who, without other tribute of power except such as he may be invested with by God, has been able to gather about him vast hosts, and defeat armies commanded by the infidels, must be something nearly approaching prophethood. We know that he is not the Mehdi ala er Hassool—the forerunner of the last prophet, Christ, but you cannot expect the masses to draw fine distinctions."

What to Do, and What Not to Do.

If you have goods to sell, advertise.

Hire a man with a lampblack kettle and a brush to paint your name and number on all the railroad fences. The cars go whizzing by so fast that no one can read them, to be sure, but perhaps the conductor would stop the train to accommodate an inquisitive passenger.

Remember the fences by the roadside as well. Nothing is so attractive to the passer-by as a well painted sign: "Millington's Mixture for Mun[illegible]

Have your card in the hotel register by all means. Strangers stopping at hotels for a night generally buy a cigar or two before leaving the town, and they need some inspiring literary food besides.

If an advertising agent wants your business advertised in a fancy frame at the depot, pay him about 200 per cent more than it is worth, and let him put it there. When a man has three-quarters of a second in which to catch a train, he invariably stops to read depot advertisments, and your card might take his eye.

Of course the street thermometer dodge is excellent. When a man's fingers and ears are "phewing" at the heat or tingling with the cold is the time above all others when he stops on the street and reads an advertisement.

Advertise on a calendar. People never look at a calendar to see what day of the month it is. They merely glance hurriedly at it so as to be sure that your name is spelled without a p— that's all.

When the breezes blow, wafted by a paper fan in the hand of a lovely woman, 'tis well to have the air redolent of the perfume of the carmine ink in which your business address is printed. This will make the market for decent fans very good.

Patronize every agent that shows you an advertising tablet, card, directory, dictionary or even an advertising Bible, if one is offered at a reasonable price. The man must make a living.

But don't think of advertising in a well-established newspaper. Not for a moment. Your advertisement would be nicely printed and would find its way into all the thrifty households of the regions, where the farmer, the mechanic the tradesman and others live, and into the the families of the wealthy and refined, all who have articles to buy and money with which to buy them, and after the news of the day has been digested, it would be read and pondered, and next day people would come down to your store and patronize you, and keep coming in increasing numbers, and you might have to hire an extra clerk or two, move into a larger block and more favorable location and do a bigger business, but of course it would be more expensive—and bring greater profits.—New Haven Register.

A New Treatment for Neuralgia.

The latest agent introduced for the relief of neuralgia is a 1 per cent. solution of hyperosmic acid, administered by subcutaneous injection. It has been employed in Billroth's clinic in a few cases. One of the patients had been a martyr to sciatica for years, and had tried innumerable remedies, including the application of electricity no fewer than 200 times, while for a whole year he had adopted vegetarianism. Billroth injected the above remedy between the tuber ischii and trochanter, and within a day or two the pain was greatly relieved, and eventually quite disappeared. It would be rash to conclude too much from these results, in the face of the intractability of neuralgia to medication, but if it really prove to be as efficacious as considered, hyperosmic acid will be a therapeutic agent of no mean value.—Lancet.

AN AUSTRALIAN HORROR.

Terrible Hardships of a Police Party —Perishing of Thirst.

The Sydney Herald of a recent date says: A report reached Adelaide a short time since that two persons had been murdered—Readford and Macnab—by blacks in the northern territory. The authorities ordered a party of police to go in search of the supposed murderers, consisting of Mr. Giles, five troopers, and a black boy. The following telegram was received from J. Skinner, station-master at Alice Springs: "I am afraid I have to send very bad news of the police party who started in search of Readford. I have not yet received full particulars, but I believe that the whole of the party, with the exception of Giles and the black boy, have perished for want of water. Giles left Trooper Shirley about fifteen miles from Attack Creek, apparently completely exhausted, but as there have been thunderstorms about the vicinity, there are hopes of his having survived. The rest of the men J. Rees; J. Hussey, George Phillips, and Arthur Paillips—were left without any hope of recovery. Giles and the black boy walked in fifty miles to Attack creek. A party from Powell's creek left this morning to assist Giles, with instructions to travel day and night."

The following telegram was received from Mr. Giles:

"I am sorry to have to report that all the police party, except myself and a black boy, died of thirst last Wednesday; also all the horses. I have walked in fifty miles, and have had nothing to eat since Sunday. Please instruct Abbott to send a man with two spare horses; also pocket instrument, foolscap, pencil, pick, shovel, tomahawk, and rope to lower bodies into place. Let him send me a little food, such as rice, corn flour, fruit, and lime juice; also a blanket, towel, shirt, trousers, pipe, tobacco and matches. Please let the party start at once, as I am very weak, tired, and wet through. I know where the bodies of Shirley and Hussey are lying—about fifteen miles from the last water. Arthur Phillips and Rees are farther back. Please let the party get here to-night.

"A. M. GILES.
"Survivor of Police Party, Attack Creek."

Further particulars received from Mr. Giles with reference to the fate of the relief party show that the victims endured unmitigated hardships before they dropped down one by one in their endeavors to regain their camp. Giles and the black boy, who were the only survivors of the expedition, are doing as well as can be expected after the terrible privations they suffered. Giles is anxious to return to the scrub as soon as possible, not with the hope of finding any of his late comrades alive, but with a desire to secure their remains from dogs and birds and give them a Christian burial. Giles accounts for his being able to hold out longer than his companions from his refusal to share with them the blood of the horses which his companions eagerly drank whenever one of the animals became knocked up. Mr. Giles started off again to endeavor to rescue any of his companions, if found alive, but from his report there is no doubt all the rest perished. He telegraphed to Mr Todd, postmaster general of Adelaide: "I beg to report my return to Attack creek this afternoon. I start for the Tennant to-morrow and arrive there on Tuesday. I hunted for the bodies of my late colleagues on the plain and the edge of the scrub for four days, but was only able to find those of Shirley and Arthur Phillips. Shirley's was under a bush about ten miles from the water, close to where I left him, and Phillips was on the open plain about four miles further off. I buried the bodies and read the burial services over them. I have no hopes of any of the others being alive, although I was unable to find the bodies, as they must have wandered away from the track. I recovered a few sacks, rifles, etc., and will send the rest from Tennant's creek. I am glad to say that I feel better."

The Spanish Beauty.

We in America are apt to judge of the Spaniard by the Mexican and the Cuban. Nothing can be more different. Whatever their faults or virtues, the Hispano-Americans seem to have taken nothing but the language from what of the conqueror's blood they may have. All else has come from the native. Unbroken in pride, undebased by evil habits, self-respecting, sober in speech as in food, the Iberian needs only a leader to again take his rightful place in the family of nations. And the woman? Is she beautiful? I hardly know, but she is the most bewitching, bewildering, fascinating of all Eve's daughters. There is a magic in her step, a poise of foot, a grace of rythmic motion, a proud tenderness in her dark eye, a something voluptuous which is yet chaste, a magic in her smile, such as no other race or clime can show. Beautiful? A man whose blood runs red in his veins may see beauty elsewhere, but he has never felt the perfect charms of woman's loveliness until he has met love looking from the melting brightness of those matchless orbs, which none but Spain's dark-glancing maidens bear. There is no neglect here. The dress may not be rich, but there is not a fold ill placed. To her is paid the reverence of passionate devotion. Still is Spain the land of romance and of song, because her men are brave, her women worthy to be loved.

They Kept Cool.

The Amesbury News relates that a trader of that town, accompanied by his wife, visited a friend in Merrimac, a provision dealer, who invited him into the store to examine his ice-closet, in which he kept his meats, vegetables, etc. Upon arriving at the store, the Amesbury gentleman left his wife in the carriage, and proceeded with his friend to an inspection of the ice-closet, which they entered, the former pulling the door to after him. A spring lock being attached to the outside of the door, they were prisoners in the coolest place the town could provide. In vain they shouted—their cries could not be heard. The wife, tired of waiting, took a short drive about town, and her husband not appearing on her return, she entered the store, but no one was to be seen. In passing a particular place she thought she heard voices, and upon opening the door of the closet was surprised to see the gentlemen, who had become nearly exhausted by their close confinement, and endeavors to escape.

SIGHTS IN JAVA.

An American Circus—The Upas Tree—The Earthquakes.

Probably the most interesting thing I saw in Java was an American circus, and it was curious to see the crowds of Malays and Chinese as eager to catch a glimpse of the lion or to get a seat next the ring as the average American small boy. It was American in every respect, and I believe they are getting to be an institution of our country. To get a warm reception anywhere all the manager has to do is to advertise it as such; draw attention to the bareback riders all as Miss Emma, or some such good English name, instead of Mlle. Lucie de la Vere; as is the custom with us, and that Sam Johnson, the great American negro lion tamer, will give an entertainment with his five tame lions captured in the wilds of Missouri. Yes, the American circus is gaining a world-wide reputation, and even here in Batavia was the excitement of the week.

Java is the home of the upas tree, and as it is only recently that true scientific explanations have been given of them, probably one theory may be interesting. Wonderful stories were told about the valleys where they grew. No living creature was able to live an instant exposed to its effects, and even birds in flying over would drop dead, so that the whole valleys were covered with their skeletons. When scientific men first began to inquire into it, they could only with the greatest difficulty induce the natives to accompany them to the spots, in such dread and superstition were they held. A peculiar feature in the earthquakes in this part of the world soon solved the problem and exploded the theory as to the trees themselves. It was found that at certain times the sulphurous vapors and noxious gases escaping through the cracks in the earth in these valleys were so dense and poisonous as to be destructive to animal life, and at such times had so affected the natives that they had retained the memory of such places and avoided them forever afterward. No evil effects were experienced by those who traversed the valleys, but there was unmistakable evidence that at periodical intervals they were deservingly to be avoided.

I can not close without a last word about the earthquakes. I was in Batavia only a week from the time they happened, and from what I saw I must say that the newspaper accounts at home were very much exaggerated. The destruction was great enough when it happened, but why extend it to Batavia itself, when, save for a few ashes that fell harmlessly around, and for a tidal wave that threw down a few hundred yards of breakwater, they were perfectly secure. According to some of the papers at home it was totally destroyed, whereas I think the city was never in a more healthy or enterprising condition; and heard less of the earthquake than the people at home.—Correspondent New Orleans Times-Democrat.

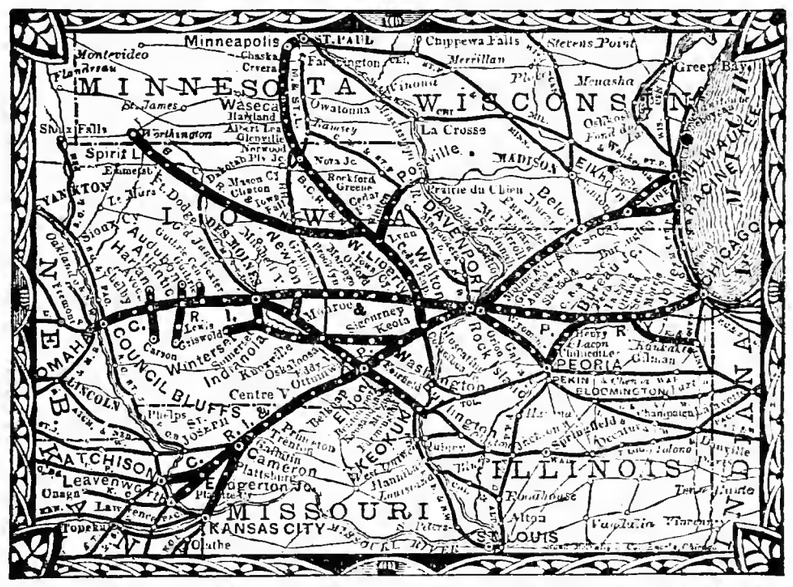
Several years ago, in a Madison Avenue horse car, Wm. Cullen Bryant and Bayard Taylor were comparing notes about the poet Whittier, who, they believed, could not live long. They are dead, and Whittier celebrated his 76th birthday on Monday.

For the first five months of the present fiscal year the total internal revenue collections amounted to $51,279.000, being $11,343,000 less than for the corresponding period last year

The Weight of the Human Brain.

The recent discussion about the weight of Tourgueneff's brain has led to the publication of an article on the subject of the weight of brains by a Russian scientist, M. Nikiforoff, in the Novosti. According to him the weight of the brain has no influence whatever on the mental faculties. The average weight of a man's brain is, according to Luschka, 1,424 grammes, of a woman's 1,272 grammes; Krause gives the averages as 1,570 and 1 350 respectively. The maximum weight is said to be 1,630 grammes, and the minimum 200 grammes. The brain of the celebrated mineralogist Haussmann weighed 1,200 grammes. It ought to be remembered that the significance of the weight of the brain depends upon the proportion it bears to the dimensions of the whole body, and to the age of the individual. Byron died at the age of 36, the geometrician came at 78 years of age; the brains of the two should, therefore, not be compared. It is equally important to know what was the cause of death, for long disease or old age exhaust the brain. To define the real degree of development of the brain it is, therefore, necessary to have a knowldge of the condition of the whole body, and, as this is usually lacking, the mere record of weights possesses little significance.

Carrier Pigeons.



Dr. Harvey J. Philpot, in a letter to the London Daily Telegraph, writes as follows: "I have made valuable use of the carrier or homing pigeon, as an auxiliary to my practice. So easily are these 'unqualified assistants' reared and trained that I am surprised that they are not brought into use by the profession I belong to. My modus operandi is simply this: I take out half a dozen birds massed together in a basket with me on my rounds, and when I have seen my patient, no matter at what distance from home, I write my prescription on a piece of tissue paper, and having wound it round the shank of the bird's leg, I generally throw the carrier up into the air. In a few minutes it reaches home, and, having been shut up fasting since the previous evening, without much delay enters the trap cage connected with its loft, where it is at once caught by the gardener or dispenser, who knows pretty well the time of its arrival, and relieves it of its dispatches. The medicine is immediately prepared and sent off by the messenger, who is thus saved several hours of waiting, and I am enabled to complete my round of visits. Should any patient be very sick, and I am desirous of having an early report of him or her the next morning, I leave a bird to bring me tidings. A short time since I took with me six pairs of birds. I sent a pair of them off from each village I had occasion to visit, every other one bearing a prescription. Upon my return I found all the prescriptions arranged on my desk by my dispenser, who had already made up the medicines."

Will somebody please go and tell the thermometer it is time to get up.

"How is it you never married, Charley?" "Oh, I don't know, except I remained single from choice." "Why, I heard that you tried to get that Podgkins girl a year or two ago." "Yes, I did ask her to marry me." "And she would not have you?" "That's about the size of it. So I remained single from choice—her choice, you know."

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Callatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE, Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN, Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JAN. 24, 1884.

OPENING OF PARLIAMENT.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

OTTAWA, Jan. 17.—This afternoon, at 3 o'clock, his Excellency Lord Lansdowne, Governor-General, came down in state to the Senate Chambers, and opened the second session of the fifth Parliament of Canada with the following speech from the throne:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate, Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In the fulfillment of the important trust committed to me by Her Majesty, I have recourse for the first time to your advice and assistance. It is a source of the deepest personal satisfaction to me that I should have been called by Her Majesty to an office in which, as her representative, I am enabled to take part in the public affairs of the Dominion and associate myself with you in the performance of the honorable duties which you are about to approach. I rejoice to learn that although the last harvest has been less productive than its predecessors, and although there are indications that the rapid expansion of your commerce has to some extent been followed by over trading, the general condition of the Dominion is so as to justify me in congratulating you on its prosperity. The marked success attained by Canada at the International Fishery Exhibition in London must be very gratifyir g to you, and has been, I doubt not, of great service in showing to the world the wealth of our fisheries and the extent of our marine industries and resources. The commissioners appointed by my predecessor for purposes of consolidating the statutes affecting the Dominion have pursued their task with diligence, and I am enabled to lay before you for examination about sixty chapters of the proposed consolidation; the remainder of the work will be prepared and the whole of it revised during the present year. so that the final report will be ready at your next session and for your approval. The number of emigrants to Canada during the past season was, I am happy to say, greater than in any previous year, a proof that the better Canada is known the more it is valued by those seeking a home in the New World. Arrangements are in progress to diminish the cost of inland transport, and I have reason to believe that the result will be a steady increase of valuable settlers in future.

During the recess negotiations were resumed with British Columbia in regard to several matters upon which differences had for some time existed between the two governments. One of my ministers visited the province last summer on a special mission with a view to adjustment of all questions in controversy, and his efforts have happily been successful, Should your sanction be given to the arrangements then made all occasions of dispute will have been removed and most cordial relations established between the Dominion and Provincial Governments. The papers will be laid before you and your consideration invited to measures enabling me to give effect to the agreement. Rapid increase of population in the North-West renders some amendments in the North-West Territories Act expedient, and your attention will be called to those important matters. The progress of the Indians in Manitoba and the North West during the past year has been on the whole satisfactory. The lands included in several Indian Treaties have for the most part betaken themselves to their reserves. A bill for the further promotion of their interests will be submitted to you as well as measures applicable to the whole Dominion for the purpose of encouraging the more advanced Indian communities to assume responsibilities of self government. The bill laid before you last session for the representation of the people in Parliament and the assimilation of Electoral Franchise existing in the several Provinces has now been before the country for the year. The measure will be re-introduced, and I commend it to your attention. I would also urge upon you the expediency of providing for the regulation of factory labor and the protection of the working man and his family. The measure submitted last session with some amendments will be laid before you. The rapid progress of the Canadian Pacific Railway has been maintained throughout the past year. Of the 2,833 miles of the main line between Pembrook and Port Moody 1,738 are now constructed, and renders practicable the completion of the great work within the next two years, although the time within which the Railway Company were bound to finish the road will not expire until 1891. My Government has thought it of the greatest importance for the settlement of the North West and the development of our trade that its completion from sea to sea should be hastened, and the company enabled to open the line throughout by the spring of 1886. With this view and in order to aid the company in procuring sufficeint capital for the purpose, by the disposal of its unsold shares, the Government agreed to receive a deposit of money and securities sufficient to pay a minimum of 3 per cent. dividend for ten years on $65,000,000 of the stock. The arrangement was made on the belief that it would give steadiness and increased value to the shares on the market. A consideration of unfavorable circumstances has prevented the fulfilment of these expectations, and the company has not been able to obtain the required capital by a sale of its stock. The best means of preventing any delay in the great object of the early completion of the railway demands your earnest consideration. I am pleased to be able to state that the operation of that portion of railway already opened affords most gratifying evidence of its soundness as a commercial enterprise, and of its great value to Canada.

The large increase of the volume of traffic on the Intercolonial Railway over that of any previous year, without involving any burden upon the country, is a satisfactory proof of the continued development of trade between the eastern and western portion of the Dominion. Provisional arrangements made with the Government of Nova Scotia for the retention of the Picton Branch and the acquisitioan of the Eastern Extension Railway to the Strait of Canso, will be submitted for your approval.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

Accounts for the past year will be laid before you. You will find that the expenditure will be considerably less and the receipts larger than the estimates, the surplus exceeding that of any previous year. The revenue of the first half of the current year, notwithstanding the large importations of the last season, have been such that we may reasonably expect that the estimates for the year will be fairly maintained. Estimates for the ensuing year will also be submitted to you. They will, I trust, be found to have been prepared with due regard to economy

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate, Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I feel assured that you will devote yourselves with earnestness and assiduity to the consideration of the subjects I have mentioned, and to all matters affecting public interests that may be brought before you.

THE REPLY TO THE ADDRESS.

From the News.

OTTAWA, Jan. 18.—The reply to the address was moved by McMaster, of Glengary. in an excellent worded speech, which, however, was nothing but an elaborate avoidance of the most important questions. He referred to the points in the address, and sympathized with British Columbia as not having had her dues. He congratulated the International railway on having ceased to be a burden on the people, and he pointed with pride to Sir Charles Tupper's action in having the condemned cargoes of cattle re-examined. He exulted over the immigration returns, which showed that during 1878 only 30.000 immigrants came into the country, to 47,000 in 1881, 112,000 in 1882, and 133,000 in 1883. Of the latter, the unprecedented number of 34,000 were from the United States, and 11,000 of them were returned Canadians. He then dwelt on the export trade in live stock, and said that last year 56,000 cattle and 114,000 sheep were sent out of the country. The receipts last year were in excess of the estimates, while the expenditure was less than the estimates. this left in round numbers a surplus of 7,000,000, not including the 1.000,000 derived from the sale of North-Western lands. This was

THE LARGEST SURPLUS SINCE CONFEDERATION, and though it was largely gained from imports, and importation has been over done, still it was an easy job to dispose of a surplus. Notwithstanding over-importation and over-production it had been a reasonably prosperous year. After referring to the necessity of introducing a Factory Act and a law assimilating the election law in all the provinces, he spoke of the necessity of placing the Indians on reservations, and of giving them some sort of self-government His absurd reference to this subject should have for nothing more ridiculous could be imagined than what he called "Home rule for the Indians." It is just as feasible as home rule for the pauper asylums. On the Canada Pacific the speaker dwelt long and lovingly, hanging with suspicious weight on the unprecedented rapid construction of the work, and the necessity of the people and Government stepping in to assist the syndicate with whatever is necessary in the way of aids and guarantees. He spoke of the Government three per cent. guarantee without explaining it, and stated that it had failed to meet the wants of the syndicate. The Government members looked exceedingly ill at ease when McMaster expiated upon the necessity of the Government doing something more to help the Canada Pacific railway out of the hole.

RAISED A LAUGH.

Belleau, of Levis, seconded the reply in French. The absurdity of two official languages is impressed on the English hearers while listening to harangues such as that of the Quebec member. But a small proportion of the members could understand what the speaker was driving at, but nearly all of them could have understood him as well, if he had spoken in English.

MR BLAKE'S SPEECH

in reply was a powerful one, and in a popular vein. He patted Lansdowne's head approvingly, and complimented the Home Government on the style of the Governors they are sending out. This was to indicate the loyalty of the Grit party, and Mr. Blake did it very nicely. He read a Ministeral announcement of Sir John's intention to see that a settlement was arrived at with British Columbia, coupled with the statement that Sir John considered it his duty to Victoria to see that such a settlement be effected. Mr. Blake congratulated Sir John on his careless grace with which he paid his debt with other people's money, and passed on to the imigration returns. He did not believe the figures brought forward by the Government were anything but conjecture, but the facts are so apparent that it was not even alleged that the 150,000 emigrants promised had come in, while the member for Glengarry had discreetly omitted all reference to the number of emigrants to the North West. No reference had been made to the disappointment, discontent and agitation in Manitoba and the territories, yet the Ministry could not attempt to conceal the fact that such existed. for their friend, th first Minister of Manitoba, had but a few days ago confessed in public that affairs there are virging upon a crisis. To him the reference to the Government guarantee and the necessities of the syndicate, was a most alarming announcement. He had been at a loss to know how the position of the syndicate could be improved, or the value of its stock enhansed by a guarantee, if a deposit had to be made with the government of dollar for dollar to the amount of that guarantee, The guarantee was given in defiance of law, and we have nothing before us to show what the securities were, But now it is even worse, and it appears that the syndicate is to get it without giving security. The electors had been told that the giving of the contract to the syndicate had lifted the burden from the shoulders of the Canadian people, but we find that burden upon our backs still.

Mr. Blake said he had warned the Government that the success of the road could not be assured by immense subsidies, but that prudent management must also be added. Instead of such management. we are told that the road has been pushed with unprecedented rapidity. This rapidity means an extra and unnecessary outlay. Speed means money. It means the extension of an unprofitable period, during which the company will have to operate it without a local trade. It is doing the country no good, as it causes the settlements to be sparce and widely scattered. The boom has caused speculation and ruin. More than this the capital of the syndicate has been largely devoted to other enterprises than the Canada Pacific railway. They have invested in the St. Lawrence and Ottawa, the Canada Central, the Credit Valley, Ontario & Quebec, the Toronto, Grey & Bruce, and the London Junction, and now they call for help to build the line that they engaged to build and were subsidized to build. It was to be regreted that the syndicate had excited the rivalry of another great company by building an opposition line to the Grand Trunk, but as they had done this they had no right to call for sympathy where the rival companies manipulated against them. Moreover, while the syndicate is asking for help, and the government proposes to relieve them, there is no proposition to relieve the people of the obnoxious clauses which are more oppressive to the country that profitable to the corporation. Turning to the state of the country, he expressed his surprise that the member of Glengarry had dwelt so little on the subject. He got on the ice as late as possible, and got off it as quickely as he could. On previous occasions this topic had been lovingly dwelt upon by those speaking in reply to the address, but now it was indeed changed. The country had a reasonably good harvest, with few failures in the crop, and to account for the degression the Government must be blamed for extravagant expenditure, and extravagant, unjust and unequal collection. They were to blame, too. for their encouragement of overproduction, of speculation, of overtrading. Last year the Finance Minister, like a reckless pilot, told his crew to put on all sail, and they did. How many of them had since taken in sail, or had it taken in for them. The bankruptcies had trebled, and in his own city of Toronto he had not seen so much distress for years. In Montreal it appeared as bad, Even in London, we are told by the Postmaster General's own organ, that they are establishing a soup kitchen. For this trouble the Government's fiscal policy is largely to blame, but a portion of it must be charged to assisted emigration. While the Government has been assisting an undesirable class the ratio of the increase of emigration for the past four years is less than that of the previous four years. Particularly is this so in the urben communities. Notwithstanding the complaints of the workingmen and artisans, who are finding that

PROTECTION DOES NOT PROTECT LABOR.

Sir Hector Langevin promises to return his exile compatriots to Canada to further increase the total of unemployed labor. He brifly expressed his objections to the bill for the assimilation of the provincial franchise, and hoped that the objectionable and unheard of clauses would be elimated. He was sorry to find that there was reference in the speech to the proposed abrogation of the fishery clauses of the Washington treaty, as important interests would suffer if any interval was allowed to occur or any lapse be permitted. It was certainly the duty of the Government to see that there is no gap and to take advantage of the opportunity to press negotiations for better trade relations with the United States. He next taunted Sir John with the decision in the appealed escheat case, a taunt which he had some reason to regret when. Sir John shifted the responsibility of the question home to the Mackenzie Government.

Mr. Blake proceeded to read Sir John's opinion on the constitutionality of the Dominion Government assuming the licensing power. With biting sarcasm he referred to the Premier's great reputation as a consitutional lawyer, and then twitted him with the decision in the Hodge and Russell cases He supposed that Sir John would endeavor to hold the power he had seized on another pretence, as he had always endeavored to centralize power. He complimented Sir John on the happy event which had relieved the Premier of the necessity of choosing between Carleton and Lennox, and though another man of other views now sits for Lennox, no doubt Sir John and all the rest of them sincerely mourned the temporary triumph of vice over virtue.

SIR JOHN'S REPLY.

Sir John complimented Mr. Blake on his new style of addressing the House. "The happy style," Sir John said, "was quite a new departure. Mr. Blake, in fact, had broken out in a fresh place. Formerly Mr. Blake had posed as a great and stern statesman, a strict economist, and all that sort of thing. He was puzzled at first to account for Mr. Blake's happy vein, but as he progressed he found out the reason. The smile grew as he alluded to the rumor that the Syndicate might fail. It broadened as he spoke of the hard times It deepened and widened as Mr. Blake spoke of agitation and disaffection in the North-West. And he fairly exulted when he spoke of the establishment of soup kitchens. So it seemed that the leader of the Opposition gloried in all the modifications of evil in store for Canada. This accounted for Mr. Blake's happy departure, and, he regretted that the only man who had ever been in the House who could answer Mr. Blake in his own style, was in the House no longer. He was, indeed, sorry for Mr. Bunster's absence, as he (Sir John) had no time to prepare impromptu sarcasms, and Mr. Blake had. As to his paying his debt to Victoria, B. C., with the people's money, he thought that the whole country and the whole

PEOPLE OWED VICTORIA A DEBT

for electing him to the head of the Government. In reply to Mr. Blake's charge, that the Pacific road was pushed too fast he said if the late Government had had charge of building it there would have been no danger of the great rapidity of construction, nor would there have been any cause for the hon. gentleman to complain that the settlements were being pushed out too far into the wilderness. If Mr. Mackenzie's water stretches had been utilized the settlers would have hung around Winnipeg, and had no opportunity to go out along the line. They would have been at the mercy of the speculators who held the lands, instead of having the whole country within easy reach by rail. And this had been afforded the settler by the rapid construction of the line. Not one honest bona fide settler had been disturbed by the land regulations, and those regulations had been established for, and had succeeded in, the protection of the lands against speculators and agents. He claimed that the colonization companies had done much to advertise the country and attract settlers, and none of these had been disturbed, though some bogus companies had been forced to yield up their claims. As to the Government encouraged it, and was prepared to give it a larger land grant than to any line which had been chartered in the North-West. As to the enterprise of the syndicate undertaking the other lines besides those contracted for with the Government, he could say that not a dollar of money, not an acre of land had been granted to the company, except on the certificate of the Government engineer that the value had been expended on the main line. He was unable to say what interest the syndicate had in the lines mentioned by Mr. Blake, but he knew that the task of connecting sea and sea had the main line had no links to connect it with the other systems to Montreal and the seaboard. It was not the desire of the Government to say in the address that for it would have been untrue. The same circumstances which prevail here prevailed in the United States; but we do not find the press and the public men, the Congress and the Legislature, gloating over such misfortunes as the overproduction in a mill or factory here or there. Now Mr. Blake had asked why the fishery clauses in the Washington treaty which are soon to be abrogated, were not mentioned in the speech. It was strange to hear Mr. Blake say that measures should be taken to prevent these clauses from being dropped. When he had assisted in the negotiations at Washington he had been called a traitor, who sold the birthright of his country, by the very gentlemen wh now clamored for the continuance of the clauses, for consenting to which he had been blacken-ed. This strong point aroused on the Ministerial benches. As to the Hodge case, Sir John acknowledged that in the speech referred to by Mr. Blake he was free to say he had gone too far. Unlike Mr. Blake he did not pretend to be infallible. However Mr. Blake had not said, and dare not now say in his capacity as a lawyer, that the McCarthy Act is unconstitutional. Of one thing the Opposition can be sure, the McCarthy Act will be enforced. As to Lennox, Mr. Blake had better have hired out that argument. Though he had been compelled unwillingly to vamoose that constituency, he imagined that the member now sitting in this House would shortly be disturbed. Before sitting down he indulged in some of his characteristic pleasantries and was loudly applauded.

THE HUDSON BAY RAILWAY,

THE COUNTRY IS NOT PROSPEROUS

THE FIRST GENUINE ENTHUSIASM

The address was then adopted.

SURPRISE.

On the evening of Wednesday 16th inst., a large number of the young people and others of the Rev. Mr. Wilson's Flesherton congregation, took possession of the manse where preparations for a pleasant time immediately took place. About the middle of the entertainment the following address was read by Mr. Jos. Blackburn.

To Rev. A. Wilson.

DEAR PASTOR.—Our invasion of your home to-night was intended to be a surprise to yourself and family, and while our relations are such that this temporary occupation of your home, may not require an apology on our part yet it suggests the question why?

As representing the young people of your Flesherton congregation, we desired an occasion to express to you our heartfelt appreciation of your constant and faithful endeavours to direct and help us, and in every way to promote our highest interests for this life and for the life hereafter. In our social gatherings by your hearty sympathy and co-operation you have shown us how the religion you preach may be practised and enjoyed. In your personal intercourse with us we have found you a true friend and wise counsellor. In your public ministrations your zeal and faithfulness have inspired in us some desire to find our place for usefulness in the church.

Sometimes our apparent indifference may have caused you pain or disappointment, but we feel assured that your teaching both in precept and example will not be lost upon us. While we disclaim any attempt to flatter you we deem it not unseemly to give you these few words of encouragement feeling how much you have given us of your time, your thought, and your heart. It is now my pleasing duty to present you this overcoat and whip with heartfelt wishes that you may live many years and that it may be a means of adding to your comfort in travel, preserving your health and prolonging your days.

Signed Joseph Blackburn, on behalf of the young people of the Flesherton Presbyterian congregation.

REPLY.

Mr. Blackburn and Friends.

It is always a source of pleasure both to myself and Mrs. Wilson to meet with any of our people and particularly in the manse to which we now give you a hearty welcome. I am happy to say that those relations we sustain towards each other are not nor have been in any way impaired by the labors or trials of the past years of my ministry among you, nay I may truly say that the bonds of esteem and christian affection are becoming even stronger, and while I am unable to reply suitably to this beautiful, well worded and encouraging address. I can say, I thank you, not so much because the gift is a rich and valuable one, but for the sentiment with which it is accompanied, for the spirit of brotherly affection which breathes through it, and for the prompt expression of loyalty made me not many days ago. I know that as a congregation we may have had days of darkness but through them we have been kindly led and greatly bleassed. As often as I have had to meat discouraging circumstances as frequently have I been borne up by the sympathy and prayerful support of my people. Again thanking you I trust that I shall be enabled in some measure at least to show that I am worthy of the people over whom I am placed as Pastor.

What is the difference between a donkey and a postage stamp? one you stick with a lick and the other you lick with a stick.

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clochs, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personaliy, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Skating.

The girl or boy
Who learns to skate,
Starts out with joy
And air elate.
Soon—bump, kerflump!
Two sudden jars,
A thundering thump.
Ten thousand stars.

S. PEDLAR was elected Deputy-reeve of Artemesia.

THERE was a $90,000 fine in Cornwall on Tuesday.

A QUANTITY of matter crowded out this week, will appear next.

MCNEA has a tasty and well filled Grocery, and his goods are fresh.

SIXTEEN TONS blacksmith's coal for sale by W. J. McFarland.

COAL OIL, only 20 cents a gallon at McFarland's, not 25 as stated last week.

THER'S not a hole to be seen in our sidewalk since the new trustees were elected.

THE roads are in a wretched condition, and the stormy weather still continues.

THOSE indebted to the STANDARD will oblige by paying the same before the 28th January.

JAMES SHEA has leased his fathers shop and will carry on the shoemaking in this place.

WOOD is coming to the station in large quantities. And considerable square timber.

TWO PARTIES are looking about building a saw mill in this place, we will be sure of one.

THE trains on this line make wonderful good time, being very little delayed by the snow.

MR. JAS. BROWN, has resigned the clerkship of Glenelg, and J. S. Black is appointed in this place.

THE thermometer registered 15 below zerow at eight o'clock this Thursday Morning in Markdale.

T. MCNEA moved into his spacious premises on Monday, and has greatly enlarged his stock of groceries &c.

IN ORDER to secure a fine photograph it is desirable to have a clear complexion; then use MCFARLAND'S TEA.

GREY Division Grange No. 2 will meet at Rocklyn Thursday the 7th of February, 1884, at 10 o'clock, a. m.

THE County Council met in Owen Sound on Tuesday. Mr. John Cameron. Reeve of Holland was elected warden.

A GREAT portion of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refinery was destroyed by fire on Tuesday, in Montreal, Loss $150,000.

WIARTON is taking steps towards securing a line of Steamers the coming season between that place and Port Arthur.

School Books. — Royal Readers, Canadian Readers, and all ordinary text books at the Medical Hall A. Turner & Co.

MR. DAN. MCCARTY of Glenelg has purchased the west ½ of lot 11 con. 10 Glenelg recently occupied by Alexander Wilson for $1.180.

THREE subscribers are yet in arrears to the STANDARD, we will not give their names to the public but will forward them to the Clerk of the Division Court before long if not paid up.

MR. CARTER, has arrived to take Dr. Mackenzie's place in his absence, Dr. Carter was very popular as a medical practitioner when here some years ago and the public are very pleased to have him back.

OUR railway station has been wonderfully improved by being thoroughly renovated, painted, Calcimined and a new floar put in.

ANOTHER CHANGE.—Mr. H. J. Middaugh has resumed control of the Middaugh House and Randolph is going to leave Durham.—Durham Chronicle.

FOR SALE.—A pair of Colts rising two and three years respectively, apply to Andrew Irving one mile East of Markdale T. & S. Road. 176-78.

DON'T FORGET the masquerade tomorrow evening (Friday.) The Gymnasium Club will give a bar performance at nine o'clock.

CAUTION.—We would caution the public against the use of impure teas and would say McFarland has just received another lot of 200 chests pure Japan, strong and full flavored. Adv.

ANDREW MCFARLAND, Sec. of the Markdale lodge of C. O. O. F. was presented with a beautifull silver Plate Cake Basket, by his brethern of the lodge on the occasion of his marriage.

THE Editor of the Advance struggled through one of his periodical fit's last week, Nobody hurt; we expected a change in the weather after it, but were dissapointed.

MR. W. E. MCALLISTER. is again to the fore catering to the wants of the public in Durham, he is an off-handed obliging host, and travellers may depend on being treated with courtesy and attention.

No matter how badly your watches & clocks are out of order if you want them repaired leave thme with me. I will carefully, honestly, & practically put then in time keeping shape W. A. Brown, Jeweller Markdale.

REV. MR. WILSON, Presbyterian Minister, was presented with a beautifull overcoat and whip valued at $40, together with an address by the young people of his Flesherton congregation on the evening of the 16th inst.,

A SECRET.—The secret of beauty lies in pure blood and good health. Rejuvinater Bitters is the grand key that unlocks all the secretions. It cures all Scrofulous Diseases, acts on the blood, Liver Kidneys, Skin and Bowels, and brings the bloom of health to the palid cheek. Sold only by Smith, the barber.

SAY NEIGHBOR.—Why do you drive all the way to Markdale to do your marketing and shopping; Because I have figured closely the past year and finds it pay's to purchase my good's at McFarland's, it is by all odds the best place. He keeps everything I want and at remarkable low prices. I know it.

ASSIGNED.—Mr. A. L. Robertson, of this town has made an assignment. It is an unpleasant task to record it, as he is an honest, industrious young man, his only error being getting in too expensive a stock, for a start, when hard times were impending. He will still carry on his custom tailoring and it is to be hoped will get a fair share of patronage.—Durham Chronicle.

MR. WM. CAMERON, brother of John Cameron of the Globe, and manager of the London Advertiser, died Friday last from inflammation of the lungs. He was a good man of business, and to his energetic habits and perseverance is largely to be attributed the success of the Advertiser.

OUR PATRONS who wish to subscribe, or renew their subscaiption for any of the following publications will do us a favor by handing the amount in to us at the STANDARD office, viz. Weekly Mail, or Globe, Family Herald and Weekly Star, monthly Farmers Advocate, American Agriculturist, any of the above with the STANDARD for $2.00 or singly for one $1. except the Agriculturist which is $1.50.

FURTHER Improvement.—We have just learned from Mr. Mark Armstrong that he has decided to plant a row of maple trees on each side of the new street's which he is now opening up as referred to in another column. This will be a move in the right direction and will doubtless be highly appreciated by those who intend purchasing lots on the above streets.

SOUTH GREY division grange No. 43. Officers elected for 1884: Master, W. Irvine: Overseer, H. Willis; Sec., C. Moffat; Lec., John Blyth; Steward. Jas. Skene; Ass. Steward, Bro. M. Mearns; Treasurer, Jas. Edge; Gate keeper, Jas. Renton; Ceres, SisterEdge; Pomona, SisMoffat; Flora, SisRedford; Stewardess, Sister Binnie: Assis., Hillis. Auditors. Geo. Binnie and Geo. Lamb. Executive Committee—C. Moffat, John Blyth and Jas. Edge.—Review.

MR. JAMES BROWN, Township Clerk of Glenelg has resigned his position and J. S. Black is appointed to take his place. Mr. Brown has held the office some 25 years during which time he discharged the onerous duties of his office with marked ability, giving the best of satisfaction to the township. The Council board will miss him as he was well posted on municipal law, and was therefore a valuable aquisition to the official board. Mr. Black, his successor is also experienced in municipal matters having served faithfully for many years as assessor, collector &c., in this township, he is unassuming yet pains taking and will doubtless make a good Clerk.

Much as the financial pinch has been felt during the last year the statistics in regard to the number of failures in Canada show that they were not nearly as many as during the year 1879. In '79 there were 2,875 failures reported in the Dominion against 1,460 in '83. On the other hand the number of failures in '83 in the United States is reported at 10,187 against 6,652 in '79, or an increase of 3,535. In regard to '79 in Canada it will be remembered we have had a succesion of poor harvests, while in '83 the case was quite different. There were more failures in Canada last year than in the two preceding years combined and nearly as many as in the three preceding years.

A statement has just been made by the Canadian Pacific railway Co. showing the amount of work they have accomplished during the past year. Nearly seven hundred miles of road were built during the year, consisting of 553 miles of main line, and 140 miles of branch roads. The rails are now laid to the summit of the Rocky Mountains, nearly one thousand miles west of Winnipeg, leaving a gap of but 300 miles to complete the road through to the Pacific Ocean. Nearly two hundred miles of the branch north of the Lake Superior have been completed, leaving something over 400 miles yet to build. It is now estimated that the entire road conecting the Atlantic with the Pacific, wholly through Canadian territory, will be completed in 1885, and that the trip can then be made across the continent in ninety hours. Lord Lansdowne's wish to be the first Governor-General to cross over to the Pacific by a Canadian railway bids fair to be realized.

SALE OF LOTS.—As may be seen by posters, Mr. Mark Armstrong has decided to offer 20 lots in Markdale for sale in the most handsome portion of the town for residences, and to this end the following important and commendable changes will be made. Mark Street will be opened from Queen St. at Mr. Bowes residence South wards to Wellington Street and thence west to Mill Street by Mr. Edward Davis residence, another Street will be opened west of Montgomery's Bakery running south east from Mill Street to Mark Street, the frame barn will be removed off the reserve to lot 102 leaving room for a row of lots on the new Street as well as a row on each side of Mark Street. This is certainly a very desirable portion of the town for a residence, and a number are already enquiring after them from outside who expect to purchase and build. The terms are easy and we understand the price asked will be within the reach of all, Mr. Gilliand, P. L. S. has been laying out the ground, and a diagram can be seen at any time by applying to the proprietor in this place. A good farm of 100 acres in Euphrasia, 4½ miles from Markdale will also be offered for sale at the same time and place, this is a bush lot, and as timber is becoming valuable, should sell at a good figure. Sale to commence at 1 o'clock on Saturday the 2nd February at the Markdale House, Terms for village lots one third cash, on approved paper at 8 per cent interest. balance in to and three years at 8 per cent for farm one half cash, balance in 4 years at 8 per cent.

Credit Sale Register.

FRIDAY JAN. 25th, at Mr. Richard Sparling's Lot 27, con. 10, Euphrasia, a large quantity of farm stock, implements &c, Sale to commence at 12:30. Terms, 12 months on approved paper. W. J. Shepherdson, auctioneer.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30th, At Mr. John Coulthard's, lot 14, con. 9, Osprey, farm stock, implements &c., will be sold without reserve. Sale to commence at one o'clock p. m. Terms, 12 months on approved paper. Ira H. Perigo, Auctioneer.

MARKDALE MARKETS.

Fall Wheat, $0.60 to $1.00; Spring $0.60 to 1.00; Barley, 40 to 55; Peas, 66; Oats, 26c; Butter, 15c; Eggs, 32c; Potatoes, 35c; Hay, $8.00; Pork, 6.00 to 6.50; Flour, $4.75 to $5.00.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

VILLAGE TRUSTEES.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR.—In reference to our Village Trustees I would, in common with ratepayers generally, like to see the trustees of '83 give an account of their stewardship; would also like to see our new trustees turn over a leaf and adopt a more systematic mode of transacting the business of the village; why not have the minutes of their meetings reported (that is if they have held any).

CITZEN.

THE VALLEY ROAD.

To Editor Standard:

DEAR SIR,—On again seeing my informant about date of Mr. Flesher's departure for England, I find ample proof that Mr. Flesher was here till middle of October, 1880. So the Reeve's plea that he could not get a deed from Mr. Flesher in Sept. 1880, same time that he got Hogg's deed because, (as he said) Mr. Flesher had gone to England a year before that time, falls to the ground from the fact that Flesher was here. Perhaps he will now state why he did not secure both deeds at same time. Most certainly he ought to make best amends he can by using every effort to get the deed at once before the season advances and let those ratepayers who are willing to do work at their own expense on the road get at it as early as possible and not be making needless apologies for Mr. Flesher, who can be in no default till after the Reeve presents the deed to him for signature. I trust the Reeve will be active in this matter for "Artemesia expects her Reeve to do his duty."

Yours truly,
WM. HOGG.

THAT CONTROVERSY.

To the Editor of the Standard.

SIR.—The advance man has again emerged from his den into which he beat such a hasty retreat some weeks ago. There, in silence and sclitude the very personification of Mother Hubbard's only dependant he has lain ever since, until last week when he got on imaginary bone, he slowly emerges, gives a few groans but cane bite. Would it not be more systematic for him to finish that other matter before he takes up a new subject? That he should presume to publicly comment upon my business matters without knowing the facts shows plainly that he was not seeking to maintain the rights of any one public or private, but giving vent to his pent up spleen wounded vanity and degenerating the calling he assumes into a species of blackmailing and slander in a way which for sake of the profession I am happy to say no true journalist is capable. Mr. Fawcett should remember it is yet fresh in the minds of his readers that he tried this on me before with what success I am willing to leave the public to judge. I am curious to know what the man's object is. If he presumes his influence personally or through his paper effects me one way or another he is mistaken for while I fully appreciate the good will and respect of my fellow men who are worthy, yet I hold in contempt any efforts men of his stamp make to injure me. Regrading the matter of which he speaks with such assumed knowledge otherwise wilful ignorance, I can give a satisfactory explanation to any one desiring it. In conclusion I would suggest that when he undertakes to write about me again to either know what he is writing about or have the decency to mind his own business.

Yours respectfully,
W. G. PICKELL

DEATHS.

Notices of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, twenty five cents.

ELLIOTT.—In Artemesia, on the 21st inst., Mrs. Thos. Elliott, sr., aged 73 yrs., 4 m.

Monthly Fairs.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.

Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.

Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.

Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.

Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.

LOGS WANTED.

The undersigned is prepared to buy all the Baswood, Burch Ash, Hemlock and Maple saw logs perfectly sound, to be delivered at Davis' Mill, Meaford Road, for which the highest price will be given in cash. Parties bringing custom logs can get them cut either on shares or by the thousand, satisfaction guaranteed as the proprietor has engaged a first class sawyer.

EDWARD DAVIS,
Proprietor.

NOTICE.

Those indebted to the undersigned will please call and settle without further delay. Owing to the late fire I am in need of all outstanding accounts.

R. ASKIN.

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia. Age, year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

NOTICE.

All parties indebted to the undersigned are hereby requested to pay the same to A. Turner, Markdale. He is the only person in Markdale authorized to receive monies due me and to give receipts therefor.

175-77. T. S. SPROULE, M. D.

NOTICE.

All who are indebted to the undersigned, are hereby notified to settle the same either by cash or note, at once, as I am obliged to make close collections owing to the recent fire.

JOHN McKENNA.

FOR SALE.

Dwelling House, shop, Suitable for grocery store, or other business, with dwelling above, and stable on the lot, on mill street, corner lot, good business site, apply to S. DAMUDE, Flesherton, or C. W. RUTLEDGE, Markdale.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12. Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.
Oct.16.1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 118, con. 1, West T. & S. R., Artemesia, containing 50 acres, more or less, all cleared and under cultivation. A good bank barn, and log dwelling house on the premises, also a thriving young orchard just commencing to bear, situated about 2¼ miles from the thriving village of Markdale. For Terms and particulars apply at this office or to

JOHN HAZARD,
Flesherton Station.

MARKDALE HOUSE,

MARKDALE, - - ONT.

MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

A. HILL,

Fashionable Tailor,

OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.

A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT.

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,
CASKETS,
SHROUDS,
and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

THE BEST PLACE

TO GET

A GOOD PHOTOGRAPH!

North of Toronto, is at the

Markdale - Gallery.

That's so, for a friend of mine had his taken there and he says they are even better than what he had taken in Toronto.

JAMES HAMILTON, - ARTIST.

YOUNG FOLKS.

Abner's Baby.

BY RUTH CHESTERFIELD.

Grandfather Tufts sat in the chimney-corner smoking his pipe. This was in the times when people had chimney-corners; when they fought for "their altars and their fires," and not for "a hole in the floor."

His wife was in the opposite corner carding wool. Around them were gathered more children and grand children than anybody but the census man or a professor of mathematics would undertake to count. For although the sons and daughters of the house had many of them married and left the paternal roof, they had all settled in the neighborhood, and were very much in the habit of running in of an evening to see how the "old folks" ware getting along. As to their numerous progeny, there was no place like grandpa's house to them, every child who is so fortunate as to have a grandfather must know that.

Not that it was a very fine house,—many of them lived in far finer ones,—but then it was grandpa's house, and there was an end of it. Of course, it fronted the south, for if our ancestors had not discovered the virtues of blue glass, they knew all about the virtues of sunlight, and were not a bit afraid to let it in their windows.

In order to turn its face to the south, the house had to turn its back to the street, toward which the sinkspout sent its meandering stream to the delectation of passers-by. But enough of this. Were I to tell you of all the nooks and crannies of that ancient dwelling, of its barns and out-houses, the smithy, with its heavenward-soaring sparks; of all, in short, that made the place what it was, I should never get to the end of my story.

As Grandfather Tufts sat smoking his pipe, he and his sons fell to talking politics, just as men do now-a-days when they get together of an evening, and this naturally led back to the time when grandfather was young, and he cast his first vote for Gen. Washington.

The sound of this familiar name was a signal for the children to swarm around him and clamor around for some war stories, for they knew that grandfather had served in the Continental Army, and indeed believed that he was the greatest man in it, or next to the greatest. "If it hadn't been for grandpa and Washington, we should have a king now," said his eldest grandson, Tobias; and all the younger ones accepted the statement as a part of their creed.

"War stories?" said grandfather, "Let me see;" and he put on his thinking-cap and looked silently into the fire for a few minutes.

"I believe there's one story I never told," said he, at length.

"Let's hear it! let's hear it!" cried a chorus of voices.

"Well, get down off my legs and back, half a dozen of you, and I'll tell it."

The children obeyed, all excepting little Huldah, who still sat perched on his knee; but this he did not seem to mind, for Huldah was a privileged character.

Then Grandpa cleared his throat and began:

"Once there was a boy named—well, for want of a better name, we'll say Abner."

"My, that's your name, grandpa!"

"He lived in a house a good deal like this house, and he was something such a looking boy as Tobias, there," continued grandfather, unheeding the interruption. "But instead of going to school and hunting rabbits and so on, as Tobias does, he had to pick up his learning as best he could; and though he learned to shoot as soon as he was big enough to lift a rifle, it was so he might be ready to fight the bears and wolves and Indians that filled the woods."

"Did he ever kill any?" asked Tobias.

"Yes; he shot a bear before he was eleven years old."

"Oh, wasn't that brave?" exclaimed Tobias.

"Well, not so very, seeing that the bear was in a trap. It was about this time that the Indians came to Squantum and carried of Kerr and Morgan; it made a great excitement, but just as the men were forming a company to go in search of them, they both came back, having contrived to escape while the savages were asleep. Abner was always boasting what he would have done if he'd been in their places; how he would have killed his captors and brought home their scalps. He wished they'd come again and he'd have one shot yt them, he knew. Well, by-and-by they did come.

The alarm was given about three o'clock in the morning, but Abner was very willing to lend his rifle to his big brother, who had broken the lock of his, and stay at home with the women folks. Shooting Indians didn't look so heroic near to as it did a good ways off. It was just as the sun was rising that Abner's father came home, bringing the news that two of the Indians had been killed, and the rest driven away; but not till they had wounded three white men. 'And that isn't the worst of it,' said he, looking at Abner's mother as if he kind o' hated to tell her the rest."

"'Then one of our neighbors is killed,' says she turning very pale.

"'Worse yet,' says he. 'The first thing they did was to attack Isaac Quimby's house, and as there was nobody but Isaac and his wife in it, except the baby, of course they had everything their own way.'

"Isaac was found close by the door all hacked to pieces, his gun beside him, and she was on the floor not far off, both stone dead."

"'And the baby!' asked Abner's mother.

"'They must have carried that off with 'em for there wasn't a sign of it anywhere. Just as soon as we can get together force enough, we're going in search of it, and we mean to punish them for that and all their other sins, the savage miscreants.'

"Abner was for rushing up to the Quimby house the first thing, but his father wouldn't let him till the bodies had been taken care of. "'T'aint a sight for women and children,'" says he. So when Abner got there, nobody was in the house but some boys about his age—for the bodies had been carried into a neighbor's; the savages had made such work there, it wasn't fit to have a funeral in.

"Well, the boys ransacked the house from garret to cellar, and then they thought they would go and try and get a sight at the bodies. They had all run out but Abner. And he was stopping to shut the door, when he heard a sound that he thought at first might be the cat. He called "Pussy, Pussy," because he hated to leave even a cat alone in such a place. The cry, which was sort of smothered like, grew louder. And then he was certain that it wasn't a cat at all, but a child.

"You may be sure he searched with a good will then: up garret, down cellar, in cupboards, in boxes. At last he even put his head up the chimney, and then the cry was louder than ever.

"A bright thought came into his head. He opened the oven door, and there, wrapped all up in bed blankets, was Mrs. Quimby's baby! He pulled it out and ran home with it as fast as he could go, and soon the news spread abroad, and everybody came flocking to see it.

"The great question was, how came it in the oven? Some were disposed to think the savages hid it there; but it was so carefully stowed away in the blankets, that all finally agreed that its mother hid it there for safety; that the noise the savages made drowned its cries, and that afterward it got all tired out and fell asleep. Anyway, there it was, without a bruise or a cut on it.

"The town offered to provide for it,—seeing that it hadn't any relations that anybody knew of. But Abner's mother said no, it had come to her in such a way that she felt as though the Lord had sent it to her, and could never give it up. But Abner always called it his baby, and promised to take care of it as soon as he was old enough.

"And did he?" asked Huldah.

"Ask your grandmother," said Grandfather Tufts, looking smilingly at the old dame carding wool in the opposite corner.

"Oh, I understand," cried Tobias; "you were Abner yourself. Why didn't I think of it before?"

"Yes, I was Abner, and your grandmother is the little baby I found in the oven."—Youth's Companion.

The Romance of a Bank Note.

In the year 1740 one of the directors of the Bank of England, a man of unimpeachable honor, lost a bank note for £30,000, under peculiar circumstances. It seems he had bought an estate for that money, and for convenience sake obtained a note for that amount. As he was about to put it under lock and key, after he reached home, he was called out of the room, whereupon, as he thought, he placed it upon the mantelpiece. Upon returning, a few minutes later, the note had disappeared. It could not have been stolen, for no one had entered the room, whereupon he concluded that it had been blown into the fire and had been consumed. He laid the matter before the officers of the bank, and they reissued a note for the same amount, he giving bonds to reimburse the bank if the note should ever be presented for payment. Thirty years after, when he had long been dead and his estate distributed among his heirs, the supposed non-existent note turned up at the bank counter for payment. As the bank could not afford to dishonor the obligation, the money was paid out, and the heirs of the dead man were asked to make good the loss; this they refused to do, nor could the bank employ any legal machinery to force them to do so. The person who profited by the matter was supposed to be a builder, employed to pull down the dead man's house and build another on its site. He found the missing £30,000 note in a crevice in the chimney, in which it somehow got lodged after being laid on the mantelpiece. It must have been kept many years, and its presentation to the bank was so arranged that the builder became a rich man by a sudden stroke of blind fortune.

Parnell and Ireland.

The Irish people and their sympathizers have made a gift of nearly $200,000 to Mr. Parnell, the now famous Irish Parliamentary leader. The object is to enable him to devote himself to the service of his country unembarrassed by business cares. Mr. Parnell is very cordially disliked by the English people, but he has been remarkably successful in forcing the British government to pay some heed to the condition of Ireland. He has proved himself a skillful leader. After the next general election, it is conceded, he will secure the control of a sufficient number of votes to hold the balance of power between the Tories and the Liberals. In other words, he can put the ministry of either party in Parliament out of power by defeating them in the House of Commons. The distressed conditiod of Ireland, as well as of rural England, is due more to economic than to political causes. Animal and vegetable food can be bought so cheaply in the United States, Russia, India, and other countries that the Irish agricultural laborer cannot compete with them in the grain and meat markets. There are no coal or iron mines in Ireland, and consequently no manufactures. Hence the one pursuit of the people — agriculture — not being remunerative, keeps them in poverty. Home rule might be a good thing for Ireland, but diversified industries, if they were possible, would be better.

Early Marriages.

Lady Sarah Cadogan, daughter of William, first Earl Cadogan, was married at the age of 13 to Charles, second Duke of Richmond, aged 18. It is said that this marriage was a bargain to cancel a gambling debt between their parents, Lady Sarah being a co-heiress. The young Lord March was brought from college and the little lady from her nursery for the ceremony, which took place at The Hague. The bride was amazed and silent, but the husband exclaimed: "Surely you are not going to marry me to that dowdy!" Married, however, he was, and his tutor then took him off to the Continent, and the bride went back to her mother. Thre years after Lord March returned from his travels, but, having such a disagreeable recollection of his wife, was in no hurry to join her, and went the first evening to the theatre. There he saw a lady so beautiful that he asked who she was. "The reigning toast, Lady March," was the answer he got. He hastened to claim her, and their life-long affection for each other is much commented upon by contemporaneous writers—indeed, it was said that the Duchess, who only survived him a year, died of grief.

No one perfectly loves God who does not perfectly love some of His creatures.

AFRICAN TRAVEL.

Interesting Incidents Related by Count Antonelli—An "Exchange of Blood."

At a lecture given in Rome by Count Antonelli, the African traveller, there were exhibited six magnificent elephants' tusks, one of which was more than five feet long. The count was accompanied by two native Gallas, youth of graceful form and gentle bearing. Among the incidents of his journey related by Count Antonelli, the following ceremony is interesting: An "exchange of blood" in token of eternal friendship with the Sultan of Rhaita. "We met," said the Count, "in a hut, where a long prayer was first recited, and afterward various speeches were made. I expressed myself as follows; "My dear friends, I am ignorant of your language and can not express all my sensiments; but it is enough to say that I have requested the Sultan of Aussa to adopt me as his son, and that now we will exchange blood, so that the blood of your people may be as dear to me as my own, and mine as dear to you. I think you will understand me." Another long prayer followed, after which the Sultan and I were conducted under a tree to which an ox was tied. The Sultan cut the ox's throat, and with its blood anointed my forehead and then his own; after which he made a necklace and bracelets out of the skin of the ox and placed them on my neck and arms, saying: 'Men, women! this white man is our brother!' In the country of the Danakils a prophet came to our camp; so one evening we made a large circle in the tent, and everyone, flattering the prophet, overwhelmed him with questions. At last he began to chant replies, which were repeated in a loud voice by all present, accompanied with gesticulations of the hands and feet. The prophet gradually became excited, till at last he howled and struggled like a demoniac. When questioned about me he said that the king of Sicoa would receive me well; the superstitious Danakils were discontented with this laconic prophecy, and began to have suspicions of our expedition. Next day, therefore, I invited the prophet to my tent, gave him to eat and drink in profusion, and made him a quantity of small presents. This so delighted him that at the evening meeting he praised me to the skies, prophesying all sorts of good. I was obliged to show myself to the Danakils in a semi-nude costume, for the report had spread that I was a brother, and as such they received me in their tents." The following is Count Antonelli's description of his reception by the terrible Sultan of Aussa: "When I arrived at the Sultan's residence I found myself in the midst of about two thousand warriors, who were executing a diabolic dance, uttering savage howls, and striking their weapons together. The Sultan was watching whether this spectacle would alarm me, but on seeing that I walked quietly on without taking any notice, he caused me to be ushered into his presence. I found a tall man about 50 years of age, with a robust frame, and dark complexion, wearing a rather curly beard. His eyes were stern and his expression self-satisfied—that of a man who believes himself the greatest and most powerful man on earth. He looked askance at me, and pointed to a native, who he said was the chief of the men who could change themselves into hyenas. I desired to see the transformation, but he informed me it could not be done at once, but that I should hear his voice. Then the man imitated the cry of the hyena. The Sultan, seeing that it made no impression on me, was very content, and gave me an old ugly harmonica, saying: 'Amuse yourself with that, and drink some coffee; afterward we will see.' In fact, we soon signed a solemn pact of friendship, after which the Sultan said, in a sentimental voice: 'Many people have told you that I am an assassin, and many have spoken ill of you to me. Well, then, let us make a bargain—I will never believe anything that is said against you, and you must never believe anything bad of me.' The Sultan's daughters are beautiful black Venuses, and are clothed almost as light as that goddess. They are not allowed to marry except when the moon lies low on the horizon between two stars. This combination happens rarely, so one of the princesses grew impatient, rebelled, and took a husband to herself at a time when there was no moon between two stars. When the Sultan heard of the impious act he ordered that his daughter should be driven out of the tribe and given to certain merchants, who would take her to the devil's house. But the priests interfered, and the young girl, instead of being exiled, was drowned in the lake of Aussa."

Tennyson a Lord.

The great poet Tennyson has decided to abandon the name which he has made famous and to figure in future history as Baron Tennyson-D'yncort, of Aldworth. His acceptance of this paltry distinction is very unpopular in England, and is regarded with disfavor throughout the reading world. Tennyson will undoubtedly figure in the history of letters as the peer of any poet who has written in the English tongue save alone the unapproachable Shakespeare, and it is regarded as unworthy his great fame that he should value so antiquated a bauble as a coronet, and sink his personality in a fanciful and unknown title. The age is democratic, and even in England it is now understood that titles add no distinction to an eminent man of letters. The distinguished novelist Dickens several times refused to become a lord, though it is said that Thackeray, despite his ostentatiously expressed contempt for lordlings, died a disappointed man because a title had never been offered him.—Demorest's Monthly.

A Remedy, Perhaps.

It is claimod that a new drug called pilocarpin, an extract from a Brazilian plant called the jaborandi, is the long looked-for antidote to hydrophobia. A priest in Caen, France, was attacked by this dreadful disease, when the attending physician administered this drug by a subcutaneous injection in the forearm, twenty grains being used in six doses. This induced vomiting, and subsequently a profuse perspiration. The priest shortly after got entirely well.

Under the laws of Providence, life is a probation; probation is a succession of temptations; temptations are emergencies; and for emergencies we need the preparation and the safeguard of prayer.

PERSONAL.

The Hon. George Bancroft was suddenly taken ill while playing "on all fours" with his grandchildren last week, and was confined to his bed for several days.

The oldest peer of Great Britain, the Earl of Buckingham, who recently attained his ninetieth year, is in priest's orders. Besides him eight other peers are in holy orders' namely, the Marquis of Donegal (Dean of Raphoe), the Earls of De La Warr, Carlisle and Stamford, Lord Plunket, (Bishop of Meath), Lord Saye and Sele, (Archdeacon of Hereford), Lord Scarsdale, and Lord Hawke. The Earl of Mulgrave, heir apparent to the Marquisate of Normanby, is also a clergyman.

Brigham Young is buried back of Zion House, on the bluffs of Salt Lake City. His grave was dug in solid rock, at the bottom of which is laid a stone six feet wide, ten feet long, and two feet thick. On each side of the coffin is a stone two feet high, two feet thick, six feet long, and at each end a stone two feet thick, and on the top of the whole is a stone six feet wide and ten feet long. All these stones have holes drilled through them, with a heavy iron rod running through them cemented with hot lead. Then on top of all this is solid mason work.

Speaking of the bonanza kings, a correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat says: "Flood, Fair, and Mackay are brawny, full-blooded men, with good color, heightened by good living and drinking. They dress carelessly and have all the California characteristics—free and easy in address, hail fellows well met with all their friends. Sharon, on the contrary, could sit for a picture of a good Connecticut deacon. He is thin, angular, under-sized, flat-chested, with straight, lank hair, whitened by age, combed down smooth over his small head; a pallid face, almost destitute of expression, and a moustache that adds nothing to the countenance. When he looks at you, however, you notice a pair of eyes as sharp as those of a weasel, and the quiet gestures show that the small body has a good deal of nervous energy. He always dresses in plain, black broadcloth, of ministerial cut, and this, with his white necktie and silk hat, adds to his clerical appearance. He is one of the best poker players on the Pacific Coast."

AN INGENIOUS THIEF.

Sharp Jeweller Robbed of Valuable Gems.

"Of all the tricks, devices, subterfuges, sharp dodges, or deceptions I saw," said a jeweller to a reporter, "was one by which a sharp fellow stole from me three pairs of diamond ear-rings. He evidently knew when I was not in the shop. He came in one day and said to one of my clerks, 'Is Mr. Johnson in?' 'No,' was the reply. 'I am sorry for that,' he said, 'I wish to buy a pair of diamond ear-rings for my wife.' This was repeated on four or five successive days. The last time he said he would not wait to see me, but would look at some ear-rings. The clerk showed him an assortment, and he finally selected three pairs, valued at £100, and said: 'I guess I will let my wife select from these. She will be at my office in an hour, and I want you to tell Mr. Johnson to bring these around himself, as he is acquainted with my wife.' 'All right, sir, I will,' replied the clerk. 'By the way,' said the fellow, 'if you will permit me, I will write a note to Mr. Johnson.' 'Certainly,' said the clerk, as he showed him a desk, and pointed out where he could get paper and envelopes. He sat down, wrote a short note, folded it and put it in an envelope, and directed it to me. Then he went back to the counter, and said to the clerk, 'I think you had better put the three pairs of ear-rings in here, so that Mr. Johnson will be sure to bring the right ones.' 'Very well,' said the clerk, who handed out three pairs of ear-rings. The fellow dropped them in the envelope before the clerk's eyes, and was apparently about to seal the envelope when he said suddenly, 'Oh, I guess you may put in that other pair,' pointing to a pair which the clerk had laid on the shelf behind him. The clerk turned and got the other pair and handed them to the fellow who dropped them apparently into the same envelope, sealed them up, handed them over, and said, 'Let Mr. Johnson bring the four pairs to my office as soon as he comes back,' giving the address of a well-known firm in the vicinity. Then he left, and the clerk laid the envelope on the side until I returned. Of course we found but one pair of diamond ear-rings in the envelope, which was the last pair dropped in. The other three pairs were paste, about the same size. The fellow had taken two of my envelopes, and into one he had placed the three bogus pairs. When the clerk turned to get the fourth pair the fellow had put the genuine into his pocket and substituted the others. We never saw him afterwards, but heard that he had practised the same game in other places.—London Paper.

Feather Flowers.

It requires a certain amount of patience to achieve success in making feather flowers, while satisfactory resuls are sure to add a smiling beauty to the adorning of an artistically appointed household. Fashionables rusticating in the country can easily procure a bunch of white geese feathers and amuse themselves an hour or so by cutting out of these feathers leaves like the flowers that are to be copied. Make the bulbs of beeswax and rosin, mixed together in equal proportions; to this stick the leaves, the stamens and centre parts of the wire and zephyr. In painting the leaves, a nice delicate touch should be had in order to give a natural effect. Get tube paints—such as are used for oil paintings. After painting the leaves lay them aside to dry. Do not use them for ten or twelve hours at least. A tube each of chrome yellow, rose madder, clear white, and Prussian blue will be all the paints required to produce a lovely bouquet. Mix the yellow and blue to obtain green for painting the leaves. With a little practice in mixing the paints they can be made as beautiful as wax. There are several ways to use feather flowers beside clustering them. A wreath, a cross, an anchor, and birds are often made and placed in boxes with a rich velvet background and fine glass in front, bordered with a framework of velvet, or wood exquisitely covered with water-colored pictures, making an elegant parlor ornament.

History of the Alphabet.

How many of the millions that daily use the alphabet ever stop to think of its origin and long history? In the true spirit of a student, Isaac Taylor, a well-known English writer on philosophical and philological subjects, has recently written and published, in London, two stout volumes under the title: "The Alphabet, an Account of the Origin and development of letters," It is only by help of recent discoveries of early inscriptions and the progress in the art of reading lost languages and deciphering hitherto unknown symbols, that such a well posted history has become possible. By careful study of the learned essays and scientific investigations of the latest philologists, Taylor has set forth in language of easy comprehension the origin of the alphabet, showing that our own "Roman" letters may be followed back to their very beginning, some twenty or more centuries ago, as he asserts. We have no better letters, according to the account, than those of the Italian printers of the fifteenth century. These were imitated from the beautiful manuscripts of the tenth and eleventh centuries, the lettering of these being derived from the Roman of the Augustan age. The Roman letters, in turn, are traced to those employed at Rome in the third century B C, and these do not differ greatly from forms used in the earliest existing specimens of Latin writing, dating from the fifth century B. C. This primitive alphabet of Rome was derived from a local form of the Greek alphabet, in use about the sixth century B. C. and that was a variety of the earliest Greek alphabet belonging to the eighth, or even the ninth century B. C. The Greeks got their letters from the Phœnicans, and theirs are clearly traceable in the most ancient known forms of the Semitic.

The most ancient of books, a papyrus found at Thebes, and now preserved in the French National Library, supplies the earliest forms of the letters used in the Semitic alphabet. The Stone Tables of the Law could have been possible to the Jews only because of their possession of an alphabet, and thus the Bible and modern philology science unite in ascribing a common origin to the alphabet which is in daily use throughout the world. The nineteenth century B. C. is held by Taylor to be the approximate date of the origin of alphabetic writing, and from that time it grew by slow degrees, while from Egypt, the home of the Jews during their long captivity, the knowledge of the alphabet was carried in all directions where alphabets are now found.

The Aryans are now thought to have been the first to bring the primitive alphabet to perfection, and each letter and each sound may be traced, by Taylor's careful analysis through all the changes that have marked the growth, progress, and, in some instances the decay of different letters of various alphabets. It is an interesting fact that the oldest known "A B C" in existence is a child's alphabet, scratched on a little bottle of black were, found in one of the oldest Greek settlements in Italy, attributed to the 5th century B. C. The early letters, and many later ones are known only by incriptions, and it is the rapid increase by recent discoveries, of these precious fragments that has inspired more diligent search and quickened the zeal of learned studeuts in mastering the elements of knowledge of their origin and history throughout the world. As late as 1876 there were found in Cyprus some bronze plates inscribed with Phœnician characters, dating back to the tenth, even the eleventh century B. C.

Coins, engraved gems, inscribed statues and, last of all, the Siloam inscription found in 1880 at Jerusalem, on the wall of an old tunnel, have supplied new materials for the history. From the common mother of many alphabets, the Phœnician, are descended the Greek and other European systems on the one side, including that which we use and have the greatest interest in; and on the other, the alphabets of Asia from which have sprung those of the Ethiopic, Syriac, Arabic, and Hebrew.

RELIGIOUS THOUGHTS.

The soul is strong that trusts in God.

Sorrow for sin is the golden key that opens the palace of eternity.

Prayer is not conquering God's reluctance, but taking hold of God's willingness.

Heaven will be the sweet surprise of perfect explanation.

What we need is to pray, not work up a philosophy of prayer.

None are ruined by the justice of God, but those who hate to be reformed by the grace of God.

Do all that you can to stand, and then fear lest you fall, and by the grace of God you are safe.

Science is but a mere heap of facts, unless golden chain of truth, if we refuse to link it to the throne of God.

As water runs down from the swelling hills, and flows together in the lowly vale, so grace flows not but into humble hearts.

Humility is, of all the graces, the chief when it does not know itself to be a grace at all.

Those who would let anything take the place of Christianity must first abolish sorrow from the earth.

Those who have attained the farthest sight into nature have been in all ages believers in God.

It is an unhappy division that is made between faith and work. Though in point of interest I may divide them, just as in a candle I know there is both light and heat, yet put out the candle and they are both gone; one remains not without the other. So it is between faith and works.

A singular coincidence has been discovered in connection with the marriage of the Hon. Mr. Lyon second son of the Earl of Swarthmore, and Lady Anne Lindsay, which took place on November 22nd. On November 22, exactly five hundred years ago, Sir James Lindsay, then head of the house of Lindsay, slew the representative of the house of Swarthmore in the course of a scuffle between followers of the two families. The marriage five hundred years afterwards, of the houses which were then at deadly variance with each other, is a pleasant and significant commemoration of the tragic event.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items from all Parts of the World.

UNITED STATES.

As a result of the Pittsburg glass-works strike, co-operative factories are being started by the workmen.

Georgia farmers are busy securing laborers for the coming season, and it is said that the supply is equal to the demand.

Strawberries from a New Jersey hot-house sell for $1 a dozen. Peaches may be ordered for $3 each in very small quantities.

Newport, R. I., has received $20 000 from the State, as partial compensation for ceding Coasters' Harbor Island to the national government.

Though 52,000,000 bushels of grain were despatched from New York to Europe last year, not one American vessel cleared with grain as its cargo.

Semi-annual dividends to the amount of $1,051,750 will be paid by corporations in Hartford, Conn., this month, being about the same as last year.

The book-keeper of the Washington Bank, Boston, has been in the employ of that institution fifty years, and has never asked for nor taken a day's vacation.

Killing alligators for their skins and teeth employs a large force of men in Florida, who have engaged to furnish 500,000 skins to a French tannery in a given time.

Mr. J. C. Flood's Christmas gifts to the orphan asylums, etc., of San Francisco aggregated $6,000, Protestants, Catholics, and Hebrews being treated alike.

Louisiana, has 2,557 factories, working 30,072 hands, with a capital invested of $18,313,974, paying annually in wages $4,503,470, and yielding annually in products $24 161,905.

There were 1,775 violent deaths in Philadelphia last year, and 110 of the victims have never been identified. Seventy of the latter were infants; the others were men and all white but one.

Despatches from the West report the coldest weather known for years. In the North-west Territories it is 50 below zero in some localities, the cold wave moving eastward.

It is expected that General Grant will visit Havana during the month. He will be the guest of his friend General Badeau, the United States Consul-General for Cuba.

Senator Fair sent $1,000 as a Christmas gift to the Nevada Orphan Asylum in Virginia, with a pleasant letter in which he alluded to the many happy days he had spent in that city.

The ship-building industry in Maine has proved more satisfactory this year on the whole than was expected last spring, on account of the prevailing low freights. Last year there was an unusual number of tons built, and in 1883 the total comes within 70,78 tons of the total for 1882.

A New York cigar dealer has invented a "tobacco refrigerator" for keeping the weed fresh and moist while exposed for sale. It is a cigar stand and tobacco-box combined, made of polished white metal, and divided in the centre by two perforated partitions, between which is placed a wet sponge.

South Carolina has a local option law which applies to incorporated cities, towns and villages. When a place votes in favor of prohibition it is said to have gone "dry," and when another votes for license it is said to have gone "wet." More than twice as many towns have gone "dry" has have gone "wet."

An Exchange says:—A bill permitting divorce for adultery was defeated in the State Senate of South Carolina, recently, on the ground, among others, that divorce laws are a "Northern institution," and therefore not proper to be adopted in South Carolina. It was shown that the Bible authorizes divorce for adultery, and also that the lack of a law of that kind leads to adultery, and so often a cruel wrong to innocent parties: but the objection could not be overcome, and South Carolina remains solid on the adultery issue.

CANADIAN.

A new bridge has been built across the Richelieu river at Lacolle, P. Q., costing $17,000.

A Chicago paper states that no less than 5,000 Canucks left that city at holiday time to visit "the old folks at home.

The eldest surviving daughter of Sir Hector Langevin was married recently to Thomas Chapias, son of Senator Chapias, and Private Secretary to Lieut. Governor Robitaille.

The produce of the coal mines of Nova Scotia during the first three quarters of 1883 amounted to 1,078,396 tons—an increase over the same period of the previous year of 97,963 tons. The sales during the same period aggregated 966,060 tons—an increase of 93 157.

The Buffalo papers describe McBride, who is arranging to blow up the public buildings on the other side of the line, and thus avenge O'Donnell's death, as a first-water crank. In Chicago they make congressmen of such men as McBride. This crazy Buffalonian should come West.

The returns of fish exported to Chicago from Halifax over the Intercolonial Railway show that 160 car-loads were shipped during the year, divided as follows: 2,761 one hundred pound boxes, 61 four quintal casks and 319,985 pounds in bulk of codfish; 1,616 boxes boneless codfish; 2,583½ barrels mackerel; 7,198 barrels herring.

An American exchange says:—Here's an item of commercial news that require no elaboration in order to convey an idea of the growth of certain branches of Canadian trade: The export of cattle from Montreal has increased from 2 888 head in 1876 to 50,366 in 1883, while during the same period the export of sheep has risen from 2,686 head to 102,835.

The Provincial library at Halifax claims to have the only volume of the life of the late prince consort presented by Queen Victoria to an American colony. On the fly-leaf is written, in her majesty's clear style of penmanship: Presented to the legislative library of Nova Scotia in memory of her great and good husband, by his broken-hearted widow, Victoria R, 1864.

An African Sultan.

The death of Berehan, Sultan of Raheita, was lately reported from Aden. The following description of him, contributed to the Corriere di Nattino by Sig. Licata, the Italian traveller who penetrated to that far region, may be found interesting:

"I remember," Sig. Licate, "the last visit that Berehan made us, and the last words I heard him pronounce at Buja, where we had prepared for him a throne of new matting and a glass of temarind. He said that his people believed that we white were like panthers, but that he had seen that we were good, and he smiled around upon us while pushing away our little dogs that tried to lick him, for if they had succeeded in doing so he would have been obliged to take a bath to purify himself. He was mightly content with what little court we paid him, and with the carbineer who stood at the door. That morning he had been on board the Cariddi, and the little flag we had hoisted in his honor, the manœuvering of the cannon, the salute from a Nordenfeldt, had filled him with a sense of his sultanic dignity. He had the highest quality of a king—ambition—although all his sovereignity consisted in his having, under the immediate care of the crown prince, more goats and camels than other people. He asked, as he always did, for a little coffee to take with him. He suffered from heart disease, and had been having a fire kindled on his breast to cure him, as well as hanging a leather bag containing a piece of the koran round his neck. Then he felt safe, having more faith in the efficacy of such methods than in all the pills and draughts of the doctor. The fire and the koran were sufficient, for his malady was a devil that had entered his body, and must be driven out by the name of Allah. I saw him first at Raheita, in his royal palace of matting. The Egyptians had been molesting him as usual, and he had sent word to his protectors at Assab. As soon as we arrived he fervently pressed our hands, and seated himself on his throne with the air of a Pharaoh and an idol, dressed in white with bracelets made of goat-skin. The court was full of his warriors, greasy with butter, and of cattle just come from the pasture. There was a glittering of lances and horns, an odor of dairy and stable. The harem contributed its notes—a continuous ringing of silver and glass ornaments and the squalls of babies. In fact, all the riches of a goatherd and a pasha. Then I saw him at Assab, when he came to receive the $50 assigned to him every month by our government. He never came without insisting that a palaver should be held to discuss several points concerning the selling of a portion of his territory, I dont know how many years ago. He was as petulant as a beggar, sometimes in a manner to tempt one to give him a bacshish and send him off. He was not yet 50 years of age. He will be succeeded, according to laws of the country, not by his son, but by his nephew, a long fellow, half blind. He died in his bed, amid the lamentations of his subjects. We owe much to Berehan of Raheita. He cooperated in person to the success of Antonelli's expedition. He was less black than he seemed, and now that he is dead he has no color at all. Yes, poor dear Berehan, we are good, and we will write our word of sorrow on the big paper that you wanted so much to be able to read, knowing that it contained the news of all the world. While your wives weep for you, I, two thousand miles away, will buy a little wreath of immortelies and send them to your tomb."

In the Tail of a Comet.

An ingeneous theorizer has written a book which was published by the Appletons, to prove that many ages since the earth must have passed through the tail of a comet, and that certain disturbances observed on the surface of our planet were caused thereby. The scratches and erosions from the north-east and southwest found upon hills and mountains in the northern hemisphere were attributed to the action of the more solid matter of the comet's tail, leaving its marks, together with the bowlders and detached rocks, which are found in such profusion in the Temperate and Frigid Zones. Although this theory would account for much that is mysterious, it has not been accepted by scientists, as it is not believed that tails of comets are formed of any solid material. Early in December last, some curious atmospheric phenomena were noticed in different portions of the world. At sunset and before sunrise the heavens were permeated with a glow of rosy light, such as might have been caused if a great conflagration had been raging. These strange appearances were noticed in both Europe and America. They have puzzled the scientific world. But some venturesome theorists have again put forward the hypothesis of the world being surrounded by the atmosphere of a comet's tail. It is known that about the time these phenomena occurred our planet was in the track of Bela's comet, and in a part of the heavens that was filled with meteors. It is known that comets are more numerous in the heavens than fishes are in the waters of the earth. Their numbers are so great as to be inconceivable to the human mind and it is not at all improbable that the earth in past times may have been entangled in the tails of these wonders of the sky. We live in a marvelous universe. "There are two things," said the great philosopher Kant, "which always fills me with awe and admiration, and those are the wondrous heavens by which we are surrounded and the moral law within."—Demorest's Monthly.

Mr. Elihu Vedder, though principally known as a painter, is a sculptor as well, and some fine specimens of his plastic skill are to be seen in the large iron plates used to back the fire-openings of several Boston hearths. These plates are bass-reliefs of bizarre, mythical heads, modelled with characteristic dash and strength. The very remunerative business of decorating the interiors of private houses is now engaging the attention of a large proportion of the best American painters and sculptors. Artists who, a few years ago, would have considered it beneath their dignity to paint a frieze or to design a mantel, are glad to exercise their genius in this direction. History repeats itself.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere

A new novel is called "Her Life's Secret." If the secret is not her age, we give it up.

Stirring News from the Dark Continent.

The eyes of all the world are just now turned upon that cradle of ancient civilization—the valley of the Nile. A new prophet has appeared at the head of a very large army, and he has succeeded in defeating troops officered by Englishmen and equipped with the best modern arms. The false prophet, El Mahdi, is an Arab, a fanatic, and undoubtedly in his way is a genius. There has been a tradition in the Mohammedan world that in 1883 a successor of Mahomet would make his appearance and deliver the faithful from the mastery of the infidel Giaour. This looked-for leader was to have one marked physical peculiarity—one arm was to be longer than the other. El Mahdi fulfills this condition, for he can touch his knee with the fingers of his right hand. He has succeed in totally destroying the army of General, or as he was called, Hicks Pasha. The flower of the Egyptian army—a Nubian corps—was subsequently defeated by the Bedouin followers of El Mahdi. Should there be a rising of fanatical Moslems throughout Northern Africa it might lead to important consequences. The Gladstone government will be forced to hold Egypt as a dependency, and make sacrifices of men and treasure in beating back the hordes of the false prophet. The government of Egypt is in disorder, and some very curious complications will result from the operations of the military fanatic who won so singular a victory over well-armed and well-disciplined troops.

King Thebaw "Reforms."

According to the news published in the Rangoon papers, King Thebaw has become a "reformed character." Till lately this potentate had been a weak young man, given up to indolence, self-indulgence, and cruelty; but it is reported that since the death of "the monster" Yanoung Prince, a marked change has taken place which has done much to restore King Thebaw's power and influence. With the re-establishment of his ascendency the moderate and enlightened men who have always been attached to his party, and who, not actually vanished from court, have, we learn, lately had little or no say in the conduct of affairs, are now taking the proper positions in the councils of the nation. The king himself has awakened from his lethargy, and has begun to assert himself as sovereign and ruler, while in a corresponding degree the interference and influence of the queen have decreased. He now, according to the same source of information, regularly attends and presides at the meetings of the Hlootdaw, and appears to have suddenly developed a surprising amount of intelligence and energy. The latest news from Thebaw's court is that the king, being determined to make an effort to subdue the rebellious Shan chiefs, has despatched five thousand troops to the Shan states under the command of four generals, accompanied by several Italians in the King's service.

Witchcraft in Scotland.

At the Inverness police court recently, an elderly Highland woman named Isabelle Macrae, or Stewart, was charged with assaulting a little girl. She pleaded not guilty, and the evidenee showed that the latter had used insulting language to the prisoner, while she on the other hand spoke of the little girl's grandmother as a witch. Toward the close of the case great amusement was caused in court by the accused producing a clay image, or corp creagh, which she believed was made by the so-called witch. The legs had been broken off the image, and since then the prisoner believed that her own legs was losing their strength. A person who wished to purchase the image after the accused had left the court was promptly told that on no account would she part with it, for if anything happened to it she might die, and she was not prepared. He husband had died some time ago, and also three horses, and she grieved to think that all these calamities were attributable to witchcraft. The image was about four inches in length, green worsted threads containing the diabolic charm were wound round, while pins were pierced through the part where the heart should be. The accused was convicted and sentenced to fine or imprisonment.—London Daily News.

A clergyman of high reputation, in a large city in Maine, visited the market early on Monday morning. While there his attention was called to some very fine strawberries. He wished very much to purchase some, but it being so very early in the morning it occurred to him that they must have been picked on Sunday, and of course he could not purchase or use anything which had been procured under such circumstances. He inquired of the farmer: "Mr. Smith, were those berries picked on Sunday?" Mr. Smith, with a sly twinkle in his eye, replied: "No, doctor, they were picked this morning, but they grew on Sunday."

If bilions, or suffering from impurity of blood, or weak lungs and fear consumption (scrofulous disease of the lungs), take Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and it will cure you. By druggists.

A Boston girl fell in love with a gray-haired old man, and some of her acquaintances were mean enough to say she had got the antique craze.

FAVORITISM

is a bad thing, but Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" deserve its name. It is a certain cure for those painful maladies and weaknesses which embitter the lives of so many women. Of druggists.

Give to tramps no quarter—not even a bad one.

Being entirely vegetable, no particular care is required while using Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets." They operate without disturbance to the constitution, diet, or occupation. For sick headache, constipation, impure blood, dizziness, sour ernotations from the stomach, bad taste in mouth, bilious attacks, pain in region of kidney, internal fever, bloated feeling about stomach, rush of blood to head, take Dr. Pierce's "pellets." By druggists.

Rank high—The moan of an onion-eating lover.

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impositors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Disbetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

Any kind of goods or fancy article can be dyed any color in a few minutes by Triangle Dyes. A child can use them with perfect success. All the popular colors. 10c.

Cupid is the greatest slay-belle in the world.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto 'Canada.

A maiden effort—Trying to catch a husband.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollors, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator, Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

"Why don't you get up as early as you used to a few days ago?" angrily asked a wife of her lazy husband. "Because, my dear, it's sleep year," he grinned, as he turned over for another snooze.

PECTORIA! Pectoria Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per Bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria; all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

A. P. 161.

DAKOTA—PARTIES DESIRING INFORMATION relative to free homes, with correct maps, circulars, and reliable facts, free of charge. Apply to HARRY MERCER, Travelling Emigration Agent C. M. and St. P. railway, Chatham, Ont.

THE INDUSTRIAL UNION

Provides $2.50 to $10.00 a week in case of sickness or accident, at a cost of from $0.75 to $3.00 per quarter. For particulars enclose stamp to the secresary, Toronto, Ont.

AGENTS WANTED.

THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by

THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.,
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

ELM CITY HARNESS OIL

BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.

Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it.

F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONTARIO.
Sole Agents for the Dominion

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN to grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hips, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church street, Toronto.

$100,000 TO LOAN

on first-class farm property at lowest rates. Farmers will save money by applying by mail direct to me,

E. E. KNOTT,
48 Adelaide St., East, Toronto.

F. E. DIXON & CO.,
Manufacturers of Star Rive

Leather Belting!

70 King Street, East, Toronto

Large double Driving Belts a specialty. en for Price Lists and Discounts.

BEAVER S. S. LINE.

WEEKLY BETWEEN
Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST

For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
H. E. MURRAY, Beaver Line, Montreal.

100 BEAUTIFUL SONGS. 15c.

A new collection, embracing a number of the most popular songs of the day. Among them are, We Never Speak as we Pass By;—Over the Garden Wall,—Kerry Dance,—Warrior Bold,—Blue Alsatian Mountains,—Only a Blossom from her Grave,—Three Old Maids of Lee,—Flirting in the Starlight,—Grandmother's Old Easy Chair,—Don't Drink my Boy To-night, and 90 others, comprising Home songs, Comic Songs, Sentimental songs, Children's songs, etc. All are printed on nice paper, and are bound in a book with colored cover. Remember, we send the entire collection of 100 Songs for only 15c., three books for 30c., 1 doz., 1.00; 5c. or 3c. stamps taken.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

BEST BOILER PLATE.

For sale low, the following sizes suitable for Boilers, Safe Flumes, Tanks, &c., &c., 5-16 inch thick, 6x3, 8x3, 9x3, 10x3, 6x2½, 7x2½ 8x2½ 9x2½.

SEND FOR PRICES

Copland & McLaren,
Corner Wellington & Grey Nun Sts.,
Montreal.

MUTUAL MARRIAGE ENDOWMENT Association, provides dowries on marriage of its members, from $250 to $3,000. Assessments low. Over 300 certificates already issued. Well worth the consideration of young people. Apply to W. I. IMLACH, Secretary, London, Ont.

Dominion Line of Steamships.

Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every Thursday during the winter months.

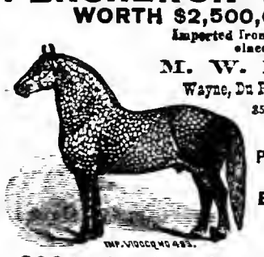
PORTLAND TO LIVERPOOL

Dominion, Jan. 10.	*Oregon, Jan. 31.
*Sarnia, Jan. 17.	Ontario, Feb. 7.
Montreal, Jan. 24	Toronto, Feb. 14.

Rates of passage: Cabin, Portland to Liverpool according to steamer and berth, $50, $60, $70, return, $90, $110, $130; all outside rooms and comfortably heated by steam. Intermediate $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent, or local agents of the Company, or to

DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents Montreal.

$11.90 —FOR— 35c.



Extraordinary Bargain.

On receipt of only 35c we will mail, postpaid, 34 pieces comprising 48 pages of full size sheet music, bound together in one volume. Names of Vocal pieces:—All on account of Eliza; A Warrior Bold; The Country Lad; Nancy Lee; Chorus of Charity Girls; Drummer's Song; The Judge's Song; The Love-Sick Boy; Whoa Emma; Two Bad Men; Man in the Moon; Johnny Morgan; The Gleaners; Torpedo and the Whale; I Saw Her in the Violet Time; Five O'Clock in the Morning; My Love She's but a Lassie Yet; Adieu, Dear Home; Dame Babble; and 15 pieces of Instrumental Music, comprising new and popular dance music, selections from different Operas, Marches, &c., &c. All the above and our handsome new Chromo Lithograph in colors of the Lord's Prayer and 10 Commandments, sent post-paid for 35c. As a holiday offer we will also send free 10 Christmas Cards, 50 money making receipts and a pack of Age Cards. Order quick. You get all the above for 35c, or 5 lots for $1.25; 1 doz. for $2.00. Cut this out and return with order

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.

PERCHERON HORSES
WORTH $2,500,000.00

Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,
35 miles West of Chicago on C. & N.-W. R'y.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.

390 Imported the Past Three Months, consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States. Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20.

FUN AND MYSTERY

ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS.

Have you seen it? The greatest collection o Games, Cards, Tricks, Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards;" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards: the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music; 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.

ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail, postpaid. Two Packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
—:) OF THE (:—
WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among the Largest and Fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety, Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accomodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect; and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario, or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto.

TRADE MARK.

THE BEST
HORSE REMEDIES
are those made by
THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO

Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express (on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5. 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c.; 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment, 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th Street, N.Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used." For further particulars, free books, etc., write to

ELLI SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.

DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.			Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 30	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

MARKDALE Meat Market.

A constant supply of

Fresh Meats!

on hand, at the Lowest Living Prices.

Orders solicited, and delivered free to all parts of the Town.

Farmers having fat stock to dispose of, will please leave their addresses.

TERMS STRICTLY CASH.

FRED. SARJEANT.

Markdale March 23, 1882. 80-ly

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE MAKER,

MILL STREET

MARKDALE.

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted to me by note or book account must settle the same immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank, Markdale.

HENRY FOSTER.

Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883. tf

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
Toronto, Ont.

161-75

FIRST CLASS OAT MEAL

for sale at

J. W. FORD'S

FLOUR MILL.

$5 per Barrel.

WINES AND LIQUORS

CHOICE BRANDS.

Brandy in Hogsheads.
Scotch and Irish Whiskey in Tr. Casks.
Holland Gin in Tr. Casks.
Jamacia Rum in Tr. Casks.
Fine Old Port and Sherry in Tr. Casks.
Native Wine in Tr. Casks.
Five-year-old Rye Whiskey in Barrels.
White Wheat Whiskey in Barrel.
Rye and Malt Whiskey in Barrels.
Domestic Whiskey in Barrels.
Liquors in Cases.
Bottled Ale and Porter.

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

JOHN MONTGOMERY BAKERY,

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand,

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169-90.

MISCELLANEOUS

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best Salve in the world for cuts, bruises sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by A. Turner & Co.

KRAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known. Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat ar acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

John R. Vert, Hamilton, says: "McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia and Indigestion is cheap at fifty times the price asked for it. I am a commercial man, and travel continually, and would no more think of leaving home without a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure in my valise than I would of leaving my team at home and going on foot." Free trial bottle at Hill Bros. general store. Regular sixe, fifty cents and one dollar.

A STARTLING DISCOVERY.

Physicians are often startled by remarkable discoveries. The fact that Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and all Throat and Lung diseases is daily curing patients that they have given up to die, is startling them to realize their sense of duty, and examine into the merits of this wonderful discovery; resulting in hundreds of our best Physicians using it in their practice. Trial bottles free at A. Turner, & Co's. Drug Store. Regular Size $1.00. 4

THESE ARE SOLID FACTS.

The best blood purifier and system regulator ever placed within the reach of suffering humanity, truly the Electric Bitters. Inactivity of the Liver, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation, Weak Kidneys, or any disease of the urinary organs, or whoever requires an appetizer, tonic or milk stimulant, will always find Electric Bitters the best and only certain cure known. They act surely and quickly, every bottle guaranteed to give entire satisfaction or money refunded. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by A. Turner & Co. Markdale. 4

LARDINE MACHINE OIL

Is Manufactured Solely by McCall Bro's. & Co. Toronto, and is the only popular Machine Oil to-day in use by all mill men and farmers, Try Lardine.

WHAT IS LARDINE.

Ask any farmer, thresher or saw mill man, or in fact any man who runs machinery of any kind and he will tell you that it is the only machine Oil which will wear equal to Castor Oil, and won't gum or clog your machinery. For sale at Haskett Bro's, Markdale. 176-215

SUBSCRIBE

FOR THE STANDARD

Only

$1 per Year.

SAY!

If you want to hire a good livery rig, go to Benson,

EUGENIA

Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted

69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

THOS. MATHEWS,

Harness Establishment

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY

IN CONNECTION.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods

— IN —

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

— AT —

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugar cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 18. MARKDALE, ONT., JAN. 31, 1884. No. 177

Markdale Standard

s issued every Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

Terms—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space and under, per year, $4

	1 yr.	6 mo.	3 mo.
One column	$30 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Each inch space	7 00	4 50
Each inch space	10 00	5 00

Local advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion, nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local columns 10 cents per line first insertion 5 cents per line subsequents insertion.

Cards for animals &c., advertised 5 weeks for $1, each advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

No paper discontinued until all arrears are paid except at the option of the publisher.

JOB PRINTING.

The STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of pester as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

J. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,
WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill Owen Sound 122-35

T. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville, Graduate of University Viet. College. " New York, and " Graduate, of the same, " Aviegth Medical Institute. " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y. Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 164

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,
GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,
BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Markdale, Office open every Thursday, as before.
D. Frost. J. W. Frost, LL. B. County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,
BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.
A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.
Offices—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Main St.; Branch office in Markdale, over Garland's Store, on Friday and Saturday of each week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,
BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.
Offices in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolff's Store and in
MARKDALE:
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to loan on reasonable terms.
J. CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown,
ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Valuer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Tenants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,
ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N.B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate se

W. C. RICHARDS,
BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

MARKDALE HOUSE,
MARKDALE, - - ONT.
J. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

Single Blessedness a Fib.

New York Journal.

Tell me not in single jingle,
Marriage is an empty dream,
For the soul is dead that's single—
Things are seldom what they seem.

Life is real, life is earnest,
"Single blessedness a fib;
Man thou art, to man returnest;
Was not spoken of the rib.

Much enjoyment and some sorrow
Is our destined end and way.
So to live that each to-morrow
Finds us nearer wedding day.

County Council.

From the Times.

THE Council of the County of Grey met at the Court House 2 p. m., on Tuesday last. Many of the members being delayed by Monday's snowstorm, the Council did not muster a quorum, and the Clerk adjourned the Council till evening.

TUESDAY EVENING.

Council met at 7 p. m.

The following gentlemen filed their certificates as having been duly elected Reeves and Deputy Reeves for their respective municipalities :—

Artemesia—W. S. Christoe, Reeve; S. Pedlar, Deputy Reeve.

Bentinck—D. McNicol, Reeve; J. Messenger, 1st Dep. Reeve; J. McCallum, 2nd Dep. Reeve.

Collingwood—T. McKenny, Reeve; A. Campbell, 1st Dep. Reeve; W. Hewgill, 2nd Dep. Reeve.

Derby—J. Robertson, Reeve; W. Breen, Dep. Reeve.

Durham—G. McKechnie, Reeve.

Egremont—W. Caulfield, Reeve; J. Paul, Dep. Reeve.

Euphrasia—T. Gilray, Reeve; W. Fawcett, Dep. Reeve.

Glenelg—F. Rae, Reeve; J. A. McMillan, Dep. Reeve.

Holland—J. Cameron, Reeve; W. Norton, Dep. Reeve.

Keppel—W. Totten, Reeve; J. Clerk, Dep. Reeve.

Meaford—A. Tompson, Reeve.

Normanby—V. Lang, Reeve; A. O. Farrell, 1st Dep. Reeve; E Widmenyer, 2nd Deputy Reeve.

Osprey—T. Gamey, Reeve; A. McIntyre, Dep. Reeve.

Owen Sound—J. Chisholm, Reeve; J. W. Frost, Dep. Reeve.

Proton—J. J. Middleton, Reeve; S. Rogers, Dep. Reeve.

Sarawak—K. McNaught, Reeve.

Sullivan—J. Dunnington, Reeve; J. Vasey, Dep. Reeve.

St. Vincent—J. Bowes, Reeve; N. Read, Dep. Reeve.

Sydenham—W. Lang, Reeve; H. Gordon, 1st Dep. Reeve; C. H. Heming, 2nd Deputy Reeve.

The Council then proceeded to elect the Warden for the current year.

Moved by Mr. D. McNicol, seconded by Mr. J. J. Middleton, That John Cameron, Reeve of Holland, be Warden for 1884.

Moved by Mr. V. Lang, seconded by Mr. T. Gillray, That John Chisholm, Reeve of Owen Sound, be Warden for 1884.

There being no other nominations, a ballot was taken with the following result—Cameron 26, Chisholm 14.

The Clerk then declared Mr. John Cameron duly elected Warden for year 1884, who was introduced to the Council in his new position, by Mr. McNicol, Warden of 1883.

Mr. Cameron thanked the Council for the honor conferred on him, though he felt his inability to fill the position, and took the honor as having been accorded to him because he was an old member of the Council. He would try to do what was just and right in conducting the affairs of the Council.

Mr. Chisholm said he felt in duty bound to thank those who had supported him on the present occasion, and congratulated the Council on having so able a gentleman as Mr. Cameron to preside over them.

Minutes of last day of December session were read and signed.

Permission having been given, the President of the East Grey Agricultural Society addressed the Council, asking for a grant of from $50 to $100, to enable them to hold a Seed Show, where farmers might be able to get good seed, and give tham a chance to exchange seed grain. He referred to the importance of such a show, as large quantities of grain in the County had been frozen which was unsaleable, and some farmers who have to sell what they had reserved for seed.

Dr. Christoe said if the South Grey and North Grey Agricultural Societies made a similar request in common with East Grey the matter, would come before the Finance Committee.

The Warden read a communication from the County Judge, complaining of want of proper accommodation for the Judge. The room "Judge's Chambers," had been used; but it was not properly lighted, and totally unfit for his requirements.

On motion, a special committee to strike the standing committees for the year, was then balloted for, resulting in the appointment of Messrs. Christoe, McNicol, Hewgill, McRea, and Chisholm.

The Council adjourned till 2 p. m. on Wednesday.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The Warden read communications from R. Edgar and J. Albery, asking to be appointed Auditors.

Several other communications, and a number of accounts, were read, and referred to the respective committees.

Dr. Christoe read report of the special committee to strike the standing committees for the year 1884, as follows :

Finance and Assessment—Messrs. Christoe, McNicol, McKenny, Robertson, Caulfield, Gilray, McRae, Norton, Totten, Victor Lang, Gamey, Middleton, Bowes, Gordon, Dunnington, McNaught, Thompson, McKechnie, and Chisholm—McKechnie, chairman.

Road and Bridge—Messrs. McIntyre O'Farrel, Pedlar, McMillen, Paul, Clark, Fawcett, McCallum. Vasey, Rogers, and Messenger—Clark, chairman.

County Property—Messrs. Christoe, Read, Miller, W. Lang, McNicol, Thompson, and Whitmenyer—Christoe, chairman.

Education—Messrs. Gilray, Breen, Hewgill, Heming, Frost and Read—Hewgill, chairman.

Printing—Messrs. McRea, Miller, Campbell, McCallum, Clark and V. Lang—Victor Lang, chairman.

On Communications and Memorials—Chisholm, Middleton, McRea, McKechnie, McKenny, and V. Lang—Middleton, chairman.

On motion, the report was adopted.

Moved by Mr. Middleton, seconded by Mr. McKechine, That Thos. Gamey, and A. M. Stephens be appointed a Board of Audit—carried.

Dr. Christoe read report from the School Inspector of South Grey.

The Reeves of Glenelg, Osprey, Sarawak and Deputy Reeves of St. Vincent and Keppel, were appointed a committee to inquire into the sufficiency of the Treasurer's security, and report to the Council.

By-law 321, to appointed County Arditors, was read a first and second time.

A motion by Mr. Middleton, seconded by Mr. Rogers, asking that a memorial be drafted and forwarded to the Lieut-Governor in Council, praying for certain amendments respecting property qualification of Police Truses, and for changing times of holding nomination and elections for such, was lost.

Council went into Committee of the Whole on By-law 321, to appoint County Auditors, which was filled up with the names of R. Edgar, on the nomination of the Warden, and J. Albery, on the part of the Council—salary $50 each.

Moved by J. J. Middleton, seconded by Thomas Gamey, That the County Solicitor be requested to furnish this Council with his opinion in writing as its next session on the following question: 1st—Were Robt. Myles and James Murdoch, Esqs., (members of the County Council at the time of the passing of the By-law No. 313,) eligible as County Valuators, and if not, would such be fatal to the defence of the case, should an appeal be taken from their report as Valuators of this Council? 2nd—The fact that the Valuators did not affix values to the properties in the different municipalities at the time of inspection of the same, but subsequently at Owen Sound or else where—would this be a violation of the statute and an infraction of the By-law appointing them and defining their duties? 3rd—Should it be true that much of the inspection of the property in the County was made by only two of the porsons appointed as Valuators—would this be fatal to the defence of the report in the avent of adverse action being taken? 4th—Should it be a fact that the report after its adoption was discovered to contain numerous and grave errors in additions calculation—would the Committee on Finance and Assessment be obliged to use the said adopted report as their guide, not withstanding the presence of such errors?

This motion brought on considerable discussion, the majority of the Council thinking it was out of place to again bring up the question of the legality of the appointment of the Valuators, after their work was completed, and further, that it reflected on the Valuators and their work. The motion was lost by 12 to 28.

The Reeve of Durham introduced a By-law to appoint a High School Trustee, which was read a first and second time.

Council adjourned till two o'clock on Thursday afternoon.

WHAT IS LARDINE.

Ask any farmer, thresher or saw mill man, or in fact any man who runs machinery of any kind and he will tell you that it is the only machine Oil which will wear equal to Castor Oil. and won't gum or clog your machinery. For sale at Haskett Bro's, Markdale. 176-215

Glenelg Council.

The newly elected council of the township of Glenelg met at the town hall on 21st instant, pursuant to statute. Each member made and subscribed the necessary declarations of qualification and office.

Geo. Binnie and John McDonald were appointed auditors.

Election expenses paid as follows:—Deputy returning officers each, $4; door keeer each $1.50; for each polling place $4; Hugh McKay was paid $1 extra.

Orders were issued on the treasurer as follows:—

A. Walker, work on the town line, Holland and Glenelg $10; the Treasurer $2 advanced by him for work on bridge near Griffin's Corners, and $3 for cost of bank draft remitting County rates; J. S. Black, coal oil for town hall 20 cents.; Mr. Jenkins, election blanks $1; Mr. Rutledge, printing, $5.75; N. McIntyre, delivering ballot boxes $12; Rowswell and Hutchinson election blanks $4.75.

Road Commissioners appointed:—Ward No. 1, J. A. McMillan; No. 2, A. McCuaig; No. 3, P. Neil; No. 4, N. Dunsmore.

Lot 56, con. 2, E G R was exempted from taxes for 1883. Arrears of taxes against lot 18, con. 2, S D R struck off the roll.

The statute labor against the roll and five days extra to be charged against said lot for the present year.

Messrs. McMillan, McCuaig and Neil were appointed a committee to examine the Treasurer's sureties.

The clerk tendered his resignation which was accepted and the following resolution passed.

Resolved—That the thanks of this Council are due and are hereby tendered to James Brown Esq., for his valuable and faithful services to the municipality and in appreciation of said valuable services that he paid one hundred dollars over and above his usual salary, and this council does regret the step taken by Mr. Brown in resigning his position as clerk.

John S. Black was appointed township clerk.

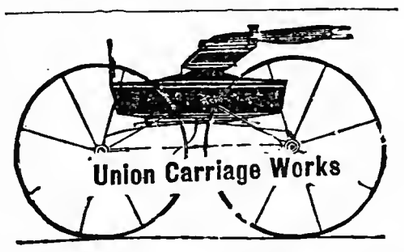
Council adjourned to meet at the same place on 4th Feb. next.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
M. BYRNES
PROPRIETOR.
THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.



CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
TUCK & McLEOD PROPRIETORS.
The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.
Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

JOSEPH GIBSON
CONTRACTORS.
Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.
Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}
BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.
FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON
Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Union Carriage Works.
All work manufactured from
FIRST CLASS MATERIAL
In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with English Varnish.
Painting & Trimming Rigs
will receive prompt attention.
All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.
GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.
Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside
D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor
Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel. 159-3m

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER XI.—(CONTINUED.)

The roses were in a cigar-box, and as long as they lasted they never smelt of anything but tobacco; but I began to think that perfume nicer than their own.

I was so happy that evening that I was glad when Mr. Rayner asked me to accompany his violin, and I was glad that he chose operatic selections again, for in the passionate and sweet music of Don Giovanni and Il Troratore I could vent to my feelings. I felt that I had never appreciated the beautiful melodies so well, nor helped so efficiently to do justice to them as I did in accompanying Mr. Rayner that night. He was so pleased with my help that he begged me to go on, with "Just one more" and "Just one more," until long after Mrs. Rayner had gone to her room. I was nothing loath; I could have played until midnight. I did not say much in comment between the pieces, when Mr. Rayner asked, "How do you like that?" But I suppose it was easy to see by my face that I was enjoying the music intensely, for he had just nodded and smiled and seemed quite satisfied.

The clock had struck the half-hour after ten, which was quite late for the household, at the Alders, when we finished playing "Vos che sapete."

"And how do you like that?" asked Mr. Rayner as usual, only that this time he put down his violin, and, drawing a chair close to my music-stool, ran his fingers over the keys of the piano, repeating the melody.

"Do you know the words? "Voi che sapete che cos e amore,'" he sang softly. "Do you know what that means?"

"Oh, yes!" said I, rather proud of showing off my small knowledge of Italian. "You who know what love is.'"

I drew my music-stool a little back, and listened while he sang it softly through. I had never known a love-song to touch me like that before. I could almost have cried out in answer, as I sat with my head turned away, listening, almost holding my breath, lest I should lose a sound. When he had finished, he turned round; I did not move or speak, and he jumped up, walked to the shutters, unbarred them, and threw open the window.

"I am suffocating. Oh for a Venetian balcony!" said he. "Come here, little woman."

I rose and obeyed. He threw a woollen antimacassar round my head and shoulders, and drew me to the window.

"Look up there, child, at the moon through the tree-tops. Wouldn't you like to be as Venice, listening by moonlight to those sweet songs in the very native land of the love they sing about?"

"I don't want to be anywhere but here, Mr. Rayner," said I, smiling up at the moon very happily.

"Why?"

But I could not tell Mr. Rayner why.

"I would give the whole world to be at this moment with the women I love. I could make her understand there!"

I was struck by the passionate tenderness in his voice, and suddenly made up my mind to be very bold.

"Then why don't you take her there, Mr. Rayner?" I said earnestly.

As I spoke, smiling at him and speaking as gaily as I could, though I felt terribly frightened at my boldness, his eyes seemed to grow darker, and his whole face lighted up in an extraordinary way. I saw my words had made an impression, so I went on eagerly, pressing nervously the hand with which he was leaning mine, for I was still afraid lest my audacity should offend him.

"Sir, Rayner, forgive me for speaking as I did; but you spoke first, didn't you? I have so often wondered why you don't take her away. It seems so hard that you, who want sympathy so much—you know you have often told me so—should have to live, as you say, a shut-up life on account of the apathy of the woman to whom you are bound."

He leaned to drink in the words as if they were an elixir; I could feel by his hand that he was actually trembling; and I grew more excited myself.

"Now, if you were to take her away, although you might have a difficulty at first persuading her to go, and forsooth, with the keen sense you know how to use, to go among fresh faces and see fresh people, I believe she would come back to life again, and see how much better you are than other husbands, and love you just as much as ever. Oh she couldn't help it; you are so kind and good!"

To my heart sank, for I saw I had gone too far. As I spoke, from passionately eager, he looked surprised, puzzled, and then his face clouded over with a cold frown that chilled me with fear and shame. I drew my hand out of his quickly, and stepped back into the room. He followed and took my hand again, and, when I looked up, murmuring clumsy and incoherent apologies, his face was as composed and kind as usual; but I thought he looked rather sad.

"Never mind, little one; you have not offended me by speaking your mind out; don't be afraid. But you don't know, you cannot guess—how should a child like you guess?—how many or how deep a man's cares may be while he is obliged to bear a brave front to the world. I think you would be sorry for me if you knew them."

"I am sorry without knowing them," I said softly.

He bent down over me and looked into my eyes for a few moments. Then he raised his head, and laughed lightly.

"You are a fraud. Great gray eyes ought to be passionate, and yours are as cold as a lake on a still day. I believe you are an Undine! You have no soul."

"Oh, Mr. Rayner!" I said mournfully, and I turned slowly to the piano to put away the music.

"Never mind; I will do that," said he, in his usual tone. "I have kept you up long enough. Good night, Undine."

I was almost afraid he would again want to kiss me, and, after offending him once, I should not have dared to refuse. So I shook hands as hastily as I could, took my candle, and ran up-stairs. I was very angry with myself for having been cold and unsympathetic—I had not meant to be so at all.

But the fact was I had been thinking the whole evening of Mr. Laurence Reade.

CHAPTER XII.

I slackened my pace when I got to the top of the first flight of stairs, and walked softly through the corridor where the nursery was, for fear of waking Mona; and, as I went slowly along the passage leading to the turret stairs, I began to think of what Mr. Rayner had called me, and wondered what he meant by saying I had no soul.

"It wasn't because I am not sorry for him, for he must have seen that I am," thought I. "I suppose I don't show my sympathy in the right away; but I could not very well say more about it without being disrespectful. And I must not forget that Mr. Rayner is not only much older than I, but also my employer."

And so I crept up the turret stairs with candle, and opened the door of my room.

It was a calm night, and I walked in very slowly, yet, as I entered, my candle went out suddenly, as if blown by a gust of wind; and I fancied I heard a slight sound as of a human breath blowing it. I stepped forward quickly, a little startled, and tried to peer into the darkness. But it was impossible to see, for my fire had gone out, the blinds were down and the curtains drawn, and not a ray of moonlight could get in. I stood for a few minutes, still frightened, in the middle of the room, and then cautiously made my way in the direction of the mantlepiece, where I kept my match-box. I made a slight noise as I passed my fingers over the different articles there, and, just at the moment that I knocked over a china ornament which fell into the fireplace, above the noise it made as it broke to pieces in the grate I heard a sound behind the screen which stood between the bed and the door, and, turning quickly, I was in time to see a figure come swiftly round it and disappear through the still open door. I could distinguish nothing; nevertheless, suppressing my inclination to scream, I rushed to the door and caught in the air at the figure I could no longer see; but I felt nothing.

Then I crept back into my room, shaking from head to foot, and hardly daring to move in this direction or that, for fear of encountering another dim figure. I closed the door behind me, sick with fear lest I should be shutting myself in with more unwelcome visitors: and, starting at the slight creaking that a board made here and there under my own feet, I again searched the mantle-piece for the match-box. My hands trembled so that it was a long time before I could be sure that it was not there; and then I turned and felt my way back to the table; and, after moving most of the things on it, I at last satisfied myself that it was not there either. Then I groped my way to one of the windows — I had not thought of that before—drew the curtains and pulled up the blind. The moon gave only a fitful light, being obscured every other minute by thin driving clouds, and it only served to make shadows in the room which were more fearful to me, in my nervous state, than darkness itself. I had one more search for the matches, but could not find them even now.

It was out of the question to undress by such weird moonlight, fancying dim shapes in every corner and noises behind me whichever way I turned; so I determined to conquer my fears and go down-stairs with my candle and get a light below. There were sure to be some matches in the kitchen, and I reflected that enough moonlight would come in over or through the shutters to let me see my way without making a noise.

So I groped my way down the back staircase, which I had never used before, got safely to the bottom, turned to my left, and felt for a door. The first opened into a big black cupboard where I left brooms, which I shut again quickly; the second was locked, but the key was in the door, and I softly turned it. This was indeed the kitchen; but the moment I found this out, and gave a sigh of relief, I heard on the floor a sound which I knew too well to be the rush of myriads of black beetles; and, as I would rather have faced a dozen dim human figures than have felt under my feet the "scrunch" of blackbeetle, I had to shut that door too as quickly as I had shut the other.

The only thing left for me was to feel my way back to the staircase, go down the passage at the other side of it, which led past Mr. Rayner's study, and so into the hall, where I knew the exact position of the match-box which stood on the hall table.

My only fear now was that I might meet Mr. Rayner, in the event of his not having left the house yet to go to his room. If I met him, I should have to account for my presence wandering about the house at this time of night, and I felt that I was still too much discomposed by the fright I had received for his sharp eyes not to notice my pallor and my quaking hands; and then I should have to tell him what I had seen, and there would be a search and an explanation, and I should get some one into trouble. For my fears had not gone beyond thinking that it was Sarah or one of the other servants who—perhaps wishing to give me a fright, perhaps only all but caught in the untimely enjoyment of one of my easy-chairs—anxious to escape detection, had blown out my candle, hoping to slip out in the dark unheard.

However, I got back safely to the bottom of the staircase without seeing or hearing anything, and I was creeping along the passage when I caught the first faint sound of voices. I stopped, then went on again softly, while the sounds became plainer, and I found that they proceeded from Mr. Rayner's study, the door of which I had to pass. I discovered by the thin thread of light it let out upon the passage that this door was ajar, at the same moment that I recognised Sarah's voice. She was speaking in a low sullen tone, and, as I drew nearer, I was arrested half against my will by words which seemed to apply to myself—"Against the stupid baby-face of a chit hardly out of the nursery herself. Governess indeed!"

"Is that all you have to say!" said Mr. Rayner very low, but in his coldest, most cutting tone.

"That's—that's all I have to say," said Sarah, with a choking sound in her voice.

The woman was evidently unhapp; I almost pitied her.

"Then the matter is easily settled. You can go."

"I can go! I go! Do you know what you're saying? Do you think you could replace me as easily as you can such as her?" said she, forgetting all respect due to her master, as her voice, still low, trembled with rage.

"That is my affair. You wished me to choose between the services of an unpaid governess and those of an overpaid servant. I have chosen."

"Overpaid! My services overpaid! My services can't be overpaid!" she hissed out.

"As long as you joined discretion to your undoubted good qualities, I paid you according to that estimate. Now that you let yourself be swayed beyond all bounds of prudence by trifling feelings of jealousy and spite, like a foolish girl, your value runs down to that level. You are no longer a girl, Sarah, and your position is changed in many ways since then, in most for the better. If you cannot accept the changes quietly, you had better go."

"And you would let me go—for a newcomer?" said the woman passionately.

"I cannot think of sending away any member of my household for the caprice of any other member of it, however valuable a servant she may have been——"

"May have been—may have been! My work is not over yet, and, if I don't work for you, I'll work against you," she broke out in a fury. "I'll——"

"Not so fast, not so fast," said he slowly. "You will find that up-hill work when you have to deal with me, Sarah Gooch."

He spoke in the hard tone I had heard him use once or twice before—a tone which always made me shudder. Then his voice changed suddenly to a genial, almost caressing tone.

"Now do you think you will be able to get on without me as well as I can without you?"

There was a pause. Then I heard Sarah burst into sobs and few passionate cries for pity, for forgiveness.

"Why are you so hard? How can you have the heart to talk like that about my services, as if I was too old for anything but money-bargains? That chit, that Christie girl, that you put before me, will never serve you like I've done."

"The services of a governess are not the same as those of a servant. That is enough about Miss Christie, Sarah."

"Enough and welcome about the little flirt—a creature that keeps diamonds from one man in her desk, and wears round her neck a letter from another which she kisses on the sly? Oh, I've seen her, the little—"

"Nonsense!" said Mr. Rayner, sharply. "And what if she does? It is no business of mine."

I heard him rise hastily from his chair and walk across the room; and I fled past like a hare. Trembling and panting, I found my way to the hall table, took out of the box there half-a-dozen matches, and crept guiltily, miserably up-stairs. I had listened, as if chained to the spot, to their talk, and it was only now that I had fled for fear of discovery that I reflected on what a dishonourable thing I had done.

If he had come to the door, thrown it open, and seen me cowering with parted lips against the wall within a few feet of it, how Sarah would have triumphed in the justice of her hatred of a girl who could be guilty of such meanness! And how Mr. Rayner's own opinion of me would have sunk! He would have seen how wrong he was in considering the eavesdropping governess tho superior to the devoted servant.

I cried with shame and remorse as I stumbled up the turret-stairs, shut myself in my room, and lighted my candle. I did not feel a bit frightened now; I forgot even to turn the key in the lock; this last adventure had swept away all remembrance of the previous one. When at last I began to think collectedly of what I had heard, I felt no longer any doubt, from what Sarah had said about the nature and extent of her services, that she was in reality the responsible guardian of Mrs. Rayner, and that, when she spoke of warking against her master if he sent her away, she meant to publish far and wide what he had so long and so carefully kept secret—the fact that he had a wife tottering on the verge of insanity. I did not wonder now so much as I had before at the depth of her jealousy of me. I saw how strong the woman's passions were and how deep was her devotion to her master, and I began to understand that it was hard for her to see so many little acts of consideration showered on a new comer which she, although her service had been so much longer and more painful, could not from her position expect. And I got up from the chair I had sat on, trying to forgive her, yet hoping she would go away all the same.

As I rose, I caught sight of my desk, which I suddenly saw had been moved. I might have done that myself in my search for the matches; but it flashed through my mind that Sarah had told Mr. Rayner that I kept the diamonds in my desk. But it was locked, and the keys were always in my pocket. However, I opened it and looked into the top compartment, where I kept Mr. Rayner's present. There it was in its case, looking just as usual. Then I opened the lower compartment, with the intention of reading through just once more, before I went to bed, those two notes I had had from Mr. Reade, one on that day and one on the day before, about the church-work. And the last one, the one that had come with the cigar-box on that day, was not there! A suspicion flashed through my mind which made my breath come fast—Sarah had taken it!

It was Sarah then whom I had surprised in my room that evening! She had managed by some means to open my desk, seen the pendant, and, having made a grievance against me of the fact that I had received letters from a gentleman, had taken the letter out and probably shown it to Mr. Rayner on some pretence of having "picked it up," to prove to him by the direction in a handwriting which he knew, that I was carrying on a clandestine correspondence with Mr. Laurence Reade. And I remembered that she had already taken the first note to Mr. Rayner. Well, if she had read both the notes—for they were lying together in my desk—she must have seen that they were of a very innocent kind: but how was Mr. Rayner, who had not read them, to know this? I was annoyed and disgusted beyond measure; I could have forgiven anything, even her meanness in playing spy while I looked at the note which I wore round my neck, but stealing my precious letter. I shed some more tears at the loss of it, wondering whether she would ever take the trouble to restore it, polluted as it would be by having been read by her unkind eyes.

Then I went to bed, very tired and very unhappy; and at last I fell asleep, with my hands clasping the note that Sarah could not get at, which I wore in a case round my neck.

Perhaps the excitement and agitation of the evening had caused my sleep to be lighter than usual. At any rate, I was awakened by a very slight noise indeed, so slight that I thought it must be the work of my nervous fancy; and my sleepy eyes were closing again, when I suddenly became conscious that there was a light in the room not that of the rising sun.

Fully awake now, and cold all over with this new fright, I saw by the flickering on the ceiling that the light must come from a candle behind the screen; I saw that it was being carried forward into the room, and then I closed my eyes and pretended to be asleep. My fingers were still clinging to the little case; but they were wet and clammy with horror. Was it Sarah? What was she going to do now? To put back my letter? I did not dare to look.

I lay there listening so intently that I could hear, or fancy I heard, each soft step taken by the intruder. Then they stopped; and from the effect of the flickering light through my closed eyelids I guessed that the candle was being raised to throw its light on my face. Still I had self-command enough to lie quite still and to imitate the long-drawn breathing of a sleeping person. But then my heart seemed to stand still, for I felt the light coming nearer, and I heard the faint sound of a moving figure growing plainer, until the light was flashed within a foot of my face. I could not have moved then. I was half paralysed. Then I noticed a faint sickly smell that I did not know, and a hand was laid very softly upon the bed-clothes.

Still I did not move, I had formed a sort of plan in those deadly two minutes, which seemed like two hours, when the light was coming nearer and nearer to my face. The hand crept softly up, and slipped under the bed-clothes close to my chin, till it touched my fingers clutching the little leathern case. It tried to disengage them; but my clasp on my treasure was like grim death. Then the hand was softly withdrawn. I heard the drawing of a cork, I smelt the faint smell more strongly, and a handkerchief wet with some sickening, suffocating stuff was thrown lightly over my face.

Then I started up with a shriek as loud and piercing as my lungs could give, tore the handkerchief from my face, and confronted Sarah, who drew back, her dark face livid with anger, but without uttering a sound. In her hand she held a little bottle. I tried with a spring to dash it from her grasp; but she was too quick for me, and, with a step back against the screen, she held it out of my reach. Then the screen fell down with a loud crash. My attention was distracted from the woman to it for one moment, and in that moment she made another spring at my neck. But then there was a sound outside which had as many terrors for her as her own hard voice had for me. It was Mr. Rayner, calling sharply and sternly—

"Sarah, come out here!"

She started; then her face grew sullen and defiant, and she stood like a rock before me. Again Mr. Rayner called.

"Sarah, do you hear me? Come here!"

And, as if a spell had been cast upon her which it was vain for her to fight against, she went slowly out of the room, and I was left alone.

I sprang from the bed, locked the door, and fell down against it in the dark and cold in a passion of hysterical sobs that I could not restrain. Then they died away, and I felt my limbs grow numb and stiff; but I had not power to move, and I thought I must be dying.

Then I heard a fall at the bottom of the stairs and a woman's cry, and immediately after a voice outside roused me.

(TO BE CONTINUED).

The Handshaking Art.

President Arthur is said to have suffered so much from the prevalent custom of shaking hands that he has made the subject a study and has reduced it to a fine art. This art is simple in plan and surprising in effect, but inoffensive. When the President sees a man coming at him for the usual salutation he stands impassive, with his hands at his sides, until his friend reaches him. Then the President, by a quick movement, seizes the extended hand, shakes it, and drops it before the handshaker is fairly aware what has happened. By this dexterity the President escapes having his hands wrung until the bones crack—a process which, repeated several hundred times a day is naturally painful.

President Arthur's plan of handshaking will doubtless be copied without credit by some other public men, but not generally. The most of them have larger hands than the President, and have not so much to fear a squeeze. For others the method is not cordial enough. Mr. Blaine, though he has a medium-sized hand, prevents its being squeezed by seizing his friend's hand in both his own, and is thus enabled to do what he chooses with it. President Garfield used to have the habit, also practiced by some others, of taking his friend's hand lightly, adroitly giving him a slap on the back, and then withdrawing his hand before the victim had recovered from his surprise. As no visitor ever dared to slap back, this plan seemed to work very well indeed. It indicated sufficient cordiality, saved the President's hand, and at the same time the exercise of slapping kept him in good health.

Mike Cuddihie and his wife, living not far from Denver, Colorado, had a small girl in their family adopted from the Catholic Orphan's Home, of that city. The girl recently died suddenly and mysteriously, and it was afterwards believed that her death came about from cruelties inflicted by Cuddihie and his wife. They were arrested and found guilty of murder, but a band of masked men overpowered the sheriff, took his prisoners away and hanged them both. It is said to have been the first case of a woman having been lynched in the State.

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

Innocence is like polished armor; it adorns and defends.

Important.

When you visit or leave New York City, save Baggage Expressage and Carriage Hire, and stop at GRAND UNION HOTEL, opposite Grand Central Depot. 450 elegant rooms, fitted up at a cost of one million dollars, reduced to $1 and upwards per day. European plan. Elevator. Restaurant supplied with the best. Horse cars, stages and elevated railroads to all depots. Families can live better for less money at the Grand Union Hotel than at any other first-class hotel in the city.

Indolence is the rust of the mind and the inlet of every vice.

MYSTERIOUS!

The Terrible Undertow that is Sweeping Away so Many—What Well-known Canadians Have to Say.

It is an unquestionable fact that thousands of people are to-day enduring the most intense torture or are afflicted by the most unaccountable symptoms for which they can assign no reason whatever. They have frequent headaches; are strangely languid; have a ravenous appetite one day and none whatever the next, and feel dull pains in various parts of the body, but they imagine it is only a cold or some passing minor disorder. Indeed, few people realize the presence of grave and serious dangers until they are upon them. The following experiences of well-known people in the Province are timely and valuable.

Rev. William J. Henderson, pastor of the Methodist-Episcopal church of Prescott, Ontario, says: "For a number of years and until recently, I had been gradually, but steadily, declining in health. I was subject to severe pains in various parts of my body, shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart and a distressing, hacking cough. I consulted physicians, one of whom informed me that I had been 'carrying too many pounds of steam.' Another stated that I was on the eve of a general constitutional 'breaking up;' another pronounced me as being badly gone in liver complaint, and feeling that the last one had hit it, I commenced a course of his treatment, without, however, any benefit. Feeling that I was going down hill very fast. I grew somewhat despondent, and finally resigned myself to an early death. At this juncture I resolved to try Warner's Safe Cure, and I may say that I felt almost immediate relief, and now I am nearly as well as I ever was in my whole life. My cough has disappeared entirely and I seldom feel any of my old symptoms. I have always been somewhat disposed to prejudice against proprietary medicines, but I feel it to be an act of justice to make this statement for the good of others."

John Evans, residing at 139 King street, London, says: For two years I have been troubled with gravel in my kidneys and have suffered untold agony. The passage of the gravel from the kidneys into the bladder threw me into paroxysms of pain that completely broke me down. Upon the recommendation of a friend I began the use of Warner's Safe Cure, which seemed to dissolve the gravel and it passed from me in the form of dust. I recommend Warner's Safe Cure to everybody who is suffering as all as I have suffered."

Mrs. M. Lemon, residing at 59 Victoria avenue, Hamilton, says: "For ten years I have suffered from female complaints and liver disease. I have consulted all the prominent doctors in Hamilton, but none were able to cure me. Six months out of every year I was laid up in bed from nervous prostration and debility, and frequently when working about the house I would faint and remain unconscious for more than half an hour. Hearing of Warner's Safe Cure, I began its use and am now in good health. All previous troubles have left me. It has worked wonders in my case and I cannot recommend it to all the ladies in the country."

Mr Chas. M. Syme, foreman in W. Smith's saw factory, St. Catherines, says: "Five years ago I began to be afflicted with most distressing troubles which increased in violence until I was compelled to remain in bed. My symptoms were terrible and I was getting worse and worse all the while. The doctors could not agree as to the nature of my disease and I finally lost all hopes of ever getting well. Learning of some cases similar to my own that had been helped by Warner's Safe Cure, I began its use and commenced to improve from the first dose, and I am happy to say that I am now as sound as a dollar and can do a day's work without it hurting me."

Doctor Samuel T. Rodley, of Chatham, says; "I have seen Warner's Safe Cure used very extensively and have heard of the most gratifying results. I am convinced that it is an unequalled medicine for disorders of the kidneys and urinary organs, and I can freely recommend it.'

Mr. A. J. McBlain, clerk of Crawford House, Windsor, says; "For several years I was afflicted with kidney difficulty and did not know what it was to be free from excruciating pains, which at times were so great that I could neither stand nor remove my clothes. At that time I was conductor on the Denver and Rio Grande railroad, and no doubt the constant jolting aggravated the disease. Noticing an advertisement of Warner's Safe Cure, I procured the medicine and from the first it acted like magic, and it has completely and permanently cured me. I cannot too highly recommend it, as I know what it has done for me."

The above statements are from men of unquestionable veracity, and such as merit the greatest consideration. No one who is suffering from any form of physical disorder can afford to neglect even the slightest symptoms, which can be so readily controlled if taken in time, and which are so dangerous if permitted to continue.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West. Toronto, Can.

If we build high, let us begin low and deep.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

Discretion of speech is more than eloquence.

PERCHERON BLOOD WILL TELL.—A. Stein & Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., handle 2,000 horses annually, mostly heavy draft. They say of the grade Percheron Normans: "We handle more of the Percheron-Normans than any other breed. There is more demand for them. They give the best satisfaction, no matter how little of the blood there is in the." Generally they have good feet and last better on our pavements than the Clydesdale or other breeds. Tell the farmers of the West to keep their Percheron-Norman mares and breed them. Would advise breeding to Percheron-Norman horses in preference to any other breed."—Chicago Tribune. Nearly 1,400 Percheron Norman horses have been imported from France and bred in their purity by M. W. Dunham, of Wayne, Ill., who, within the past few months has purchased 390 of them from the best breeders in France, particular attention being given to pedigrees, and French records.

LADIES' DEPARTMENT.

COOKING MEATS.

If the steamer were used in the preparation of meat for the table we should have less that is poorly cooked, or half cooked. During the past summer we have had a great deal of mutton, which was raised and fattened on our own farm. As we eschew pork in our own family, and can buy very little beef that we can chew at all, we consider mutton our dependence for food in in the meat line. Several times the preparation of it has been commenced by persons at our table, prefaced by the remark, "I never did relish mutton before." If the Rural will give our method a place in its household column, it may induce those who adopt it to change their opinions in regard to this most wholesome and excellent article of diet:

Place a large steamer upon the stove with plenty of boiling water in it, and also a deep tin or earthern dish to hold the meat and receive the juices. We cook half a quarter at once. Rub each piece with salt and pepper; place it in the dish and cover tightly. From two to three hours will be required to cook it thoroughly. Keep a steady fire and try the meat with a fork after an hour or more; the time must depend on the quality of the meat and all sorts require more time than be beef to be well done.

When quite tender, remove the steamer from the stove. Have ready a dripping-pan with a little boiling water and flour to dredge the meat. Place in this the leg and other parts suitable for roasting; put in a quick oven for a half hour, basting it. Meantime the steamer should be placed where the cold will harden the tallow, which must be carefully take off. Every particle of fat may be thus removed, leaving a clear jelly, similar to that obtained from beef, and with properties peculiarly adapted to the weak digestion of invalids and aged people. One cup of this stock should be added to the gravy served with the roast, also butter and flour to thicken. The remainder makes an excellent soup with a variety of vegetables, or simply the addition of peas, meal, flour or corn-starch. The fat may be utilized for shortening, put with beef dripping; but do not allow it to wander about in the soup. George Eliot, in an article on servants, writes thus of soup making: "You desire soup but you desire it without fat. You are perhaps a genius; the world is in need of your new poem; or you are evolving a momentous theory, and the evolution of fatty acids within you is a serious impediment. An investigation showed that the cook handled the stock as a gardener would turn the soil when digging for roots: thus the particles of fat adhering to the spoon were mingled with the jellied soup beneath, she all the time stoutly affirming that there could be no fat in her soup, for she took it from under the fat. 'But there's stomachs that won't stand soup, and there's where it is,' was the lucid explanation offered."

Recettes a nos moutons:—Portions of the meat not suitable for roasting can be used—sliced up cold for breakfast and tea, with any condiment preferred, and will be found very delicate. We think with nice breakfast rolls and cooked celery it furnishes an excellent morning meal. We cook celery as we do asparagus; cut fine, boil in water till soft, then add one cup of cream and milk with a spoonful of flour, pepper and salt. We prefer it to that so highly seasoned.

Girl's Life in India—Children Doomed to Perpetual Widowhood.

The day of her marriage she is put into a palanquin, shut up tight, and carried to her husband's house. Hitherto she has been the spoiled pet of her mother; now she is to be the little slave of her mother-in-law, upon whom she is to wait, whose commands she is to implicitly obey, and who teaches her what she is to do to please her husband—what dishes he likes best and how to cook them. If the mother-in-law is kind she will let the girl go home occasionally to visit her mother.

Of her husband she sees little or nothing. She is of no more account to him than a little cat or dog would be. There is seldom or never any love between them; and no matter how cruelly she may be treated she can never complain to her husband of anything his mother may do, for he would never take his wife's part. He husband sends to her daily the portion of food that is to be cooked for her, himself, and the children. When it is prepared, she places it on one large brass platter, and it is sent to her husband's room. He eats what he wishes, and then the platter is sent back, with what is left for her and the children. They sit together on the ground and eat the remainder, having neither knives, forks, nor spoons. While she is young she is never allowed to go anywhere.

The little girls are married as young as 3 years of age, and should the boy to whom the child is married die the next day she is called a widow, and is from henceforth doomed to perpetual widowhood; she can never marry again. As a widow she must never wear any jewellery, never dress her hair, never sleep on a bed—nothing but a piece of matting spread on the hard brick floor, and sometimes, in fact, not even that between her and the cold bricks; and, no matter how cold they might be, she must have no other covering than the thin garment she has worn in the day.

She must eat but one meal a day, and that of the coarsest kind of food; and once in two weeks she must fast twenty-four hours. Then not a bit of food nor a drop of water or medicine must pass her lips, not even if she were dying. She must never sit down nor speak in the presence of her mother-in-law, unless they command her to do so. Her food must be cooked and eaten apart from the other women's. She is a disgraced, a degraded woman. She may never even look on at any of the marriage ceremonies of festivals. It would be an evil omen for her to do so. She may have been a high-caste Brahminic woman; but on her becoming a widow, any, even the lowest servant, may order her to do what they do not like to do. No woman in the house must ever speak one word of love or pity to her, for it is supposed that if a woman shows the slightest commiseration to a widow she will immediately become one herself.

It is estimated that there are 80,000 widows in India under 60 years of age.

Tasteful House-Furnishing.

Harmony of color is of the first importance in furnishing. Not that walls, carpet, curtains, chairs, etc., should be of the same color; that would make a room cold and uninviting. There should be two or three colors in a room, but these should harmonize. If one is conscious that she has no eye for color, she should consult some one of known taste before purchasing articles which, although by themselves might be desirable, would perhaps if placed with others spoil the effect of the whole, and be a disappointment to be endured for years. A carpet for instance should not be purchased without considering what the color of the paint is; and so of the sofa and chairs, if they are upholstered. A carpet is like the background of a picture, it brings into effect the whole. Styles for carpets have entirely changed within a few years. Patterns of huge bouquets of impossible flowers used to be seen almost everywhere; now a very small, set figure, so small as to look almost like a plain color at a little distance, is in much better taste. This may be enlivened by a border of bright colors. The lovely pearl and gray grounds, with vines of tracery of a darker shade, and bright borders of Persian patterns, are very desirable, and look well with almost everything. The fashion of staining floor black-walnut color for a yard or more around the walls, and having a square of bordered carpet in the centre, is gaining ground, and much liked for the pretty style and the convenience of taking it up for cleaning. It is also economical. There are now plain, ingrain carpetings, in solid colors, called "filling," which are used around these centre rugs, instead of staining the floor. We have seen parlors carpeted with dark, turquoise-blue filling, with Persian rugs over them, not in any set or regular order. The effect was very good.

A Good Sign.

A young man had declared love to a lady and asked her to be his wife. She hesitated, and he allowed her her own time to consider the matter. One evening, soon afterward, she had occasion to visit an aged relative who resided in the family of which the young man was a member. As she approached the door a sudden impulse caused her to pause. He might be at home, she thought, and she might encounter him. And seeing her there, he would probably imagine she called on purpose to see him. While she stood upon the doorstep meditating, she heard the oven door of the cook stove open, then a rustle of paper, as if it were thrown upon the table; then a firm, light step and the voice of her admirer saying in a gentle way, "Let me do it, mother." Then she knocked, and was admitted just in time to see the young man take some pies from the oven. This little circumstance aided the young lady in concluding what answer to make to the all-important question; and in married life she finds the young man an excellent husband and father.

Anecdotes of Tennyson.

Tennyson cannot say, as Byron said, "I awoke one morning and found myself famous." It was years before he was recognized as a poet by his countrymen. Even as late as 1850, when the Queen wished to make him Poet Laureate, it is said that Sir Robert Peel, then the Prime Minister, on being consulted, confessed that he had never read a line of the poet's poems. But he read "Ulysses," and then acknowledged that the new poet had the right to be England's Laureate.

The writer of the article in Harper's Magazine, which tells the above anecdote, also narrates several others, and among them one about a comical criticism hurled at the poet by Carlyle, when young Tennyson was poor and struggling in London for recognition.

"There he sits upon a dung-heap surrounded by innumerable dead dogs," said the dyspeptic critic with grim candor. He meant by "dead dogs" such poems as "Œnone" and other Greek versions.

When, subsequently, the poet reminded him of his harsh criticism, he gave a kind of gutlaw and answered,—

"Eh, that wasn't a very luminous description of you."

But the best compliment the poet ever received was paid him by a London rough, who met him in the street.

"You're Mr. Tennyson," said the man, holding out his hand. "Look here, sir, here am I. I've been drunk for six days out of the seven, but if you will shake me by the hand, I'll never get drunk again."

When the poet was younger than he now is, he used to wander for days in the glades and woods, or take long walks at night.

Some people once told of meeting a mysterious figure in a cloak coming out of a glade, passing straight on, and looking neither to the right nor to the lest.

"It was either a ghost, or it was Mr. Tennyson," said they.

A lady once asked a boy, who lived near the poet, if he knew Mr. Tennyson.

'He makes poets for the Queen," answered the boy, who had heard this explanation of "Poet Laureate,"

"What do you mean?" asked the amused lady.

"I don't know what they means," replied the boy, "but policeman often seen him walking about a making of 'em under the stars."

The poet's first verses were written upon a slate which his brother Charles put into his hand also giving him a subject—the flowers in the garden. The slate was brought to the older brother all covered with blank verse. "Yes you can write," said Charles, giving Alfred back the slate.

Later on, his grandfather asked him to write an elegy on his grandmother, who had recently died. When it was written, the old gentleman put ten shillings into the boy's hands, and said,—

"There, that is the first money you have ever earned by your poetry, and take my word for, it will be the last."

The grandfather was neither a "prophet, nor the son of a prophet," for the poet has earned many thousand pounds by his poetry.

Tennyson was a pains-taking writer in his early years. He allowed only matured work to go to the press. He elaborated everything. A single perfect expression often cost him much time. His fame thus came slowly, but it is sure.

DOWN IN A COAL MINE.

A large portion of the State of Illinois, like our Canadian North-west, is underlaid with a valuable seam of coal, which is tapped by mining shafts at various points throughout the State. These mineral resources contribute in no small degree to the wealth, influence and prosperity of this State, and have been an important factor in the pre-eminence of Chicago, its commercial metropolis. One of the most important of these coal centres is Braidwood, a town of about 8,000 inhabitants, invested with melancholy interest as the scene of the mining disaster of February last whereby about one hundred miners perished through the flooding of the mines. There are eighteen shafts in the vicinity of Braidwood, one of which, belonging to the

CHICAGO, WILMINGTON AND VERMILLION COAL COMPANY,

I was permitted to examine by the courtesy of Mr. T. B. Corey, the energetic superintendent of the company. The entrance to the mine is marked by an extensive mound of waste clay and stone, which have been elevated from beneath. Immediately adjoining the entrance is the engine-house, containing a large engine and six boilers. The receiving and weighing room covers the mouth of the pit, and consists of a ricketty-looking wooden building elevated above the ground. It has the appearance of a two-story barn with the lower story knocked away and the upper one supported by posts. The trucks loaded with coal are first hoisted up from the mine to this room, then run upon scales, weighed and dumped into cars which stand upon the track beneath. As the coal is being dumped it passes over a large screen which sifts out the fine coal and allows only the large blocks to run into the car.

Our equipment for making this underground exploration consisted simply of a small tin lamp, like a miniature pot, filled with sperm oil. The spout held the wick, which burned with a steady light. Everything being ready, we stepped upon the hoist and were into the mine as easily and pleasantly as in a hotel elevator. Here we found ourselves in a large dark chamber from which diverged a network of roads to the face of the mine. Selecting one of these, along which an underground cable railway was operating, we walked along it about half a mile. It was like walking in a railway tunnel. The roadway was earth, dry, smooth, level and well-beaten. The roof consisted of a solid layer of soapstone propped up by rough wooden posts about four feet long and six inches thick. Cross pieces were inserted above these posts in many places to strengthen the roof, and it was not unusual where the roof was bad to have it entirely ceiled with wooden cross pieces that it might be thoroughly secure. The sides of this tunnel road appeared to be of solid soap stone, but upon close inspection I noticed that the stone for about a foot high from the floor had been disturbed. In reality a space three feet high on each side throughout the whole mine had been originally excavated and the coal removed. This space was filled up loosely with stones cut away from the roof and with other loose matter found in the coal. Gradually the whole superincumbent strata of stone and earth settled down, exerting an enormous pressure upon the loosely filled in stone and waste, and reducing it from three feet to a layer of about one foot in thickness. The roof of the roadway, however, was prevented from settling down in the same way by the numerous props which supported it. This gave the roadway the appearance of a tunnel cut in the solid rock about six feet high and ten wide. At frequent intervals similar side roads bifurcate, leading in all directions, so that the whole mine, for a radius of about a mile on every side from the shaft, is a net work of these roads. The wall between the several roads were originally completely excavated by the removal of the coal, which was replaced by waste stone and clay. The settling down of the strata above and consequent pressure of the waste matter, give the walls their present solid appearance. We proceeded along the main road for about half a mile and then diverged into one of the by-roads, which are only four feet high, obliging us to walk in a stooping posture. We met numerous truck loads of coal, hauled along a tramway by small mules, driven by boys. Small mules are necessary for this work and they are sought for throughout the whole country. It is a weird sight to see these

LOWERED ABOUT ONE HUNDRED FEET

UNDERGROUND COAL TRAINS

The boy with lamp stuck in his cap and hands and face black with coal, looks from a distance like a spirit from the lower regions. The mule appears in the dim light to be of leviathan proportions. The roll of the trucks upon the tramway makes a loud rumbling which resounds like the blows of the Cyclops forging underground chains. All the environments are awe inspiring and suggest the agency of the Prince of Darkness. At length we reach the face of the mine, where the miners are at work. The solid wall of black diamond glistens before us in the dark. In front of it are seated three miners, working with pick and shovel. They have made a deep horizontal incision or opening about six inches deep and several yards in length into the bottom of the coal seam. It extends about three feet into the coal, as far as the pick can reach. The layer of coal is now sufficiently undermined. The creaking and straining of the coal seam inspires the stranger with the fear that the whole roof is going to cave in. But his fears are groundless. Several heavy blows upon a wedge driven into the top of the seam where it joins the upper strata of soap stone are required to sever the coal, and it falls, scattering around in large blocks. These are then loaded into trucks and hauled to the opening by the mules. A space, fourteen feet long by about ten wide, called a room, is thus cleared away, and props are placed under to support the roof. The waste stone which may have fallen with the coal is then piled upon each side of the room, leaving a sufficient roadway clear. Another room is then begun in the same way, by undermining the coal seam and the same process repeated. Three miners generally work in each room, though sometimes two are considered sufficient, according to the difficulty of the work. In this way

THE WHOLE FACE OF THE MINE is being constantly extended, the several parties of miners being placed at regular distances, so that the rooms run into one another. There is, in fact, instead of a series of rooms, one continuous chamber, circling the extreme edge of the mine. This chamber is, however, not a parallelogram, but a circle, all its parts being equidistant from the shaft. These underground excavations may be likened to an enormous horizontal wheel. The central chamber at the mouth of the pit is the hub of the wheel, the roads radiating from this chamber correspond to the spokes, and the series of rooms constituting one continuous chamber in which the miners are constantly at work are represented by the rim of the wheel. Along this continuous chamber is carried the pure air from without for

THE VENTILATION OF THE MINE.

Besides the opening at the mouth of the pit, there is another about a mile distant immediately above the room where the work is presently carried on and a large fan kept in constant motion at the first opening causes a suction which draws the air from the other opening down along this circular chamber and through the various roads to the mouth of the pit.

The three miners in each room mine the coal and load it into trucks. For this they are paid 75 cents per ton. They are required in addition to keep their room and roadway to first parting in order, and for this are allowed 15 cents per ton. This gives them 90 cents per ton. Eight tons are considered a good day's work for three men, giving each $2.40 per day. To prevent strikes, however, the company allows the miners in addition to the above terms forty per cent. of all excess in price which they obtain above $1.75 per ton. The miners are not kept constantly employed, however, and in summer do not average work three days in the week, so that their earnings for the year are quite moderate. About 2,000 miners are employed by this company. The trucks when loaded are hauled away by mules in successive stages, each mule hauling the coal of several rooms to the nearest shunting place. There the trucks are made up into larger trains and drawn by larger mules to the underground cable, by which they are hauled to the mouth of the pit. The trucks are then run singly upon the hoist and elevated by steam power to the weighing room above. One thousand tons per day is the output of this shaft when working to its fullest capacity. With that which is the characteristic of this age, the various coal companies of this State have formed themselves into an association to control the production of coal. No coal is mined until it is sold. So soon as a sale is made the officials of the combination notify each of the companies comprising it of the respective quantities which each is entitled to furnish according to a fixed proportion, and the required quantity is forthwith mined by each company. No sales are made outside the combination, and each company shares every sale made. During the winter months all the miners work to their full capacity, but remain almost idle during the summer. The product is bituminous coal, which deteriorates when exposed to the atmosphere, and is therefore not moved until required for present use.

TENDENCY TO COMBINATION,

The value of the land in the vicinity of Braidwood averages one hundred dollars per acre for the coal it contains. Each company owns the land above its mine, and is liable to a fine of $1.75 per ton for all coal taken from land belonging to anyone else.

He Was No Thief.

"Gentlemen," said an Arkansaw Colonel, as he stood under the limb of a tree from which suspended a rope, "I must pretest my innocence. I did not steal the mule. I am above petty theft. I know that you all have the interest of the community at heart, and I do not blame you; but there are times when we are all liable to be too rash. If I had stolen the mule, my gilt would oppress me until I would beg to be put out of the world in the most summary way."

"The mule was found in your possession," said the leader of the mob.

"Very true, my dear sir."

"Did he jump into your lot?"

"No, sir, I conducted him to the confines of my premises.

"Did you buy the animal?"

"No, sir."

"Did you trade for him?"

"I did not."

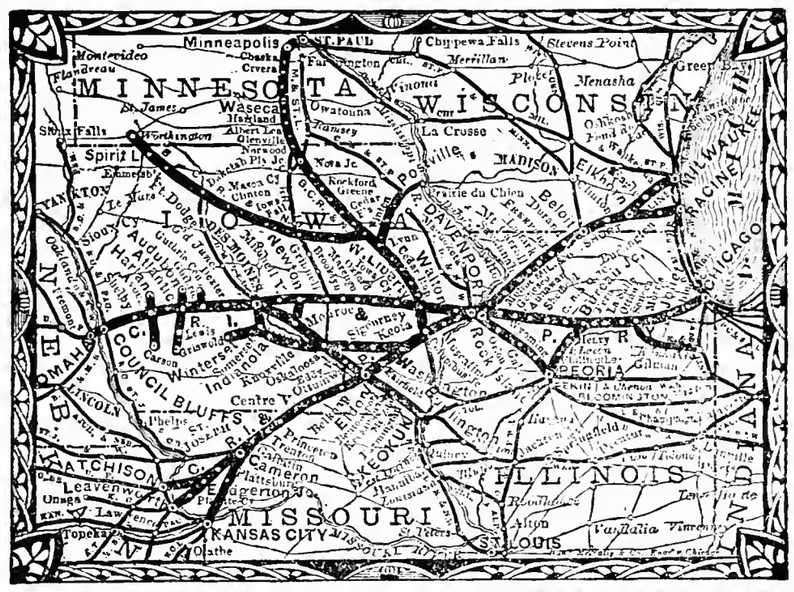
"Then who stole him? Let down the rope, boys."

"Gentlemen, I hope you will give me a chance to explain. The mule in question was the property of one of our distinguished fellow-citizens, Major Rulesberry. Some time ago the Major and I exchanged a few words of an uncomplimentary nature. I intimated that the Major's blood would be highly satisfactory to me, and the Major said that my gore would please him mightily. Well, we separated thoroughly agreeing with each other. The next day the Major and I met. I got what is vulgarly called the drop on him, and relieved him of the top of his head. He was riding a mule at the times and when he fell off I saw that he had no longer any practical use for such an animal so I took charge of him. Now, if I had dismounted in the way he did, I should have interposed no objection to the Major taking my horse."

"I hope, sir, that you will excuse us," replied the leader of the mob. "We thought that you had stolen the mule. Your explanation is most satisfactory, and I hope you'll excuse us. Let us all take a drink."—Arkansas Traveller.

Electric Flannel.

A French scientific journal describes an electric curiosity which its editor has received from Dr. Claudet. The novelty is a specimen of electric flannel, which is claimed to be valuable in cases of rheumatism. The oxides of tin, copper, zinc and iron form nearly one-eighth of the flannel. A series of threads of the fabric is impregnated with these metallic oxides, and each series is alternately separated by untreated threads. The flannel thus prepared constitutes a dry pile, which has been shown by independent experiments of Messrs. Drincourt and Porterin, both reputable physicists, to disengage electricity when in contact with the body, the current becoming more marked as the flannel absorbs the moist products of perspiration.



Senator Mahone seldom wears an overcoat, and in the coolest weather can be seen on the streets of Washington with his Prince Albert unbuttoned.

There are men who love only themselves; and these are men of intellect, for to love one's self alone is to hate others.

How many sighs and tears might be averted if kindness of hand, kindness of heart, and kindness of speech were general.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Calliatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE,
Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN,
Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JAN. 31, 1884.

THE FOURTH ESTATE.

A meeting of the publishers of Grey and Dufferin will be held at the Markdale House, Markdale, at 10 o'clock a. m., on Friday the 8th February for the purpose of forming a Press Association for the above counties. We have heard from every publisher but two and expect yet to hear from them. Each have expressed their intention of being present, or otherwise abide by the decision of the majority, hence a unanimous meeting may be expected. We hope to see the ball continue to roll from county to county. We may here state that owing to Dufferin being a small county and the publishers thereof located on the line making it convenient to reach here, we took the liberty of extending to them an invitation to unite with us.

Presentation at Rosemount.

We clip the following from the Minnedosa Tribune. Mr. Fanning is a son of Mr. Jos. Fanning, Williamsford, who some six years ago moved to that part, was a councillor for the county of Harriston last year and was again elected by acclamation as Reeve for the same municipality. He received his first musical instructions from Mr. Wm. Ewart, of Holland, and since that time has been very successful in its pursuit, as the following testimony will show :—

A very pleasant gathering of the members and friends of the Rosemount singing school took place one evening last week. The proceedings were opened by Mr. Wellington Craig reading the following address :

To Mr. Joseph Fanning.

Dear Sir.—We the members of the Rosemount singing class.and friends,have agreed to meet you here this evening for a pleasant and friendly purpose, to offer you in the name of those who have studied under you, for the promotion of what we believe to be a true improvement of the intellect, a small token of our confidence and approval. We solicit your acceptance of these little ornaments, not as a reward for your labors, for you find that in the approbation of your own conscience, but as a memento of our appreciation of them. That fidelity to principle which is the jewel of an honest patriot's soul, has its type in these unblemished gems, and it is for this reason they have been selected by your pupils and friends as an appropriate testimonial of their esteem for a tried and trusted instructor and comrade. We know that you will prize the gift for its associations, not for its intrinsic value. It represents feelings and sentiments which time can no more charge or dim than it can impair the lustre of the diamond. Let them remind you of the high esteem in which the givers hold your character and musical talent both as a public man and teacher.

We have great pleasure in assuring you that it is a spontaneous offering of genuine attachment, and now sir please permit these young ladies to place them in your possession and express the earnest wish that you may long live to use them.

The gifts were a gold pen and pencil, Masonic pin and a pair of cuff buttons with Masonic emblems. They were presented by Miss Craig and Miss Maggie McCallum.

Mr. Fanning replied as follows :

Dear Scholars and Friends.

Being so taken by surprise I am at a loss for words to express my deep sense of gratitude and thankfulness to you for your kind expressions of esteem and regard. In continuing the singing school I am acting with a view to self-improvement as well as to benefit others, so my motives are not entirely free from selfishness. I assure you I have found it at all times a pleasure to teach as you have each and all been earnest and diligent in your studies. Dear scholars and friends I assure you these gifts shall be treasured not for their intrinsic worth or value, but as a pleasing memento of the many happy hours we have spent together. Your action to-night convinces me that I hold a high place in your esteem and affection and I trust that by proving myself worthy I may long be able to retain that enviable position, In conclusion I thank you all most sincerely and heartily for the kind sentiments you have given expression to, also for your valuable gifts, and I wish you each and all a hearty. happy, good New Year.

After the presentation several good songs were given by the following ladies and gentlemen : Miss McCallum, Miss Maggie McCallum, Messrs. R. L. Green, Jos. Fanning, D Hamilton and A. R. Fanning.

It is now expected that the Government will introduce a measure reducing letter postage from three to two cents to correspond with the present United States rates.

Correspondence.

Notice.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

MUNICIPAL CHANGES.

To Editor Standard :

We understand that John S. Black has been appointed to the office of Township Clerk. This is as it should be, all the officers of the municipality should be residents therein. I have no doubt Mr. Black will make a very good clerk. We understand that Mr. Jas. Lauder will be an aspirant for the office of assessor made vacant by Mr. Black's promotion. Mr. Lauder is an old resident, has been in the council for some years should have a good knowledge of the township and we think a very good man for the position.

Ratepayer.

A BIG LUMBER FAILURE.

The British Canadian Lumbering and Timber Co.

For some time rumor has been busy with the affairs of the British Canadian Lumber and Timber company, the offices of which are at 34 Scott street. It was stated yesterday that a receiver had been appointed, or rather that the company had assigned to the banks interested.

The company had a capital of a million, mostly Scottish money, was formed some years ago, and bought extensive limits and mills from the Cook Bros., Geo. J & H. H. It is understood that the Messrs. Cook made a good thing out of the sale. George J. Cook is president of the company, and J. S. Leckie, formerly manager of the bank of Commerce, is its financial manager. The banks mainly interested are the Toronto, Quebec and Commerce, the liabilities to which foot up close on to a million dollars, perhaps half of which is secured. The commerce is the largest creditor.

It is now alleged that the rosy statements made as to the value of the limits have not been realized, and that not only will the shareholders loose all the money that they put in it, but the ordinary creditors will not be paid, and the banks will be out a large amount.

A short time ago it was hoped that the company would pull through by each of the banks advancing $50,000 and the Scotchmen the same amount, but this appears to have been abandoned.

A reporter asked Mr. H. H. Cook last night about the matter, but he had nothing to say.—Toronto World.

Time to Shoot Him.

An ingenious correspondent has sent us the following. We have no key to the meaning or solution. probably our readers can find one : The Herald bearing the Standard will Advance to the Mirror but the signs of the Times therein depicted will plainly prove that the Monitor is not a perfect Chronicle of public affairs ; in fact, is better as a Review for the Advertiser. An Economist will try to curtail Free Press principles, while at the same time he will Venture to nail a second Standard to the Post.—Mirror.

Holland Council.

Council met at Vogan's hall, Holland Centre, on January 21st.

The reeve, John Cameron, Esq., and three councillors, viz: Jas. Galbraith, Michael Howey, and Thomas Williscroft, took their declarations of office and qualification and their seats.

Minutes of former meeting read and adopted.

Reeve appointed John Sutherland and the council John McDonald. as auditors.

Galbraith, Howey—That the account of the returning officers be paid.

Galbraith, Williscroft—That $12 be paid to S S No. 9 as taxes collected partly from section No. 5 in error.

Galbraith, Williscroft — That the reeve and deputy reeve be a committee to investigate the treasurer's security.

Williscroft, Galbraith—That the account of C. W. Rutledge and John Rutherford be paid.

Galbraith, Williscroft—That we receive applications up to next meeting of council for the office of assessor.

Galbraith. Howey — That by-law No. 1, appointing auditors, be read first, second and third times and engrossed on the minutes.

Galbraith, Howey—That we take tenders for the township printing up till next meeting of Council.

Howey, Galbraith—That the statement now sent in by the auditors be received, and that Mr. Norton receive his bonds.

Galbraith, Williscroft—That Wm. Norton receive the sum of $70 as salary for collecting.

Mr. Norton then took his declaration of qualification and office and took his seat at 8 p.m.

Howey, Williscroft—That we adjourn till the 21st Feb. 1884.

Carson Price, Clerk.

Eugenia.

The annual tea-meeting of the Methodist Church here was held on the evening of the 24th inst., and was in every respect a decided success. The tea was served in the old school house after which all repaired to the church, where the intellectual part of the entertainment took place. Mr. Carr was called to the chair, which he filled with credit. Tha singing was of an excellent character. Rev.A.Wilson, of Markdale, and Rev. Mr. German, of Manitoba, gave addresses. Proceeds $40.

Fearful Accident at Bognor.

On Saturday evening, 12th inst., a terribly painful accident happened at Bognor, and has since that time proved fatal. Mr. Wm. Luton, who was only married last Christmas day, was carrying out a boiler of boiling water. He slipped and fell backwards and the water poured into his breast and over his arms, side and back. The skin was almost stripped from the upper part of his body. Dr. Parsons, of this town, was sent for, and was soon doing all he could to allay the excruciating sufferings of the victim of the accident. Although at one time there were some grounds for hope, they proved fallacious.—Mr. Luton passed away before a week had gone by. His young wife had the keen sympathy of her many neighbors and friends in her sad and sore bereavement.—Mirror.

More Valuable than Ever.

We call our readers' attention to the value, usefulness and direct profit of supplying themselves this year with the American Agriculturist, the cheapest as well as the most valuable journal in the country. Every number contains one hundred columns of original reading matter, by the leading writers of the country, upon all topics connected with the farm, garden, or household, and nearly one hundred engravings, made specially for the American Agriculturist. The paper, now in its 43rd year, is unquestionably more valuable than ever before. Each number brings fresh evidence that no time or money is considered where the interest of the paper is at stake. Its house Plans and Improvements profusely illustrated, are worth more than any costly architectural works. Its persistent and fearless exposure of humbugs and swindling schemes, is of great value to the whole country, particularly the farming community In short it has something good and valuable for everybody. Owing to a special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to offer the Standard and the American Agriculturist for one year and the engravings "Foes or Friends?" and "In the Meadow" for $2.10 (10 cents for packing and postage.

Canada's Great Carnival.

The great winter carnival in Montreal, 4th to 9th February, is attracting thousands upon thousands of sight-seers from all parts of the continent. The attack, defence and capture of the Ice Palace, the great skating carnival on a scale of unprecedented grandeur. the snow-shoe torchlight procession by thousands of snow-shoers, the tobogganning fete on Mount Royal, the great sleigh-drive turn-out embracing five thousand superb sleighing equipages, the living arch manned by the snow-shoers in club uniform, cheering their Excellencies the Governor-General and Lady Lansdowne, as they are drawn through the triumphal arch, all these striking and startling features of the great fete, and many others, are to be splendidly illustrated in the Carnival number of the Montreal Star, printed on superior paper, with full and double page colored illustrations. This special Carnaval number of the Montreal Star will be of wonderful interest to all people in all lands. It is gotten up by the best artists in this country, and will take the place of the Canadian Illustrated News, suspended. Ten cents, in stamps, sent to the publishers, Graham & Co., will get a copy. Newsdealers will have them for sale.

Not content with Being the Best.

Whatever may be said in regard to the propensity of the management of the great railway lines to provide for the public only what is actually demanded in the way of accommodations and comfort, can in no way apply to the management of the Chicago Rock Island and Pacific Railway, or as it is more familiarly known "The Great Rock Island Route." This line has for years been recognized as the best and most comfortable route between Chicago and Kansas City and the Southwest, and has been abundantly able on this account to successfully cope with its competitors. But not satisfied with this success and its already elegant equipment, its managers have caused to be turned out of its shops at Chicago, a magnificent line of dining cars, which go into immediate service on the Kansas City Line. These cars contain all the conveniences of well finished dining rooms, are elegant in design and finish, and models of the advanced railway art of the day. Within them meals are furnished equal to those of any first class hotel in the land, at the low rate of senty-five cents. Travelers on this line now find on its trains all the comforts and conveniences of first-class hotels. Besides the best of first and second class coaches, there are Parlor Chair Cars, (which are free to all passengers holding through first class tickets.) Pullman palace sleeping cars and dining cars.

This company's lines—all of which are equally well equipped—also extend to Council Bluffs and the West, and Minneapolis and St. Paul and the Northwest; and the deserved praise bestowed upon it by returned travelers who speak from experience, make it noted throughout the land.

We bespeak for the owners and managers of this magnificent railway ample returns for their generous provisions for the wants of the public, which is as has already been proven by the patronage extended to this line, quick to appreciate and patronize those who prove by their deeds and generous treatment that they are devoted to its comfort and welfare.

A $20 Bible Prize.

The publishers of Rutledge's Monthly offer twelve valuable rewards in their Monthly for February, among which is the following:

We will give $20 to the person telling us which is the longest verse in the Old Testament Scriptures by February 10th, 1884. Should two or more correct answers be received, the reward will be divided. The money will be forwarded to the winner February 15, 1884. Persons trying for the reward must send 20 cents in silver (no postage stamps taken) with their answer, for which they will receive the March Monthly, in which the name and address of the winner of the reward and the correct answer will be published, and in which several more valuable rewards will be offered. Address Rutledge Publishing Co., Easton, Pa.

Market Reports.

MARKDALE.

Fall Wheat	$0 80	to	$1 00
Spring Wheat	0 60	to	0 95
Barley	40	to	55
Peas	60	to	66
Oat	25	to	27
Butter	15	to	17
Eggs	22	to	00
Potatoes	30	to	00
Hay	7 00	to	0 00
Pork	6 75	to	7 25
Flour	4 75	to	5 00

FLESHERTON.

Fall Wheat, $0.60 to $1.00; Spring, $0.40 to $1.00; Barley. 35c; Peas, 60c; Oats, 20c Butter, 17c; Eggs, 20c; Potatoes.40 c; Hay, $7 .50 Pork, $7.00 to $7.25

TORONTO.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.06; Spring, $1.11 to $1.11; Barley, 62c to 69c; Oats, 37c to 38c Peas, 74c to 74c; Hogs, $7.75 to $8.00; Potatoes, per bus, 72c to $75c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 19c; eggs. 22c to 25c.

THOS. CARTER M. D.

Physician Surgeon, &c.

Residence MARKDALE HOUSE.
Markdale.

NEW FIRM

The undersigned having purchased the butcher business from Mr. F. Sarjeant, beg to announce to the public that they are prepared to supply all who favor them with their patronage, with all kinds of meat, the best quality the country can afford. Hoping by fair dealing and close attention to business to merit a liberal patronage, we remain

Respectfully Yours,
SARJEANT & BURNSIDE.
Markdale.Jan.30,'84.

2,000,000

SUBSCRIBERS

Want it for 1884. The American Agriculturist to-day is better than ever before. We have increased our corps of Editors and Artists, enlarged and added to our Departments until the Periodical is now the recognized leading Agricultural Journal of the world, presenting in every issue 100 Columns of Original Reading Matter from the ablest writers, and nearly 100 Original Illustrations It is to the interest of every one whose subscription has expired or who changing his place of residence, or moving West, has for the time being dropped out of our Great Army of Subscribers to

COME BACK

and accept of our unparalleled offer of the

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST

For 1884. A $4 Periodical.

A 600-PAGE DICTIONARY,
1000 ILLUSTRATIONS.

"FOES OR FRIENDS?"
Morris' 11x18 Superb Plate Engravings

"IN THE MEADOW"
Dupre's 12x17 Superb Plate Engraving.

—OR—

12 PIECES OF SHEET MUSIC,
In Place of the Dictionary,

ALL for $1.70
POST-PAID.

Active Canvassers Wanted.

Send two 2-cent stamps for a Sample Copy, and see what a Wonderful Paper it is now. Address

Orange Judd Co.
751 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.
David W. Judd, President.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION.

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

NOTICE.

Those indebted to the undersigned will please call and settle without further delay. Owing to the late fire I am in need of all outstanding accounts.

R. ASE

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the animals ever brought into this district service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia, for the year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.
171-80 D. R. EL

NOTICE.

All parties indebted to the undersigned are hereby requested to pay same to A. Turner, Markdale. He is only person in Markdale authorized to receive monies due me and to give receipts therefor.
175-77. T. S. SPROULE, M

NOTICE.

All who are indebted to the undersigned, are hereby notified to settle same either by cash or note, at once. I am obliged to make close collections owing to the recent fire.

JOHN McKEN

FOR SALE.

Dwelling House, Suitable for grocery store, or other business with dwelling above, and stable on the lot on mill street, corner lot. good business. Apply to S. DAMUDE, Flesherton, or RUTLEDGE, Markdale.

LOGS WANTED.

The undersigned is prepared to buy, all the Baswood, Ash, Hemlock and Maple saw logs per scale, to be delivered at Davis' Mill, Main Road, for which the highest price will be given in cash. Parties bringing custom logs can get them cut either on shares or by the thousand, satisfaction guaranteed as the proprietor has engaged a first class sawyer.

EDWARD DAVIS,
Proprietor

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 17 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clear and under cultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12, Ba 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13 Glenelg, 100 all bush. For terms and particulars to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale
Oct.16.1883. 17

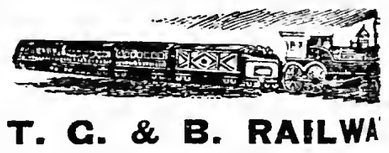
FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 18, 1, West T. & S. R., Artemesia, containing 50 acres, more or less, all cleared and under cultivation. A good bank barn, and dwelling house on the premises, also a bearing young orchard just commencing to bear situated about 2½ miles from the incorporated village of Markdale. For Terms and particulars apply at this office or to

JOHN HAZARD,
Flesherton Station

NOTICE.

As I have decided to remove my business from Markdale, all parties indebted by note or book account must settle their accounts immediately. Statement of account can be had and payment made at the Bank of Markdale.



HENRY FOSTER
Markdale, Aug. 8th, 1883.

A. HILL,

Fashionable Tailor

OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.

A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, trains will run as follows :

GOING NORTH.			GOING SOUTH.
Read Down.			Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.
7 30	4 25	Toronto	10 45
9 05	6 00	Cardwell Junc.	9 05
9 55	6 45	Orangeville	8 27
12 20	8 44	Mount Forest	6 30
2 25	10 15	Teeswater	5 00
11 50	8 30	Flesherton	6 43
12 06	8 45	Markdale	6 27
1 30	9 55	Owen Sound	5 15
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. — Edmund Wragge, General Man

ALEX KA

BOOT & Sho

MAKER.

MILL STREET
MARKDALE

HAGYARD'S PECTORAL BALSAM.

Has no equal for the permanent cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all Lung Diseases.

Every bottle guaranteed to give satisfaction.
T. MILBURN & CO., Proprietors Toron

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clochs, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personally, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

NOTICES in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

T. McNEA has a new sign up.

JOHN RICHARDS is recovering from his late illness.

NEARLY everyone has a bad cold; even the January thaw.

PLEWES BROS. are working up a good business in gristing &c. Give them a trial.

GLENELG council meets next Monday, also Artemesia. Holland on the 21st Feb.

THE Provincial Grange of Ontario will meet in Toronto on the 19th Febuary next.

MIKE SULLIVAN is fitting up the brick block he recently purchased in this village for a hotel.

A GENUINE general January thaw commenced Wednesday morning and lasted twenty-four hours.

GREY Division Grange No. 2 will meet at Rocklyn Thursday the 7th of February, 1884, at 10 o'clock, a. m.

THE recent snow blockade between Meaford and Collingwood has been of longer duration than any since the building of the railway.

BLANK NOTES kept on hand for sale at the STANDARD office drawn both (to order) and (to bearer) bound in books of 25, 50, or 100. also unbound.

WE ACKNOWLEDGE with thanks receipt of subscription for 84 from R. H. Whitby, Orangeville, and John McNicoll Harrison, Mich.

JOHN McKENNA has opened business in the shop opposite Haskett Bro's. on Elizabeth street where he will be pleased to have all his old costomers and many new ones.

ALL parties indebted to the under signed by note or book account are hereby notified to pay the same to Lucas & Co's. Bank without further notice and save costs. W. F. Doll.

Second hand clocks in good order for sale at Brown's jewellery, Markdale, from $1 to $2 50. When bringing clocks for repairs, leave weights, ball and key at home, as it will save trouble.

THE Markdale Gymnasium Club gave an entertainment in Dundalk on Tuesday evening. The boys speak very highly of the treatment they received, especially from the Brass Band.

500 HORSES wanted at McKenna's, blacksmith shop, opposite Hasket's on Elizabeth St., Markdale, where he will attend to horse shoeing, and all other work in his line.

W. F. DOLL, has sold his Chatsworth business to Mr. Freeman of that place. Mr. D. will leave in a few day's for the Southern States where he will spend a couple of months.

BOWLER BROS completed ther seasons thrashing on Monday at J. M. Davis barn Euphrasia. They did a long seasons work and gave good satisfaction, they are but young yet and carried off the bun in this neighborhood.

SOCIAL.—A social under the auspices of the ladies of the Presbyterian Church will be held at the residence of Mr. Thos. Murray, 10th con. Glenelg on Thursday evening the 7th February, come one, come all and enjoy a sociable evening. Admission 15 cents.

LAST week's cold snap was the most severe for many years. Mr. James Struthers thermometer (11th line Euphrasia) registered 43 below zero at six o'clock on Friday morning last, and Mr. H. D. Irwin, reports 38 at his farm in Artemesia the same morning.

FOR SALE.—A pair of Colts rising two and three years respectively, apply to Andrew Irving one mile East of Markdale T. & S. Road. 176-78.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best Salve in the world for cuts, bruises sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by A. Turner & Co.

A SECRET.—The secret of beauty lies in pure blood and good health. Rejuvinater Bitters is the grand key that unlocks all the secretions. It cures all Scrofulous Diseases, acts on the blood, Liver Kidneys, Skin and Bowels, and brings the bloom of health to the palid cheek. Sold only by Smith, the barber.

JOHN McNICOLL, son of Mr. Jas. McNicoll of Artemesia is home from Harrison, Mich., for a few weeks. Now the question is asked did he come home to get a wife? whether or not we are not in a position to say. He has however taken one in the person of Miss Mary Ann Thibaudeau. Next.

REMEMBER the extensive auction sale of town lots on Saturday, 2nd in Markdale. This is a rare chance to procure a choice plot for a residence, the location is a most desirable one, the terms easy and another such chance may not be available until prices have greatly advanced.

MR. WM. MASON had just received a large and extra good stock of wood material for carriages and wagons for the coming season when the late fire consumed his shop and threw him out of business. He has since sold his stock to our enterprising townsmen Mr. D. J. Shanahan and has also accepted a situation with Mr. S.

ANOTHER AUCTIONEER.—Mr. Joseph Manarey of Euphrasia has taken out license for the County of Grey and has wielded the hammer with success at several sales, and has a number more on hand. Those who require the services of such will be promptly attended to by writing him at Harkaway P. O. or by leaving their order at this office.

WE direct the attention of our readers to the card of Dr. Carter in this paper. Having returned to Markdale where he will follow his profession, will doubtless receive a large practice. His business will be entirely seperate and independant from that of Dr. Sproule, as many have the idea he is in partnership with the latter, this notice is necessary.

RECEIVED on Jan. 28th, a fine line of castors, pickle cruets, spoons, forks, knives &c.. from the Meridan Co., who have appointed me agent here for their goods. Can sell fine lines of nickle goods, tea desert and table spoons far below general prices for these goods elsewhare. Call and see goods and get prices. W. A. Brown, jeweller, Markdale.

MR. W. B. CRYSLER, traveller for "Picturesque Canada" has recently delivered Nos. 25 and 26, and states that there will be an end to the work, there being yet fine trips to make. Last two are fully up to former parts, and when complete will make a most interesting and valuable volume. Mr. J. Howard Hunter, M. A. is the writer of Nos. 25 and 26.

THAT SNOW PLOW.—We are informed that Mr. O. Jull is that inventer of the new snow plow, and the Captain Leslie has joined him in getting up a company to manufacture them, The patent has already been secured. both in Canada and the States. Experienced railway men in Toronto, who examined the model, pronounce a favorable verdict, and there is every probability of its proving a success.—Orangeville Advertiser.

THE acquittal of Conductor Barber will be approved of by all just men. To have made him the scapegoat of a corporation which keeps down expenses by overworking its employees and stinting them in pay would have been a great injustice. It is upon the company that the greatest blow should fall, for when greedy monopoly causes the death of a man it should be compelled to support and educate his family.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.—The ladies of the Markdale Methodist church met in the Parsonage, on the 29th inst. when the following officers were elected for 1884: President, Mrs. Mark Armstrong; Vice-President, Mrs. Casson; Treasurer, Mrs. Cornwall; Secretary, Mrs. T. Hill. Directors, Mrs. Bowes, Mrs. Hull, Mrs. McKenna and Mrs. McNea. It was decided to hold the annual Bazaar and concert on the 24th May. A social will be given soon of which due notice will be given.

AUCTION

SALE

— ON —

FRIDAY

— AND —

SATURDAY

FEB. 8 AND 9

The Undersigned will sell by Public Auction at

MARKDALE

A Large Consignment of

GENERAL :-: GOODS

The Goods will be sold

WITHOUT RESERVE

as we are giving up business.

Sale to Commence at 12 O'clock Sharp EACH DAY.

WILLIAM STEWART, Auctioneer.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,

CASKETS,

SHROUDS,

and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

WINES AND LIQUORS

CHOICE BRANDS.

Brandy in Hogsheads.
Scotch and Irish Whiskey in Qr. Casks.
Holland Gin in Qr. Casks.
Jamacia Rum in Qr. Casks.
Fine Old Port and Sherry in Qr. Casks.
Native Wine in Qr. Casks.
Five-year-old Rye Whiskey in Barrels.
White Wheat Whiskey in Barrel.
Rye and Malt Whiskey in Barrels.
Domestic Whiskey in Barrels.
Liquors in Cases.
Bottled Ale and Porter.

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKERY,

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS.

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169 90.

Burdock BLOOD BITTERS.

WILL CURE OR RELIEVE

BILIOUSNESS, DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, JAUNDICE, ERYSIPELAS, SALT RHEUM, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, DIZZINESS, DROPSY, FLUTTERING OF THE HEART, ACIDITY OF THE STOMACH, DRYNESS OF THE SKIN,

And every species of disease arising from disordered LIVER, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS OR BLOOD,

T. MILBURN & CO., Proprietors, TORONTO.

"THE WILD TRIBES OF THE SOUDAN."

Probably one of the most interesting regions to the British public just now is that mysterious territory which bears the general name of the Soudan—a territory which stretches far across the African continent from the Red Sea, and of which the Khedive's dominions form but a very small part. There are some portions of the Soudan which have not been trodden by European feet, at least not so far as recorded. And the adventurous career of the Mahdi lends peculiar interest to the portions of the Soudan near the Nile and its tributaries. The precise whereabouts of the False Prophet is not known just now, but there is a general impression that he is bringing under subjection the independent tribes on his flanks, so that he can advance with greater safety towards Upper Egypt. In fact, the latest news suggests that the Mahdi may in a few days be before Khartoum, where the White and Blue Niles form a fork. In a book just published entitled "The Wild Tribes of the Soudan" Mr. F. L. James, M. A., gives a very readable account of sporting experiences in a part of the Soudan which few of the Canadian public have probably heard of before. For a frontispiece it has an engraved portrait of a "professional beauty" of this region, and the lady is ugliness personified, rings from nose and ears assisting in the ugly effect; but she is a fair representative of her race (the Bases), who would be certain to gain the palm for deformity of feature if there were an international competition. But these strange people are not likely to attach themselves to the Mahdi, or join in any fanatical rising, because they seem to have no religion whatever.

In his preface Mr. James apologizes for adding another to the many books on Africa, but the apology is scarcely needed, inasmuch as the last expedition of the three referred to in the title-page was made into a territory previously unexplored. The territory in question, the Base country, lies between the Egyptian Soudan proper and Abyssinia, and the Base themselves are reputed to be fierce and treacherous in their dealings with strangers. Mr. Powell (brother of Mr. Powell, the late member for Malmesbury, whose fatal balloon ascent is fresh in the public resollection) perished at their hands, together with his wife and child, some fourteen years ago. Mr. James, however, while finding these Base a very debased and brutal people—and of this he gives ample illustration at page 99—found no difficulties but such as could be met by decision, tact, and watchfulness.

At the beginning of the book Mr. James gives some amusing extracts from the replies to his advertisement for a competent medical man. One applicant stipulated for a cigar after dinner and supper, a glass of mild ale, and meals at regular hours. Another, after giving a long list of his qualifications and requirements, concluded by saying, "I am engaged in devising a series of tests to determine whether people are really dead before they are buried; and Egypt is a good country to make observations of this sort in."

Mr. James' descriptions of the country and the people are not so full as some persons would like, but he wrote the book as a story of sporting adventure and not for scientific purposes, and the "general reader" will like it all the better for its non-elaboration, especially as the numerous excellent engravings give a good idea of the country and the natives. Mr. James shrewdly points out that travelling for sport is one thing and travelling for exploration quite another, and that any attempt to combine two can only end in spoiling both. It must not, therefore, be complained if the book is so largely a record of wild beasts killed and wounded. For the benefit of all interested in such matters, we give a list of the game mentioned in the book, taken from a very copious index—antelope, ariel, buffalo (very frequently mentioned), elephants, gazelles, giraffes, guinea-fowl, hippopotami, leopards, lions, ostriches, panthers, partridges, sand-grouse, and wart hog, to say nothing of venomous snakes, and, on one occasion, a boa-constrictor. Not that Mr. James was by any means unobservant of all the points in an unexplored country which give general interest to a record of travel. There is ample evidence in the pages of his book that he and his friends did not go to the Base country merely "to shoot something." For instance, the book is accompanied by a map of the country made by Mr. W. D. James and Mr. Aylmer from daily astronomical observations. Thus, as the author says, a portion is added, however small, to the map of Africa. The map is also made a very practical one by the marking down on it of every place where water is to be found. Among other things which the travellers took out with them from England was a magic lantern furnished with slides specially chosen, which they frequently exhibited, much to the amusement and amazement of the spectators. Mr. James' hunting party comprised ten Europeans and a number of natives, the force being thus strong enough and sufficiently well equipped to ensure respect under ordinary circumstances. They left the port of Souakim, on the Red Sea, on the 15th December, 1881, and proceeded to Cassala, the capital of the fertile Eastern Soudan, and in regard to the extent of population next in importance to Khartoum, the people of the region being a mixture of Arabs and negroes. Here they were unfortunate enough to lose one of the Swiss servants from an attack of dysentery. Cassala is the centre for a number of Germans who gather wild animals for the various zoological collections of Europe and America. One of these Germans, whom Mr. James met, had spent eight winters in the Soudan, visiting Europe every summer. He had also been twenty-three times to New York selling his animals. Haikota, to the east of Cassala, is the residence of the Beni Amer chief, Sheikh Achmed Ageer, described as the best-mannered and most plausible Arab the author ever met with. This important personage called upon the travellers, and volunteered assistance to them in getting through the Bases country, sending with them a detachment of four horsemen—for a consideration of twenty-five dollars per month for each man—this being the Sheik's method of levying taxes on travellers coming within his jurisdiction. In the region of Haikota the country literally swarmed with guinea-fowl, and there were abundance of partridge, while the sportsmen often shot the telel antelope.

After some days' hunting the sporting party entered the Bases country. They came suddenly upon eight or ten Bases, who fled in terror, leaving up a baobab tree one who was appeased with presents. At Base villages the chiefs were found amenable to the influence of gifts, Manchester cotton setting their minds right. The exhibition of a magic lantern was a great success, and the portraits of the Queen and Prince of Wales were received with rapture. Following on these came pictures of the wild beasts of the country, the crowning success being the picture of a man escaping up a tree from a crocodile, which opened and shut its mouth in its attempts to get at him. Mr. James talks of another expedition to the Soudan, and in view of this we would suggest to him that a Punch and Judy show might prove even a greater hit than a magic lantern. The country abounded in large game, while the rivers swarmed with fish. An attack was made upon two members of the party while out shooting by a body of Abyssinians who had raided across the frontier. The freebooters wounded an Arab servant, spearing him in the abdomen in a frightful manner. His companions could not discover his where-abouts, and returned to camp without him, but next morning he reappeared having crawled eight miles amid awful agony only to die nearly as soon as he reched the camp. Base volunteers accompanied the travellers, and the Sheik's son, Longay was a devoted follower, cleaning the knives and otherwise making himself useful. "He often, too," says Mr. James, "induced others among his people to work for us, when without his help they would have done nothing at all. On parting from us he fairly shed tears, and altogether he was the best specimen of the completely 'untutored savage' I ever came across. "The native servants declared the Bases resembled baboons, and they rest by placing the sole of the right foot against the left knee, a practice believed to be common among tribes on the White Nile.

The Base grow durrah, the staple food of the Soudan, which contains much starch, and is considered more nourishing than wheat. They also manufacture from it a kind of sour beer, of which they drink a great deal, with the results to be expected. They carry liquids in closely-plaited baskets made from palm-leaves. Consequent on the dread inspired among their followers by the Abyssinian raiders, Mr. James and his party went westward and pitched their camp on the banks of the Settite, a tributary of the Blue Nile, where lions were "bagged in plenty, besides hippopotami, giraffes, antelopes, and such small-deer, while the river yielded fish of over 30lbs. weight. The kelb-el-bahr seems to be a fish specirlly delightful to anglers, as it is "a most sporting fish, always fighting to the last gasp. In this respect, as in its appearance, it resembles the salmon. It possesses a moveable upper jaw and frightful teeth, which fitting into one another are very suggestive of the rat-trap. The best sport was, however, with the beggar, which is exactly like the perch except in regard to the stripes, which it lacks. The author believes that it is with the milky juice of the quol-quol the Abyssinians catch fish. They throw a quantity into the water, when the fish become insensible and float on the surface; and "a drop of this juice inadvertently getting into one's eye is said to to be sufficient to cause blindness." Wart-hogs and a boa-constrictor were also "bagged." One lion shot measured nine feet two inches in length, and had a splendid mane, unusual in the Soudan. Subsequently they again passed through the country of the ugly folk and embarked for England at the fort of Massowah. This is the baldest outline of Mr. James' narrative, but it will serve to give some idea of the ground he covered, and as it was strange ground for Europeans his book will be read with special interest. The Bases get a bad name from their neighbors, but Mr. James found them very agreeable, even if not good looking. The book is very readable alike for the matter it contains and the manner in which it is presented, and it is sure to be eagerly perused, while other travellers, especially those of sporting proclivities, will be disposed to try their luck among the wild tribes of this part of the Soudan.

Hydrophobia.

The following notice respecting rabies or dog-madness (hydrophobia) has been issued by the Brown "Animal Sanitary Institution" under the Government of the University of London: This disease occurs in dogs of all ages, and may appear at any season of the year. It is recognized by a change of demeanor of the dog, which becomes dejected, morose, inclined to roam, and anxious to hide itself. The animal gnaws at wood, stones, and any refuse which it sees, snaps at imaginary objects, and becomes unusually excited by strange or sudden noises. It rubs its throat with its paws, as if striving to get rid of some object lodged there; at the same time there is a more or less abundant flow of saliva from the mouth. The animal is, moreover very easily excited, and barks with a peculiar, harsh, strange cough. The dog will attack its master, or animals of any kind; but it is most easily roused to fury by the presence of other dogs. It is feared and shunned by healthy dogs, not only when it attacks them, but when the disease is in a very early stage. There is throughout the disease no dread of water. Before the tendency to bite shows itself, the animal may be unusually affectionate to its master, licking his face and fawning upon him. In one form of the disease called "dum madness" there is paralysis of the jaw and therefore inability to bite. Precautions in cases of supposed hydrophobia:—If a dog has shown any of the symptoms of madness mentioned above, or an unusual tendency to bite other animals, it should be at once loose muzzled and securely chained up; but it is advisable that it should not be destroyed until it has been examined by some authority capable of determining whether the animal be rabid or not. Owners of dogs are warned of the danger they may incur by allowing their faces and hands (especially if scratched) to be licked by the animals, even if they show no sign of madness. All dog-bites should be immediately cleansed by suction and washing, and the wounds should be cauterized as soon as possible.—CHARLES S. ROY, M. D., Professor-Superintendent, the Brown Institution.

The weakest spot of every man is where he thinks himself the strongest.

Evolution in Buckwheat Cakes.

"Buckwheat cakes!" said a man in a downtown restaurant. "Wheat cakes!" said another man by his side. In a short time a waiter brought three broad thin disks, that were white within and a crisp brown without, to each man. In looks the cakes were exactly alike. A man with a sensitive taste could have determined after one or two trials that they did not taste alike.

"I ordered buckwheat just because the name brings up pleasant memories," said one. "Here is a case in which evolution has ruined the thing evoluted. When I was a boy my father used to carry buckwheat to mill and bring back a grayish flour. My mother mixed it up at night, and the next morning I sat down to breakfast before a heap—but no matter. We won't talk about it."

"Yes, but you said something about the evolution spoiling the thing evoluted?"

"The buckwheat flour. The buckwheat of my youth was cleaned and then ground between the stones like any other grain. Not long ago a man who wanted to make a beautiful flour to look at concluded that he could do so if he could entirely remove the shuck from the kernel of buckwheat. To do this he made a machine that consists of four serrated or corrugated rollers. Two are placed at the end of a screen over which the grain passes, and as the grain passes between them it gets a nip that breaks them up and separates about all the meat from the husks. Then the meats drop through a short screen, and the husks pass on through the second set of rollers. They are further broken up and the remaining meats are separated. The meats are ground and this white, tasteless stuff is the result."

"That was only the complaint of a man who thinks there is no times like the old times," said a flour dealer to whom the above was related. "If he wants ground husks instead of clean flour he can get it, and for less money. Few mills now grind the shucks and all togather, but the flour is to be had. If the new-process flour were not better than the old, it would not now be taking the lead.—New York Sun.

Living Outdoors.

The capacity of statistics to yield interesting results is observed with admiration. One statistician proved beyond doubt that more people died in bed than in any other way, and he argued from this that it was dangerous for people to go to bed. Figures recently prepared for the French government show that of eight hundred tramps who were arrested in Paris for vagrancy, twenty ranged in age from ninety to ninety-nine years. The evidence afforded by these facts in favor of sleeping under a roofless sky is rendered still more conclusive by the admission from the mouths of some of these ancient wanderers that they had not occupied beds, except when they were in jail, for more than thirty years. Years ago it was contended by men of science that the natural position of man was on all fours, and the proposition has been reproduced very lately. No doubt it is man's vanity that makes him walk on two feet instead of four. It was probably vanity also that first suggested to man that he should live indoors with an artificial covering over his head. He would be much more healthful if he spent more of his time out of doors. It is unlikely, notwithstanding the statistics which have been produced in favor of living out doors, that societies will be established for the abolition of houses. In a country like this, where people are compelled to live indoors so much in the winter season, it is not surprising that so many should suffer from colds and coughs and lung diseases.—Toronto Telegram.

Comfort from Old Newspapers.

Brittle "wood-pulp" newspapers are more impervious to wind currents than the thickest carpet. Three or four layers of them with the air spaces between, are as good non-conductors as a plastered wall with its minute air cracks or as an ordinary bed spread; and one or two placed between the blankets are equal to an extra quilt, to keep in the warmth of the bodies of the sleepers.

Tacked on the beams over a cellar, a few thicknesses of newspapers are equal to an extra floor or ceiling placed there, in keeping the rooms above warm. Nailed up so that they will not be wet by rain, around the horse and cattle stalls, or the chicken abodes, or any buildings occupied by animals, human or otherwise, newspapers are warmer than the outer board siding, rough or planed; and they can be renewed at pleasure at no cost, and be removed in spring for additional ventilation. In short, the judicious use of newspapers may be made to save half the fuel in well-to-do homes, and supply its lack to the poverty-stricken. We call the special attention of benevolent societies to this fact. Farmers may by using newspapers save much feed otherwise used up by the animals in keeping warm. Eggs will be far more abundant if the hens are kept warm, by lining their winter quarters with newspapers, and stock poultry go through well on half the feed otherwise required.

Don't Speculate.

There is not the slightest doubt but that the present financial crisis existing all over America is due in no small degree to the spirit of speculation that has swept over the land during the past two or three years. Legitimate business, when properly conducted, is generally attended with success, but when the attention of the merchant is attracted into the wondrous snare of speculative gambling the reverse is the case. This passion for speculation has wrought much evil in the country, and no one knows such to be the case better than he who has watched the record of business in the North-West since the advent of 1881. It matters not whether the operator devotes his attention to real estate, bank stocks or grain margins, the result is all the same. The amount of money sunk in this way every year, even in the Dominion of Canada, if it could be ascertained, would astonish every one. This it is which must, to a large extent, be held accountable for the demoralization in commercial and monetary circles that now exists.—Winnipeg Commercial.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Grandma.

Daisy Dutton,
A maiden of four,
Started one day
To bring from the store
A basket of eggs,
For mamma to make
A beautiful, frosted,
Birthday Cake.
Swinging the basket
To and fro,
Skipping along,
She tripped her toe.
Quickly the basket
Flew from her hand,
Eggs all broken
Lay in the sand.
Daisy's brother,
Seeing the wreck,
Cried "Now you'll have A whipping, I s'peck!"
"I'm not a bit
Afraid," laughed she,
"For I've a grandma
At home, you see!"

Disagreeable Habits.

Nearly all the disagreeable habits which people take up come at first from mere accident or want of thought. They might easily be dropped, but they are persisted in until they become second nature. Stop and think before you allow yourself to form them.

There are disagreeable habits of body—like scowling, winking, twisting the mouth, biting the nails, continually picking at something, twirling a key or fumbling at a chain, drumming with the fingers, screwing and twisting a chair or whatever you lay your hands on. Do not do any of these things. Learn to sit quietly—like a gentleman, I was going to say, but I am afraid girls fall into such tricks sometimes. There are worse habits than these, to be sure, but we are speaking of those little things that are only annoying when persisted in.—Kind Words.

Facts About Birds.

The Rev. Mr. Wood, in a recent lecture in Boston, explained the peculiar structure of the skeleton of birds, combining the greatest strength with least weight, and described the peculiar breathing apparatus, which also serves to increase the buoyancy of the bird. The air even enters the hollow bones of the limbs and wings. He related, in illustration, an anecdote of a sportsman who, desiring to put a wounded bird out of pain as speedily as possible, held its head under water for some minutes, but the creature remained as lively as ever. Upon making an examination it was found that one of the large wing feathers had been shot off, and that the bird had been breathing through the quill. The vertebræ of the neck in all mammals are alike in number. Those of birds vary from thirty in the swan to nine in the common sparrow. He gave a curious description of the methods by which birds of prey change the focus of their eyes, which, as in the case of the hawk and eagle for instance, are telescopic when looking at objects at a distance. A hawk half a mile in the air will discover a field mouse on the ground. As he rushes down to seize his prey the form of the eye is changed so as to always keep the object within the focus of vision. As compared with their bulk birds are enormous eaters, the food consumed largely going to the production of heat. Many interesting remarks in regard to the structure and use of feathers, the modifications in the physical conformation of the different species to adapt them to their widely varying modes of life, were brought out.

Robin's Slide.

Once on a time, when Robin was a little boy, it began to rain; and it kept on raining for a day and a night and another day.

"It's a genuine January thaw," said papa.

"It's a mean thaw," said Robin; "when I wanted to slide."

"There'll be enough snow left for that," said Aunt Helen.

But Robin couldn't be quite sure of it, until he tumbled out of bed the second morning and found the fields were covered with a glistening coat of ice.

"Looks like a frosted cake," cried Robin; "and there's a reg'lar pond at the foot of the hill in the pasture. I can slide right across it."

"I wouldn't," said mamma; "maybe it won't bear you. I don't want you to, Robin."

"No'm," said Robin, slowly; and he meant to remember, though he didn't believe mamma knew much about ice, anyway.

"But I can slide down the hill just the same," said he. "I'll stop before I get to the bottom."

That was just what Robin couldn't do. I don't believe he much wanted to. Whiz-z-z went the slay on to the ice, almost taking his breath away.

"Whoop!" cried he; "it is——"

Oh dear! At that very minute the ice cracked dreadfully, and into the water, which wasn't deep, but so cold, went Robin, sled and all.

He screamed as loud as he could, and the noise brought out mamma and Aunt Helen, and Jotham, with his rubber boots on.

Jotham was the hired man, and he waded in through the ice and water and pulled Robin out.

Robin's teeth chattered as if every one was trying to make more noise than all the others. And when he got to the house he was put straight to bed under a mountain of blankets, and dosed with ginger.

So the fun was over for that day.

"I d-don't like thaws," said Robin. "They're awful horrid."

"It wasn't the thaw that made all this trouble," said Aunt Helen, severely; "it was a little boy who didn't mind his mother."

"I—I think 'twas the sled," said Robin, faintly.

What do you think?

Where Young Snakes Go to when Swallowed by Their Mother.

About twenty-three years ago, in Beebe, Ark., I had a guinea hen sitting near my house, in the garden. One day, while hoeing in the garden, I noticed the hen flying, fluttering, and apparently fighting something. I walked, hoe in hand, carefully up to the nest. Curled up in the nest lay a blow snake, or what some call a bull snake. I carefully approached her, and when she straightened out to run, with one blow from the hoe I cut her head clean from her body. I straightened her out and was examining her, and preparing to take her length, when a young snake about six inches long, and about the size of a common lead pencil, made its appearance. I cut its head off, and others followed, until I had cut the heads off of twenty-seven. Some of them remained dead in the cavity of their mother, so that I know they did not occupy a place in the stomach. The snake had swallowed twelve guinea eggs, which I proceeded to eject by squeezing from her stomach and throat. The eggs I found came from one apartment, and the young snakes from another. This induced me to examine the head and neck which I had cut off. I discovered that there was an opening under the tongue, through which the young snakes entered the cavity in which they were found, and that that cavity was separate and distinct from the stomach where the guinea eggs were found. I took two smooth sticks, I ran one down the throat from above the tongue and the other through the opening under the tongue. Both came out, but through separate and distinct passages. Hence I say snakes do not swallow their young, but something like the opposum or kangaroo have a sack or pocket for them, which is entered through the mouth and under the tongue. Some one may want to know what was done with the guinea eggs. I answer, I put them back in the nest, and in about a week twelve young guinea chicks were hatched from them.—Correspondence American Field.

Engraving on Eggs.

Some time ago there was a man who stood upon the street corners and in the public squares selling egg shells upon which were engraved names, devices or flowers. The art of engraving upon eggs is connected with a curious and little known historical fact. In the month of August, 1808, at the time of the Spanish war, there was found in the patriarchal church of Lisbon an egg upon the shell of which was announced the approaching extermination of the French. This fact caused a lively fermentation in the minds of the superstitious Portugese population, and came near causing an uprising. The French commander remedied the matter very ingeniously by distributing throughout the city thousands of eggs that bore engraved upon them a contradiction of the prediction. The Portugese, greatly astonished, did not know what to think of it, but thousands of eggs giving the lie to a prediction engraved on one only, had the power of the majority. In addition, a few days afterward, posters up on all the street corners pointed out the manner in which the miracle was performed.

The mode of doing it is very simple. It consists in writing upon the egg shell with wax or varnish or simply with tallow, and then immersing the egg in some weak acid such, for example, as vinegar, dilute hydrochloric acid, or etching liquor. Wherever the varnish or wax has not protected the shell, the lime of the latter is decomposed and dissolved in the acid, and the writing or drawing remains in relief. Although this modus operandi presents no difficulty, a few precautions must be taken in order to be successful on a first experiment. In the first place, as the eggs that are to be engraved are usually previously blown, so that they may be preserved without alteration, it is necessary before immersing them in the acid to plug up the apertures in the extremities with a bit of beeswax; and, moreover, as the eggs are very light, they must be held at the bottom of the vessel full of acid by means of a thread fixed to a weight or wound round the extremity of a glass rod. If the acid is very dilute the operation, though it takes a little longer, gives better results. Two or three minutes usually suffice to give characters that have sufficient relief.—Nature.

The Soudan.

A good many people are at present puzzled over the "Soudan," of which they hear so much. They are not quite sure if it would betray an unpardonable amount of ignorance for them to confess to a general kind of unacquaintedness with what this Soudan is and how far it extends. Would it give these people—who, by the way, need not be ashamed to confess their ignorance—any kind of satisfactory information to tell them that Soudan is the name given by the Egyptians to all their dependent empire stretching from the Third Cataract for an indefinite distance towards the lakes, and from the Red Sea to the western border of the Darfur? This empire comprises much of Nubia, all Sennaar, all Kyrdofan and all Darfur. It is said to be about 1,000 miles square, or as large as India. This vast extent of a million of square miles is said to be inhabited by about 12 000,000 people, most of them Mussulmans, and many of those of exceptional ferocity, fanaticism and daring. Eventually, it seems likely, the English will have to tackle with this wild, ferocious crowd, if, at any rate, it invade Egypt, which is far from unlikely.—London News.

Wild Tobacco in Nevada.

In the vacant lots, ravines and favorable spots in and about Austin, Nevada, as also in all parts of the State, native wild tobacco grows profusely. It seems to acquire little or no water, but the fresh, green-looking plant grows vigorously in all its stickv juicy nastiness everywhere. It is simply a filthy weed, which few respectable animals care to browse upon. Over in Como, where I was twenty years ago, an old Missourian, who knew all about tobacco, headed down and trimmed some of the most vigorous plants, and thus succeeded in making quite a perceptibly recognized substitute for real smoking tobacco. The Piutes and Shoshones smoke it to a small extent, but they much prefer the white man's tobacco. Yet this shows very conclusively that tobacco can be raised in Nevada with the most perfect facility, if not with profit. Tobacco is said to grow in any locality where cabbages can, but in this State it certainly grows in localities where cabbages would perish from thirst or any other nutriment. Perhaps Nevada may become noted as a tobacco-producing State by -andby.

A bad man shows his bringing up when he is brought up by a policeman.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items of News from all Parts of the World.

CANADIAN.

The Halifax City Council has adopted a resolution providing for a new paid fire department instead of the present volunteer one. The cost of the new system will be nearly $15,000.

The late Clerk of the Court of Appeals at Montreal, Comte Dutean de Granpre, was a very eccentric man, and it is said that he bought his coffin thirty years ago and has ever since had it in his possession.

The recent Cornwall fire was the most disastrous of any in that town for years. Besides the total destruction of the Commercial Hotel, eight or nine other places of business were destroyed, involving a loss of nearly $100,000.

The St. Lawrence Sugar refinery at Montreal has been destroyed by fire, with a loss of property valued at $200,000. It is said to be the heaviest loss the insurance companies have sustained in Montreal for the last five years. About 100,000 pounds of sugar and 6,000 bags of valuable material were destroyed, and 250 men thrown temporarily out of employment. The cigar box factory of Davis & Son, alongside, was also destroyed with a loss of about $6,000.

Rev. L. Mackay, missionary of the Canada Presbyterian Society to the island of Formosa, off the coast of China, reports that over 2,000 natives have thrown away their idols, and desire to worship the one true God. A chapel has been opened in one village, and in another of over two hundred inhabitants every soul wants to be a Christian, and every house is cleared of idols.

The burning of the Erskine Presbyterian church in Toronto, of which Rev. John Smith is the minister, involved a loss of nearly $30,000. There was an insurance of about $20,000. It is probable the building will be re-erected at once. The walls were of brick and part of them can be used again. The congregation now worships in a small Methodist church on Elm street.

The Canadian steamer "Spartan" of the Richelieu and Ontario Navagation Co. was wrecked near Owen Sound last summer and taken to Detroit for repairs. The charges for repairing were no less than $25,000, and besides there was a wreckage claim of $6,000 more. The company considered these charges more than the steamer was worth and she was allowed to be sold at auction by the U. S. Marshall, to satisfy the claims. The steamer was bought at $26,000 for the company.

Dr. Alpheus Todd, for many years Parliamentary Librarian of Canada, died very suddenly at his own residence, recently. He had been in his usual health and his death was attributed to the rupture of a blood vessel in his brain. He was about 65 years of age, a native of England, and a gentleman of rare ability, especially as a writer upon constitutional questions. He held office for over thirty years in connection with the parliamentary library.

UNITED STATES.

P. T. Barnum has built a roller-skating rink in Bridgeport.

A great strike of nail-workers in the Eastern States is threatened.

Snow fifteen inches deep on the level is reported from North Carolina.

New York State made a profit of nearly $40,000 out of its prisons last year.

The civic debt of Boston is $42,544,000 and that of Brooklyn, N. Y., $42,764,000.

The divorce market in New York is dearer. Last year there were 244 divorces against 200 in 1882.

Statistics of the U. S. iron and steel trade for 1883 show a slight decrease in the production compared with 1882.

Triplets, named Abraham, Isaac, and Noah Jacobs, aged 72 years, are living in Berks County, Pennsylvania.

Reports indicate serious damage by frosts to the young orange groves along the Gulf coast, as far south as Manatee, Fla.

United States Treasurer Wyman has received from New York a $1,000 note as a contribution to the conse ce fund.

The U. S. Cattle Commission recommends the appropriation of a million and a half to be used in preventing the spread of cattle diseases.

The New York World estimates the stealings for the year 1883, Canada not included, at $15,000,000, distributed among 148 trusted officials.

Pennsylvania is recklessly destroying her timber. Her shipments as reckoned in Williamsport, footed up at more than 400,000,000 feet last year.

The report of the New York Superintendent of State Prisons says the earnings for the year ending September were $407,061, and the expenses $397,955.

During the last four years it is stated that not less than three hundred million dollars have been spent in building new railroads and repairing old ones in the Southern States.

The output of the American coal fields last year was nearly 93,000,000 tons, at an average value to the mine owners at the pit mouth of $162,750,000; 66 per cent. was of bituminous varieties.

During 1883 there was a reduction of over $115,000,000 on the U. S. interest-bearing public debt. In a little over 18 years the nation has paid over $1,105,000,000 of it, only $86,000,000 less than half the total bonded debt on September 1, 1865.

The Board of Directors of the Zoological Society of Philadelphia have decided not to accept the gift of $50,000 offered by Mr. Joseph E. Temple, on condition that the garden should be open free to the public one day in each week.

The St. Paul Gazette states that the Crow Indians, numbering 800 families, with about 3,000 persons, own 6,500,00 acres of good land, worth, at $2 an acre, $6,500,000; 11,500 horses, worth, at $20 a piece, $230,000; and receive an annual allowance of $800,000 from the Government, from which it computes that they are worth $3,510 a head, making them the richest people in the world.

The steamer City of Columbus was wrecked on the coast of the Channel, near New Bedford, Massachusetts, and was wrecked with the loss of nearly one hundred persons on board. The report is that the steersman became cold, lashed his wheel and went for twenty minutes to warm himself by the smoke pipe. When he returned he found the vessel had changed her course, was among the rocks and he therefore headed towards shore, grounding the vessel in 11 feet of water, over a mile from the main land.

GREAT BRITAIN.

A Policeman's Christian Association has been formed in London.

There were only nine accidents to trains in 1882 in Great Britain by which passengers were killed.

The population of England and Wales has doubled in the past 57 years, and that of London in 41 years.

A tower nearly 100 feet is to be erected near Bolton Abbey as memorial of the late Lord Frederick Cavendish.

The latest piece of fashionable slang in London is "slumming." To "slum" is to visit poor people in poor parts of a city on missions of mercy and charity.

Richard Neusman, of Preston, England, who recently died, left to that town his entire collection of pictures, porcelain and bronzes. It is said that the pictures alone, ten years ago, were valued at between $300,000 and $350,000.

In England, Miss Emily Faithful started the first printing press for women in 1859, after great opposition, and obtained the approval of the Queen for the work, who appointed her printer and publisher in ordinary to Her Majesty.

The Crystal palace electrical exhibition held in London last year was a decided success from a financial point of view, the profits amounting to £15,000. The Paris electrical exhibition netted even a larger sum, about £16,000, which is to be devoted to the creation of a central laboratory for electricity.

Pictures of Patagonia.

The wild scenery is something wonderful, and when the sun shines on the snow-covered mountains it is indeed a pretty sight. In some of the ravines you see large drifts of snow that have been carried there by the wind, and into which I should imagine it would not be very pleasant to fall. The air here, of course, is very cold, but it is a healthy breeze, and very bracing. At one o'clock, mid-day, we reached our anchoring place for the night, as we could not make the next harbor by daylight, and in the darkness it would be impossible to enter. About two o'clock we received a visit from one of the Patagonian Indians. They came off from the shore in queer looking canoes, made out of three pieces of board—one on the bottom and one on each side. These were sewn together with fibres, and admitted considerable water. With the exception of some skins they had tied loosely around their bodies, they were devoid of clothing, and before they had been alongside many minutes, they had sold them all for some biscuits, tobacco and boxes of matches

After remaining on board about an hour, they returned to the shore, all but one being entirely naked. The exceptional one who did not return to shore in a nude state, owed it to the fact that the second steward had found on board an old bottle-green dress that had been left by some female passenger on the way out from Europe. With this the Indian was duly attired, it being tied on and around him, by the sailors, with seizings. Later on we had a visit from one or more of them, this time accompanied by a female. The skins they brought off were those of the otter. One Indian had over his shoulder what at one time had been a very valuable sealskin, but was then too old and dirty for use.

It is strange how these creatures manage to exist in this severely inclement climate, where it freezes nearly all the year round. They used no more clothing than that afforded them by nature, and their huts are nothing but a few sticks tied together, with a few skins and some leaves thrown over the top of them, and their canoes are always half full of water. The weapons used are bows, arrows, spears. They eat the flesh of the animals they kill in the chase, and sometimes they catch fish; but the principle article of food is muscles, of which there are millions around there. They have nothing in the shape of corn, wheat, or cereals of any kind, as none grow anywhere nearer than 1200 miles away. The climate is too cold for any but hardy shrubs. They will not touch liquor of any kind.

They are in appearance something like the Indians one meets in the altos in Guatemala. but are a smaller and shorter race, and very much more degenerated. I should imagine them to be the very lowest specimen of humanity existing, and only one link short in the chain to connect them with the monkey tribe, On of them. apprrently a better humored fellow than his companions, sat upon the rail and sang a song. They sit, or rather squat, as a monkey does, and this fellow at short intervals would yell out: "Ama, ama, ama," crying out quickly, and much after the monkey style. As night drew on they all went off to the shore, and we saw them no more.

"WOMAN AND HER DISEASES"
is the title of an interesting treatise (96 pages) sent, postpaid, for three stamps. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

The progress of rivers to the ocean is not so rapid as that of the man to error.

A DEAD SHOT
may be taken at liver and bilious disorders with Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets." Mild yet certain in operation; and there is none of the reaction consequent upon taking severe and drastic cathartics. By druggists,

That action is best that procures the greatest happiness for the greatest number.

Young men or middle aged ones, suffering from nervous debility and kindred weaknesses should send three stamps for Part VII World's Dispensary Dime Series of books. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

Where we may not be able to extirpate an evil, it is still our duty to do what we can to lessen it.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

A Ceylon Coffee Eastate.

The coffee-trees were all planted in rows, each about six feet apart and stretching right away up the hillside. The tree rather resembles the laurel foliage, but it is not allowed to attain any height, being tepped down when four feet high. The coffee-tree takes three years after planting before it will yield fruit, and requires a shelter from the wind and a good soil to make it bear well. We were informed that the young plants are put out in holes eighteen inches deep and wide, which are previously filled in with good jungle mould, the greater portion of the soil of Ceylon being naturally poor. The jungle is, in the first place, felled by Singhalese contractors—this race being famed for their skill with the axe—toward the end of the year, and is generally finished and ready for burning by March. The great forest "burns" are one of the most curious sights in Ceylon. Imagine torches being applied to a hundred acres or so of felled and lopped trees which have become as dry as tinder from exposure to the burning sun. The tremendous blaze which instantly ensues, and the dense clouds of smoke forming and hanging over the scene like a pall, are something astonishing and can be seen for miles around. The following morning nothing is to be seen but cinders and charred logs, the sole remnants of former forests giants, destroyed by the ruthless hands of the enterprising planter to make room for the coffee or tea plant. The operation of planting is usually finished by the month of August if the season is favorable, but diseased and sickly plants have to be replaced by fresh ones till no vacancies are to be seen. In the second year the planter gets a very small crop called the maiden-crop, and in the third year the estate is said to be in full, when the pulping-house and other necessary buildings have to be erected. The berry, when ripe, resembles the ordinary cherry in shape and color, and appears in crimson clusters on the trees, delighting the eye of the anxious proprietor. In every berry are two beans, which are pulped out by machinery, the beans disappearing into the fermenting cistern, and the husk into the pulp pit, where it accumulates for manuring purposes. The beans are suffered to ferment for thirty-six hours, and are then drawn into the washing cistern, where they are thoroughly cleansed with spring water, whence they are carried to the "barbacue" an open space paved with cement or asphalte, where they are spread on matting, fully exposed to the rays of the sun, to dry. When the drying operation has been repeated three or four times the "parchment," as it is called, is sewn up in stout bags and despatched by bullock-carts to the nearest railway station, whence it is sent on as quickly as possible to Colombo, where it is again thoroughly dried and the parchment skinre moved by a "peeler;" it is then put up through a winnower, which takes off a delicate skin still remaining, called the "silver," and it is then called "clean coffee," which, after being separated into various sizes, is at length fit to be shipped to the market, and is usually packed in casks for the voyage.

Try to be happy in this very moment; and put not off being so to a time to come; as though that time should be of another make from this, which is already come, and is ours.

PECTORIA! Pectoria! Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per bottle. Don't give up untill you have tried Pectoria, all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

A certain amount of distrust is wholesome, but not so much of others as of ourselves.

For a three cent stamp Wilson Chemical Co, Kingston, Ont., will send to any address a sample package of Triangle Dyes, twenty-seven colored samples of cloth, with directions for use, and other information valuable to every housewife.

Nothing is ever done beautifully which is done in rivalship, nor nobly which is done in pride.

A.P 162

SEED! 500 prizes free. Rennie, Market Seedsman, Toronto, Ont.

ONE OF THE BEST 250 ACRE FARMS in the County of Kent. For particulars address W. SHACKLETON, Chatham, Ont.

$100,000 TO LOAN
on first-class farm property, at lowest rates. Farmers will save money by applying by mail direct to me.
E. E. KNOTT,
48 Adelaide St., East, Toronto.

AN ESTABLISHED HARNESS BUSINESS for Sale, together with ¼ acre land, with good house, shop, and stables; or would exchange for house and lot in Toronto. JAMES COAKWELL, Whitevale.

DAKOTA—PARTIES DESIRING INFORMATION relating to free homes, with correct maps, circulars, and reliable facts, free of charge, Apply to HARRY MERCER, Travelling Emigration Agent C. M. and St. P. railway, Chatham, Ont.

MUTUAL MARRIAGE ENDOWMENT Association, provides dowries on marriage of its members, from $250 to $3,000. Assessments low. Over 300 certificates already issued. Well worth the consideration of young people. Apply to W. I. IMLACH, Secretary, London, Ont.

BOON TO FARMERS.
Circulars free, of new and most productive varieties known of Seed Grown. Testimonials of 110 bushels per acre of Boyds Egyptian Oats. Samples of 2 oz., 20 cents. JAS BOYD JR, Cedar Grove, Ont

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN to grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet, and Diseases of the Spine, Hips, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church street, Toronto.

LARGE TWO STORY BRICK HOTEL for Sale in the village of Brougham, known as the Brougham Hotel. Brougham is situated in the centre of the Township of Pickering, where all the public business of the Township is transacted. This hotel is doing a large commercial trade, besides a first class general business, undoubtedly one of the best money making Hotel Stands in the County. Terms moderate. Title good. Splendid Stables and sheds. Possession to suit purchaser. Proprietor retiring from Hotel business. Markham & Whitby mail stages stop daily at the stable. For particulars apply to the proprietor, THOMAS POUCHER, Brougham, Ont.

Municipal Councillor's Handbook,

Important book for Municipal Councillors and officers. Contains in brief and familiar style the municipal laws of Ontario—with forms. 200 pages bound in cloth. Price One Dollar. Address PRATT & TRACY, Publishers, Stratford, Ont.

ELM CITY HARNESS OIL.
BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL,
Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it
F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONTARIO.
Sole Agents for the Dominion

1883—ST. JOHN EXHIBITION—1883
Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose, &c.
Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas. The highest of all Awards for Leather Belting and Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the Judges at the St. John Centennial and Dominion Exhibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, over all competitors.

BEAVER S. S. LINE,
WEEKLY BETWEEN
QUEBEC, MONTREAL, AND LIVERPOOL
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
H. E. MURRAY, BEAVER LINE, MONTREAL.

THE LILY
is a perfect gem, equa to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

Dominion Line of Steamships.
Running in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec every Saturday during the summer months, and from Portland every Thursday during the winter months.

PORTLAND TO LIVERPOOL.

Dominion, Jan. 10.	Oregon, Jan. 31.
Sarnia, Jan. 17.	Ontario, Feb. 7
Montreal, Jan. 24.	Toronto, Feb. 14.

Rates of passage: Cabin, Quebec to Liverpool $50, $60, $65, $80; return, $99, $108, $117, $144, according to steamer and berth. Intermediate, $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and staterooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent, or local agents of the Company, or to
DAVID TORRANCE & CO.,
General Agents, Montreal.

RENNIE'S
SELECT Field, Garden
AND Flower
SEEDS ARE
THE BEST
THE HANDSOMEST
AND MOST COMPLETE
CATALOGUE FOR 1884
FREE TO ALL INTENDING PURCHASERS.
WM. RENNIE, TORONTO.

$11.90 —FOR— 35c. Extraordinary Bargain!
On receipt of only 35c we will mail, postpaid, 34 pieces comprising 48 pages of full size sheet music, bound together in one volume. Names of Vocal pieces:—All on account of Eliza; A Warrior Bold; The Country Lad; Nancy Lee; Chorus of Charity Girls; Drummer's Song; The Judge's Song; The Love-Sick Boy; Whoa Emma; Two Bad Men; Man in the Moon; Johnny Morgan; The Gleaners; Torpedo and the Whale; I Saw Her in the Violet Time; Five O'Clock in the Morning; My Love She's but a Lassie Yet; Adieu, Dear Home; Dame Babble; and 15 pieces of Instrumental Music, comprising new and popular dance Music, selections from different Operas, Marches, &c., &c. All the above and our handsome new Chromo Lithograph in colors of the Lord's Prayer and 10 Commandments, sent post-paid for 35. As a holiday offer we will also send free 10 Christmas Cards, 50 money making receipts and a pack of Age Cards. Order quick. You will get all the above for 35c, or 5 lots for $1.25; 1 doz. for $2.00. Cut this out and return with order.
JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal P. Q.

THE QUEEN'S

LAUNDRY BAR.
TRADE MARK.
ASK FOR IT AND TAKE NO OTHER.
Beware of Imitations.
MADE BY
The Albert Toilet Soap Co.

Tinsmiths' Goods!
TIN PLATE—Different Brands and Sizes.
TINNED SHEETS— do do
CANADA PLATE—Fen and other Brands.
INGOT TIN—Lamb and Flag and Straits.
GALVANIZED IRON—"Davies," "Avon," &c.
And STAMPED GOODS, CHEAP.
For Sale by COPLAND & McLAREN
MONTREAL.

SEND FIVE CENTS and get a sample copy of TRUTH, the best 28-page Weekly Magazine published. See the big list of books given FREE to each yearly subscriber and clubber. S. FRANK WILSON, 33 & 35 Adelaide St., West, Toronto, Canada.

F. E. DIXON & CO.
Manufacturers of Star Rivet
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto.
Large double Drivin Belts a specialty. Send or Price Lists and Discounts.

OAKLAWN FARM,
The Greatest Importing and Breeding Establishment in the World.
PERCHERON HORSES
WORTH $2,500,000.00
Imported from France and Bred since 1872, by
M. W. DUNHAM,
Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois,
35 miles West of Chicago on C. & N.-W. Ry.

Prices low for quality of stock, and EVERY STALLION GUARANTEED A BREEDER.
390 Imported the Past Three Months.
Consisting of finest animals, with choicest pedigrees Registered in the Percheron Stud Book of France and the Percheron Stud Book of the United States.
Write for Free Illustrated Catalogue No. 20

100 BEAUTIFUL SONGS 15c.
A new collection, embrasing a number of the most popular songs of the day. Among them are, We Never Speak as we Pass By;—Over the Garden Wall,—Kerry Dance.—Warrior Bold,—Blue Alsatian Mountains,—Only a Blossom from her Grave,—Three Old Maids of Lee,—Flirting in the Starlight,—Grandmother's Old Easy Chair,—Don't Drink my Boy To-night, and 90 others, comprising Home songs, Comic Songs, Sentimental songs, Children's songs, etc. All are printed on nice paper, and are bound in a book with colored cover. Remember, we send the entire collection of 100 Songs for only 15c., three books for 30. 1 doz., 1.00; 1c. or 2c. stamps taken.
JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

THE BEST
HORSE REMEDIES
TRADE MARK.
are those made by
THE ELLIS SPAVIN CURE CO.
Every owner of one or more horses can save a large amount of time and money by having on hand a good supply of Ellis's Horse Remedies, and to supply a general demand we would announce that we will send the following by express on receipt of the money, or C.O.D. and return charges): $6.50 for $5; 1 box, 12 pounds Medicated Food, $1; 2 bottles Spavin Cure, $2; 2 boxes Large Condition Powders, $1; 2 boxes Worm Powders, $1; 1 box Heave Powder, 50c.; 1 box Colic Powder, 50c.; 1 box Hoof Ointment 50c.—$6.50. J. H. Whitson & Son, 24th St., N Y., says: "We have used Ellis's Spavin Cure in our stables for two years, and have tried it on the following with perfect success: Splints, curbs, ring bones, bunches on the neck, swelled ankles, also quincy, sore throat, and for general stable liniment it is the best article we have ever used," For further particulars, free books, etc., write to
ELLIS SPAVIN CURE COMPANY,
50 Sudbury Street, Boston, Mass.;
or 276 Fourth Avenue, New York

A FAIR OFFER.
If you will send us with this slip 25c., or 9 three cent stamps, we will mail you, post-paid, a sample package containing 100 useful articles, which are required in every house, with instructions by which you can make from $2 to $4 per day. Suitable for both sexes. This is no humbug, as the samples are well worth the money, and may be returned if not satisfactory. Show this to your friends.
JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
—): OF THE :(—
WHITE STAR LINE
Are all of them without exception among the Largest and fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety, Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accommodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect; and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario, or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street, Toronto.

FUN AND MYSTERY
ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS.
Have you seen it? The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards;" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards; the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music, 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.
ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail postpaid. Two Packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest argain ever offered. Return this with order to void mistake.
JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

WAR IN CHINA!

France threatens China with a devastating war in consequence.

Thomas McNea

— OF THE —

Belfast House, Markdale

Has purchased a Large Stock of the

CHOICEST TEAS

In the Market, and will sell at lower prices than any in the trade.

Purchasing direct from the Refinery, his SUGARS cannot be excelled for quality and lowness of price.

BACON, HAMS,
CHEESE, SALMON,
LOBSTERS, SARDINES
In endless variety.
DAIRY SALT of best quality.

LIQUORS,

Of best brands and of every variety.

In short, there is nothing in the Grocery trade that cannot be supplied at the "Belfast House" by

THOMAS McNEA.

July 6, 1882.

EUGENIA

Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted

69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

NATIONAL PILLS — SUGAR COATED. PURELY VEGETABLE

Highly recommended for Biliousness, Head-Ache, Constipation, Indigestion, Dizziness, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, Loss of Memory, Sour Stomach, Liver Complaint, or any illness arising from the Stomach, Bowels or Kidneys. They are safe, mild and thorough in their action. From 1 to 3 pills is a dose.

PRICE 25c. PER BOX.

FIRST CLASS

OAT MEAL

for sale at

J. W. FORD'S

FLOUR MILL.

$5 per Barrel.

THOS. MATHEWS,

HarnesS EstaBlishmenT

MARKDALE.

EVERYTHING IN OUR LINE KEPT ON HAND OR MADE TO ORDER ON SHORT NOTICE.

LIVERY!

IN CONNECTION.

DR. LOW'S WORM SYRUP has removed tape worm fron 15 to 30 feet in length. It also destroys all kinds of worm.

GREAT damage has been done in England by the late gales.

KRAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known. Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat ar acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

SIXTY-EIGHT lives were lost in a colliery explosion in Wales, recently.

NATIONAL PILLS acts promptly upon the Liver, regulate the Bowels and as a purgative are mild and thorough

A FIRE in the Speaker's room at Ottawa did about $50 worth of damages.

John R. Vert, Hamilton, says: "McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia and Indigestion is cheap at fifty times the price asked for it. I am a commercial man, and travel continually, and would no more think of leaving home without a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure in my valise than I would of leaving my team at home and going on foot." Free trial bottle at Hill Bros. general store. Regular sixe, fifty cents and one dollar.

ALL the members of the new Quebec Ministry are to be opposed on seeking re-election.

LARDINE MACHINE OIL

Is Manufactured Solely by McCall Bro's. & Co. Toronto, and is the only popular Machine Oil to-day in use by all mill men and farmers, Try Lardine.

A PENITENTIARY at Stillwater, Minn. was burned last Saturday. The convicts numbering some four hundred were safely removed except one who was burned.

A RUN ON A DRUG STORE.

Never was such a rush made for any Drug Store as is now at A. Turner & Co's. Drug Store for a trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, Coughs and Colds. All persons affected with Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs, or any affection of the Throat and Lungs, can get a trial bottle of this great remedy free by calling at above drug store. Regular size $1.

5

FREEMANS WORM POWDERS require no other purgative. They are safe and sure to remove all varieties of Worms.

WELL REWARDED.

A liberal reward will be paid to any person who will produce a case of Liver, Kidney or Stomach complaint that Electric Bitters will not speedily cure. Bring them along, it will cost you nothing for the medicine if it fails to cure, and you will be well rewarded for your trouble besides. All Blood diseases, Biliousness, Jaundice, Constipation and general debility are quickly cured. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Price only fifty cents a bottle, For sale by A. Turner & Co.

5

A MORMON ACADEMY BURNED.—The Brigham Young acadeny was burned last Monday; loss $30,000. It was a Mormon school with four hundred students. There were numerous narrow escapes.

BAD DRAINAGE.

There is nothing more productive of disease in a neighborhood than bad drainage. Open the culverts and the sluiceways and purify the locality. The obstructions in the human system may be remedied in a similar manner by Burdock Blood Bitters, which opens all the outlets of disease through the Bowels, Liver, and Kidneys.

THE Marquis of Landsdowne, Governor-General of Canada, has been appointed knight grand cross of the order of St. Michael and St. George.

A QUERY ANSWERED.

People often ask when is the best time to take a blood purifier? We answer, the best time is now. Burdock Blood Bitters does its work of purifying, regulating, and toning the system at all times and all seasons. Purity in all thing is always in order when required.

A WRONG OPINION.

Many a dollar is paid for prescriptions for some disease that never troubled the patient, and when the sole difficulty was worms, which a few of Freeman's Worm Powders would remove. These Powders are pleasant, safe, and sure, contain their own cathartic, and are adapted for children or adults.

INCENDIARY ATTEMPT.—On Tuesday morning, Mr. Scott, caretaker of the Hill Street School House, on going as usual to the building, about 7 o'clock, he found the front door open, and entering the large school room, found all the chairs piled up around a wooden post together with papers and copy books, and pieces of a broken bench. Going into the room in the dim twilight, he thought it looked strange, and struck a match, but before it burned out, the pile of materials around the post burst into a blaze, which he quickly extinguished. The incendiary, who must have entered by one of the rear windows, had made a fire in the stove, and afterwards probably placed coals in the pile around the post, and then left by the front door, unbolting it from the inside. Had the fire been set erlier, or if Mr. Scott had not entered at the opportune moment he did, the school might have been burned. It is hard to imagine what motive any one could have of such an act.—O. S. Times.

THE CANADA PACIFIC STEAMERS.

Where will they run from—Algoma Mills, Owen Sound or Collingwood?

It is reported that the new iron steamers of the C. P. R. for the upper lakes draw too much water (15 feet) for the harbor at Algoma Mills, and that the Canadian Pacific have had to abandon the idea of running them between that place and Port Arthur, and that instead they will be run from Owen Sound or Collingwood to Port Arthur. As soon as the Ontario and Quebec is finished to Toronto (it will be ready for freight before the opening of navigation) the Syndicate will then have a system of their own from the Atlantic to the Rocky mountains. That is over the eastern section of the Canadian Pacific railway from Montreal to Perth, the Ontario & Quebec to Toronto, the Toronto Grey & Bruce to Owen Sound steamers to Port Arthur, and the Canadian Pacific railway thence to the Rocky Mountains. Algoma Mills is near the Sault, between Owen Sound and Port Arthur, and the intention was to extend the line from Callendar thereto, and run the steamers between that place and Port Arthur. By that route none of the freight will pass through Toronto. But if the steamers are not able to enter Algoma Mills harbor the Owen Sound route via Toronto will have to be employed.

The people of the Hamilton and Nortwestern are favoring Collingwood rather than Owen Sound as the Ontario terminus of the steamers, as they say it is a better harbor. The freight would then pass through Toronto as before, but it would only go up the Toronto, Grey & Bruce until it crosses the Hamilton & Northwestern, and thereon to Collingwood. The Collingwood papers say that the superintendent of construction of the works at Algoma Mills was in Collingwood looking into the matter the other day, and that he then went on to Owen Sound, where certain im improvements are already in course of construction.

The most certain statement in regard to the matter is that the Canada Pacific railway will have a through line of their own by April from Montreal to the Rocky Mountains, and that they are pushing everything forward in that direction.

PROF. LOW'S SULPHUR SOAP is highly recommended for the cure of Eruption, Chafes, Chapped Hands, Pimples, Tan, &c,

THE wholesale merchants of Winnipeg, Man., have formed an association for mutual protection against fraud by bankrupt retail dealers.

A WONDERFUL RESULT.

A single bottle of Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup has frequently destroyed from 100 to 200 worms. It is pleasant to take—no other cathartic being required. Tape worms have also been removed by it, of 15 to 35 feet in length. It is effectual for all varities of worms afflicting both children and adults.

A GOOD INTRODUCTION.

J. Kennedy, a merchant in Dixie, about three years ago introduced Haggard' Pectoral Balsam to his customers by trying it in his own family for coughs and colds. Being pleased with results, large sales followed, and it is now the favorite remedy in the neighborhood.

OUR PATRONS who wish to subscribe, or renew their subscaiption for any of the following publications will do us a favor by handing the amount in to us at the STANDARD office, viz. Weekly Mail, or Globe; Family Herald and Weekly Star, monthly Farmers Advocate, American Agriculturist, any of the above with the STANDARD for $2.00 or singly for one $1. except the Agriculturist which is $1.50.

ANOTHER WITNESS,

A. Chard, of sterling, testifies to the efficacy of Haggard's Yellow Oil, which he used for a badly injured knee joint. It is the great household remedy for inflamation, pain, soarness, lameness, etc., and is used both eternally and externally with infaliable success.

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE.

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

SAY!

If you want to hire a good livery rig, go to Benson.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

— IN —

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.
I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

— AT —

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we area not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 19. MARKDALE, ONT., FEB. 7, 1884. No. 178

Heaven.

The following is a selection from the book entitled "Mother, Home and Heaven," advertised in another column:

Oh! where shall human grief be stilled?
And joy for pain be given,
Where dwells the substance of a love
That's past the sad mutations of
A sweet voice answered—Heaven.

O heart! I said, when death shall come
And all thy cords be riven,
What lies beyond the swelling tide?
The same sweet voice to mine replied
In loving accents—Heaven.

When, where shall friendship never die
Nor parting hand be given?
My heart was filled with strange delight,
For, in that silent hush of night
I heard the answer—Heaven.

O! voyager on life's fitful sea,
By stormy blows driven;
Say, what can soothe thy aching breast,
Or give thee comfort, joy and rest?
Like Mother, Home and Heaven.

County Council.

CONCLUDED FROM LAST WEEK.

From the Times.

Owing to an oversight, the name of Mr. J. C. Miller, one of the Deputy Reeves of Owen Sound, was omitted from the list of names of Councillors given last week.]

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

After reading of communications, By law No. 321 appointing County Auditors, was read a third time and passed.

Moved by Mr. McKenny, seconded by Mr. Thompson, That the Solicitor be requested to communicate with the Assessors of the several municipalities within the County, calling their attention to the necessity of assessing according to law at or as near true cash value as possible—this legal requirement on the part of Assessors heretofore having been very imperfectly carried out, thereby curtailing the powers of Courts of Revision in meteing out justice to appeals against assessment—carried.

The yeas and nays being called for on the motion, were as follows:

Yeas—Christoe, Pedlar, McNicol, Messenger, McCallum, McKenny, Campbell, Hewgill, Gilray, Caulfield, Paul, McMillan, Totten, Clark, Dunnington, Vasey, Bowes, Read, W. Lang, Gordon, Heming, McNaught, Chisholm, Frost, Miller, Thompson, McKechnie, Robertson, Breen—29.

Nays—Fawcett, McRae, Norton, V. Lang, O'Farrell, Widmenyer, McIntyre, Middleton, Rogers—9.

Mr. McKechnie, presented report No. 1 of Committee on Finance, and on motion the Council went into Committee of the Whole on the report, and it was adopted without amendment.

The report stated that theCommittee, in reference to communications from the three Riding Agricultural Associations asking a special grant of $200 for each Association to be applied for maturing a scheme for securing new seed grain, could not recommend that any grant be made in the matter; 2nd, that they recommended printing of Treasurer's annual statement of non-resident land fund for 1884, in the minutes of Council; 3rd, recommending payment of certified accounts to amount of $46.06; and 4th, recommending that Robt. Myles, Jas. Murdoch, and Hugh Reid, be paid $206, balance due them in full services as County Valuators—said Valuators having completed their labors, and handed into this Council a detailed statement of where they were laboring each day.

Moved by Mr. Miller, seconded by Mr. McRae, That the County Valuators be paid $120 for Sunday expenses, being forty Sundays, each, at $1 per day—lost.

Mr. Forst gave notice that at next meeting he would move that a motion passed in December session requiring Valuators' report to be printed in its entirety be varied, by limiting such publication to the parts of the report already printed in December minutes.

The Reeve of Euphrasia introduced a By law to alter the time for holding municipal nominations.

Moved by Mr. Totten, seconded by Mr. McNicol, That the motion adopting the report of the Valuators at the December session of this Council be rescended; and that it be referred back to the Committee on Finance and Assessment, to amend the same, errors having been discovered therein—lost.

The yeas and nays being called for on the motion, were as follows:

Yeas—Christoe, Pedlar, McNicol, Messenger, McCallum, McRae, McMillan, Cameron, Norton, Totten, Clark, Gamey, McIntyre, Middleton, Rogers, McNaught—16.

Nays—Campbell, Hewgill, Gilray, Fawcett, Caulfield, Paul, V. Lang, O'Farrell, Widmenyer, Dunnington, Vasey, Bowes, Read, W. Lang, Gordon, Heming, Chisholm, Frost, Miller, Thompson, McKechnie, Robertson, Breen, McKenny—24.

A motion to read By-law to alter time for holding municipal nominations, a second time, was lost; and a motion that it be read a second time this day six months, was carried.

The Council then adjourned till 2 o'clock on Friday.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

A communication was read from the Provincial Prisoners' Aid Association of Toronto, asking a grant to aid them in their work of helping discharged prisoners and finding them work. The communication stated that expenses for 1883 were upwards of $3,000; and also that other County Councils had made grants, which were read. A circular in reference to a centennial celebration of U. E. Loyalists was also read.

By-law No. 8 of Derby, to close up a certain road in that township, was read a first and second time.

Mr. McKechnie read report No. 2 of Finance Committee, which stated that the Committee could not recommend a grant to Ontario Rifle Association; and recommending payment of account to Breckenridge & Wilson. Report adopted.

Mr. Chisholm, as County Director of the T. G. & B. R., read his report on railway matters. He stated that matters had changed since last report—the T. G. & B. having been leased for 99 years to Ontario & Quebec Railway, which has been amalgamated with the Canada Pacific Railway, his duties as Director were almost nil. The present prospect was that a large portion of the trade of the Northwest and British Columbia would pass through Owen Sound, in seeking an eastren outlet. We would have a large elevator built here by the opening of navigation, and hoped to see the largest fleet on inland waters running from this port next spring; and he hoped at the June session to be able to point out to the Council the fulfilment of what he had referred to.

Dr. Christoe read report of County Property Committee stating that the communication of County Judge respecting proper office accommodation, had been duly considered; but recommended no action being taken at present—the Judge being absent holding Division Courts; and recommending payment of a number of accounts.

Mr. Hewgill read report of Education Committee, recommending that report of Inspector of South Grey be printed in minutes; 2nd, recommending payment of a number of accounts; 3rd, and recommending that account of Secretary of Board of Examiners for $100, cut down at December session to $25 and not accepted, be paid in full.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole on the report of Education Committee. On the 3rd clause, considerable discussion took place, one member contending that the Board of Examiners did not exist, and that therefore no one had power to say the Secretary should receive $100. Others contended there was just as much work now as formerly, and if the service had been rendered, they should be paid for. The County Solicitor being asked for his opinion, said the Board was as much now in force as it ever was—though examinations for non-professional certificates were held at Toronto, yet for professional certificates fo principal teaching, the Board examined the candidates; and further, the Board was appointed by By-law of the Council, and still existed as such. The clause then passed, and after striking out a clause recommending payment of an account for an advertisement inserted five years ago in a Meaford paper, the committee rose, and the report as amended was adopted.

On motion, the report of County Director of the T. G. & B. R. was adopted; also report of County Property Committee.

Mr. V. Lang read report of Printing Committee, recommending payment of account of J. Rutherford, for printing minutes of December session; also that in regard to Valuators' Report, which would probably cost $500 if printed in full, the committee recommended that on action be taken in the matter, believing that the synopsis of report as now appended to the minutes, gives all requisite information.

The Council went into Committee of the Whole on the report.—Mr. McNicol in the chair.

Dr. Christoe thought that the cost of printing the Valuators' Report in full, would not cost anything like $500—he believed it could be done for $150.

Mr. Clark said ratepayers in Keppel were very anxious to have the report—municipal men would find it very useful, as it would enable them to tell about the value of any lot; and the ratepayers wanted to know what was done by Valuators.

Mr. McKechnie moved that that part of the report about Valuators' Report not being printed be expunged; and insert, that provided the Valuators' Report can be printed entire at a cost not exceeding $250 for 1000 copies that it be printed, and tenders advertise for. He said the whole county wanted the information as to the labors of the Valuators.

Mr. Frost opposed the motion. The Valuators' book consisted of 390 pages, and if printed in its entirety would make that number of printed pages. He thought the synopsis was all that needed to be published. The clause in the report took the place of his proposed motion.

Mr. Middleton contended that if it did cost $500, it was a matter of great importance. The work of the Valuators had cost the people over $2,000, and the monetary consideration was the least. If it were printed it would remove any suspicion that the report was wrong, and would give an oppertunity to show that no injustice had been done. If it should be sealed up, the impression would be that the Valuators, instead of doing honest and fair work, have been putting up a job on the County.

Dr. Christoe demanded as a right that the work should be done at contract rates, like all reports produced at the County Board. He thought the work could be contracted, so that two or three pages of report might be put into one printed page.

The Reeve of Meaford thought it would be a useless expense to print it entire.

The Warden said the discussion was out of order. Mr. McNicol, chairman, also held that the motion passed in December and the report conflicted—that the motion should be recinded first.

Mr. Bowes was against printing report, as it might have to be gone over again.

Dr. Christoe moved an amendment that the clause in the report referring to the matter under discussion, be struck out.

The amendment was carried.

A further clause, recommending the printing of 100 copies of standing rules, was also struck out— with the understanding that the rules should first be revised.

The committee then rose.

The Warden read a communication from the County Valuators, asking that as they had finished their labors, they be discharged.

Mr. Middleton read report of Committee on Correspondence and Memorials, recommending that in answer to a circular from the secretary of the Canada Land Law Association in reference to introducing what is known as the Torrens Land system into this country, a memorial be drafted approving of it; also in reference to communication of R. W. Phipps in regard to Forest Preservation, answer be sent approving of legislation sought to be obtained, except that referring to exempting certain portions of forest land from taxation.

The Council adjourned till 8 o'clock.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The Warden read report from A. Grier, Esq., Inspector of East Grey.

On motion, report of Printing Committed as amended in Committee of the Whole, was adopted.

After some explanation in regard to the Torrens Land System, by Mr. V Lang, in which he referred to it as a system to simplify registration of titles, the report of Committee on Correspondence and Memorials was adopted, after a short discussion.

Mr. Gamey read report of committee appointed to examine into the Treasurer's securities, which gave the names of sureties to amount of $100,000, and from all information, good and sufficient security.

The Council then went into committee of the whole on By-law 322 to appoint a High School Trustee.

Mr. McRae proposed Mr. John Rutherford, and Mr. Frost proposed Mr. W. Kough as High School Trustee.

In proposing the name of Mr. Kough, Mr Frost said there had been great trouble over school matters, and reverted at some length to school affairs of late years. He spoke of sides having been taken in regard to them; and Mr. Rutherford having taken a strong stand on one side, it would be better to appoint a non-partizan man as Mr. Kough was.

Messrs. McRae, Bowes, Christoe, Read, Gamey, Chisholm, and others, spoke of the confidence the Council reposed in Mr. Rutherford, having known him for so many years, and referred to his abilities and fitness for the position; some of them saying they did not care to have anything to do with school squabbles in Owen Sound, but were determined to appoint men whom they knew were well qualified.

After two or three had spoken of supporting Mr. Kough on the ground of his not being a partizan in school matters, a vote was taken, resulting in the election of Mr. Rutherford by a good majority.

The council rose, and By-law 322 was read a third time and passed.

Moved by Mr. Chisholm, seconded by Mr. Miller, that a special committee of five members, to be named by the Warden, be appointed to revise the standing rules for the government of the Council—carried.

Moved by Mr. Middleton, seconded by Mr. Gamey, that a committee composed of the Reeves of Normanby, Durham, Meaford Artemesia, and Deputy Reeves of St. Vincent, Osprey, Egremont, Glenelg, and Holland, be appointed to examine the act for the formation and government of Police Villages; and if deemed defective to report such amendments as may appear necessary to this council at the June session—carried.

The Council adjourned till 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

SATURDAY MORNING.

The By-law to close up a certain road allowance in the Township of Derby was read a third time and passed.

Moved by Mr. Frost, seconded by Mr. Read, that the resolution passed in the December session, requiring the Valuators' Report to be printed in its entirety as an appendix to the minutes, be varied by limiting such publication to those parts of said report already published in December minutes.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Middleton, seconded by Mr. McIntyre, that the clerical error discovered in the County Valuator's Report, relating to the Township of Collingwood, which said Township was equalized at sum $60,000 less, through an error in addition, than said valuators intended, be corrected; and that the report be published in accordance with the motion passed at December session, so that the ratepayers of the County may be afforded an opportunity of enquiring into the correctness of said report, and satisfy themselves as to the value obtained for a valuation which has already cost over $2,000, provided that the same can be done at a cost not exceeding $250, and that the same be submitted for tender.

Moved in amendment to the amendment by Dr. Christoe, seconded by Mr. Pedlar, that said resolution be not varied, but that contract be given to A. R. Fawcett of Flesherton, viz: to print 1000 copies for $200—and for its completion the guarantee of the Reeve of Artemesia be accepted.

Considerable discussion took place on these motions—a good deal the same ground being gone over as on Friday afternoon—Messrs. McNicol, Christoe, Clark, Middleton, and others arguing that the Valuators' Report should be printed in full; while Messrs. Chisholm, Frost, Dunnington, McKenny, and others, contended that the synopsis already printed in connection with December minutes, gave all the information possible to be gathered from the report in detail; while Messrs. Miller, McKenny, Totten, Clark, and others, thought the more sensible way would be that it should be revised by a committee before printing.

Dr. Christoe's amendment was first put, and lost by a vote of 13 to 26.

Mr. Middleton's amendment was then put, and lost by a vote of 17 to 22.

The yeas and nays having been called for were;

Yeas—Christoe, Pedlar, McNicol, Messenger, McCallum, McRae, McMillan, Norton, Totten, Clark, O'Farrell, Gamey, McIntyre, Middleton, Rogers, McNaught, McKechnie—17.

Nays—McKenny, Campbell, Hewgill, Gilray, Fawcett, Caulfield, Paul, V. Lang, Whitmenyer, Dunnington, Vasey, Bowes, Read W. Lang, Gordon, Heming, Chisholm, Frost, Miller Thompson, Robertson, Breen—22.

Before the original motion was put, another amendment was made by Dr. Christoe, seconded by Mr. Pedlar, that the motion be not varied, but that 1000 copies of the Report be printed and given by competition to the lowest tender, providing it does not exceed $200.

The above amendment was lost on about the same division—18 to 22.

The original motion by Mr. Frost was then put and carried by 22 to 18.

Two or three other motions on the subject were made and discussed, and afterwards withdrawn.

On motion, Report No. 2 of Education Committee, recommending printing of the report of the Inspector for East Grey, was adopted.

A motion was made by Dr. Christoe seconded by Mr. Pedlar, that the Council hold only one more session in the present year.

An amendment was moved by Mr. Middleton, seconded by Mr. Thompson, to the effect that the June session be held as usual, at which time it can be seen if the third session can be despensed with. The amendment was carried.

The report of the special committee appointed to enquire into the validity of the Treasurer's securities, was adopted.

A committee of five members were appointed to revise the standing rules of the Council.

The Council adjourned to Monday 23rd June, at 7 o'clock p. m.

Prof. Low's Sulphur Soap is highly recommended for the cure of Eruption, Chaps, Chapped Hands, Pimples, Tan, &c.

"I am going to plant my foot down," said the lady of the house in wrathful tones. "What 'yer going to raise, corns?" interrogated the man of the house from behind his paper.—Rockland Courier-Gazette.

A WONDERFUL RESULT.

A single bottle of Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup has frequently destroyed from 100 to 200 worms. It is pleasant to take—no other cathartic being required. Tape worms have also been removed by it, of 15 to 35 feet in length. It is effectual for all varities of worms affecting both children and adults.

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER XIII.

"Miss Christie!"

It was Mr. Rayner calling softly through the door. I did not answer or move.

"Miss Christie, my dear child, are you there? Are you conscious? Are you ill?"

And I heard the handle of the door turn; but it was locked. I raised my head from the ground, and said, in a weak quavering voice—

"I am not ill, thank you, and I am quite conscious."

"But your voice is weak¶ Are you hurt? Did that woman hurt you?" he asked anxiously.

"No, no; I am only frightened; I am not hurt. I will tell you all about it to-morrow, Mr. Rayner. I can't talk now."

"But I cannot go away and sleep, my child, till I am quite satisfied that you are all right. Put on your dressing-gown, and come out and let me see you and be sure."

But I felt that I could not leave my room again that night.

"I am really quite well, only I cannot come out to-night, Mr. Rayner. I am too much shaken with the fright; I am indeed."

"I will fetch you some brandy and-water, and put it here for you, outside the door, then."

"No, please don't; I should not dare to take it in. I feel that, if I opened the door, she might get in. If I saw her again to-night, it would kill me!" I sobbed. "Oh, please keep her away!"

I was getting hysterical again.

"She shall not come near you, child; I swear it! You are quite safe. I will lock the door at the bottom of these stairs, and come and let you out myself in the morning," he said, in a low voice.

The thought of being locked in did not reassure me much; but I thanked him and wished him good night, with a last piteous appeal to him to keep Sarah away. Then I rose from the floor, stumbled to the table, struck a match and lighted my candle, and put it by my bedside. For the first time I was afraid of the dark. And I lay awake listening, and starting at the tiny cracks the wood made, until at last, worn out, I fell asleep.

The next morning I heard Mr. Rayner unlock the door at the foot of the staircase when I had just opened mine, ready to go down. He waited for me, looking up anxiously, and seemed shocked at my appearance. I had noticed myself, as I was dressing, how white and haggard I looked, and how dull and heavy my eyes were, with black rings around them.

"You ought not to have got up at all. You should have stayed in bed and had your breakfast brought up to you."

I shuddered: I had had enough of bedside visits for a long time, and the thought of being a semi-invalid waited on by Sarah was too much for my self-command.

"Take my arm, child; you can scarcely walk. Come to breakfast; a cup of hot coffee will do you good. And, after that, you shall come into the study, and we will talk. Don't say anything about it at breakfast; it might frighten my wife."

I took his arm, for I really was not quite steady on my feet; and he led me into the dining-room, and put me into an arm chair instead of the one I usually occupied at prayers. Then Haidee, who had seen at once that there was a change in me, and given me a double kiss as consolation, rang the bell to summon the servants to prayers. I held the arms of my chair, and kept my eyes on the ground, and my lips tightly closed that I might give no sign when I saw Sarah's face again; but, when they came in, I knew without looking up that she was not there. And Jane waited at table. Had Sarah gone already? My heart leaped at the thought. At breakfast Mr. Rayner said——

"I am going to propose a holiday for to-day. Both mistress and pupil are looking very seedy, and I think a day's rest from lessons will do both good. My motives are not wholly unselfish, I am sorry to say, for I have the penny-bank accounts to do, and I want you to help me with them, Miss Christie, if you will be so kind as to spare me a couple of hours. I won't keep you longer."

I assented rather nervously. I should have a scene to go through with Mr. Rayner, and an announcement to make which would entail a lot of argument and some persuasion and resistance, which I scarcely felt equal to, shaken as I was.

"At what time will you want me, Mr. Rayner?"

"How soon after breakfast can you come?"

"May I have an hour first to finish some work I have to do? It doesn't matter, if you would rather——"

"In an hour's time I shall expect you in the study, then."

After breakfast, I went up stairs, where I found Jane doing my room. I caught her looking at me shyly, as if I had gone up in interest in her eyes. She must have heard something of the night's adventure—I wanted to know what. She prepared to leave the room when I entered.

"Never mind, Jane; don't go. You have nearly finished, I see. So you are doing the rooms this morning?"

"Yes, miss; I've got to get into the way of it, miss."

She gave a gasp, as if to continue, but stopped.

"Well?" said I, smiling, to encourage her to talk.

"You know Sarah's going away, miss."

"Is she?" said I, unable to keep my face from brightening up at the welcome words.

"Yes, miss. Oh, there has been a rumpus, and no mistake! You just should have heard her go on! But she's going, and I'm not sorry for one."

"What is she going away for?" asked I.

"Don't you know, miss?"

She spoke shyly, but was evidently prepared to disbelieve me if I said 'No.'

"I can guess; but what reason did she give you?"

"Oh, it's along of you, miss! She burst into cook and me this morning, and said as she wasn't going to stay in a house where there was such goings on. That was what she said, miss." And she paused, her shyness again getting the better of her anxiety to pour out all she had heard.

"Go on, go on. You know I asked you to tell me," said I gently.

'Well, miss, she said all kind o' things about you; but we didn't take much notice o' them, cook and me; we're used to old Sally. But then she said—she said——"

"Yes—well?"

"She said as how she went up to your room, hearing a noise, and then, as how——"

"Go on."

"Then as how—Mr. Rayner came up and — wasn't best pleased to find her there——"

"Yes—well!"

But Jane would not go on, but got very red, and fidgeted about with the cloth she was holding. And suddenly, as I watched the girl in wonder, the whole awful truth flashed upon me of the complexion Sarah had given to the story. I did not speak for a minute—I only felt a strange little fluttering pain that seemed to be round my heart—and then I said very quietly—

"I suppose she didn't tell you that she tried to steal something I wear round my neck; that, when she found she couldn't, she threw a handkerchief steeped in some drug over my face to make me unconscious, that she might get at it more easily; that it was my screams that brought Mr. Rayner up-stairs, and that he stood outside and called her till she came to him. Here, I'll show you the very handkerchief."

I had tucked it down in the corner of one of the drawers. It still smelt faintly of the stuff it had been soaked in. Little Jane's face brightened with wonder and downright honest pleasure.

"I'm that glad, miss, I could dance," said she. "She said Mr. Rayner let her fall down-stairs in the dark, and went on up without taking no notice—and she really is a good deal bruized, and serve her right. But there never is no believing Sarah. And for her to talk about goings on! Oh, my, we did laugh, cook and me!" And Jane chattered on about Sarah and her many unpleasant attributes till she had finished her work, and left the room with a bright grin of friendship.

So Sarah, after doing me another wrong worse than all the rest in circulating lies to injure my reputation, was going. But she would probably not go at once, and I felt that I could not sleep another night in the same house with her. So I turned out all my things and packed my boxes, as I had determined to do while I lay awake during the past night. I looked into my desk, and found that my note had been replaced! I would announce to Mr. Rayner my determination to go when I went to the study, and ask permission to leave that very afternoon. I was sorry to leave the Alders, Mr. Rayner, and sweet little Haidee; and there was another reason which made the thought of leaving Geldham harder still to bear. But the terrors of the night I had passed through had had an effect upon me strong enough to outweigh every other consideration; even now, by daylight, I could scarcely look around my own familiar little room without a feeling of loathing of the scene of my horrible adventure.

There was another reason of my hasty flight. Sarah was a very valuable servant, as she had insisted, and as Mr. Rayner himself had admitted. Now I was the only obstacle to her remaining, and it was really better that the one of us who could best be replaced should go; and my well-founded fears that she might, after all, be retained in any case helped to strengthen my resolution to go. I had had no salary yet, as I had not been two months at the Alders, but my uncle had given me a sovereign to be put by, in case of emergency, and now the emergency was come. So I packed my boxes, and then went down-stairs rather nervously to the study, having in my pocket the drugged handkerchief as a proof that my adventure was no fancy, as I guessed that Mr. Rayner would try to make me believe.

Mr. Rayner said "come in" when I knocked, got up, placed me in an arm-chair by the fire, and asked me to wait while he spoke to Sam. He left the room, and I cautiously made friends with his big dog, who shared the hearthrug with me. He was very gracious, and I had progressed so far as to slide down from my seat to caress him better, when I looked up and saw Sarah.

I sprang to my feet, with a scream that I could not repress, and darted to the bell

"Don't!" said she sharply. "At least, wait one moment—give me a hearing. I'll stay here—so. Mr. Rayner'll be here in a minute; he won't leave you for long," said she, in a disagreeable voice. "I can't hurt you. I didn't mean to hurt you last night; and I didn't want to steal your letter. What should I want to steal a bit of paper for? You see I know what it is. I only wanted to read it. I'm of a curious disposition, and I don't stick at much to find out what I want to know—if it's only trifles. The stuff on that handkerchief wouldn't have hurt you, only made you sleep a little sounder, so as I could take the letter. I'd have put it back. I'm sorry I frightened you. I've come to ask you to forgive me."

She said it in a dry hard tone not as if she really repented her cruel action a bit.

"No, no; I can't forgive you—at least, not yet," I said incoherently. "It wasn't only wanting to steal my letter and to stupefy me, but the way you looked at me, the cruel way—as if—as if you would have liked to kill me," I said, growing more excited as I remembered the terrible glare of her eyes when she sprang at me the second time. "I can't forget it—oh, I can't forget it! And you did something worse than that; you told the cook and Jane that Mr. Rayner was coming up to my room! Oh, that was wicked of you, for you know it wasn't true."

"That's that little tattling Jane, I know!" said Sarah vixenishly. "I never said such a thing at all; but she likes to make a story up of everything she hears. You know what a chatterbox she is, miss."

I did know it; but I did not think Jane was likely to have altered Sarah's story much. I was silent for a minute. Sarah began again in a different tone.

"You're very hard upon a poor servant, Miss Christie, and it isn't generous of you. I don't deny that I was jealous of you, and that I wanted to prove to Mr. Rayner that you had letters on the sly from a young gentleman. There now—I've made a clean breast of it! But don't it seem hard that I, who've served him and his well for nigh seven years, should have to go just at the word of a young lady who hasn't been here two months?"

"It isn't at my word, Sarah; I have nothing to do with it."

"Nothing to do with it? Can you deny that you dislike me?"

"I should never have disliked you if you had not over and over again shown that you hated me, and that it was distasteful to you even to have to serve me. And, as to your going away, I heard about it only this morning through asking Jane why she was doing my room."

I blushed as I said this; but I could not confess to Sarah that the first mention I had heard of her departure was when I was listening outside the door of this very room on the night before.

"Then you don't want me to go away?"

'It doesn't matter to me whether you go or stay, as I have packed my boxes, and am going back to London myself this very afternoon."

Sarah stared. Then she gave a disagreeable laugh.

"You won't go," said she.

"You can go up-stairs and look at my boxes," I said indignantly,

"Have you spoken to Mr. Rayner about it yet, may I ask, miss?" said she drily.

"Not yet; but I am going to tell him this morning."

"Then would you mind, before you go, miss"—she laid a peculiar emphasis on these words—"asking Mr. Rayner to let me stay? It won't matter to you, you see: but its more to me than I can tell."

And, for the first time during the interview, there was a real emotion in her voice.

"But what I might say wouldn't make any difference, Sarah," I remonstrated gently. "You overrate my importance in this household in the strangest way. My words haven't half the weight on Mr. Rayner that yours have." Sarah looked at me eagerly as I said this, but she did not seem satisfied. "That is quite right and natural, as you have been here so long and are so much older too."

She did not like my saying that, I saw, by the tightening of her thin lips; but I certainly had not meant to offend her. However, after a minute's pause, she said again—

"Then, as you won't be afraid of your words having any effect, miss, perhaps you will the less mind asking Mr. Rayner to let me stay."

I shrugged my shoulders at her strange persistency; my words would certainly make no difference, and, as I was going away, she would probably stay; so I said——

"Very well; I will ask him."

"You promise, miss?" said, she with a strange light in her eyes. "Gentlefolks like you don't break their word, I know," she went on quickly. "So, if you only say 'I promise" I shall know I can trust you, and that you bear no malice."

She must indeed be anxious to obtain what she asked when she could stoop so far as to class me with "gentlefolk."

"I promise," said I.

She might have shown a little gratitude for what she had been so eager to get, I thought; but, as soon as the words had left my lips, she drew herself up from he imploring attitude triumphantly, and, with a simple, cold "Thank you, miss," left the room.

Then I felt as if the study had suddenly grown lighter. Before long Mr. Rayner returned. I said nothing about Sarah's visit, and nothing about my own departure, until I had done the very little there was to do in settling the accounts of the penny-bank. This work had only been an excuse for giving me a holiday, because I looked ill, I felt sure; and, when it was finished Mr. Rayner sent me back to the arm-chair again and poured me out a glass of wine. I began to feel nervous about my announcement.

"Have you quite got over your cruel fright now, little woman?" said he kindly.

"As much as one can get over a thing like that," I said, in a low voice, my fingers shaking.

'One can't forget it at once, of course; but I hope that a little care and a little kindness will soon drive that unpleasant adventure right out of your head."

"If you mean your care and kindness," said I, looking up gratefully, "why, you can't give me more than you have given me already, Mr. Rayner, But there are some experiences which one can never forget except away from the scenes where they happened. And, oh, Mr. Rayner," I went on quickly, "you mustn't think me ungrateful or capricious; but I have packed my boxes, and I want to ask you to release me from my engagement and let me go back to London by this afternoon's train! For, if I had to sleep in that room another night, I should go mad!"

He came and sat by my side.

'My dear child," he said gravely, "you can't do that—for our sakes,"

"But I must—I must indeed!" I cried piteously. "You don't know, you can't tell what I suffered when I felt her arm creeping up to my throat, and thought I was going to be killed—I did indeed! And then I thought the stuff on the handkerchief was poison. She says it is only something to make you sleep. Is it true, Mr. Rayuer! Here is the handkerchief." And I pulled it from my pocket and gave it to him.

"Quite true," said he: but I saw him frown. "It is chloroform, which she got out of my medicine-chest; I missed the bottle this morning. No, that wouldn't have hurt you child; I don't suppose for a moment she meant to hurt you. But it was a cruel trick, all the same. Do you know"—and he looked at me searchingly—"what she did it for?"

'Oh, yes, she told me! She wanted to get a letter—from a — a friend, which I wore round my neck." I felt myself blushing violently, knowing from what I had overheard Sarah say to him on the previous night that he knew all about that foolish pendant. "She wanted to read it, and she couldn't get it without stupefying me, because I was holding it. But I have forgiven her, and promised I would ask you to let her stay. I told her it wouldn't matter what I said; but she made me promise."

"And what made you think what you said wouldn't matter?" asked he gently.

"There is no reason why it should," said I. "But I couldn't have promised to ask you to let her stay if I had not been going away myself. Mr. Rayner, you must let me go."

"I will let you go if you wish it, though he Alders would seem more like a tomb than ever without you, child, now, that we have got used to seeing your pretty little face and hearing your sweet little voice about the place," said he sadly, almost tenderly; and the tears came to my eyes. "But you cannot go to-day. Think what people would say of us if it got rumoured about that our child's governess was so cruelly treated under our roof that she went away without a day's warning; for every one counts upon you at the school-treat, and I believe that our young friend Laurence—don't blush, child—would go off his head, and accuse us of murdering you outright, if he were to hear you were gone. And you would find it difficult, believe me, child, to get another situation, if you left your first so quickly, no matter for what reason. No; you shall have a different room, or Jane shall sleep in your room for a week or so, until your very natural nervousness has gone off; and then, if, at the end of the three months, you still wish to go, why, we won't keep you, child, though I think some of us will never get over it if you leave us too suddenly."

He spoke so sweetly, so kindly, and yet with such authority of superior wisdom, that I had to give way. Then, bound by my promise, I had even to ask again that Sarah should stay, and he agreed that she should at once; and then I, not at all elated at the success of my intercession, begged him to let Jane do as much as possible for me just at first.

But later in the day it was not pleasant to see Sarah's acid smile as she said, when she heard I was going to stay—

"I told you, miss."

And when I said to her, "I kept my promise, and asked Mr. Rayner for you to stay, Sarah," she answered, "Then I am to stay, of course, miss?" in the same tone. And I was reluctantly obliged to admit that she was.

And, as I looked at her face, which could never seem to me again to look anything but evil, a sudden horror seized me at the thought that I had pledged myself to stay for five whole weeks more in the same house with this woman.

CHAPTER XIV.

I took advantage of the rest of my day's holiday to work very hard at the text I was doing for the church. I thought that Mr. Reade might call for it that day, but he did not. And the next day, which was Thursday, I finished it, and rolled it up in paper ready for sending away; but still he did not come to fetch it. Haidee and I did not go out far that morning—a long walk tired her now; but in the afternoon, when lessons were over, I sauntered out into the garden, with a book in my hand, and went to my "nest," which I had neglected to visit on the day before—a most unusual occurrence; but Mr. Rayner had forbidden me to go outside the house on that day, as I was rather feverish from the effects of the preceding night's excitement.

I found Mona sitting among the reeds close to the pond, not far from my "nest," crooning to herself and playing with some sticks and bits of paper. At sight of me she slid along the bank and let herself down into the mud below, as if to hide from me. When the child suddenly disappeared from my sight like that, I felt frightened lest she should fall into the water, or sink into the soft slime at the edge which she had chosen to retire into, and not be able to climb the slippery bank again. So I walked daintily through the reedy swamp which was her favorite haunt, and looked over the bank. She was busily burying in the mud, with the help of two little sticks the bits of paper she had been playing with; and, when I bent down to speak to her, she threw herself upon her back, with her head almost in the water, and began to scream and kick. This uncalled-for demonstration made me think that she knew she was in mischief; and, leaving her for a moment to enjoy herself in her own way, I stooped and picked up one or two of the pieces of paper which formed her toys. There was writing on them in a hand I knew, and I had not made out a dozen words before I was sure that Mona had somehow got hold of a note from Mr. Laurence Reade to me.

Down I jumped in a moment, caring no more for the mud, into which I sank to my ankles, than Mona herself. I dug up the bits she had buried, and took from her very gently those she was still clutching, though my fingers tingled to slap her. I hope it was not revenge that made me carry her indoors to be washed. Then I searched the ground where I had found her, and discovered more little bits, and under the seat of my "nest" a torn envelope addressed to "Miss Christie." I ran in, and up to my room, with my mangled treasure, carefully cleaned the fragments, and, after much labor, at last fitted them into a pretty coherent whole. The note ran, as well as I could make out—

"Dear Miss Christie,—I am so anxious about you that I must write. Is it true that"—here there was a piece missing—"an accident, that you are ill, hurt? If you are safe and well, you will pass the park to-morrow, that I may see you and know that you"—another piece missing. "I shall put this on the seat near the pond, where I know you go every evening.

Yours very sincerely,

"LAURENCE READE."

It was dated "Wednesday," and this was Thursday afternoon; so that it was this morning's walk that he had meant. Oh if I had only come out here last night and found the letter! I would go past the park to-morrow; but perhaps it would be too late, and he would not expect me then—he would think I was too ill to come out.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

Matthew Arnold while in Boston heard that a farmer's wife, who had read all his works, had driven in five miles to hear him lecture, expressed a desire to see her, saying that he doubted if any farmer's wife in England would drive five miles to hear a lecture on Emerson or Carlyle.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Or

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFI

There is only one way by which any d can be cured, and that is by remov cause—wherever it may be. The great m authorities of the day declare that nearly disease is caused by deranged kidneys o To restore these, therefore, is the only w which health can be secured. Here is WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achiev great reputation. It acts directly upo kidneys and liver, and by placing them healthy condition drives disease and pai the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and ary troubles; for the distressing disord women; for Malaria, and physical t generally, this great remedy has no equa ware of impostors, imitations and conco said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO. Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., Londo

The cruise of the Duke of Edinb the Mediterranean separates him fr family for six months.

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure i with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it ge Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere A. P.

SEED! 1881 Change Grasping Mono Find Prices. JAS. REN

DAKOTA — PARTIES DESIRIN FORMATION relative to free homes, w rect maps, circulars, and reliable facts, free Apply to HARRY MERCER, Travelling F Agent C. M. and St. P. railway, Chatham, Ont.

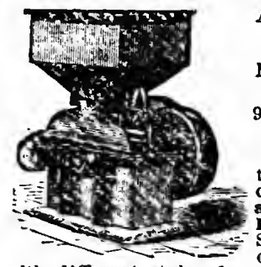
DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHIL to grow up deformed or crippled, but ex amine our appliances for the treatment of C and Diseases of the Spine, Hips, Knee and An member the world is progressing, and more ca to-day than at any former period. We also ma Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for t and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will sho onto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUS COX, 91 Church street, Toronto.

BOON TO FARME Circulars free, of new and most productive known of Seed Grown. Testimonials of 110 bu acre of Boyds Egyptian Oats, Samples of 2 oz. JAS BOYD JR, Cedar Grove, Ont.

Municipal Councillor's Hand

Important book for Municipal Councillors and Contains in brief and familiar style, the numer of Ontario—with forms. 200 pages bound in cl One Dollar. Address PRATT & TRACY, Pu Stratford, Ont.

$100,000 TO LOA on first-class farm property, at lowest rates. M will save money by applying by mail direct to me



E. E. KNOT 48 Adelaide St. East, Toronto.

A FAIR OFFER

If you will send us with this slip 25c, or 9 cent stamps, we will mail you, post-paid, a sa package containing 100 useful articles, which required in every house, with instruction which you can make from $2 to $4 per day. able for both sexes. This is no humbug, as samples are well worth the money, and may b turned if not satisfactory. Show this to y friends.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P

The Newell Patent Universal Grin

Award of Gold Silver Medal

NEWELL & CH Proprietor 95 St. James St. Montreal

These Mills time, grind an of grain ver and will heating. La Size Mills wi on same pr with different style of cutter, grinding phates, gold and silver ores, quartz, clay, bones, fish-scraps, bark, &c. Pleas or write for particulars.

Dominion Line of Steamsh

Running in connection with the Grand Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec Saturday during the summer months, and Portland every Thursday during the months Sailing dates from PORTLAND TO LIVEPOOL.

Dominion, Jan. 10.	*Oregon, Jan.
*Sarnia, Jan. 17.	Ontario, Feb
Montreal, Jan. 24.	Toronto, Feb

Rates of passage: Cabin, Portland to Liv $50, $60, $70. Return $90, $110, $130, acc to steamer and berth, all outside room comfortably heated by steam. Interme $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and state in steamers marked thus: * are amid where but little motion is felt, and no ca sheep are carried on them. For further pa lars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway or local agents of the Company, or to

DAVID TORRANCE & CO., General Agents, Mon

M. W. DUNHA HAS IMPORTED

90 PER CENT OF ALL HORS Ever Imported

From France to Amer

Whose Purity of Blood is establishe Recorded Pedigrees in the ron Stud Book of France is the only Draft Horse that countr Mr Dunham published edition of 1 so only 140 page for 1884, co descriptions o grees (many generations)

45 STALLIONS

Now on hand. All Stallions Guaranteed Catalogue free. Address, M. W. DUNHAM, Du Page Co., Illinois. (35 miles west of Chica & N.-W. R'y.

FOR THE LADIES.

Seal Skins.

The Philadelphia Times says that the best seal skins come from the Antarctic waters, principally from the Shetland Islands. New York receives the bulk of American skins, which are shipped to various ports. London is the great centre of the fur trade of the world. In our own country the sea bear of the north has the most valuable skin. Since 1862 over 500,000 have been killed on Behring Island alone. In 1867 there were 27,500 sea bears killed; in 1871 there was a very large decrease, only 3,614 being killed. There were 26,960 killed in 1876, and in 1880 the number killed was 48,504, a large increase. Sea-otter fur is about as expensive as any, and some 48,000 skins are used yearly. Over 100,000 martin or Russia-sable skins are annually used. Only about 2,000 silver foxes are caught every year, and about 6,500 blue foxes. Other fox skins are used more or less. About 600 tiger skins are used yearly, over 11,000 wild cat skins, and a very large trade is being carried on in house cat skins; about 35,000 skunk and 42,000 monkey skins are used annually. The trade in ermine skins is falling off, as is also the trade in chinchilla. About 3,000,000 South American nutrias are killed every year, and a very large business is being carried on in muskrat skins; about 15,000 each of American bear and buffalo skins were used last year. There are also used each year about 3,000,000 lamb, 5,000,000 rabbit, 6,000,000 squirrel, and 620,000 fitch skins; also 195,000 European hamster, and nearly 1,000,000 European and Asiatic hares.

Washing Requisites.

The first great requisite toward beauty is absolute cleanliness. This can never be attained without the pleantiful use of pure, soft water and good soap. Nothing keeps the hands in so good condition as rain-water or distilled water; but as these are often unattainable, the next best must be made use of. A bottle of ammonia and a box of powdered borax are indispensable toilet articles. A few drops of one or a tiny bit of the other in the hardest water will make it soft and pleasant to the touch. Neither very hot nor very cold water should be used; tepid water softens and cleanses better than either. Extremes and sudden changes in temperature should be avoided also. Fine white sand—which may be dried and used again and again—poured into the basin and used with the water, will be found very efficacious in smoothing rough places and in removing certain stains which have not become too deeply settled into the pores.

For whitening the hands there are various preparations which may be used without harm. Glycerine, vaseline, cold cream, or mutton tallow, well rubbed in, with a pair of old gloves worn over night, will do much to soften and whiten. The white of an egg, with a gram of alum dissolved in it, spread on the hands and wrapped in old linen over night, will, as the chroniclers of Queen Anne's time say, make even soft and flabby hands firm and clear-looking. Oatmeal and cornmeal, both dry and moist, may be used with good effect. The roughest and ugliest pair of hands may be made smooth and soft, if not white, in one month, if the owner will but see to it that they are well washed in warm water every night, and rubbed with whichever of the simple preparations mentioned agrees with the skin—one or two applications will discover that—and then inclosed within a pair of gloves, from which the ends of the fingers have been cut.

Now that we have the hands shapely, soft, and white, let us turn our attention to the nails. The modus operandi of the professional manicure is as follows: The finger tips are put to soak in delicately colored finger bowls half full of tepid water, slightly scented with perfume. After twenty minutes of patient waiting the operator taks one hand, and, with an ivory blade, or dull pointed stick, pushes back the cuticle from the half moon, which in most cases is scarcely yet quite covered. This is often attended with considerable pain, or at least discomfort; in stubborn cases some manicures use acid, but this is not desirable, as it makes the finger very sensitive for days. When the flesh is well loosened all the superfluous part is cut away with a tiny pair of scissors, made expressly for the purpose. The nails are then trimmed to their proper length. Pointed French ones are considered the finest, but people of the best taste prefer the oval shaped nail, a little longer than the shape of the finger, gives a finish to the finger that the pointed ones do not; however, that is a matter of individual taste, but no matter what the shape, the nails are left to grow quite long.

Next comes filing, a chamois polisher and powder are used until they shine beautifully; then comes a thorough washing and brushing in tepid water, and again are they polished with the attendant's bare hand, the delicate woman hand giving a higher degree of polish on finger nails as well as on wool. This process consumes about an hour, and is rather enjoyable. Many people pay a stated sum quarterly and go to the manicure twice a week, but this is not at all necessary; after they are once well attended to a few minutes care and attention daily will keep the nails in good order. Every time the hands are washed the flesh should be carefully pushed back with the towel; this will keep it loose and in good shape, and two minutes' rubbing will give them a good polish.

Marriages in Mexico.

Marriages are arranged here much the same as they are in Europe and the United States. The gentleman sometimes manages to get introduced into the family, and is acknowledged the "novio" of the young lady by the father and mother, even before there is any formal engagement; but it is rather difficult to visit with assiduity a Mexican house until after the engagement, and even then the visits are paid in the presence of the entire family. It is generally a person of influence who acts as an ambassador in asking the hand of the young lady. Engagements are of long duration in Mexico, and very often come to nothing. First, the civil marriage takes place, which is followed by a breakfast, dinner or ball at the house of the novia, and a few days afterward the religious ceremony is performed, to which a great number of persons are invited, and at which the ladies attend dressed entirely in black, with a handsome silk, satin or velvet toilet, and a black lace mantilla. To dress in black at a wedding in another country would be considered a bad omen, but here it is considered quite the thing. There are no bridesmaids here; only one "madrina," who may be married or single, but who is generally married, and a "padrino." The number of witnesses required is three, and the bride is given away, as in the United States. In Mexico the regular white wedding dress with orange flowers is always worn, and the bridegroom has to provide it, as also a number of other handsome dresses, jewels, etc. Immediately after the ceremony the newly-married couple, go to a photograph gallery and have their photographs taken in their bridal attire. Marriages take place here very early in the morning, and always in church, as it is not permitted to perform the nuptial ceremony in the house. A breakfast is given by the family of the bride, and afterward the bride and bridegroom leave for some estate, or for their own house, which is prepared some time before. The outfit is sometimes provided entirely by the bridegroom, but generally the family give the underclothes and some of the simple dresses.

A Chapter on Pies.

As there are two sides to every question I wish to say a few words for the much slandered pie. Perhaps the condemnation so severely passed on this common article of food refers to those which are unskillfully made; but in my opinion (and I have had long experience in planning for the ever-recurring three meals a day for a family) nothing give the housekeeper more satisfaction than good pies which can be easily and quickly made at any time. She may then welcome the unexpected visitor without being troubled with the first anxious thought, "What shall I have for dinner?"

For dessert what is nicer than a green-apple pie made of tart, mellow apples and flavored with cinnamon or lemon peel? I never thought pies unwholesome either. I know people who have eaten them in moderation for three score years, whose health compares very favorably with that of many people of half their age who live and diet scientifically and do everything by rule. It is my custom late in the autumn, or after cold weather has fairly come on, to prepare mince meat for the coming season by boiling several pounds of lean, fresh beef; when cold it is chopped and seasoned with cinnamon, cloves allspice and salt, and so forth. Chopped raisins are added in such quantities as one feels like using.

It is sweetened with part sugar, part molasses. Apples are chopped and added last—about twice the bulk of the other materials. If they are insipid in flavor, two or three teacups of vinegar will "help it," then water enough to make all moist enough for pies. A piece of butter does no harm. This is then placed on the stove in a proper dish, and cooked until the apples are done, or nearly so. Dried currants, cherries, or raspberries stewed, add both to the color and flavor if they are at hand.

This may be packed while hot in small stone jars and put away in a cool place for future use, or fastened up in glass preserving cans, if one has them empty. It will keep all winter in a cool place with molasses spread over the top, and covered tightly.

Enough of it may be used at any time to make pies for a week or two if desired; or the apples may be left out and added to the seasoned meat, as the pies are made.

This plan gives a housekeeper a sense of satisfaction equal to any other preparation for winter; and any one who tries it as an an experiment will be quite apt to repeat it afterwards as a matter of convenience. Whatever makes housekeeping easier and pleasanter is to be recommended. Pie-making or eating need not be overdone; neither need pies be banished from the house-wife's bill of fare.

The "Staff of Life."

"You will have to excuse the bread, if it is sour," said a neighbor. I was not hungry, and it did not matter to me; but I thought how often this happens in our households, and began to think out the causes. If dough remains too long before baking, acetic acid is produced. Sometimes, when yeast is added that contains decomposed flour, a small amount of alcohol is formed and the carbonic acid is set free. This makes the bread light and porous. It becomes then a study to know just when the right time is for baking up. The temperature at which the dough is kept has a decided influence on its quality. If kept warm the bread will be whiter and tenderer than if set to rise at a low temperature. The yeast plant grows best at about 72 degrees, and every little item makes a difference in the quality of the bread. The best yeast does not contain flour, and is made as follows: Boil a handful of hops in two quarts of water ten minutes; strain, and add to the liquor one cup of sugar, six grated potatoes and a tablespoonful of salt. Let it simmer half an hour, add a cupful of good yeast when lukewarm, and let it rise without being in any way chilled.

The Short-Hair Craze Among Women.

The fashion of cutting woman's hair close to the head is said to have become very common in Chicago recently—to such an extent, in fact, that it amounts to a craze. Some women are alleged to be carried away with the novelty of the matter, and to some are given a striking appearance which measurably improves their looks. This class appear animated by a desire for admiration and the attention naturally attracted to them. But there are others who emerge from the barber-chair with sandpapered craniums who evidently feel as silly as they look. Others are prompted by the erroneous belief that it will make the new growth more luxuriant, for it is said to be a fact that the hair will not grow out thicker and heavier, and, as a rule, wavy hair is transformed by the operation into locks that are perfectly straight. Besides, submitting to such wholesale work at the hands of the barber at this season of the year is very dangerous, as the exposure of the head, after it has been used to bountiful protection, is certain to cause severe cold, which might lead to more serious disease. The craze is principally confind at present to the young women of 20 years of age, and so on up to the middle-aged.

Among the rich men of Boston young Mr. Montgomery Sears pays a tax of more than fifty thousand dollars.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

Little Ocean Travellers.

"Come here a moment," said Inspector Eichler of Castle Garden to a New York reporter recently.

The reporter followed, and Mr. Eichler held up a little German boy about two years old.

"This is the youngest chap I have ever seen who came across alone. It is a common thing for parents to come to this country and go West, and then, after they make a little home for themselves, to send home for their children. There was a German and his wife who came over about five years ago. A friend of mine in Europe told them to find me, and I would set them right. Well, when they came here they told me they had left three little children behind with their grandparents, and wanted to know if I would look out for them on their arrival. I promised. A year later, a little fellow about five years old came up to me, gave me his name, and said his parents had told him to look out for me.

"'Where are your brothers?' I asked.

"'My father could not afford to send for us all at once, so we will come one by one.'

"Two years and a half after the arrival of the parents the whole family were united, and it seemed strange to me to see these little fellows going alone so confidingly to meet their father. The father is now mayor of one of our Western towns."

"What is the average age of the little ones who come alone?"

"Well, about six years, although we have quite a number coming here alone who are between three and four, but this little fellow"—referring to the boy he first drew the reporter's attention to—"is the youngest I have ever seen." It would be better for the children to come unaccompanied, for the sea companies are tender hearted. When they find children on board they take them into their own cabins, and give them the best to eat and drink. A curly-headed little girl came from Sweden, and she had one of those little flutes which she used to play on board for the amusement of the passengers. There happened to be a lot of opera singers on board, and the child amused them so much that they gave a concert for her benefit the night before they arrived here, and the little girl found herself the happy possessor of one hundred and twelve dollars."

"What class of people generally allow their children to come alone?"

"The German, Irish, and English generally."

The little fellow, whom the inspector had been holding by the hand during this colloquy, now began to cry for his dinner, and the kind-hearted man started for a restaurant.

Spiders.

It is no uncommon thing to meet with instances of animal sagacity which go to show that animals are possessed of a sort of reasoning capacity which is greater than mere instinct. In a recent publication there is cited an instance of this kind. A small spider had been placed in the centre of a large spider's web some four feet above the ground. The large spider rushed from its hiding place under a leaf to attack the intruder, which ran up one of the ascending lines by which the web was secured to the foliage.

The big insect gained rapidly upon the little one; but the fugitive was equal to the emergency, for when barely an inch ahead of the other it cut with one of its hind legs the line behind itself, thus securing its own escape, the ferocious pursuer falling to the ground. The writer says: "It is not the habit of spiders to cut the slender thread below them when they are ascending to avoid threatened danger. As a rule spiders do not run from danger unless there is a hole close at hand—and a hole that is known to be unoccupied." From which it would seem that this little creature's action was the result of some kind of reasoning. Instinct led it to run away, but it must have been something more than instinct that led it to sever the line and cut off pursuit. The same writer says that spiders are cannibals, and that they are naturally pugnacious; but they do not fight for the sasisfaction of eating one another. If two spiders fight there is generally good reason for the attack and for the vigorous defense that follows.

"It is not generally known that after a certain time spiders become incapable of spinning a web from lack of material. The glutinous excretion the slender threads are spun from is not inexhaustible, therefore spiders cannot keep on constructing new snares when the old ones are destroyed. But they can avail themselves of the web-producing powers of their younger neighbors, and this they do without scruple. When a spider's web-constructing material has become exhausted and its last web has been destroyed, it sets out in search of another home; and unless it should chance to find one that is tenantless, a battle usually ensues which ends only with the retreat or death of the invader or defender."

History of the Alphabet.

How many of the millions that daily use the alphabet ever stop to think of its origin and long history? Isaac Taylor has recently written and published, in London, two stout volumes under the title "The Alphabet, an Account of the Origin and Development of Letters." By careful study of the learned essays and scientific investigations of the latest philologists, Taylor has set forth in language within easy comprehension the origin of the alphabet, showing that our own "Roman" letters may be followed back to their very beginning, some twenty or more centuries ago, as he asserts. We have no better letters, according to the account, than those of the fifteenth century. These were imitated from the beautiful manuscripts of the tenth and eleventh centuries, the lettering of these being derived from the Roman of the Augustan age. The Roman letters, in turn, are traced to those employed at Rome in the third century B. C., and these do not differ greatly from forms used in the earliest existing specimens of Latin writing, dating from the fifth century B. C. This primitive alphabet of Rome was derived from a local form of the Greek alphabet, in use about the sixth century B. C., and that was a variety of the earliest Greek alphabet belonging to the eighth, or even the ninth century B C. The Greeks got their letters from the Phœnicians, and theirs are clearly traceable in the most ancient-known form of the Semitic. The most ancient of books, a papyrus found at Thebes, and now preserved in the French National Library, supplies the earliest forms of the letters used in the Semitic alphabet. The Stone Tables of the Law could have been possible to the Jews only because of their possession of an alphabet, and thus the Bible and modern philological science unite in ascribing a common origin to the alphabet which is in daily use throughout the world. The nineteenth century B. C. is held by Taylor to be the approximate date of the origin of alphabetic writing, and from that time it grew by slow degrees, while from Egypt, the home of the Jews during their long captivity, the knowledge of the alphabet was carried in all directions where alphabets are now found. The Aryans are thought to have been the first to bring the primitive alphabet to perfection, and each letter and each sound may be traced, by Taylor's careful analysis, through all the changes that have marked the growth, progress, and, in some instances, the decay of different letters of various alphabets. It is an interesting fact that the oldest known "A B C" in existence is a child's alphabet, scratched on a little ink bottle of black ware, found in one of the oldest Greek settlements in Italy, attributed to the fifth century B C. From the common mother of many alphabets, the Phœnician, are descended the Greek and other European systems on the one side, including that which we use and have the greatest interest in; and on the other, the alphabets of Asia, from which have sprung those of the East, Syriac, Arabic, and Hebrew.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Another Royal Pensioner.

Prince Albert Victor of Wales has just entered upon his 21st year, so that it is possible that parliament may before long have to consider the question of a separate establishment for his royal highness. In such a case the legislature would be wholly unassisted by precedents directly in point. Never before in our history has the eldest son of a prince of Wales come of age during his father's lifetime and before his father's accession to the throne. Frederic, son of George II., who went nearest to doing so, was 20 years and a few months old when, in 1727, the latter became king. It would, however, be misleading to compare the status of Prince Albert Victor with that of his ancestor, who never set foot in England till a year and a half after he had succeded to the position of heir-apparent to the crown. Prince Frederic, indeed, received the garter in his 15th year and a peerage (with the title of the Duke of Edinburgh) in his 20th; but scarcely any other official cognizance was taken of his existence as an English prince. No eldest son of a prince of Wales, being such, has married; and there is only one instance of a marriage being contracted by the daughter of a prince of Wales Mutatis mutandis it is to be presumed that the case of the Princess Charlotte would have most weight with parliament in the event of its being applied to for a provision for Prince Albert Victor. It may be added that annuities have been granted more than once in the present reign to the children of a younger son of an English sovereign.—St. James' Gazette.

He who well and rightly considers his own doings is not likely to judge hardly concerning another.

The Bible on Business.

Buy the truth and sell it not.

He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it.

A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches.

But where shall wisdom be found? It cannot be gotten for gold.

The rich and poor meet together; the Lord is the maker of them all.

In all labor there is profit; but the talk of the lips tendeth only to penury.

He that loveth wine shall not be rich. Who hath woe? They that seek mixed wine.

The prosperity of fools shall destroy them; but whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely.

He becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand, but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.

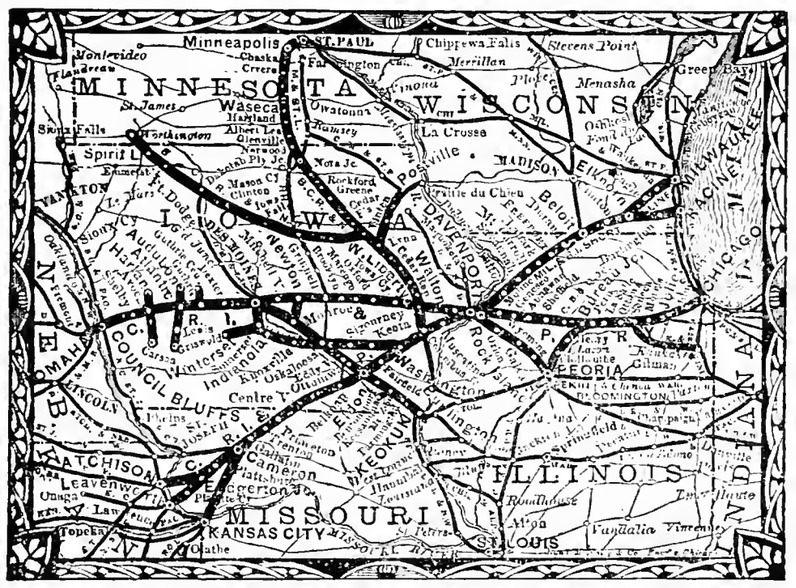
Happy is the man that findeth wisdom; for the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver.

There is that scattereth and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet but tendeth to poverty,

A perfect and just measure shalt thou have, that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.

Though he (the unjust man) heap up silver as the dust, and prepare raiment as the clay; he may prepare it, but the just shall put it on, and the innocent shall divide the silver.

Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in mete-yard, in weight or in measure, just balances, just weights, a just ephah (a dry measure) and a just hin (a liquid measure) shall ye have.



A Remarkable Steam Engine.

An English firm have recently completed a small, light compound engine, which, in point of weight, eclipses anything heretofore built. This engine is made of steel and phosphor-bronze; all parts are built as light as possible, the rods and shafting and all parts possible being bored out to reduce weight. At a speed of only 300 revolutions a minute they indicate over 20 horse power, and weigh but 105 pounds all told. This engine would give fully 30 horse power actual at a piston-speed of 500 feet a minute. The size is three and three quarters high pressure, seven and a half low pressure, and five stroke. That thirty horse power can be had from a proper utilization of steam and proper distribution of 105 pounds of metal is certainly most astonishing, especially so considering that the engine is compound. A ship of 2,500 tons displacement was almost unknown fifty years ago; today the transatlantic steamer, the highest class of the mercantile marine, has from 8,000 to 13,000 tons displacement, and engines of 5,000 to 10,000 one-horse power. Several of the transatlantic liners have shown a mean ocean speed of twenty miles an hour, and make the passage in less than seven days.

It is when our budding hopes are nipped beyond recovery by some rough wind, that we are the most disposed to picture to ourselves what flowers they might have borne if they had flourished.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE Minneapolis

ST. PAUL
Chippewa Falls
Sheens Point
Green Bay
MINNESOTA
WISCONSIN
Waseca
Owatonna
Menasha
La Crosse
MADISON
Rockford
Belvidere
MILWAUKEE
CHICAGO
IOWA
DAVENPORT
Muscatine
Wilton
Iowa City
Newton
Grinnell
Marshalltown
Nevada
Ames
Boone
Jefferson
Winterset
Indianola
Creston
Centerville
Ottumwa
Oskaloosa
Knoxville
Pella
Pella Jc.
Monroe
Grimes
Des Moines
Runnells
Colfax
Mingo
Newton
Monroe City
Clinton
Rockford
Greene
Cedar Lisbon
Lowden
Wilton Jc.
Durant
Bureau Jc.
Princeton
Mendota
Aurora
Geneva
Elgin
Harvard
Belvidere
Rockton
Beloit
Janesville
Milton Jc.
Whitewater
Elkhorn
Delavan
Darien
Lake Geneva
Burlington
Mt. Pleasant
Fairfield
Libertyville
Wauconda
Crystal Lake
Woodstock
Marengo
Belvidere
Rockford
Freeport
Dixon
Sterling
Morrison
Fulton
Clinton
Tipton
Wilton Jc.
Walcott
Davenport
Rock Island
Moline
Silvis
Colona
Geneseo
Cambridge
Kewanee
Galva
Wyoming

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

Patent—Scientfiic American.
Farm for sale—Samuel Wright.
Statallion for sale—W. Sheperdson.
Franco Chinese War—Thos. McNea.
Hamilton's Photo. Gallery—Jas. Hamilton.
Mother, Home and Heaven—D. K. McPherson.
Markdale Harness Emporium.—Thomas Mathews.

The Standard

MARKDALE FEB. 7, 1884.

Legal.

John Creasor, Esq., County solicitor has issued the following ciacular to assessors :—

I am instructed by the County Council of this County to call your attention to the provisions of the Assessment act, R. S. O., Cap. 180, Section 23, which is as follows:

"23. Except in the case of mineral lands hereinafter provided for, real and personal property shall be estimated at their ACTUAL CASH VALUE, as they would be apprsised in payment of a just debt from a solvent debtor."

And to the penalty on Assessors for making improper Assessments, contained in sec. 191-2-3; and further, I am instructed to inform you that any Assessor wilfully neglecting to assess in accordance with said section 23 subjects himself to be rigorously prosecuted according to law.

Personals.

Mr. Andrew Jones, blacksmith, has removed this week to Mono Mills.

It is reported that F. McRae, Esq., Reeve of Glenelg, is on a trip to Manitoba.

Our esteemed friend, A. G. Hunter, Esq., of Dundalk, called on us Wednesday.

Mr. John McNicoll and his bride left on Monday for Harrison Michigan, where they will reside.

Mr. John Lyons. Weights and Measures Inspector, returned last week from an extended tour through Muskoka.

Mr. Dunbar, late teacher of this place, stayed in town over Sunday on his way to the Normal School, Toronto.

Mr. Jas. Black, of Iowa. U. S., formerly of Glenelg, son of Mr. John Black first switchman at Markdale station, is visiting friends in this section, he gave us a call on Tuesday and speaks favorably of his new home. He will return in March.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

Quarterly services in the C. M. church on Sabbath last

Grand carnival in the skating rink here on Friday night.

The Presbyterians expect soon to have a resident minister among them.

Mr. Haig who purchased Mr. Doyle's mill has taken possession and begun operations.

Merchants find considerable diffiienlty in collecting, owing to the scarcity of money.

The Dundalk Band intend giving a concert in your aristocratic town before long. They should have a good house.

A tri-weekly mail is to be established between Dundalk, Badgeros, Shrigley and Maple Valley. Dr. Sproule has used his influence for the petitioners in this matter and we are pleased at the result.

Last Thursday morning we had a narrow escape from a most disastrous conflagration. Had the fire obtained a few moments more headway a whole block and adjoining buildings would have been consumed.

Euphrasia Council.

The members elect of the municipal council of the township of Euphrasia for the year 1884, being Thomas Gilray, Reeve; William Fawcett, Deputy Reeve; James Boyd, Wm. J. Black, and Henry Hard, Councillors.

Said members elect met in compliance with statute at the town-ship hall, on Jan. 21st, 1884, and having made and subscribed their declarations of qualification and of office, filed the same with the clerk, and took their seats at the council board.

Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

W. H. Dodson, on nomination of the Reeve, and J. L. Wilson, on behalf of the council, were appointed auditors and a by-law passed accordingly.

A By-law was passed appointing A. T. Buchanan assessor at a salary of $75.

The time for the collectors to return their rolls was extended.

The Treasurer was instructed to remit to the deputy returning officers the amounts hereinafter placed opposite to their names as payment for services rendered at last municipal election, viz:

James Struthers, $7.50; Nicholas Hewson $7.10; Nathaniel Curry, $7.10; W. H. Manarey, $6.70; James Yelland, $7; Thomas Ambercrombie, $7.

The Reeve and deputy reeve were appointed to enquire into the validity of the Treasurer's securities, in compliance with statute.

James Falles was appointed caretaker of the township hall.

The Clerk was ordered to return to the County Treasurer arrears of taxes against the E ½ of lot No. 7 in con. 5.

The Treasurer was ordered to pay the trustees of School Sections for the use of school houses used as polling stations at last municipal election, as follows:

Union School Section No. 4, $2; S S No. 14, $2; S S No. 15, $2; S S No. 9, $2, and to John Halliburt for the use of the Orange Hall, Kimberley, used also as a polling station, $2.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer as follows:

Robert Dunlop, clerk, services at last election, $20; Thomas Cooledge charged in error for statute labor, $3; Thomas Wicken, road work, $1; Rodge Bowser, road work $3.

The council adjourned until the first Friday in February nex:

R. Dunlop, Clerk.

Artemesia Council.

The newly elected Council of the Township of Artemesia, for the year 1884, met in the Town Hall, Flesherton, according to statute on that behalf on Monday, January 21st, 1884, and having made the necessary declaration of qualification and of office. they took their respective seats.

Members all present. Dr. Christoe in the chair.

Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Council proceeded to elect a new Deputy-Reeve

Bleakely, Pedlar, that Samuel Pedlar be Deputy-Reeve—Carried.

Accounts as followa were presented and read :—

A. R. Fawcett, printing Ballots, &c., $5.25; Jas. Sullivan, fitting and cleaning Town Hall pipes, $2.25; John Rutherford, election stationary and Collectors Rolls, $8.41; W. J. Bellamy, quarter salary, $27 50; do holding nomination and poll and 3, $12.50 Payment ordered.

By Law No. 357, appointing C. C. James and Henry Meldrum Auditors, was introduced and passed in usual way.

Blakely, Pedlar, that By-Law No. 357 be read a second time.—Carried.

Elliott, McArthur, that the Reeve issue order in favor of the Collectors for the sum of $25 each, when they shall have their respective rolls returned according to law.—Carried.

McArthur, Elliott, that Robert McGowen be refunded the sum of $24.60, being an overcharge of taxes on account of error in assessment for 1883.—Carried.

Pedlar, Bleakley, that Robert McGowan be refunded the sum of $24.60, being an overcharge of taxes on account of error in assessment for 1883, but that the Council charge $15 60 of this sum to School Section No. 12 Artemesia.—Lost.

Elliott, McArthur, that Mrs. Galbraith be refunded $4 66, paid of arrears of taxes on Lot No. 132 1st West, she being in destitute circumstances.—Carried.

Christoe, Bleakley, that Mrs. Morton, widow, be refunded $3 on her taxes of 1883. Carried.

McArthur, Elliott, that Wm. Walters be refunded 76 cents being error in assessment. Carried.

Mr. McArthur moved, seconded by Mr. Bleakley, that Donald McDonald be refunded $2. overcharge of statute labor on his non resident lot in Flesherville. Carried.

Mr. Elliott moved, seconded by Mr McArthur, that the Clerk request the Co. Treasurer to erase all taxes in his books against lot 26, con. 2, W D R the same having been paid to collector. Carried.

Mr. Pedlar moved, seconded by Mr. Bleakley, that the councillor for Ward No. 4. be and is hereby instructed to see to repairing and putting in a safe condition the bridge over the Beaver river at Eugenia.—Carried

Mr. McArthur moved, seconded by Mr. Bleakley, that a motion passed by this council to-day to the effect that Robert McGowan be refunded $24.60, be rescinded, the council having received information from the assessor that his assessment as the roll shows is correct.—Carried.

Mr. McArthur, moved, seconded by Mr. Bleakley, that the Clerk advertise for applications for an Assessor for 1884.—Carried.

Pay for this days' session and indigents monthly allowance was ordered.

W. J. BELLAMY, Clerk.

The American Agriculturist for February 1884.

Excels all previous issues of this old favorite periodical, now in its forty-fourth year. It contains 93 columns of original articles, from the ablest writers on rural topics, and nearly 100 original illustrations from leading artists. Among the 167 subjects treated are the following: A Prize Remodelled Barn; Wagon Brake; Poultry Yard Conveniences; A Western Farm House; Wooden Hinges: Prize Poultry Yard; Plant Boxes; Fernery Troughs and many other labor-saving devices. Among the best known writers are: Mr. Orange Judd, Mr. Robert B. Roosevelt, Prof. S. R Thompson, W. Z. Hutchison, Dr. D. D. Slade, Dr. Geo. Thurber, Prof. Geo. Hussman, and J. M. Stahl. "On the Road" is a full page of illustrated scenes and incidents of Western life, by David W. Judd. There are two full page spirited engravings namely: "Going for Cover" and "Old and New in Sheep Husbandry," with many other larger and timely and instructive illustrations for the farm, garden and Household. The American Agriculturist is the leading Agricultural Journal of the world, and should be at every fireside. Price, post paid $1.59. Single numbers 15 cents.

DR. LOW'S WORM SYRUP has removed tape worm from 15 to 30 feet in length. It also destroys all kinds of worm.

More Valuable than Ever.

We call our readers' attention to the value, usefulness and direct profit of supplying themselves this year with the American Agriculturist, the cheapest as well as the most valuable journal in the country. Every number contains one hundred columns of original reading matter, by the leading writers of the country, upon all topics connected with the farm, garden, or household, and nearly one hundred engravings, made specially for the American Agriculturist. The paper, now in its 43rd year, is unquestionably more valuable than ever before. Each number brings fresh evidence that no time or money is considered where the interest of the paper is at stake. Its house Plans and Improvements profusely illustrated, are worth more than any costly architectural works. Its persistent and fearless exposure of humbugs and swindling schemes, is of great value to the whole country, particularly the farming community In short it has something good and valuable for everybody. Owing to a special arrangement with the publishers we are enabled to offer the STANDARD and the American Agriculturist for one year and the engravings "Foes or Friends?" and "In the Meadow" for $2.10 (10 cents for packing and postage.

MARRIAGES.

Notices of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, twenty five cents.

STEWART—BEST.—In Artemesia, on the 23rd inst., by Rev. A. Wilson, Mr. Duncan Stewart, to Miss Sarah Best, all of Artemesia.

Market Reports.

MARKDALE.

Fall Wheat	$0 60	to	$1 00
Spring Wheat	0 40	to	1 00
Barley	42	to	60
Peas	60	to	66
Oat	25	to	27
Butter	15	to	17
Eggs	22	to	00
Potatoes	30	to	00
Hay	7 00	to	0 00
Pork	7 00	to	7 50
Flour	4 75	to	5 00

FLESHERTON.

Fall Wheat, $0.60 to $1.00; Spring, $0.40 to $1.00; Barley, 35c; Peas, 60c; Oats, 20c Butter, 17c; Eggs, 20c; Potatoes, 40 c; Hay, $7 .50 Pork, $7.00 to $7.25

TORONTO.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.06; Spring, $1.11 to $1.13; Barley, 62c to 69c; Oats, 37c to 38c Peas, 72c to 74c; Hogs, $7.59 to $8.00; Potatoes, per bus, 60c to $65c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 19c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

FARM FOR SALE.

To sell or rent Lot S ½ 14, Con. 9, Euphrasia, 8 miles from Markdale and 3 from Rocklyn, containing 100 acres, 70 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation, fit to run reaper and mower, and balance hardwood bush with sufficient cedar for fencing. Well watered with never failing spring only 10 rods from barn. Has a yonng orchard, house barn and stable. There is a new steam saw mill on next farm to it. Clear deed can be given. For further particulars apply on the premises to

SAMUEL WRIGHT.
Rocklyn P.O.

CLYDESDALE STALLION FOR SALE.

That splendid Clydesdale Stallion "Scottish Champion," from imported stock, and the property of Wm. Shepherdson, will be sold cheap. The horse stands 16½ hands high, is 5 years old, jet black in color and a sure foal getter. Any one wishing to get a bargain should take advantage of this offer. Stock taken in part payment. Also a few pure bred Cotswold Rams and a fine Berkshire Boar for sale. Address to the undersigned, Lot 23, Con. 11.

W. J. SHEPHERDSON,
Blantyre P.O.

MARKDALE

HARNESS EMPORIUM

ESTABLISHED 19 YEARS.

THOS. MATTHEWS, Proprietor

Nothing but good stock used and the best mechanics employed. A stock of Double and Single, Heavy and Light Harness always on hand. Also Whips, Trunks, Valises, Blankets, Robes, &c., always in stock.

HAMILTON'S

PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY

MARKDALE.

OVER THE STANDARD OFFICE.

Fine work executed in all the latest sizes and shapes, fully equal to city work. Special attention given to

FRAMING

A large stock of moulding to choose from.

Call and leave your measure for a picture.

Jas. Hamilton.

Franco - Chinese War.

Nothwithstanding the desolating war now raging in China it will not increase the price of Teas at the

Belfast House, Markdale

Having imported prior to the opening of hostilities, a sufficient quantity to supply 20,000 MEN for a period of 12 months. In other departments of the Grocery trade the BELFAST HOUSE has KILLED BY THOUSAND those who assume to transact business by purchasing of small dealers exorbitant rates of interest on long credit. Our imports of

PRESERVED MEATS, SALMON, LOBSTERS, SARDINES, HAMS, BACON, ASSORTED PICKELS and every articles in the grocery trade

LIQUORS

Of the best brands and quality. Wine for Sacramental purposes warranted pure. Brandies direct from the manufacturer and all other kinds of liquors.

Coffees, Teas and Tobaccoes cannot fail to give satisfaction. Oranges, Lemons, &c. Family Flour supplied at Lowest Rates.

THOS. McNEA.
BELFAST HOUSE, - MARKDALE
Feb. 6th, 1884.

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia. Age, year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

NOTICE.

All parties indebted to the undersigned are hereby requested to pay the same to A. Turner, Markdale. He is the only person in Markdale authorized to receive monies due me and to give receipts therefor.

175-77. T. S. SPROULE, M. D.

FOR SALE.

Dwelling House, shop, Suitable for grocery store, or other business, with dwelling above, and stable on the lot, on mill street, corner lot, good business site, apply to S. DAMUDE, Flesherton, or C. W. RUTLEDGE, Markdale.

LOGS WANTED.

The undersigned is prepared to buy all the Baswood, Burch Ash, Hemlock and Maple saw logs perfectly sound, to be delivered at Davis' Mill, Meaford Road, for which the highest price will be given in cash. Parties bringing custom logs can get them cut either on shares or by the thousand, satisfaction guaranteed as the proprietor has engaged a first class sawyer.

EDWARD DAVIS,
Proprietor.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12. Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.

Oct.16.1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 118, con 1, West T & S. R., Artemesia, containing 50 acres, more or less, all cleared and under cultivation. A good bank barn, and log dwelling house on the premises, also a thriving young orchard just commencing to bear, situated about 2¼ miles from the thriving village of Markdale. For Terms and particulars apply at this office or to

JOHN HAZARD.
Flesherton Station.

A. HILL,

Fashionable Tailor,

OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.

A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

NEW FIRM

The undersigned having purchased the butcher business from Mr. F. SARJEANT, beg to announce to the public that they are prepared to supply all who favor them with their patronage, with all kinds of meat, the best quality the country can afford. Hoping by fair dealing and close attention to business to merit a liberal patronage, we remain

Respectfully Yours,
SARJEANT & BURNSIDE.

Markdale, Jan. 30, '84.

PATENTS

MUNN & CO., of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, continue to take Solicitors for Patents, Caveats, Trade Marks, Copyrights, for the United States, Canada, England, France, Germany, etc. Hand Book about Patents sent free. Thirty-seven years' experience. Patents obtained through MUNN & CO. are noticed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, the largest, best, and most widely circulated scientific paper. $3.20 a year. Weekly. Splendid engravings and interesting information. Specimen copy of the Scientific American sent free. Address MUNN & CO., SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN Office, 261 Broadway, New York.

JOSEPH GIBSON

CONTRACTORS.

Contracts taken for all kinds of

BRICK AND STONE WORK,

Plain Ornamental Plastering.

Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at the STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.

Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-1y.

HAGYARD'S YELLOW OIL CURES RHEUMATISM

FREEMAN'S WORM POWDERS.

Are pleasant to take. Contain their own Purgative. Is a safe, sure, and effectual destroyer of worms in Children or Adults.

GEORGE WILSON,

Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED, from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,

MARKDALE.

M. BYRNES

PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above men cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-1y.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE

(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)

CHATSWORTH, Ont.

TUCK & McLEOD PROPRIETORS.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL,

PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms, Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larder well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostlers.

THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor.

MARKDALE HOUSE

MARKDALE, - - ONT.

MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. All orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill Owen Sound 122-3y

Medical.

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University, Viet. College,
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same.
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O.

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST.

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.

January 9th, 1883. 122-71.

THOS. CARTER M. D.

Physician Surgeon, &c.

Residence MARKDALE HOUSE.
MARKDALE.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT-Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.

ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-1y

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCERS, &c. &c.

OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in

MARKDALE:

Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.

Funds to lend on reasonable terms.

JOHN CREASOR, Q.C. DUNCAN MORRISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-1y

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.

Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.

Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.

N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124-1y

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.

159-3m

on't forget the Great Auction Sale at TRIMBLE & WRIGHT'S on Friday and Saturday.

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personally, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

Notices in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

Valentines at the Medical Hall.

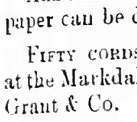
McKITTRICK'S foundry Orangeville, was burned this week.

ALL ARREARS must be paid before a paper can be discontinued.

FIFTY CORDS four-foot wood wanted at the Markdale Planing Factory, Geo. Grant & Co.

THE first division in the Ontario Legislature gave the Government a majority of 12.

W. H. ARROWSMITH has been appointed assessor for Glenelg, and John Whirby for Artemesia.



M. BYRNES, of the Revere hotel, has sold his business to a Mr. Cherry, of King township, who takes possession this week.

GRAND MASTER, Dr. Cameron and D. D. G. M. McMurchy of Owen Sound visited Markdale lodge C. O. O. F. on Monday evening last.

ALL PARTIES indebted to the undersigned are hereby requested to settle the same by cash or note without further notice. THOS. MATTHEWS.

ALL parties indebted to the under signed by note or book account are hereby notified to pay the same to Lucas & Co's. Bank without further notice and save costs. W F. Doll.

Second hand clocks in good order for sale at Brown's jewellery, Markdale, from $1 to $2 50. When bringing clocks for repairs, leave weights, ball and key at home, as it will save trouble.

FOR SALE.—A pair of Colts rising two and three years respectively, apply to Andrew Irving one mile East of Markdale T. & S. Road. 176 78.

MR. JOHN BLYTH, M.P.P. for South Grey, acquitted himself very creditably in his first effort in the Legislature. He was complimented by leading members on the opposite side for his ability as a speaker.

MR. JOHN HILL, painter, received a telegram on Thursday last, bearing the sad and sudden intelligence of the death of his father at Douglas, Ont., was clerk of Garafraxa Township. He died very suddenly of heart disease.

FAIR WARNING.—Those indebted to the undersigned by note or book account are hereby notified that if the same is not paid by the 15th February costs will be incurred. We are in need of money and must have it without fail. John McKenna.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best Salve in the world for cuts, bruises sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by A. Turner & Co.

NOTWITHSTANDING the inclemency of the weather during the winter, Rev. Mr. Casson, has been favored with large congregations. His deep thought, and extensive knowledge, together with comprehensive logical and fluent power of argument, and pleasing delivery, renders his sermons deeply interesting and exceeding instructive and profitable.

NEW SAW MILL.—Mr. J. Conner, of Enterprise, Co. Addington is erecting a mill on lot 5 con. 11 Euphrasia which will be ready for operation by the 1st of April next. Mr. Conner is a pushing business man and will fill a felt want in the above neighborhood. Those who have logs to sell will do well to get them to the mill while the good sleighing lasts, the highest prices paid in cash for good sound logs of all kinds, costom sawing also will be promptly attended to.

PROFESSOR CAMPBELL, the celebrated Phrenologist, (20 years practice) has taken rooms for professional examinations in practical Phrenology at the Markdale House, where he will stay for a few days only. Terms moderate. Lecture at Orange Hall Saturday Evening. See posters.

RECEIVED on Jan. 28th, a fine line of castors, pickle cruets, spoons, forks, knives &c.. from the Meridan Co., who have appointed me agent here for their goods. Can sell fine lines of nickle goods, tea desert and table spoons far below general prices for these goods elsewhare. Call and see goods and get prices. W. A. Brown, jeweller, Markdale.

LITERATURE.—This is truly an age of cheap literature, and much of the reading matter of the present age is anything but elevating morality. We however advertise in this issue a book entitled "Mother, Home and Heaven" which every family should possess, and which cannot but prove a most valuable acquisition to each household that procures a copy. Read carefully what eminent divines say about it in another column.

P. T. BARNUM, the celebrated showman is said to be worth between ten and fifteen million dollars; he has recently made his will. Two questions are very suggestive in the above, in the first place Mr. Barnum became wealthy chiefly by the liberal and judicious use of printers ink, or in other words, by advertising, and in the second place he has proved himself a wise man in making provision for the distribution of his riches while possessed of a strong mind and physical vigor, thereby saving the endless trouble and expense usually attending the settlement of the financial affairs of millionaries after their decease.

OFF TO FLORIDA.—W. H. Hunter, Esq., well known as a prominent wood merchant on the T. G. & B., has gone to Jacksonville, Florida, with his wife and family to spend the remaining winter months. Mr. H. has written an interesting letter to his friends giving a brief account of his trip to the sunny south. He sends a very curious memento of his journey enclosed in the letter. It is a single hair from a Kentuckian's beard that measured five feet, one and threequarter inches. This may seem incredible, but if you don't believe it you can see the hair now in the possession of some of the friends.—Economist.

2,000,000

SUBSCRIBERS

Want it for 1884. The AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST to-day is better than ever before. We have increased our corps of Editors and Artists, enlarged and added to our Departments until the Periodical is now the recognized leading Agricultural Journal of the world, presenting in every issue 100 Columns of Original Reading Matter from the ablest writers, and nearly 100 Original Illustrations It is to the interest of every one whose subscription has expired or who changing his place of residence, or moving West, has for the time being dropped out of our Great Army of Subscribers to

COME BACK

and accept of our unparalleled offer of the

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST

For 1884 A $4 Periodical.

A 600-PAGE DICTIONARY,
1000 ILLUSTRATIONS.

"FOES OR FRIENDS?"
MORRIS' 11x18 SUPERB PLATE ENGRAVINGS

"IN THE MEADOW"
Dupre's 12x17 Superb Plate Engraving.

—OR—

12 PIECES OF SHEET MUSIC,
In Place of the Dictionary,

ALL for $1.70
POST-PAID.

Active Canvassers Wanted.

Send two 2-cent stamps for a Sample Copy, and see what a Wonderful Paper it is now. Address

Orange Judd Co.

751 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

David W. Judd, PRESIDENT.

61ST THOUSAND--New Edition. Revised and Enlarged.

MOTHER, HOME AND HEAVEN

This Beautiful Home Book made More Beautiful.

Its unprecedented sale requiring repeated editions have so worn the plates as to unfit them for further use; and its increasing popularity and demand has induced the Publishers to re-set and print the entire work from new type and Electrotype plates.

We have thus improved the opportunity to revise, enlarge and beautify the work in the following particulars:

6 New Full-Page Illustrations.
51 New and Choice Contributions.
40 Quarto Pages Added, 414--454.
34 Additional Authors Introduced.
And a New Emblematic Presentation Page.

400 GEMS of PROSE and POETRY in the GRAND TOTAL

THE GRANDEST THOUGHTS AND UTTERANCES FROM THE BEST AND WISEST MINDS, UPON THE THREE DEAREST NAMES TO MORTALS GIVEN.

There is no condition of life it will not improve, no state of the soul it will not cheer and comfort.

A beautiful Monument to the Power and Glory of MOTHERHOOD, and
A voice for the Home, its peace and Sanctity,
A voice whispering in loving accents of Heaven.

WHAT IS HOME WITHOUT A MOTHER?
WHAT IS LIFE WITHOUT A HOME AND HOME INFLUENCES?
WHAT WILL OUR ETERNITY BE WITHOUT HEAVEN AND ITS HAPPINESS?

If you are a Parent get it, it will prove a faithful Counselor in Home affairs.

If you have a home get it, it will aid you in making Home Life more beautiful.

If you are bound for Heaven get it, it will cheer and help you on the way.

OPINIONS OF EMINENT DIVINES AND COLLEGE PRESIDENTS.

E. O. HAVEN, D. D., LL. D., Chandellor Syracuse University:—Could our own venerated "Mother" have seen this splendid book in our own sweet "Home" fifty years ago, she would have been scarcely less surprised and pleased than when she first entered "Heaven." The outside of this book is golden, the inside suitable to its setting. Some of the most precious things ever said are here. It is a book for the centre-table, and its sentiments are worthy to be cherished in every heart.

WILLIAM M. TAYLOR, D.D., Pastor of Broadway Tabernacle, New York City:—This book is as valuable in its contents as it is beautiful in its external appearance. There is something here for almost every experience, and the lessons for earth are all made to point toward the rewards of Heaven. The book, as a whole, is worthy of all acceptation, and is especially timely in an age when the glory of the home is frequently forgotten in the glitter of what is called society.

MORGAN DIX, D.D., Rector of Trinity Church, Broadway, New York City:—The intention of the compiler was laudable one; and so well has the design been carried out, that there are very few of the many selected pieces, which I should prefer to see omitted. As a proof of my approval of the work, I beg you to send another copy to my house, and I will pay on delivery.

JOHN HALL, D.D., Pastor Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City:—He who purifies the home and lightens it with the light of Heaven, blesses his own generation and the generations following. All the influences of the elegant volume are in this direction.

JOHN F. HURST, D.D., President of Drew Theological Seminary, New Jersey:—It is a book for the home; one that will do us a real service at home or when away from it, in suggesting right thoughts. The happy combination of prose and poetry, the grouping of authors of every evangelical confession in happy brotherhood, greatly enhace the value of the work, as they must enlarge the number of its friends.

GOLDEN OPINIONS OF THE RELIGIOUS AND SECULAR PRESS.

The New York Churchman says: "The holiest sentiments of the human heart find expression here. It cannot fail to exert a wholesome and blessed influence upon the reader. It appeals not only to the emotions, but also to the conscience. The sympathy that wins and the course that guides, are both to be found in these pages. One seldom meets with gathered extracts richer in beauty and wisdom, than those which compose this work."

The National Journal of Education, Boston, says: "We doubt if there is a book in the English language better adapted to elevate and refine the character of the reader than this."

The New York Daily Tribune, says: "It exhibits the brightest aspects of religion, and sets forth the precepts of morality in an attractive form. It combines the charms of literature with sound principles on the conduct of life, and is well suited for an interesting gift-book, whose influence can only tend to increase the number of virtuous and happy homes."

The Philadelphia Christian Standard and Home Journal says: "This is truly one of the most beautiful and interesting books of the season. It abounds in the most pure and precious sentiments, and will do good to all who read it. It is pre-eminently suitable for a holiday present. We wish the book could be put into every family in the land. Every page of it is full of the most touching and instructive thoughts."

The Cleveland Evangelical Messenger says: "Here certainly is a book fit for every house and home, a book which no one can read without benefit. It is truly a treasury of golden thoughts on a trinity of themes old as the world and precious as love."

Will call and show you my book at my earliest convenience.

Yours Respectfully,

D. K. McPHERSON.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,
CASKETS,
SHROUDS,
and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

WINES AND LIQUORS

CHOICE BRANDS.

Brandy in Hogsheads.
Scotch and Irish Whiskey in Qr. Casks.
Holland Gin in Qr. Casks.
Jamacia Rum in Qr. Casks.
Fine Old Port and Sherry in Qr. Casks.
Native Wine in Qr. Casks.
Five-year-old Rye Whiskey in Barrels.
White Wheat Whiskey in Barrel.
Rye and Malt Whiskey in Barrels.
Domestic Whiskey in Barrels.
Liquors in Cases.
Bottled Ale and Porter

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKERY,

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand.

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169-90.

THE KEY TO HEALTH.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS

Unlocks all the clogged avenues of the Bowels, Kidneys and Liver, carrying off gradually without weakening the system, all the impurities and foul humors of the secretions; at the same time Correcting Acidity of the Stomach, curing Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Headaches, Dizziness, Heartburn, Constipation, Dryness of the Skin, Dropsy, Dimness of Vision, Jaundice, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Fluttering of the Heart, Nervousness and General Debility; all these and many other similar Complaints yield to the happy influence of BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

Sample Bottles 10c; Regular size $1.

For sale by all dealers.

T. MILBURN & CO., Proprietors, Toronto

AGRICULTURAL

Preserve Some Forest.

BY B. W. PHIPPS.

There are opportunities enough, if we avail ourselves of them. All over the country, on many farms, there are still portions of the original forest. Great trees, under which Pontiac sat and warned his followers to check the advance of the white man as Hotspur might have checked that of his after tyrant—

When his blood was poor
Upon the naked beach at Ravenspug,"

Patches of forest which were forest when King Charles hid in the oak top,

"While far beneath the Roundhead rode And hummed a surly hymn,"

That interminable expanse of splendid woodland, that world sufficient storehouse of timber,—that ere while home of the springing deer, the greedy wolf, the stolid bear—is now no more. But here and there are the remains—one farmer has ten, another twenty—if he be rich he may sometimes have two hundred acres—of the ancient trees. Can we not preserve some of these portions? The axe is unceasingly weilded, and, if no check be given, in a few years settled Ontario will be destitute of forest. One farmer says, "I will cut down mine; I can buy fuel;" another says, "I also;" and yet, a little while and all will be gone

A few words may be said, but this short article cannot, at length, lay before you the reasons why it would be so valuable to preserve, throughout Ontario, on every farm, ten or fifteen acres, at least, of sturdy hardwood and of towering pine. You say, "Grass is getting in, the trees seem dying—those oaks are dead at the top; look at that maple, you can feel under its rotten roots—even these young trees—something seems killing them. Let me cut the rubbish down, and make a good pasture—I can mow it now and then, and when the roots rot out I can plough it and get good wheat, and good grass afterwards."

Or you may say, "the trees are all blowing down, I cannot keep them; the patch may lie till I am ready; it will give firewood, but when I have some time I shall clean it up and make a field of it. I would have kept it—I would have liked a patch of wood left on the farm, but the plaguy thing would blow down."

But it need not have become the prey of the grasses—it need not have blown down. Throughout the land there are yet many remains of strong and vigorous forest. Surround them, I pray you—each of you what he can afford, ten or twenty acres, while yet the land is forest ground, moist, rich and fresh—with a sturdy fence. Keep cattle utterly thereout—it will not be a year till you shall see the result. All over the earth will rise the lusty sapling, all round the edges trees will grow, themselves immovable by the tempest, themselves also the strong shelter of the inner wood. The grass will be kept from covering the ground by the shade of the saplings, by the heavy annual coat of falling leaves, and by the forest shade above them all. The object of keeping grass away is this. Trees receive their nourishment by a number of little mouths projecting from their roots to near the surface of the ground. A thick grass coats prevents this action. Secondly, where grass is, tree seeds cannot take root: but if you fence the forest ground, it will not be long till beech and maple, oak and elm will rise high, young and vigorous among the older trees, ready to replace them when you need their timber or their room, your forest, instead of a place of desolation, half grasses wild and innutritious, half dying wood, will be a mass of sturdy living healthy vegetation, beneficial to you yourself in many ways, to the country round about in many more.

Keep a portion of the forest bright and living on your farms. There at the heat of noon-day you can rest there, when for a few hours you can retire from the too absorbing pursuit of material advancement, you can repose without disturbance and contemplate without effort. Let the forest air breathe around you—it is not to be had in the house, it is not to be found in the field. There the great trees, stately of trunk and magnificent of branch, each humbly performing his purpose sent hither by his creator to do his alloted share, passing in due time into invisible forms, not one atom of them being lost, but re-appearing in fulness of youth and of beauty in other ways, shall teach you that you also have a future change which is not now apparent, but which shall surely be. Let the little creature of the forest—the woodcock bright of plumage, the rabbit, timorously glancing from the covert—pass by you without fear, their lives are in your hand, spare them, your life is in the hand of Another. Spare some of the forest—protect it, it will not be ungrateful—that belongs to the reptile alone, the nobler natures, forest and field, tree and herbage—all dumb and all insensible though they appear to be—yet have their gratitude, and many a means of showing it to the protecting hand. Do you reduce your farm to a desert of clay—spare some forest land—let the great trunks stand by the pastures edge; let the vast branches chant their murmurs in the summer evening air; your wife shall sit in their shade—a beautiful picture, her dark eyes glowing beneath her clustering hair; your children, bright and rosy play around. As they grow up they shall say "Others destroyed utterly the forest and dried up the fertility of the land which God had given them, our father did not so, those nodding oaks, that changeful surface of summer tinted foliage preserve his memory."

ENSILAGE.

Report of Prof. Brown on the Conduct of Experimental Silos at the Agricultural College.

Prof. Brown's recent experiments, at the Ontario Experimental Farm, in preserving various green fodders by means of portable or permanent silos, are amongst the most interesting, valuable, and carefully-conducted that have come under our notice, and will be studied with interest by shippers and breeders of cattle. In portable silos three experiments were made with ordinary air-tight barrels, two of which had square boxes fitted inside so as to secure more uniform packing than is possible in a simple barrel. These barrels were packed with green, succulent pasture fodder. A large tun was used for the fourth experiment, and filled with the green grasses and with green oat fodder. After eighty-six days' enclosure the tun was opened and the grass fodder found to be juicy and sound in fibre, though it had a strong, sour taste and smell. The grass in the small barrels was found to be similar. The green oat fodder preserved in the tun was, however, "sound, sweet, and as palable as that from the permanent silo." The permanent silo, the walls of which had been made smooth, was filled with 28 tons of green oat fodder, packed and covered with boards and earth. After 89 days, or on Dec. 31st, it was opened, and the ensilage was found to be, to quote Prof. Brown, "one body of sweet, well-colored oat-stalks, leaves, and heads.' Generally the material "has a brown but not dark tinge, very slightly spoiled by fermentation or other form of decay, and when taken out actually smells sweet and tastes slightly salty," but acquires a smell and taste on exposure. In addition to the successful issue of these experiments with the silo, Mr. Brown secured by carefully conducted thermometer tests the daily variations and degrees of heat prevailing in various parts of the silo during the fermentation in progress. The average of the whole mass after the first week was 68°, and of the central parts 87°. That this heat continued for three months did not destroy the fodder will no doubt be interesting to those who know how heat and moisture combined very quickly ruin grasses and grains on the open field.

Composition of Manure.

The value of manure depends not only upon the character of the feed allowed, but also upon the condition of the animal, the breed and the age. The principal substances of value in manure are nitrogen, phospheric acid and potash, the former substance being the most costly. In the artificial fertilizers, nitrogen exists in the shape of sulphate of ammonia, nitrate of soda, or as Peruvian guano, while ground dried blood, leather and other substances containing it are sometimes used. Potash is usually supplied in the form of the sulphate (kainit) or muriate, its quality depending upon the grade of the salt used for the purpose, while the phosphoric acid (usually combined with lime) is derived from bones and sometimes from guano deposits and marine formations. The Carolina phosphate beds have been largely instrumental in cheapening this article, while that from bones is usually associated with proportions of nitrogen.

Barnyard manure and artificial fertilizers differ only in form. The active ingredients of barnyard manure are the same as those in fertilizers, excepting that the manure contains small proportions of magnesia, soda, and a few other substances not always present in fertilizers, though easily added to them if necessary. Manure contains, however, a large quantity of carbon, which is considered by some a valuable fertilizer, but others contend that as plants appropriate carbon from the atmosphere through the agency of the leaves, such matter only adds to the bulk of the manure without improving the quality. When food is fed to animals it undergoes a chemical process in the body, which extracts the nutritive portions for sustenance, according to the digestive capacity of the animal, the residuum being voided as being no longer useful in that respect.

The amount of available fertilizing material in the manure thus voided, depends upon the character of the food, and its relative proportions of nitrogen, which is always costly. As growing animals require not only food for warmth, but for growth also, the manure from such is less in value than from animals that are matured. And as more food is required to assist the body against cold winter than for any other purpose, the warmth of the quarters is a factor in the matter also especially if it be correct that carbon is beneficial as a manure to the roots of plants.

Assuming that animals are well fed an average quality of food, then, for every 1,000 lbs. of manure from horses more than 700 pounds consists of water, while the remainder is estimated at about twelve pounds of phosphoric acid, twenty-eight pounds of potash and five pounds of ammonia. The manure from the cow contains nearly 860 pounds of water in every 1000, the amount of phosphoric acid in the remainder being about five pounds, potash ten pounds and nitrogen three pounds, the manure from the horse being double the value of that from the cow in all the substances except nitrogen, and even in nitrogen the horse manure is nearly twice as rich. Of the different kinds of manure, that from fowls and the human species is the richest in nitrogen, but this includes the urine, the solid portions being very deficient in that respect. Manure from the sheep is the richest in phosphoric acid. Urine is always rich in ammonia, (nitrogen,) with proportions of potash and small quantities of phosphoric acid. Considering this fact, too much importance cannot be given the saving of liquids, that from the human species being valued at half a cent per pound. The value of the solid portions of manure from a horse for one year is said to be about $10, while the value of the liquids from the same source for the same period is nearly the same.

Considering the high value of the liquids, which are always immediately available a plant food when applied to the soil, the manure must be protected from drenching rains and melting snows, for as part of the inert matter of the manure is changed by chemical action in the heap during the process of decomposition into soluble matter, it is always lost unless protected.—Philadelphia Record.

The Naval Forces.

The total force in the naval service afloat in the year 1822 was 43 475 officers and men, of whom 23,220, or 53 4 per cent. were between the ages of 25 and 35; 4,675, or 10·75 per cent., were between the ages of 35 and 45; and 840, or 1 93 per cent., were above 45 years of age. The total number of cases of disease and injury entered on the sick list was 49,929. The total number of beaths was 413, of which number 290 were due to disease, and 144 to injury.

London Truth gives currency to the rumor that Lord Lorne will be called up to the House of Lords by one of his father's minor titles shortly after the meeting of Parliament. The object of the Court politics appears to be his early appointment either as Viceroy of India or as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland.

FORTY YEARS AGO.

The Story of the Doctor of National Repute who turned out to be a Mail-Robber.

The Nutt murder trial recalls to mind the one other sensational case sent down from Fayette county for trial here—the peculiar and remarkable history and trial of Dr. John F. Bradee. The case was peculiar on account of the standing and reputation of the prisoner, and, like this one, remarkable by reason of the brilliant galaxy of legal talent engaged in the trial of the case. The death of Judge Wilson McCandless, June 30, 1882, removed the last one of those who took part in a case which attracted the attention of the whole country forty years ago, and has no parallel in the criminal jurisprudence of the state.

During the summer of 1840 the attention of the whole country, even in the midst of the exciting Harrison campaign, was drawn to a series of mail robberies committed on the through route between St Louis and New York. So cunningly were they perpetrated that the best detective force the government could bring to its aid were for months unable to fix even the state in which it occurred. The first clew gained was the failure to arrive at their destination of three pouches forwarded from Wheeling on Dec. 13, 1840, and due in New York on the 16th. Following the line eastward the officers directed by subsequent events fixed the point of the robberies at or near Uniontown. They next selected William Corman, a driver from Washington to Uniontown, as one of the robbers. By skilful manipulation he was induced to make a clean breast of the affair, and implicated as his confederate and principal in the crime Dr. John F. Bradee, a physician of acknowledged skill, whose practice was immense. Dr. Bradee was arrested on a cold night in January, 1840, by the sheriff of Fayette county, and taken to the commissioner's office. While there he asked who had informed upon him; receiving no reply, he muttered something about "Cor—Corwin—Corman," and added, "he is a d—d ordinary stage driver, anyhow." These few words wrought his conviction. All the efforts of counsel, all the explanatory evidence, all the jail interviews were powerless alongside of the admission of the doctor that the stage-driver, Corman, was his accuser. It was proven that Corman was unworthy of belief. Witnesses were produced who had heard Corman say he would penitentiary Bradee. Others who had seen Corman with large sums of money, and even one who had been offered a princely sum to aid in a conspiracy against the young Frenchman, but it was of no avail. The few words he had spoken in the court house of Fayette county stamped him as the confederate, if not the employe, of the "d—d ordinary stage-driver." His bail was fixed at the enormous sum of $120,000, and his friends, not yet recovered from the panic of 1837, were not able to command his release. Immediately following his arrest the people of his county divided in almost equal portions in favor of his guilt and innocence, and these relations they bore until their generation had passed away.

Dr. Bradee came to Uniontown when scarcely out of his teens; yet he proclaimed himself a physician with a Paris education, and his conduct and langaage bore out his statement. He was but very shortly established until his skill was acknowledged: and although he had not reached his 25th year, he soon became famous in all the regions where popular intelligence then travelled. His home was besieged by day and by night by the sick and afflicted, who came to him in all the regions lying between Portland, Me., and New Orleans. A larger portion of the stage passengers arriving at Uniontown then were invalids seeking the aid of this healer. He is best described in the speech of Judge McCandless, upon his behalf, when he said his house was the lazarette of the country. The sick and afflicted from the remote corners of the union were there at the pool of Bethesda, waiting for the moving of the waters. For years after his death it was recalled how out of the multitude of applying patients he singled those most needing his aid, and when no choice could be made he selected that one who had travelled farthest to seek his aid. It was developed at the trial—to show that he was not in such need of money as would lead to the crime charged against him—that he averaged from 100 to 200 patients per day, and that his income could not have been less than $250 per day if he saw fit to collect it.

The trial came on before Judge Baldwin and Judge Irwin, of the United States courts, at the May term of 1841. In attendance were partisans of both sides. The good women sent down their husbands to testify upon his behalf, and every physician of the county was on hand to press his conviction. The counsel were such as have not since nor before been employed in any cause in western Pennsylvania. Each one of them was a man whose forensic powers and legal acumen are traditions to the present day For the government appeared Cornelius Garragh, the then United States district attorney, A. W. Loomis, Samuel W. Black, J. W. Howell, and Moses Hampton. For his defense were John M. Austin, Richard Biddle, Walter Forward, Wilson McCandless, Samuel Austin, and W. P. Wells. It is pertinent here to state that at many rustic firesides has been told the story that the late Judge Hampton took a retainer upon both sides of the case. Such is not the case. Judge Hampton was the counsel for a man named Strayer, and the conviction of Bradee was the acquittal of Strayer, but the rustics of those days did not understand his relations to the case, and their descendants have perpetuated in a small measure their ignorance. Immediately after the arrest a search was made of Bradee's premises, and in his haymow was found a package of $10,000 in the scrip and wildcat money of that day. In his house were a great many newspapers, among them The Masonic Register, and in his water closet the remains of the mail bags were disclosed. Upon the trial these things were all accounted for in some way, and it was even developed upon the testimony of Gen. Gideon John, an ex-sheriff of Fayette county, and Hon. John A. Sangister, who had been a state senator, that Bradee could neither read nor write. It was essential to prove this, because of the papers found upon his premises. But both witnesses lost caste in the community for giving such testimony. It did not seem possible that the physician who possessed such skill in the art curative should be wanting in the rudiments of learning. The doctor produced witnesses from West Virginia, or the old state of Virginia, as it was then, and Ohio, who accounted for his monetary transactions. These could not overthrow the evidence of a St. Louis book-keeper who identified money found in his possession as bills he had forwarded by the mail which had left Wheeling Dec. 13, 1840. In the records of the trial figures one John Caspon, who was best known as the Yankee clock peddler. There was nothing favorable to the defense which he did not know, and, however unlikely his stories were, no deftly put queries of keen attorneys could entrap him. It mattered not what testimony could be adduced in his favor, there stood the testimony of William Corman that he had handed him mails from the foot of the stage, and had thrown them to the roadside at points agreed upon, and the stammering mention of Corman's name in the dingy office at Uniontown was a case which neither rhetoric nor suborned witnesses could overthrow. Nearly every lawyer on both sides addressed the jury, and Justice Baldwin charged them. Of the speeches the most part have been preserved, and they would put to shame much of the talk to juries in these days.

The jury in the case only deliberated two hours, when they returned a verdict of guilty upon three counts of the indictment. Dr. Bradee was sentenced to ten years' solitary confinement in the Western penitentiary. There are many people to this day who believe that he went west and became prosperous and wealthy, but the records of the institution to which he was consigned show that he died there at the age of 35, in 1846. When he reached the penitentiary it was found that he was wholly illiterate, as is shown in the following narrative. The spelling of the name changed between Uniontown and the penitentiary from Bradee to Braddee.

Officer Caskey, of the Western penitentiary, who has been for over fifty years in the institution, and who had special charge of Braddee, has distinct remembrance of him. "He was brought to the penitentiary," said he, "in June of 1841, and died nearly five years later. His term was only ten years. The doctor was a young man, only 29 years of age, six feet one inch tall, and very fine looking. He was a Frenchman and had a very fine appearance. I had him under my care, and he and I together planted those large lombardy trees in front of the penitentiary. In the description given of him on the books of the office he is marked educated, but I found from my intercourse with him that he was very illiterate. He learned his letters with me, and before he died was able to spell nicely in letters of three syllables. He was a famous practitioner, however, and stories of his wonderful cures spread after his conviction and sentence. He told me that the way he worked it was to hire a smart clerk in his drug store to do the writings and keep the books. He may have been learned in French. He was a married man and had six children. His health was good during his confinement until his wife married his former clerk; that sickened him and he died in six months. There was a party going on in the reception-room at the time of his death. Before his death he made a confession, implicating several prominent people of Uniontown in his guilt, but no attention was paid to it.

"I buried him just outside of the walk—now inside—and so marked the grave that I could tell if his body had been stolen. It was never disturbed. We never compelled him to work, but he did some little at making boys' shoes. He was skilful in medicine though, and was much trusted where he lived. One prisoner sent in from Uniontown became sick, and the disease refused to yield to the prison doctor's treatment. He begged to have Dr. Braddee prescribe for him, and we allowed it. He was well in one month. There are stories of his escape from the institution, but I saw him die and I buried him."—Pittsburgh Leader.

How Astor Became Rich.

A late writer, speaking of the late John Jacob Astor, thus speaks of the mode by which he acquired his great wealth: "It was neither furs nor teas that gave him his $20,000,000. When he arrived in New York it contained only 25,000 inhabitants. In 1809, when he began to have money to invest, the city had begun to double in population, and had advanced nearly a mile up the island. Astor foresaw the future growth, and bought all the land, and lots just beyond, on the verge of the city, that he could get. One little anecdote will show the wisdom of this proceeding. He sold a lot in the vicinity of Wall street, in 1810, for $8,000, which was supposed to be somewhat under its value. The purchaser, after the papers were signed, seemed to chuckle over his bargain. 'Why, Mr. Astor, said he, 'this lot will be worth $12,000.' 'Very true,' said Mr. Astor, 'but now you shall see what I will do with this money. With eight thousand dollars I will buy eighty lots above Canal street. By the time your lot is worth $12,000 my eighty lots will be worth $80,000'—which proved to be the fact. In the course of time the island was dotted all over with Astor lands, to such an extent that the whole income from his estate for fifty years could be invested in new houses, without buying any more land."

The Editor's Trousers.

An editor in Chicago recently ordered a pair of trousers from the tailor. On trying them on they proved to be several inches too long. It being late on Saturday night, the tailor's shop was closed, and the editor took the trousers to his wife and asked her to cut them off and hem them over. The good lady, whose dinner had, perhaps, disagreed with her, brusquely refused. The same result followed an application to the wife's sister and the eldest daughter. But before bedtime the wife, relenting, took the pants and, cutting off six inches from the legs, hemmed them up nicely and restored them to the closet. Half on hour later her daughter, taken with compunction for the unfilial conduct, took the trousers and, cutting off six inches, hemmed and replacep them. Finally, the sister-in-law felt the pangs of conscience, and she too performed an additional surgical operation on the garment. When the editor appeared at breakfast on Sunday the family thought a Highland chieftan had arrived.—The Century.

FUNNYGRAMS.

A London tourist met a young woman going to the kirk, and, as was not unusual, she was carrying her boots in her hand and trudging along barefoot. "My girl," said he, "is it customary for all the people in these parts to go barefoot?" "Partly they do," said the girl, "and partly they mind their own business."

During a disturbance in the gallery of a theatre the excited crowd were on the point of "throwing over" one of the principal offenders in the parquette beneath, regardless of consequences. Observing the extravagant tendency, an Irishman of utilitarian views arose in his seat and roared out: "Sa! Don't washte him! Kill a fiddler wid him."

A gentleman who observed Johnnie carefully taking the census of a company assembled in the parlor awaiting a call to supper inquired: "What is the matter Johnnie?" "Why," returned the urchin, with a troubled air, "here's nine of us, counting me, and mamma has gone and cut the two pies into quarters, and that only makes eight pieces."

A friend of mine, who dabbles considerably in stocks, walked into a well-known banking-house the other day and created considerable excitement by remarking: "I got a pretty good thing when I bought that last Winter. It was 34 then, and to-day it stands at 95.' "Well, I should say so," exclaimed the senior partner. "But what stock was it?" "It was a thermometer," cooly replied my friend.

Machine Guns in War.

The announcement that an American officer has received permission to inspect the British machine guns at Woolwich has called attention to their advantages and disadvantages in war. A writer in the Pall Mall Gazette thus criticises the employment of machine guns on the field of battle: "If the range is correct and the mark remains steady great execution will be done, but the slightest error will throw every bullet out, except at short range. Thus the French found that their attempts with the mitrailleuse, even at such short distance as 1,200 yards, were perfectly futile, and that their new weapon had not the slightest chance against the field artillery of that time. Since then the German field artillery has more than doubled its efficiency. Against their sharpnel, thrown with the present velocities, the mitrailleuse would have less chance than ever. The reply of the German army to the question, "What is the place of the machine gun in the field of battle?" has been, "It has no place, and whatever additional men and horses can be given should be devoted to increasing the field artillery." Accordingly, machine guns have not been largely increased in proportion to the other arms. Exactly the same course has been pursued by the French and by every other great continental power. None have adopted machine guns for the field; all have increased and developed their field artillery. When we remember that France, Germany, Austria, Turkey, Russia, have all lately passed through the furnace of war, and had most of their crochety dross burned out of them, their unanimous opinion ought surely to outweigh the theoretical ideas of a few partisans who still cling to the notion of finding the machine gun a weapon worthy the cost of the men and horses required for its use They admit that it cannot face field artillery at artillery ranges, that its projectiles have no power whatever against walls, or buildings, or earthworks, but they believe that, when two hostile bodies of infantry are closing the machine guns can be brought from cover, where they have remained until then, and will exercise a great influence over the result of the combat. No doubt they would in such a case, provided the infantry fight happened to be where they could go.

Earthquake Phenomena.

The causes of earthquakes have long been the subject of many conjectures. The numerous investigations of later years have contributed much to define their characters; and several data recently acquired tend further to make their mechanism clear. It is known that the shocks are by no means distributed at hap-hazard over the surface of the globe. The countries where the strata have preserved their original horizontal position, like the north of France, a part of Belgium, and the most of Russia, are privileged with tranquility. Violent commotions are manifested, particularly in regions that have suffered considerable mechanical accidents, and have acquired their last relief at a recent epoch, like the region of the Alps, Italy, and Sicily.

The tracts that are simultaneously disturbed by the same shock most frequently comprise acres of from 5 to 15 degrees, or from 300 to 1 500 kilometers. They rarely include a much more considerable fraction of the globe; although the celebrated catastrophe at Lisbon on the 1st of November, 1755, extended over some 17 or 18 degrees into Africa and the two Americas, or over a surface equal to about four times that of Europe.

The detailed examination of many earthquakes has enabled us to determine the centre of the shocks as well as the contours of the disturbed areas. From the manner in which the latter surfaces agree with the lines of pre-existing dislocations, several of the most distinguished geologists, including Mr. Dana, M. Suess, and Albert Heim, have considered the shocks in question as connected with the formation of chains of mountains, of which they may be a kind of continuation.

In fact the crust of the earth everywhere shows the enormous effects exercised by the latteral pressures that have been in operation at all epochs. The strata, bent over and over again many times through thousands of metres of thickness, as well as the great fractures that traverse them, are the eloquent witnesses of these mechanical actions. Notwithstanding the apparent tranquility now reigning on the surface of the globe, equilibrium does not exist in the earth, and commotions have not been arrested in its depths. The proof of this is found, not only in earthquakes, but also in the slow movements of the soil, of elevation and depression—a kind of warping, which has continued to manifest itself within historical times in all parts of the globe.—Popular Science Monthly for February,

There is no truth at all in the report that the prince of Wales has reently purchased a large tract of land near Kansas City.

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items from all Parts of the World.

CANADIAN.

The official Trade Report of Canada has been issued, It shows a favorable state of things. According to this, it seems that the total value of imports into the Dominion, in the year ending June 30, 1883, was $132,-234 022, the largest in the history of the country, exceeding the imports of the previous year by $12 $34 522 and that of 1874 — the largest previously recorded — by 14,040,440. The exports, on the other hand, have somewhat declined, being $68,-085 804, against $102,137,203 in 1883, a decrease of $4,051,399.

UNITED STATES.

It is proposed in the United States to distil spirits from glucose.

The receipts for license fees in Brooklyn during the past year amounted to $56,-259 62.

The sole surviving grandchild of Thomas Jefferson is to be pensioned with $250 a year.

Nellie Lincoln Rossitor a girl of 18, is at the head of the silk culture industry of the country. She lives at Philadelphia.

A bill has been introduced in the United States Congress providing for the construction of a second canal around Niagara Falls.

The Governor of Iowa, in his message to the Legislature, recommends prohibitory legislation and the submission of a woman suffrage resolution.

Two New Yorkers now in Florida claim to have discovered a chemical process that will preserve oranges for a year without impairing their flavor.

The cellars under Philadelphia's new city hall are the largest in America, their area being four and a half acres. The first cellar is thirteen feet deep, and the cellar under that is of like depth.

The will of Robert Gordon, of New York (colored), gives $25,000 for the establishment of a home for aged and indigent colored women, and $5,000 to the colored orphan asylum. Gordon was born a slave.

A native of Bombay, is at work in a glass factory at Clayton, Gloucester Co. N. J. He is a man of education and means, and is learning the art of glass-blowing in order to introduce it in his own country.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The boring of the Mersey tunnel has been completed.

The consumption of tea in Great Britain is about six pounds to one pound of coffee.

The Earl of Shaftesbury has accepted the Presidency of the International Peace Society.

Charles Russell, M. P., the English barrister, received over $16,000 in fees in one week recently.

There were 520 fewer failures in England and Wales in 1883 than in 1882, and a decrease in bills of sale of 29,913.

Mr. Tennyson has been in receipt of a pension of £200 a year from the Civil List Service Fund for thirty-nine years.

On the Queen's Park estate, Kensal Green, London, there are 2,400 dwelling-houses, but no public house. Intemperance is almost unknown.

The more substantial English farmers, hoping for a rise in prices, have not threshed their wheat. This keeps them short of cash and reacts unfavorably on trade.

The Salvation Army seems to get a great deal of money. It has lately had erected an immense hall at Brighton, England, capable of holding 3,000 people. By the general public the army is regarded as an unmitigated nuisance.

The Queen, who is at Osborne House, is now able to take short walks, but she cannot stand upon her feet longer than a few minutes at a time. Her health is otherwise unaffected.

The value of tea imported from British India in 1882 was put down at £192,000; in 1881-2 at £3,600,000. Any disturbance in China will react favorably on the Anglo-Indian market.

England has the foreign trade of China. Of the 440 foreign firms residing in the 19 open or treaty ports, in 1882, Great Britain was represented by 288, while the United States had only 23, and France 56. Of 4,894 foreign residents Great Britain claims 2,492, and the United States only 410.

It is announced that Queen Victoria intends to leave England for Darmstad, Germany, some time in March, to be present at the marriage of her grand-daughter to Prince Louis of Battenburgh, which takes place the middle of April.

The Queen is the authoress of a new book, "Life in the Highlands," which will appear in a few weeks. The book will contain several illustrations from drawings made by Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice. It is supposed that favorite, the late John Brown, will occupy a prominent place in its pages.

Cardinal Manning is a very abstemious man, and his appearance for years has been more that of a mummy than a well preserved man. It is said that he had reduced the amount of food to a minimum, and of late his physicians recommended him to more generous food. Since he has followed that advice his health is better.

It is now announced that Westminster Abbey, the great national Mausoleum of England, is so full of the remains of the notable men of the country, that no more distinguised dead men can be buried within its walls.

As an item of encouragement to sanitarians it is stated that the death roll in Liverpool, England, has been cut down, within the last twenty years from 37 to 27 per 100 of the population by buying up its delapidated tenements and building good healthy houses in their stead.

Napoleon married a widow, Madame de Maintenon ruled as a widow, Gibbon abased himself at the feet of a widow, Rosseau did the same, Disraeli married a widow, one of the greatest rulers of modern Europe was the widowed Empress Catharine, and the three most distinguished women in Europe at present—Queen Victoria, ex-Empress Eugenie, and ex Queen Isabella—are all widows.

Hot-Water Cure.

Years ago, the grandmothers of the present generation used to cure their children of colic by making them drink warm herb tea and applying hot draughts to their feet. Croup was relieved by dipping strips of flannel in hot water, wringing them out, and then enveloping the child's neck with them. The old-fashioned method of using hot water as a remedy has again become fashionable, and is spoken of as something new.

Hall's Journal of Health points out the diseases in which the old remedy will do good, and those wherein it may do harm:

Take, for example, the case of a person who has taken cold in the lungs.

The circulation of the blood in the small blood-vessels in that portion of the lungs affected becomes sluggish; in some cases it is quite suspended; the general circulation is impeded through failure of an important organ to do the work required of it, and the whole system suffers; the man is ill.

Now, if we know why the disease exists, by what unnatural condition it is kept up, the remedy suggests itself; as, if a water-pipe were frozen up, any child knows the the remedy is heat.

And here is just where water as warm as it can be comfortably borne will effect a cure in ordinary cases.

Let the patient go to bed. Put bottles of hot water to his feet, and cloths wet in hot water on his chest. Let him drink hot water as freely as he can with comfort; it matters little whether it is clear hot water, or herb tea, it is nevertheless hot water.

With this treatment we are employing hot water at its full value.

Its internal use tends to thaw out the blood-vessels, and its outward application quickens the circulation in the blood-vesaels near the surface; thus drawing on the deep-seated blood-vessels for supplies to keep up the activity, and thus the congestion is relieved and the patient is cured.

In dyspepsia hot water taken internally, under proper restrictions, is no doubt useful, since dyspepsia depends on a congested and deranged condition of the digestive organs.

But in consumption and other diseases attended by general debility it can only be detrimental.

When a person is feeble from disease not marked with acute inflammation, the hot-water treatment necessarily increases the debility,

Here a tonic treatment is applicable—a treatment that will increase and enrich the blood and supply the fuel required to keep the machinery of life in motion.

The hot-water treatment is useful in removing obstructions from the machinery, but only in systems where there is a surplus of vital power.

To recapitulate: The drinking of hot water at proper intervals and in proper quantities is useful in dyspepsia, constipation, torpid liver, congestion of the stomach, chronic diarrhœa, and in various affections of the kidneys and bladder; provided that there are not at the same time serious diseases of the lungs, with debility.

The water should be as hot as tea is usually made, that is, from 110° to 150°, and should be sipped, not taken rapidly. The quantity should be from half a pint to a pint.

It should be taken one to two hours after meals, and nothing should be eaten until at least one hour afterward. The evening draught should be just before going to bed.

The hot-water treatment should continue until a cure is effected; the time required will vary from one to six months.

Bedroom Ventilation.

If two persons are to occupy a bedroom during a night, let them step on weighing scales as they retire, and then again in the morning, and they will find their actual weight is at least a pound less in the morning. Frequently there will a loss of two or more pounds, and the average loss throughout the year will be more than one pound; that is, during the night there is a loss of a pound of matter, which has gone off from their bodies, partly through the lungs and partly through the pores of the skin. The escaped material is carbonic acid and decayed animal matter or poisonous animal exhalations. This is diffused through the air and in part absorbed by the bedclothes. If a single ounce of wood or cotton be burned in the room, it will so completely saturate the air with smoke that one can hardly breathe, though there can hardly be an ounce of foreign matter in the air. If an ounce be burned every half hour during the night, the air will be kept continually saturated with the smoke, unless there be an open door or window for it to escape. Now, the sixteen ounces of smoke thus formed is far less poisonous than the sixteen ounces of exhalation from the lungs and bodies of the two persons who have lost a pound in weight during the eight hours of sleeping; for while the dry smoke is mainly taken into the lungs, the damp odors from the body are absorbed into the lungs and into the pores of the whole body. Need more be said to show the importance of having bedrooms well ventilated, and thoroughly airing the sheets, coverlets and mattresses in the morning before packing them in the form of a newly-laid bed?

How Hot is Boiling Heat.

A subscriber asks: "At what degree is boiling heat?" He is informed that the degree of heat necessary to produce ebullition depends on the liquid, on the elevation af the place above the level of the sea, and the pressure of the atmosphere at the time. At the level of the sea, with a normal pressure of the air, or when the barometer indicates a pressure that sustains a column of mercury thirty-nine inches high, water containing the ordinary amount of air boils at 212 degrees by Fahrenheit's thermometer scale, 100 by the centigrade, and 80 by Reamur's. In a complete vacuum water boils at 98 degrees Fahrenheit. As the pressure of the air diminishes, the degree of heat necessary to cause water to boil becomes less. On the top of very high mountains water boils at so low a degree that it can not be employed for ordinary cooking purposes. In some deep mines 212 degrees of heat are not sufficient to cause it to boil. A greater degree of heat is required to make water boil that contains no air than that which does contain it. Liquids for the most part that are lighter than water boil at a lower temperature. Those that are heavier, as mercury, require a greater heat.

TRUSTWORTHY TESTIMONY.

Prominent English Opinions Upon an Important Subject of Great Value to Every Reader.

The day for pretenders has passed. Men are judged by what they can do and not by what they say they can do. The reading public of to-day is too discriminating to be long deceived by the spurious. If an article have merit it will become popular; if it is unworthy it will sink into oblivion. For years the people of England and America have put to the severest tests a compound regarding which most ambitious claims have been made. Under such ordeals as it has been subjected to, nearly every known preparation would have failed, but this one did not. In England and the United States to-day, it is the most widely known and popular of all public preparations. In verification of which note the following:

In September last, one of the English forresters of India returned to London, Eng., utterly broken down and debarred from further service by reason of what the examining physicians pronounced incurable kidney disoders and dropsy. He was comparatively a young man, and felt depressed over the situation. Incidentally learning, however, of the power of Warner's Safe Cure, which has attracted so much attention of late, he began its use. Within three months he was thoroughly restored to health, passed medical examination as a sound man and is to-day discharging his duties as well as ever in the trying climate of India!

J. D. Henry, Esq., a near neighbor of the late Thomas Carlyle, Chelsea, S. W. London, Eng., became very much emaciated from long continued kidney and liver disorders, the treatment he had sought from the vast medical authorities working only temporary results. He then began the use of Warner's Safe Cure, and on May 15th last, declared "I am now feeling physically a new creature. A friend of mine to whom I recommended the Safe Cure for kidney, liver and various diseases, also speaks of it in the highest terms."

R. C. Sowerby, Helensburg, N. B., was obliged to relinquish his professional duties because of a severe kidney and liver complaint. After using a dozen bottles of Warner's Safe Cure he says: "I am to-day better than I have been for twenty years and I cheerfully recommend the Safe Cure to all who are suffering from these diseases."

Mr. Wm. Jones, 16 Wellington street, Camborne, Eng., says that he was thoroughly treated in St. Bartholomew's hospital, London, Eng., for urinary disorders and weakness. He used Warner's Safe Cure and he says: "I am like a new man." It cured him of indigestion, troubles of the bowels, excessive urination and nervous prostration. He adds: "I was taking various medicines for over two years from the best doctors, and all in vain, but after taking Warner's Safe Cure for only four weeks, I was brought from death to life."

Mrs. E. Game, 125 Broad street, London, W. Eng., suffered for years from female weakness, skin eruptions and impure blood, but after using Warner's Safe Cure, she says: 'My health is better now than it has been for years."

H. F. West. Esq., 16 Burton Crescent, W. C., London, from his own experience "strongly recommends Warner's Safe Cure to all persons suffering from kidney and liver complaints, as the best remedy known.

Mr. Henry Maxted, 1 Pennsbury Private Road, Wadsworth Road, London, Eng., was cured by Warner's Safe Cure of enlarged liver which produced numbness in his left leg, with a dead heavy feeling and dizziness on the right side of his head. "I have recommended it," he says, "to several of my friends most of whom have derived great benefit from it."

Mr. W. Clarkson, Hartington, Villas, Spital, Chesterfield, Eng., used Warner's Safe Cure for liver complaint, dyspepsia, flatulence, vomiting of bile, and mental depression. January 15, 1883, he writes: After using the eighth bottle I feel better than for many years. It is a valuable medicine.

Mr. J. Hiscock, station master, Taff Vale railway, Navigation station, was cured of abscess of the kidney, calculus or stone, discharge of pus, etc., by thirteen bottles of Warner's Safe Cure. "I had long and faithfully tried some of the ablest medical men in South Wales in vain, one of them remarking that medical science has failed to find a remedy for confirmed kidney disease. The Safe Cure dissolved and brought away about two ounces of stone. I can never praise the Safe Cure too highly."

Mr. Robert Patten, New Delaval, Eng., was much overcome by severe inflammation of the bladder. "I had to urinate every five or ten minutes with great pain and suffering. My water was full of matter and blood. Both kidneys and liver were affected, and in addition I had a bad cough and heart trouble, (all presumably the secondary effect of the kidney and bladder disorder.) He says that after curing his bladder, kidney and liver trouble by Warner's Safe Cure, his "cough and palpitation are quite gone."

William Simpson, Esq., Daughty Mill, Kirkcaldy, N. B., suffered for years from Bright's disease of the kidneys and consequent dropsy, His body was dreadfully swollen. His appetite was fickle, he was full of rheumatic pains, his urine burned in passing and was full of mucous and brick dust sediment; his pulse was weak, his heart was irregular in its action, his breathing was very much impaired, in short he had all the painful symptoms of that dreadful disorder. He spent 17 weeks in the Royal Infirmary, of Edinburgh, under the skill of the best physicians who, having exhausted all agencies at their command, discharged him "as incurable." He says: "I passed water every hour, day and night, having great pain while doing so. It was nearly white as milk, with albumen, and when it stood for an hour, the deposit was a quarter of an inch thick in the bottom of the vessel." When in this desperate condition, he began to use Warner's Safe Cure—the only known specific for Bright's disease of the kidneys—"I have used twelve bottles," he says, and his health is so restored that he adds: "I bless the day when I read that Bright's disease was curable and for so little cost."

The following persons of quality in London and other parts of England, are a few of the thousands who have used and commended Warner's Safe Cure, the great specific for kidney, liver, urinary, female and Bright's diseases:

Hon. Freeman H. Morse, 8 Park Villas East, Richmond.

Captain F. L Norton, Glingall Villa, Lee Road, Blackheath, Kent.

Hon. S. B. Packard, 14 Alexandra Drive, Liverpool.

Hon. A. D. Shaw, United States Consul, Manchester.

The Rev. C. G. Squirrel, Stretton-under-Fosse, Rugby.

Such testimonials from such unquestionable sources prove the value of this remedy, which is sold in every drug store, beyond the shadow of a doubt. They prove that it is the greatest of all modern medicines for these terrible kidney and liver diseases. What it has done it will unquestionably do for others, and as such it commends itself most warmly to public confidence.

Good Humor on the Health.

DIET.

Diet, quiet, and a merry heart are worth more than the medicines of the best physicians, and save their costly visits. Dieting is not supposed to mean geing without eating, and every sensible person can very soon find what kind of food best agrees with them. Persons whose digestive organs are not of the strongest, should never indulge in the use of fresh pork—I say fresh pork, as good salt pork can be cooked in such a way as to be easily digested, even by an invalid. It should be broiled and taken often from the fire. and rinsed in cold water, which takes off the grease; it will then become brittle, and is sometimes craved and enjoyed by many persons in sickness. Eggs, with milk, cream and fresh-made butter, mutton, lamb, fish of some kinds, poultry and game of all kinds are generally considered digestible, as also many kinds of vegetables. Exercise in the open air aids greatly to assist nature in the work of assimilating our food to properly nourish the system. Among many persons too much tea is drank. Tea is a strong stimulant to the nerves, and excites to action, and because they can do a great amount of work under the stimulating effects of a cup of tea, they resort to it, little dreaming that in this way, after a time, the machinery of the human system would wear out. Beef tea contributes to make muscle and strengthen the body when in need of drink. Nature is a good physician if we would only trust her more.

QUIET.

In regard to quiet I need say very little. Let each one consult his or her tastes or desires in that respect.

A MERRY HEART.

Good humor and the power to look on the favorable side of things are the best aids to health. Laugh and grow fat! Since the days of Solomon it has been so considered. "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine; but a broken heart drieth up the bones."—Proverbs. Sterne tells us that every time one laughs he adds something to his life. An eccentric philosopher of the last century, used to say that he liked not only to laugh himself, but to hear laughter. Laughter is good for the health; it is provocative to the appetite, and a friend to digestion.

An old physician said that the arrival of a merry one in the house, was better than twenty asses laden with drugs. Some people are forever looking at things, so as to unfortunately throw a dark shadow over them, and making the whole face of nature gloomy and ugly. It would be a blessed thing for such persons if their vision could be altered by the aid of spectacles.

"Do you preach without notes?" casually asked a new minister from the East, of an old preacher in an Arkansas conference. "Preach without notes?" echoed the brother, "I should say I did. Why, my brother, in the Lord's name, I've scarcely seen a greenback in six months!" The subject was dropped.

Bad temper often proceeds from those painful disorders to which women are subject. In female complaints Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" is a certain cure. By all druggists.

I was never less alone than when by myself.

Young or middle aged men suffering from nervous debility, loss of memory, premature old age, as the result of bad habits, should send three stamps for Part VII of Dime Ssries pamphlets. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

There is no use in sweeping a chamber if all the dust come out of the broom.

If you feel dull, drowsy, debilitated, have sallow color of skin, or yellowish brown spots on face or body, frequent headache or dizziness, bad taste in mouth, internal heat or chills alternated with hot flushes, low spirits and gloomy forebodings, irregular appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from "torpid liver," or "biliousness." In many cases of "liver complaint" only part of the symptoms are experienced. As a remedy for all such cases Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has no equal, as it effects perfect and radical cures. At all drug stores.

In months of sun so live that in months of rain you shall be happy.

Triangle Package Dyes. The genuine are in three cornered packages to distinguish them from the old fashioned common colors in square envelopes 30 colors. Perfect in all their shades Satisfaction guaranteed. Price 10c. For sale by all druggists.

Is virtue a thing remote? I wish to be virtuous, and lo! virtue is at hand.

PECTORIA! Pectoria! Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per Bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria, all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

Learn as if you were to live forever; live as if you were to die to-morrow.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto, Canada.

"I would like to get this young man on the stage," said Mrs. De Splurge, presenting her son to a theatrical manager, who was wearied of applicants for histrionic honors. "Very sorry, madam, but the stage has just gone by; however, there's a horse-car coming around the corner, and you can put the lad on it, presently."

CLEAN YOUR BOILERS

Britannia Scale Purger Saves Fuel, saves Repairs, obviates Danger.
Glass Lubricators Save Oil.
Tube Cleaners Save the Tubes.
Belt Fasteners Save your Belts.

For Sale by COPLAND & McLAREN, Cor. Wellington & Grey Nun Sts., Montreal.

BOOKS FREE!

Send five cents and get a sample copy of TRUTH, the best 28-page Weekly Magazine published. See the big list of books given FREE to each yearly subscriber and club raiser. S. FRANK WILSON, 33 & 35 Adelaide Street, West, Toronto, Canada.

HE THAT SOWETH

Wm. Evans' Seeds,

shall reap in abundance. Ask your merchant for Evans' seeds and if he does not keep them, send for catalogue.

WILLIAM EVANS,
Seedsman, Montreal.—Established, 1855.

BEAVER S. S. LINE

WEEKLY BETWEEN
Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool,
CALLING AT
QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST
For lowest rates and all particulars apply to
H. MURRAY, BEAVER LINE, Montreal, Que.

THE LILY

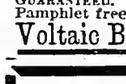
is a perfect gem, equal to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured by
THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.
78 YORK STREET TORONTO.

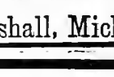
F. E. DIXON & CO

Manufacturers of Star Rivet
Leather Belting!
70 King Street, East, Toronto.
Large double Driving Belts a specialty. Send for Price Lists and Discounts.

ELM CITY HARNESS OIL!

BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.
Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddlers for it.





F. F. DALLEY & CO., Hamilton, Ont.,
Sole Agents for the Dominion

100 BEAUTIFUL SONGS 15c.

A new collection, embracing a number of the most popular songs of the day. Among them are, We Never Speak as we Pass By;—Over the Garden Wall,—Kerry Dance,—Warrior Bold,—Blue Alsatian Mountains,—Only a Blossom from her Grave,—Three Old Maids of Lee,—Flirting in the Starlight,—Grandmother's Old Easy Chair,—Don't Drink my Boy To-night, and 90 others, comprising Home songs, Comic Songs, Sentimental songs, Children's songs, etc. All are printed on nice paper, and are bound in a book with colored cover. Remember, we send the entire collection of 100 Songs for only 15c., three books for 30c., 1 doz., $1; 1c. or 3c. stamps taken.

J. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

30 DAYS' TRIAL

(BEFORE.)
DR. DYE'S

(AFTER.)

ELECTRO-VOLTAIC BELT and other ELECTRIC APPLIANCES are sent on 30 Days' Trial TO MEN ONLY, YOUNG OR OLD, who are suffering from NERVOUS DEBILITY, LOST VITALITY, WASTING WEAKNESSES, and all those diseases of a PERSONAL NATURE, resulting from ABUSES and OTHER CAUSES. Speedy relief and complete restoration to HEALTH, VIGOR and MANHOOD GUARANTEED. Send at once for Illustrated Pamphlet free. Address
Voltaic Belt Co., Marshall, Mich.

$11.90 —FOR— 35 Cts.

Extraordinary Bargain!

On receipt of only 35c we will mail, postpaid, 34 pieces comprising 48 pages of full size sheet music, bound together in one volume. Names of Vocal pieces:—All on account of Eliza; A Warrior Bold; Tee Country Lad; Nancy Lee; Chorus of Charity Girls; Drummer's Song; The Judge's Song; The Love-Sick Boy; Whoa Emma; Two Bad Men; Man in the Moon; Johnny Morgan; The Gleaners: Torpedo and the Whale; I Saw Her in the Violet Time; Five O'Clock in the Morning; My Love She's but a Lassie Yet; Adieu, Dear Home; Dame Babble; and 15 pieces of Instrumental Music, comprising new and popular dance music, selections from different Operas, Marches, &c,. &c. All the above and our handsome new Chromo Lithograph in colors of the Lord's Prayer and 10 Commandments, sent post-paid for 35c. As a holiday offer we will also send free 10 Christmas Cares, 50 money making receipts and a pack of Age Cards. Order Quick. You get all the above for 35c. or 5 lots for $1.25; 1 doz. for $2.00. Cut this out and return with order.

JAS. LEE & CO Montreal, P. Q.

THE SPLENDID STEAMERS
—OF THE—
WHITE STAR LINE

Are all of them without exception among the Largest and Fastest of Ocean Steamers. They were constructed with special reference to the conveyance of passengers, and for Safety Comfort or Speed, are unexcelled. They are specially noted for the regularity of their rapid passages in all weather. The steerage accomodations are of the highest order, the ventilation perfect; and every provision has been made for the comfort and protection of the passengers. In addition to the total and absolute separation of the single men and women, (except on deck, the married compartment has been so remodelled and arranged that every married couple or family has a little private room to itself. For particulars apply to the company's agents at all towns in Ontario, or to T. W. JONES, General Agent, 23 York street Toronto.

FUN AND MYSTERY

ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS

Have you seen it The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks, Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following: Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards:" 1 Set Colored Chromo Cards; the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "15" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music, 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.

ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail postpaid. Two packages for FIFTY CENTS five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

T. C. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NORTH.			GOING SOUTH
Read Down.				Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	TORONTO	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	CARDWELL JUNC.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	ORANGEVILLE...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	MOUNT FOREST..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	TEESWATER	5 00	2 45
11 50	0	FLESHERTON	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	MARKDALE,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	OWEN SOUND....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, Gen. Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE.

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

A SPECIALTY.

SAY!

If you want to hire a good livery rig, go to Benson.

---

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
181-75 Toronto, Ont.

EUGENIA

Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made extensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted

69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

FIRST CLASS

OAT MEAL

for sale at

J. W. FORD'S

FLOUR MILL.

$5 per Barrel.

How to Stop a Paper.

"You have an undoubted right to stop a newspaper when you feel disposed, upon the payment of all arrearages. Do not hesitate to do so on account of "tenderness" for the editor. Don't you suppose he would stop buying sugar of you, or meat, clothing, or dry-goods, etc., if he thought he was not getting his money's worth, and why should you not exercise the same privilege with him? And when you discontinue a paper, do so manfully Don't be so spiteful as to throw it back to the postmaster with a contemptous "I don't want it any longer!' and have "Refused" written on the margin, and have the paper returned to the editor. No gentleman ever stopped it in that way, no matter if his head was covered with grey hairs that should be honorable. If you do not longer wish to receive a newspaper, write a note to the editor like a man, saying so—and be sure that arrearages are paid. This is the way to stop a newspaper.

NEVER GIVE UP.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease; and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Turner & Co. 6

A WRONG OPINION.

Many a dollar is paid for prescriptions for some disease that never troubled the patient, and when the sole difficulty was worms, which a few of Freeman's Worm Powders would remove. These Powders are pleasant, safe, and sure, contain their own cathartic, and are adapted for children or adults.

LARDINE MACHINE OIL

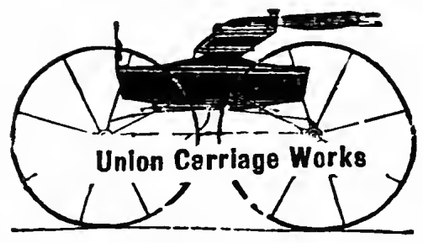
Is Manufactured Solely by McCall Bro's. & Co. Toronto, and is the only popular Machine Oil to-day in use by all mill men and farmers, Try Lardine.

FREEMANS WORM POWDERS require no other purgative. They are safe and sure to remove all varieties of Worms.

BAD DRAINAGE.

There is nothing more productive of disease in a neighborhood than bad drainage. Open the culverts and the sluiceways and purify the locality. The obstructions in the human system may be remedied in a similar manner by Burdock Blood Bitters, which opens all the outlets of disease through the Bowels, Liver, and Kidneys.

The bachelors ball at Shelburne last week was a grand success.



KRAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat or acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

NATIONAL PILLS acts promptly upon the Liver, regulate the Bowels and as a purgative are mild and thorough

A QUERY ANSWERED.

People often ask when is the best time to take a blood purifier? We answer, the best time is now. Burdock Blood Bitters does its work of purifying, regulating, and toning the system at all times and all seasons. Purity in all thing is always in order when required.

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from

FIRST CLASS MATERIAL

In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with

English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.

All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.

GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.

Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside

D. J. SHANAHAN,
Proprietor

Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

Mill Street, - Markdale

C. P. R. CAR SHOPS.

New Buildings just Completed at Winnipeg—the first Car ever made in Manitoba.

Winnipeg, Jan. 21.—The Canadian Pacific railway car shops, the construction of which was commenced three months ago, are now completed. They consist of an erection shop and a two-story work shop for machinery, etc. The new buildings are heated throughout with steam. They are for the repairing of cars. The erecting shop is a one story shed 200x95 feet, and contains three tracks, capable of accommodating three coaches each. Here the injured coaches are painted and their wounds dressed. There are facilties for employing 30 or 40 carpenters, and as many painters. There are at present eight coaches undergoing repairs. The ground flat of the two story building will be devoted to manufacturing wood work and machinery. It will employ some 18 or 20 men, and contain 14 machines. Up-stairs is the patern and cabinet shops. Here there will be seven wood working machines. In the southeaster corner is the upholstering department, partitioned off from the rest of the shop. About 20 men will be employed on this flat. The greater part of the machinery has been obtained from Cant, Gourlay & Co., Galt, Ont, the remainder coming from Tay & Co., Cincinatti.

A new car is being built here for Superintendent Egan. This will be the official car, and is the first car ever made in Manitoba. When completed it will bid fair to rival the productions of the older makers. It is being made, for the most part, by hand, and will be about the most costly car on the road. It is made with oak sills, the body being of hard pine, with panels of whitewood and ash. It is lined with paper inside and out, and will be heated with a searle heater. There will be no regular sleeping berth, a convertible couch being substituted. The whole will be upholstered in a crimson plush.

A GREAT DISCOVERY

That is daily bringing joy to the homes of thousands by saving many of their dear ones from an early grave. Truly is Dr. King's King's New Discovery for consumption, coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, hay fever, loss of voice, tickling in the throat, pain in side, and chest, any disease of the throat and lungs, a positive cure guaranteed. Trial bottles free at Turner & Co's. drug store. Large size $1. 6

A new mail route is proposed from Dundalk to Badjeros via Shrigley.

WHAT IS LARDINE.

Ask any farmer, thresher or saw mill man, or in fact any man who runs machinery of any kind and he will tell you that it is the only machine Oil which will wear equal to Castor Oil, and won't gum or clog your machinery. For sale at Haskett Bro's, Markdale. 176-215

"But, Sylvia," said Hattie, "if you climb that fence Mr. Tawmus, who is over there, will see your stockings," And Silvia replied: "I thought of that."—Boston Post.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

An unsuccessful effort was made at the last meeting of Dufferin County Council to hold its next meeting in Shelburne.

John R. Vert, Hamilton, says: "McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia and Indigestion is cheap at fifty times the price asked for it. I am a commercial man, and travel continually, and would no more think of leaving home without a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure in my valise than I would of leaving my team at home and going on foot." Free trial bottle at Hill Bros. general store. Regular size, fifty cents and one dollar.

An effort in being made to have a cheese factory established near Fairmount, Euphrasia, with good prospects of success.

ANOTHER WITNESS.

A. Chard, of sterling, testifies to the efficacy of Haggard's Yellow Oil, which he used for a badly injured knee joint. It is the great household remedy for inflamation, pain, soarness, lameness, etc., and is used both eternally and externally with infaliable success.

"Two hundered and twenty seven bills were introduced into Congress the first day's session." "Just think of it!" remarked Mrs. Simple; "isn't it redieulous? These Congressmen get salaries big enough. I should think, to pay as they go. Two hundred and twenty-seven bills! For my part, I think it's positively scandalous."—Boston Transcript.

A GOOD INTRODUCTION.

J. Kennedy, a merchant in Dixie, about three years ago introduced Haggard' Pectoral Balsam to his customers by trying it in his own family for coughs and colds. Being pleased with results, large sales followed, and it is now the favorite remedy in the neighborhood.

Robt. S. Rae.

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

—IN—

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c.

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold as low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats. Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 20. MARKDALE, ONT., FEB. 14, 1884. No. 179

The Markdale Standard

Is issued every Thursday, at the office, Mill Street, Markdale.

Terms—$1 per year in advance; $1.25 if not paid within three months.

Professional and business cards one inch space, 4 under, per year, $4.

	1 YR.	6 MO.	3 MO.
Whole column	$50 00	$27 50	$15 00
Half column	27 00	15 00	10 00
Quarter column	15 00	10 00	6 00
Two inch space	7 00	4 00
Three inch space	10 00	5 00

Casual advertisements 8 cents per line first insertion, 3 cents per line each subsequent insertion. Nonpareil measure.

Editorial notices, or notices in local column 10 cents per line first insertion 5 cents each subsequents insertion.

Strayamounds &c., advertised 3 weeks for $1, the advertisement not to exceed twelve lines.

No paper discontinued until all arrears are paid except at the option of the publisher.

JOB PRINTING.

THE STANDARD office has a splendid equipment of poster as well as fine job type. Special attention to orders by mail. Orders filled with dispatch.

C. W. RUTLEDGE
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,
MARKDALE.
JOHN CHERRY.
PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above will cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostler. The best brands of liquor and cigars. Good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE
(LATE MORROW HOUSE.)
CHATSWORTH, Ont.
TUCK & McLEOD PROPRIETORS.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

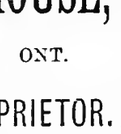
COMMERCIAL HOTEL.
PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms and Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

MARKDALE HOUSE,
MARKDALE, - - ONT.
MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

Medical.

THOS. CARTER M. D.
Physician Surgeon, &c.
Residence MARKDALE HOUSE.
MARKDALE.



B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O. Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University, Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Avleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J. P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.
DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel, Flesherton, the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74

SAMUEL WARDELL,
WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill Owen Sound 122-35

William McLeod,
BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,
MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere Hotel.
159-3m

Glenelg Council.

Tp. Hall, Feb. 4th, 1884.

Council met this day pursuant to adjournment, members present, J. A. McMillan, Dep. Reeve, Messrs. Dunsmore, Neil, and McCuaig. The Dep. Reeve in the chair, minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

Application was received from the Reeve, asking for leave of absence for three months.

Moved by Mr. Dunsmore, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, That the application of Finlay McRae, Esq., Reeve, for leave of absence for three months be granted.—Carried.

The Committee appointed at last meeting to enquire into the sufficiency of the Treasurer's surties, presented their report.

Moved by Mr. Neil, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, That the report of the committee on the Treasurer's surties be adopted.—Carried.

The Auditors presented their report of the receipts and expenditure for 1883.

Moved by Mr. Dunsmore, seconded by Mr. Neil, That the Auditor's report as finally audited by the Council be adopted, and that the Clerk be instructed to get 200 copies of same printed in pamphlet form.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Neil, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, That W. H. Arrowsmith be Assessor for the current year, at a salary of $80, and that a By-law be passed confirming the appointment.—Carried.

By-law 221, appointing Township Officers, was introduced, and read a first and second time.

Moved by Mr. Neil, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, That By-law No. 221, be now read a third time, signed, sealed and engrossed on the minutes.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Neil, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, That John McDonald and Geo. Benne be paid $5 each for their services as Auditors and that Thomas Lander be paid $1 for search as to Treasurer's surties.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Dunsmore, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, That the accounts of Rowsell & Hutchison for blanks, $8.14; James Brown postage and stationery, $1.12; and J. S. Black express charges 25 cts. be paid.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. McCuaig, seconded by Mr. Donsmore, That the Clerk instruct the Co. Treasurer to erase the taxes from lot 17, con. 2 N. D. Road, the sum being paid Tp. Treasurer.—Carried.

Moved by Mr. Donsmore, seconded by Mr. McCuaig That Tp. Clerk be allowed the use of the room in the Tp. Hall for his office.—Carried.

Council adjourned to meet as a Court of Revision when called by the Reeve.

J. S. BLACK, Tp. Clerk.

WHAT IS LARDINE.

Ask any farmer, thresher or saw mill man, or in fact any man who runs machinery of any kind and he will tell you that it is the only machine Oil which will wear equal to Castor Oil, and won't gum or clog your machinery. For sale at Haskett Bro's, Markdale. 176-215

Euphrasia Council.

The Council met pursuant to adjournment on 1st Feby. 1884.

Members all present,—Minutes of last session of Council read.

Objection was raised to a resolution passed at said session appointing an Assessor.

The Yeas and Nays were called for.

Yeas, Messrs. Fawcett, Hurd, Black and the Reeve.

Nays, Mr. Boyd.

The minutes were then confirmed.

The Report of Committee shewing the state of the Treasurer securities to be satisfactory, laid before Council and adopted.

The Treasurer was authorized to obtain 6 copies of municipal hand book, for use of the municipality. The Town Hall was granted free for use of grange meeting.

Samuel Gilmour, was authorized to expend $20 in removing the widow of the late Saml. Myles to her relatives.

The Reeves order was issued on the Treasurer to pay to R. Dunlop, Clerk $7.70 registering births deaths and marriges for 1883.

The Treasurer was ordered to pay $14.72 to J. Rutherford, Esq., Owen Sound for stationery.

The Treasurer was ordered to pay $1.60 to the County Registrar.

On motion being made and seconded the Council adjourned until the first Friday in March next.

ROBERT DUNLOP Tp. Clerk.

A LIFE SAVING PRESENT.

Mr. M. E Allison, Hutchinson, Kan.: Saved his life by a simple Trial Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, for Consumption, which caused him to procure a large bottle, that completely cured him, when Doctors, change of climate and everything else had failed. Asthma, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Severe Coughs, and all Throat and Lung diseases, it is guaranteed to cure. Trial bottles free at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store. Large size $1.00. 1

CAUGHT BY COUGH DROPS.

A FARMER'S WIFE ELOPES WITH A PILL PEDDLER.

His Tenor Voice Proves Irresistible and She flies with Him

(From the News)

BELLEVILLE, Feb. 9.—About six months ago there came to this section of the country a man named Thomas Flack. He was a likely looking fellow a good talker, and could sing like a tenor of a negro minstrel show. He engaged in the sale of cough drops, and having the gift of gab managed to get along well, for his medicine sold quite readily. His manner was so tkaing his conversation so pleasing, and his style so attractive that he created a good impression wherever he went. His principal field of operation was the township of Sidney, and Flack and his cough drops were known in the majority of its households.

During the course of Flack's peregrinations he met Mrs. Martin Kelly, who resided with her husband on a farm in the first concession of the township named, about five miles west of this city. Mrs. Kelly had a fine home but no family. When she saw Flack her heart went out towards him, and his cough-drops, but when she heard him sing—oh, goodness—she was completely carried away and became thoroughly infatuated with him. He began to visit her house and show her marked attention. He went driving with her, and together they attended church socials in the Methodist church, on the Trenton road.

As time advanced the gossiping neighbors began to whisper unpleasant things about the lady and her companion, and these slyly-expressed observations soon grew into rumors which were not of a pleasing character. They reached the auricular appendages of Mr. Kelly, and the green eyed monster took complete possession of him. He accused his wife—although she was a member of the church, of not being all that she should be, and angry scenes and torrid words ensued. His desires and requests were disregarded by his better-half, as she continued to keep company with the vendor of cough drops.

The limit of forbearance was reached a few days ago, and open hostilities resulted. The husbands demands and commands were unheeded, and eventually Mrs. Kelly told the man she had promised to love and obey that she infinitely preferred Flack to him. Then there was "a picnic," which was subceeded by a brief calm. Mr. Kelly arose on Saturday last to find that he was sole monarch of all he surveyed. His wife had fled. On discovering her departure Mr. Kelly instituted a search, and endeavoured to ascertain her whereabouts, but was unable to do so. Whither she and Flack have gone no one appears to know. The last act in the drama—at the present time—was performed yesterday, when Mr. Kelly quit housekeeping and removed his furniture to other quarters. The second act will, doubtless, be presented—as is usual in such affairs—in a short time, when the usual forgiveness will be asked for and granted.

Advice to Swearers.

R. J. BURDETTE.

Nobody cares for the swearing of an habitual swearer. His volleys of profanity have no terror in them. They mean nothing. It is the man who never swears who scares you out of your boots if once in a lifetime he does swear. So far as we can learn Washington only swore once during all the eight years of the revolutionary war But that one time counted. It turned back the tide of retreat, changed a rout into a victory, and made things hum. But the fellow who swears on all occasions. and swears hot and cold with the same mouth, the intellectual pauper who ekes out his barren supply of ideas with an abundant crop of profanity, whose conversation is a long chain of mill privileges, and who talks as a beaver works: his swearing is weak, tiresome, disgusting. So, if you want to swear with any effect, my boy, be very seldom about it. Be exclusive in your profanity. If you can't get along without it bring it out occasionally, like rare old family diamonds; don't keep it running six or eight hours a day, like the kitchen hydrant.

And—you won't be offended, my son—but if you will observe closely you will perceive that young men, boys, fledglings of about young age, swear more than men—more frequently, more awkardly, with less point and direction. A man becomes ashamed of it.. It belongs to the cigarette and matinee period of life, my boy. It is a habit that flourishes in the bread-and-butter days, along somewhere between the high school and the college, and while the blue ribbon on the diploma is bright. It belongs to what Pluck so aptly calls the "unsalted generation," the fresh young men. So put it away and put on all manly things.

I know some good men, some of the best men in the world, who will confound it. and even dog gone it, and in New England even a deacon has been known, under a terrible strain, to "condemn." But as a rule, my son, don't do it. Don't swear. It isn't an evidence of smartness or worldly wisdom. Any fool can swear. And a good many fools do it. I, my son? Ah, if you could only gather up all the useless, uncalled for, ineffective swears I have dropped along the pathway of my life, I know I would remove stumbling blocks from many inexperienced feet, and my heart would be lighter by a ton than it is to-day. But if you are going to be a fool just because other men have been, oh, my son, what a hopeless fool you will be.

CRUELLY MURDERED.

In the Province of Ontario every year thousands are being slowly murdered by taking unsuitable, untried nostrums for such complaints as Costiveness, Indigestion Liver Complaint, Kidney Troubles, etc., who might easily regain lost strength and energy by using McGregor's Speedy Cure. To convince them that such is the case we will give them a free trial bottle at Hill Bro's Price 50c. and $1. See testimonials from persons in your own town. F. & M.

A Protest from the Grand Trunk.

OTTAWA. Feb. 12.—The Grand Trunk declares war on the Canadian Pacific railway to-day in a pamphlet entitled "Correspondence between the Grand Trunk company and the dominion government respecting an advance to the Canadian Pacific railway company." While in the shape of correspondence, it is really a firm and threatening protest. One paragraph from a letter of the 2nd instant from Mr. Hickson to Sir John Macdonald shows the spirit of the whole thing. It reads as follows: "You will realize, doubtless, that unless I can secure the intervention of the government it will be incombent upon me, situated as I am, to make an appeal for justice to parliament in such a manner as constitutional usages will permit."

A WRONG OPINION.

Many a dollar is paid for prescriptions for some disease that never troubled the patient, and when the sole difficulty was worms, which a few of Freeman's Worm Powders would remove. These Powders are pleasant, safe, and sure, contain their own cathartic, and are adapted for children or adults.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.
ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCES, &c. &c,
OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in
MARKDALE;
Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Friday of each week.
Funds to lend on reasonable terms.
JOHN CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17, 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.
Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.
N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. C. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.
Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

A. HILL,
Fashionable Tailor,
OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.
A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

GEORGE WILSON,
Wholesale and Retail

{BUTCHER!}

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.
Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

JOSEPH GIBSON
CONTRACTOR.

Contracts taken for all kinds of
BRICK AND STONE WORK,
Plain Ornamental Plastering.
Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at ahe STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.
Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

PATENTS

MUNN & CO., of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, continue to act as Solicitors for Patents, Caveats, Trade Marks, Copyrights, for the United States, Canada, England, France, Germany, etc. Hand Book about Patents sent free. Thirty-seven years' experience.
Patents obtained through MUNN & CO. are noticed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, the largest, best, and most widely circulated scientific paper. $3.20 a year. Weekly. Splendid engravings and interesting information. Specimen copy of the Scientific American sent free. Address MUNN & CO., SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN Office, 261 Broadway, New York.

NEW FIRM

The undersigned having purchased the butcher business from MR. F. SARJEANT, beg to announce to the public that they are prepared to supply all who favor them with their patronage, with all kinds of meat, the best quality the country can afford. Hoping by fair dealing and close attention to business to merit a liberal patronage, we remain
Respectfully Yours,
SARJEANT & BURNSIDE.
Markdale, Jan. 30, '84.

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER XIV.—(CONTINUED.)

So the next morning, in our walk, I took care to pass Geldham Hall, both going and returning; but the first time I saw no one in the park, and the second time, to my surprise, I saw Mr. Rayner and Mrs. Reade sauntering along together under the trees in a very friendly manner. I had noticed that it had gradually become quite natural for the haughty Mrs. Reade to turn to Mr. Rayner as soon as we all came out of church on Sunday, and for them to have a long chat together, while her daughters looked at the people from the Alders as superciliously as before: but I did not know that he visited at Geldham Hall, still less that he and Mrs. Reade were on terms of such intimacy that she leaned on his arm as they walked along, and laughed as he talked in a much more natural and unaffected manner than her dignity generally allowed.

The next evening I had to go to tea at Mrs. Manners', to take part in a final discussion of the arrangements for the school-treat on the following day. Mrs. Manners, who was a very simple kindly lady, greeted me with rather a perturbed manner, and introduced me half apologetically to the Misses Reade, the elder of whom was stiffer and the younger more awkward than ever as they just touched my hand and dropped it as if it had been something with claws. They were icily obliged to me for the text, and said they would not have troubled me on any account, but their brother had insisted on taking it. Then they talked about village matters to Mrs. Manners, ignoring me altogether, until two little middle aged ladies came in, who had dressed in an antiquated fashion a number of dolls for the sale, and who, on hearing who I was, seemed rather afraid of me. The Misses Reade were very kind to them in a patronizing way; and a shy girl came in, who was better dressed, more accomplished, and who had no worse manners than the Misses Reade, but they evidently looked down upon her from a very great height. I afterwards found that she was the daughter of an attorney, and could not expect to be so fortunate as to meet the ladies from the Hall, except at the Vicar's, which was neutral ground.

I did not think it was at all a pleasant party. They all chattered about parish matters, district-matters, and the Sunday-school, and the life the curate's wife led her husband—of which I knew nothing at all; and I went to a table at the window, where there were two large albums of photogaaphs and looked at them by myself. But, when Mr Manners came in, there was a little stir among them, and they all smiled at him and left off their chatter, and seemed to look to him to suggest a new topic; and he said the weather looked promising for next day, and they all flew upon this new topic and worried it to death. Then, when he had said a few words to each of them, he came up to me and asked me kindly why I was sitting all alone in a corner, and sat down by me, and told me who the people in the albums were, and showed me some pictures of Swiss scenery, and talked about the places they represented. I almost wished he would not, for the other ladies did not seem pleased.

Then we had tea, and Mr. Manners made me sit by him. He went out as soon as it was over, and we all went back into the drawing-room and wrote numbers on tickets; I forget what they were for, but I remember that there was great confusion because several of the ladies made mistakes, so that, while some numbers were missed out altogether, there were a great many tickets bearing the same number. Mrs. Manners asked me if I should like to come up-stairs and see the things for sale, all the rest of the ladies having seen them many times already. So we went up together, and, while we were looking at them, she said nervously—

"You have never been in a situation before, have you?"

"No, never before."

"A governess' position has many trials and difficulties."

"I haven't met with many yet. I have been fortunate," said I, smiling.

Mrs. Manners looked at me as if she wanted to ask me more than she dared; but she only said—

"Of course some families are pleasanter to live with than others. But in all there arise occasions when we must pray for guidance"—and I thought of my resolution to go—"and when we must walk circumspectly"—and I thought of the best way of treating Sarah. I only answered—

"Yes, Mrs. Manners"—very gently.

She seemed pleased by my submission, and said suddenly, as if to herself, after looking at me for a few moments—

"An honest open face!"—which made me blush—then, in a quicker, more practical tone—"You have no father, and have always lived quietly with your mother? Of course you write to her often?"

"Oh, yes."

"So that you can have the benefit of her counsel in any difficulty?"

I hesitated. Nobody ever seemed to think of going to mamma for counsel; we always kept things from her that were likely to disturb her, because she had delicate nerves, and used to go into hysterics if anything went wrong. So I said—

"In any difficulty I should have to think and act for myself, Mrs. Manners, because writing to mamma about it would only make her cry. But I have met with no great difficulties in my life so far."

She looked at me again, as if a little puzzled, and then said—

"I hope you will not think I am catechising you rudely; but Mr. Manners and I take a great interest in you, knowing how young and inexperienced you are to have to go out into the world alone. And he thinks I have neglected you a little. But, you see, Mrs. Rayner is so very—reserved, and lives such a secluded life, that it is not easy to form an intimacy. But I want you to feel sure, my dear Miss Christie, that, if you should want a friend's advice at any time, you need not fear to confide in me; and Mr. Manners, being a man and your parish clergyman, could help you in cases where my woman's judgment might be at fault."

I thanked her with tears in my eyes; for, although there was a shade of reserve in her manner, and although I did not think it likely that I should ever experience at the Alders any trial that she could help me in—for I could not confide a family secret, like Mrs. Rayner's suspected insanity, to anybody—yet her manner was so sincere and so earnest that I was touched by it and grateful for it.

Then we went down-stairs and finished up the evening with music. The two little middle-aged ladies sang, in thin cracked voices, some duets in Italian—passionate love-songs, the words of which they did not seem to understand. The elder Miss Reade played a movement of Mozart's "Fantasia in C minor"—but I did not recognize it until near the end—and the younger a "Galop de Salon," with the loud pedal down all the time. Miss Lane, the attorney's daughter, sang "Little Maid of Arcadee," which Mrs. Manners said she should have liked if the words had not been so silly. Then I was asked to play, and I chose Schumann's "Arabesque," and they seemed astonished and a little scandalized because I played it by heart. I heard Miss Reade whisper—

"I don't like her style. The great difference between forte and piano seems to me an affectation."

While I was playing, Mr. Laurance Reade came in to take his sisters home. When I had finished, everybody looked at us as he shook hands with me in a rather distant manner; but he managed to press my hand before he let it go; so I did not mind. And everybody listened as he said—

"We heard up at the Hall dreadful reports that you were ill, Miss Christie, and wouldn't be able to come to the school-treat."

"Oh, no, I wasn't ill! One of the servants gave me a fright in the night," said I. "I woke up and found her in my room ransacking my things. Then I screamed with all my might, and Mr. Rayner came up and called her out and scolded her."

This explanation was listened to with profound attention by everybody in the room; and I was glad I had an opportunity of giving it, as I felt sure that some rumors must have got about; and it was better they should hear my version of the story. Then Mrs. Manners said she hoped Mr. Reade would not desert them at the last; and he promised to come and help, but said she must not expect him to sell pen-wipers.

"You are going to have a much grander affair than usual, I hear," he ended—"more like a regular bazaar."

"It sounds ungracious to say so," she returned, rather anxiously, "but I am rather sorry that we have not kept to the old simple custom. Still, when Lady Mills offered a marquee, and to come herself and help to sell, and to bring her friends, we were obliged to make a difference. And then the band from Beaconsburgh——" she stopped, for it was old Mr. Reade who had offered to provide that.

"Ah, that's my father's fault!" the young man put in, laughing. "He's a wicked old fellow, wanting to corrupt the rustic simplicity of the parish in his old age."

His elder sister said "Laurence" reprovingly. Mrs. Manners went on.

"And, if Lady Mills comes on the drag, she'll bring a lot of idle young men"—Miss Lane and the younger Miss Reade looked up—"and there will be nothing to amuse them, for we have only one set of lawn-tennis—I think we must charge a penny a game for that"—in a practical tone—"and they will expect champagne and——"

"Oh, Lady Mills will bring that!" said Mr. Reade confidently, as if he had been on that drag with those idle young men himself.

"But Lady Mills and her set are not the style that Geldham is accustomed to," said Mrs. Manners, in a superior tone.

"Oh, no!" assented Mr. Reade gravely.

"And they will make fun of everything; and the treat is after all for the village-people; and I don't want those fast gentlemen from London to get talking to the village-girls."

"I don't think they will want to do so, Mrs. Manners, I don't indeed," said Mr. Reade.

"They are all good girls, those who will help at the treat—the first class at the Sunday School."

"Oh, those! Then I am sure you need not be afraid."

"And they will want to amuse themselves, and take up the time of the sellers, your sisters and Miss Christie and——"

"I'll keep them off, Mrs. Manners. The sellers shall not be teased by any impertinent and trifling young men. I'll devote myself to looking after them."

Simple Mrs. Manners, who had been in deep earnest all the time, began to have a suspicion that there was a lurking mirthfulness under Mr. Reade's gravity: so she said severely—

"You will have to work, not to play, if you come, Mr. Reade, and set a good example to the others."

"I will; but I sincerely hope they will not all follow it," said he, in a laughing tone; then he turned and looked at me and made me blush.

And in the slight bustle of departure he whispered to me—

"Wait, and I'll come back and take you home."

But, when I had put on my hat and mantle, and Mrs. Manners had led me down into the drawing-room again, to say a few last words to me, and I was wondering how I could wait until Mr. Reade kept his promise and returned, I heard a ring and Mr. Rayner's voice in the hall. I started and blushed, and Mrs. Manners stopped in her talk and looked at me very searchingly.

"Mr. Rayner must have come to fetch you home," she said coldly.

I would not have missed the walk home with Mr. Reade for the world.

"I am afraid so," I stammered.

She looked colder still at my confusion but there was only one way out of it, so I burst out—

"Oh, Mrs. Manners, Mr. Reade said he would come to fetch me! What shall I do?"

"You would rather go with him?"

"Oh, yes, yes!"

Her manner changed all at once. She put her arm around me and drew me to the French window.

"There, my dear—run out there and wait at the gate on the left. That's the way they always come from the Hall. It is a little deception, I am afraid; but there—go, child, go! He is a good lad."

So I ran swiftly across the lawn in the dusk, afraid of Mr. Rayner's seeing me, and up the path between the laurel-hedges which led to the side gate. The path curved just at the end, and I heard the gate swing to; but I could not stop myself. And, as Mr. Reade dashed around the corner, running too, I fell against him, and then panted out, "I beg your pardon," very much confused. He had caught me by the arms, and he did not let me go, but held them very gently, while he said—

"Miss Christie! Pray don't apologise. Where were you running?"

"I—I was going home," I stammered in a low voice.

"But that is not the way." A pause—then very softly—"Were you coming to meet me?"

"N-o," said I half crying, and disengaging myself.

It was so humiliating to have been caught running to meet Mr. Reade.

"No? I had hoped you were. For I have been running like a race-horse to meet you."

I said nothing.

"Why did you want to run home so fast alone, when I promised to come and fetch you?"

"I—I didn't want to trouble you."

"That was very kind of you. But, if I happen not to mind the trouble, may I see you home now I am here? Or would you prefer to go alone?"

"I would rather go alone, thank you," said I, though it was heart-breaking to have to say it. But I thought it was time to show some spirit, for I saw that Mr. Reade did not believe me.

He stepped aside to let me pass, and raised his hat very stiffly; then his manner changed all at once.

"Why, you are crying! My darling, I didn't mean to make you cry!"

I could not stop him—I did try—but he was so much bigger than I that he had his arms around me before I could get away.

"Oh, Mr. Reade, let me go!" I said, frightened.

But, as I held up my face to say it, he kissed me, and, after that, of course it did not matter, for I knew that he loved me and that I was safe with him.

I remember every word that he said to me as we walked toward the Alders that night; but, if I were to write it down, it would read just like the same thing over and over again, and not at all as it sounded to me.

We did not go straight back, but a longer way round, for fear the grass should make my feet wet; and we passed the front gate and went on to the side gate that led past the stable. And there Laurence left me, for I did not want that spiteful Sarah to see him with me. I went through into the shrubbery, so happy that I could scarcely keep from singing softly to myself. But, as I came close to the stables, I left off, for fear Mr. Rayner, who might be in his room, as it was now quite dark, should hear me, and want to know how I got back, and why I was so late; and just then I could not have told him. I wanted to slip up-stairs to my room without seeing any one, and go straightway to sleep with the remembrance of Laurence and his last kiss all fresh and undisturbed in my mind. Then I thought I should dream of him.

But I was disappointed. For close under the stable-wall I saw two men's figures, neither of them Mr. Rayner's, and one of them held a dark lantern. I was frightened, for they made no noise, and I thought they walked like thieves; so I crept in among the trees and watched them. One of them softly tried the door of the harness-room, through which one had to pass to get to the upper story where Mr. Rayner slept. Then they came away and walked first down the path a little way towards the house, and then up it towards where I crouched among the trees. They sauntered cautiously, but slowly as if waiting for some one. I did not feel much afraid of their seeing me, for I knew I was well concealed: but I was eager to get out and alarm the house, and I dared not move whild they were in sight. But, when they came close, I recognized one as Tom Parkes, Sarah's lover, and in the other, much to my surprise, the gentleman who had visited Mr. Rayner after tea one evening, whose conversation with Sarah in the plantation had so surprised me by its familiar tone.

The moon, which had now risen high, fell full upon his face as he passed, and I had a better opportunity than before of observing him. He was rather short, of slim neat build, fair, clean-shaven, with gray eyes and an imperturbable expression of face. He had an overcoat and a big comforter over his arm, and was, as he had been before, very carefully dressed. When they were just opposite to me, they turned back, and, just as they got to the harness-room door again, Sarah came quickly from the house with a key, let them in, and followed herself. And in another minute Mr. Rayner passed me from the road and let himself in after them. I waited a few moments in wonder at this strange scene; it seemed to me that I was always seeing curious things at the Alders. But I had something pleasanter to think about than mysterious night-visitors, and I ran quickly and lightly down the path to the house, where Jane, very sleepy, and surprised at my being so late, let me in.

But that last adventure spoilt my dreams. I did indeed dream of Laurence; but I dreamt that I was carried away from him by burglars.

CHAPTER XV.

Laurence had promised to come for me early the next morning, saying that I should be wanted to help to arrange the stalls.

"I'll bring two of the Manners boys, and say we've come for the benches Mr. Rayner offered to lend for the children's tea," said he. "Then I'll say Mrs. Manners begs you to come at once, and I'll start off with the boys; and, when we get outside the gate, I'll send them on with the benches and wait about for you."

I wondered why he could not wait for me in the house as a matter of course; but he knew best, and I said nothing.

The next morning I put on a white frock that I had been busily making during all my spare time for the last fortnight, and a broad sash of the palest lemon and pink that I had been saving up for some great occasion. Then I slipped into the garden before breakfast—for there was no knowing how soon after he might come—to gather a flower to wear at my throat. I purposely chose rather a faded little rose, in the hope that Laurence might notice it and get me one himself to wear instead. I was going to put it in water until it was time to start, when Mr. Rayner met me at the window.

"Halloo, Miss Christie, stealing my roses! Well, since you had resolved to burden yourself with a crime, you might have made it worth your while. But I am not going to permit you to spoil the effect of your pretty frock and destroy the reputation of my garden by wearing such a misshapen thing as that! Never! Come out again with me, and we'll find something better."

This was not what I wanted at all; but I was obliged to follow him, and to seem pleased when he gathered and gave me the loveliest little late tea-rose possible, and then found a beautiful bit of long soft moss to put round it. Laurence would never dare to suggest that this was not pretty enough to wear.

After breakfast, I went into the school-room with Haidee; but I was not in my usually soberly instructive mood; and, when I heard the front-door bell ring, I took the "Child's Guide to Knowledge" from Haidee's hand and gravely held it before me for some minutes until she said timidly—

"It begins at 'What is tapioca?' Miss Christie."

Then I felt ashamed of myself, and, making an effort, heard all the rest of her lessons as intelligently as was necessary, and set her a copy in my best hand. Then, just as I was thinking that my reward must be very near now, my heart sank as I heard Laurence's step returning through the hall, and those of the boys with him, while yet I had not been summoned. I wondered whether Laurence had forgotten all about me, and could have burst into tears at the thought that he would soon be helping to arrange the stalls with pretty Miss Kate Finch. But presently, when disappointment had given place to despair, I came to what I suppose was a better mood, and reflected that it was all a just punishment for the careless and neglectful manner in which I was certainly performing my duties this morning. And I went into dinner with all my bright spirits of the morning very properly chastened out of me.

It was wicked and ungrateful of me; but, Mr. Rayner said brightly, "Mrs. Manners wanted you to go and help her to prepare for the afternoon's festivities, Miss Christie; but we are not going to let you fag yourself out laying tables for a lot of dirty children, so I said you should come later," I felt for the moment as if I quite disliked him, though it was really only another proof of his kindness and care for me.

After dinner, he himself accompanied Haidee and me to the High Field, where the bazaar and tea took place; Mrs. Rayner was not coming until later. The school-children had been there some time when we reached the field; and some of the rank and fashion of the neighborhood, the quiet people who came as a duty, were making purchases in the marquees. I saw Laurence standing outside the larger but less showy one of the two; he looked very grave and gloomy, and did not come forward towards us immediately, as I had expected. Was he offended because I had not come earlier? Surely he must have known how much I wanted to do so! His elder sister, much to my surprise, came out to meet me.

"We have been waiting for you such a long time, Miss Christie," she said; "we have kept a place for you."

And, although she did not speak much more pleasantly than usual, I thought it good-natured of her, and wondered whether Laurence had spoken to her about me and she was trying to be kind to please him. I followed her into the marquee, which was arranged with one long stall down each side. At one, cheap toys, sweets, and very innocent refreshments were to be sold; the Sunday-school girls stood behind it, presided over by the housekeeper from the Hall. Down the other side was a stall loaded with the usual display of mats, dolls, crochet-shawls, and tatting antimacassars, with here and there a gipsy-table or cushion mounted with wool-work, and a host of useful trifles, which were expected to fetch far more than their intrinsic value.

But the custom of former years, when the sale had been chiefly for the village people, was not forgotten; and one end was piled up with underclothing and children's frocks and a quantity of cheap crockery and ironmongery, the contributions of Beaconsburgh tradesmen. At this, decidedly the least interesting corner of the whole bazaar, Miss Reade asked me if I would mind standing.

"We chose this part for you, because you said you would like to have plenty to do; and we know you are patient. And I assure you the old women from the village will give you lots of occupation; they always want to turn over everything in the place and buy what they require for nothing."

I think I would rather have sold some pretty things too; but of course somebody must sell the ugly ones, and I really wanted to be useful; so I looked carefully over the things under my charge and examined the price-tickets, which I thought was a business-like way of going to work, when Laurence at last strolled in and came up to me. He shook hands with a loving pressure, but he only said—

"How do you do, Miss Christie? They expected you earlier."

And I felt so much chilled by the common-place words and the "Miss Christie" that I could scarcely answer. I had not expected him to say "Violet" before everybody, as he had done when we walked home on the previous night; but he need not have used my prim surname at all. But, as he stooped to push under the stall a box that that was sticking out, he said, in a very low voice—

"I must speak to you presently. You must make some excuse to get away, and I'll watch you and meet you. I have some bad news—at least, I don't know whether you will think it bad news."

His whisper got so gruff during those last words that I longed to kneel down on the ground by him and put my arms around his neck and tell him not to mind, whatever it was; but I could only say softly, as I bent over a bundle of night-caps—

"Of course I shall think it bad if you do."

And he just glanced up with a look that made me hold my breath and almost forgot where I was, and his lips touched my frock as he rose, and I knew the bad news was still not so bad as it might be.

Just then there was a stir and excitement outside, caused by the arrival of Lady Mills and some of her party. They came into our marquee, and I thought I had never seen any one so beautiful or so winning as Lady Mills herself, with her pretty cream colored gown covered with lace and bunches of pale roses in her hat and on her dress. The ladies with her were beautifully dressed too, as I saw at once that they were indeed, as Mrs. Manners had said, not the style of people Geldham was accustomed to. They were us all, sellers and buyers, look very dowdy and old-fashioned, and they talked and laughed a little louder than we dared, and moved about as if they were used to being looked at and did not mind it. There were only two gentlemen with the eight ladies, and I heard Lady Mills say to Mrs. Manners that the rest of the men were coming on the drag, and that she had given them strict orders that after a certain hour they were to buy up all that was left on the stalls. Mrs. Manners seemed rather distressed at that, and said she did not want the gentlemen to purchase things which would be of no use to them; they had no smoking-caps and embroidered cigar-cases. But Lady Mills laughed, and said Mrs. Manners was too merciful; and then she left the marquee and went to superintend the finishing touches put to the arrangement of her own.

(TO BE CONTINUED).

A FATAL MISTAKE.

would be not to take Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" if you are suffering from impure blood, or from consumption (scrofulous disease of the lungs). Sold by all druggists.

The American hog has got into Free politics.—[Cleveland Leader. He probably will make something out of them.

Functional derangement of the female system is quickly cured by the use of Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." It promotes pain and restores health and strength. By all druggists.

The comet of 1812 might have remarked "I will a tale unfold," even two of them.

Dr. Pierce's "Pleasant Purgative Pellets" are sugar-coated and inclosed in glass bottles, their virtues being thereby preserved unimpaired for any length of time, in any climate, so that they are always fresh and reliable. No cheap wooden or pasteboard boxes. By druggists.

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you: cure it with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. 25 cents. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

SEED! 1881 Change Grasping Monop Find Prices JAMES REA

COMMON SENSE STILL TRIUMPHANT. Fiske's "Common sense" Brace, No. 1 ing pants or shoulders. Requires NO BUTTONS pants. Sent to any address, by mail, on receipt 75c. FISKE and CO., 277 King St., West, Toron

That Large and Nicely Finished store in the Central Block, Waterloo, to rent; possession, immediate possession. WILLIAM SNIDER, Waterloo.

FARM TO RENT OF 111 ACRES, the township of Etobicoke, thirteen miles Toronto. Also a good stand for Saddler or Shoe Apply to R. JOHNSTON, Thistletown P O

DAKOTA—PARTIES DESIRING FORMATION relative to free homes, correct maps, circulars, and reliable facts, free Apply to HARRY MERCER, Traveling Emi Agent C. M. and St. P. railway, Chatham, Ont.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILD to grow up deformed or crippled, for ca examine our appliances for the treatment of C and Diseases of the Spine, Hips, Knee and An member the world is progressing, and more can to-day than at any former period. We also manu Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for th and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show onto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTH COX 91 Church street, Toronto.

BOON TO FARMERS. Circulars free, of new and most productive well known of Seed Grown. Testimonials of 110 bushe acre of Boyds Egyption Oats. Samples of 2 JAS BOYD JR, Cedar Grove, Ont.

1883—ST. JOHN EXHIBITION—1883

Leather Belting, Fire Engine Hose. Four First Prizes and Two Diplomas, highest of all Awards for Leather Belting Fire Engine Hose were accorded by the J at the St. John Centennial and Dominion hibition, to ROBIN & SADLER, Montreal, er all competitors.

$100,000 TO LOAN on first-class farm property at lowest rates. I will save money by applying by mail direct to me E. E. KNOTT 48 Adelaide St., East, Toronto.

THE LILY is a perfect gem, equal to an imported Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very ish, elegant in appearance, and approved the most fastidious. Manufactured only THE CROMPTON CORSET CO. 78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

Municipal Councillor's Handbook. Important book for Municipal Councillors Contains in brief and familiar style the manner of Ontario—with forms. 200 pages bound One Dollar. Address PRATT & TROY, Stratford, Ont.

BEAVER S. S. LINE WEEKLY BETWEEN Quebec, Montreal, and Liverpool CALLING AT QUEENSTOWN AND BELFAST For lowest rates and all particulars apply H. E. MURRAY, Beaver Line, Montreal

$20 a day is made, making and selling these RIDDLE SAWING MACHINES. They saw off a 2 foot log in 2 minutes, are endorsed by over 500 men from the State Wesleyan chines or the right to make them for a small sum. Circulars free. WM. GILES, Washington

Dominion Line of Steamships. Running in connection with the Grand Railway of Canada. Sailing from Quebec Saturday during the summer months, and Portland every Thursday during the winter months.

PORTLAND TO LIVERPOOL

Dominion, Jan. 10.		*Oregon,	Jan.
*Sarnia, Jan. 17.		Ontario,	Feb.
Montreal, Jan. 24.		Toronto,	Feb.

Rates of passage: Cabin, Portland to Liverpool, according to steamer and berth, $50, $60, return, $90, $110, $130; all outside berths and comfortably heated by steam. Intermediate, $40. Steerage, $24. The saloons and state-rooms in steamers marked thus: * are amidships, where but little motion is felt, and no cattle or sheep are carried on them. For further particulars apply to any Grand Trunk Railway Agent or local agents of the Company, or to DAVID TORRANCE & CO., General Agents, Montreal

A Fair Offer

If you will send us with this slip 25c. or four cent stamps, we will mail you, postpaid, a sample package containing 100 useful articles, which are required in every house, with instructions by which you can make from $2 to $4 per day. Suitable for both sexes. This is no humbug, as the samples are well worth the money, and may be returned if not satisfactory. Show this to your friends.

JAS LEE & CO., MONTREAL, P.Q.

AGRICULTURAL.

Protecting Grape Vines in Winter.

In cold parts of the Province it is the ...er way to lay the grape vines down at ...e approach of winter in order to secure ...ops of fruit. By laying the vines down ...e evaporation is lessened, and when the ...w falls they are covered by it, and thus ...otected until it is melted. It is the ...et drying winter winds sweeping through ...e vine branches if left on the trellis that ...jure the buds, seemingly lowering the ...al force so that they push feebly, if at all, ... the return of warm weather. The ...iter has seen vines through which the ...n ran freely, unable to burst a bed; the ...ds were killed, though the wood was ...emingly uninjured. It is usually better ...erely to throw the vine upon the ground ...d trust to the snow for a covering, than ... place straw manure in which mice may ...rbor upon them, or to cover them with ...ch earth, which in wet weather will rot ...e buds.

Apple Jelly.

The wholesale manufacture of apple ...ly has become an important business, ...e process in one of the largest manufac...es in the State of New York is describ... in the report of the State Agricultural ...ety, from which we condense:—The ...tory is located on a creek which furnishes ...cessary power. The apples as ...ught by farmers are stored in large bins ... the side of the creek above the mills. ...hen wanted they are discharged from the ...s into a trough of running water, which ...ries them into the basement of the mill, ...charging them into a tank of water. This ...ocess gives them a thorough scouring and ...refuse, litter, dirt, etc., is caried away ... the water. The apples are hoisted by ...rmless chain elevator from the tank to ...e grinding room, the buckets on the ele...or being perforated to allow the water ...escape. They are carried to the upper ...ry whence they roll by the force of gravi... to the grater. The cheese is laid up in ...ng cotton cloth instead of straw as in ... times. The cider as it is expressed ...sses to the storage tank thence to the de...tor, a copper pan eleven feet long and ...ee feet wide. It is here heated, at first ...directly by steam pipes, till all impuri...s have risen to the surface and been ...immed off, and then a greater degree of ...at is applied to reduce it to a semi-syrup ...olden cider. From the defactor it passes ...to the evaporator, also supplied with copper ...eam pipes, and so arranged that the semi-...rup introduced at one end is reduced to ...e proper density in its passage through, ...owing off in a continuous stream, of a con...tency of thirty degrees to thirty-two ...grees Brimm. Great care is taken in all ...ese operations to prevent absolute cleanli..., every part being thoroughly cleansed ... hot water and steam each day. No fer...entation is allowed to take place in the ...ple before reduction. The jelly flows from ...e evaporators into large tubs, from which ...is drawn while still warm in the various ...ckages in which it is shipped to market. ...favorite package for family use is little ...ved wooden buckets holding five and ... pounds respectively, and which are ...iliar to the grocery trade. The capacity ... the factory is from 1,600 to 1,800 pounds ...r day. A bushel of fruit will produce from ...r to five pounds of jelly. Crab-apples ...ake the finest jelly; sour, crabbed natural ...it the best looking, and mixtures of all ...rities the most satisfactory product. The ...uice is manipulated in water, when the ...d sink and the lighter part flows off; ... it is said that the value of the seeds will ...y the cost of all the labor employed. ...ey are sold to nursery men for planting. ...New York Observer.

FARM ITEMS.

Lack of pure and fresh water greatly in...ere with the production of eggs during ...d weather. Eggs contain a large amount ... water, and hens need it for the manufac...re of eggs.

Galvanized iron pails for drinking water ...ld not be used. The zinc coating is ...y acted upon by water, forming a ...is ...e oxide of zinc.

...n't have any unoccupied land to ... grow weeds. When an early crop ...ve, sow at once any crop that will ...ow. Buckwheat and peas ... and may be turned under before ...et.

...re weighing a small sample of wheat, ...ount the number of kernels in the ...ple, and multiplying by the number of ...es the weight of such sample is contained ...e weight of a bushel, it has been found ...re are from 650,000 to 750,000 ker...s in a bushel.

...ll fruit orchards the trees are more im...rtant than any crop that can be grown ...r them. If they are not, cut them ...wn. The hills of potatoes or beans close ...e trees never amount to much, and it is ... worth trying to save them at the risk of ...ring the trees.

A farmer who for years had his crops ...maged by woodchucks, says:—"After the ...chucks had retired for winter quarters ... the surface of the ground was deeply ...n, I selected a cold night and shut ...ery hole with earth, pressing it down so ...at the entrance and exist were hermeti...lly sealed, excluding the air. With all ...ir strength the woodchucks could not dig ... of their prison, and died."

There are farmers who have extra good ...tter cows and do not know it. They have ...or pastures in summer and no shelter and ...different feed in winter. In the house ...y have no convenience for making but...; the milk is set where there are no ar...gements for keeping it cool in summer, ...d in the living room, exposed to the odors ... the kitchen, in winter; and neither the ...antity nor quality, nor any index of what ...ow can do is kept.

The San Francisco reporter didn't get ...ything new when he asked a Chinaman ...w the children of Confucius kept Christ...as: "Samee like Melican man," was the ...oinder; "eat, dlink and gled dlunk."

When a man enters a sample-room and ...s a person there with whom he has sworn ..., the man inside says he entered to warm ... hands, while the other says he just drop...d in to ascertain the time of day.

HONORING THE DEAD.

The Folly and Extravagance of Current Funeral Customs—The Origin of costly Burial Ceremonies—Ancient Mortuary Practices

"Among other things which are not as they should be," a Greek tradegian is fabled to say in an English crib, "I might mention the unbounded character of feminine extravagance." The unbounded character of funeral arrangements is also mentioned among things which are not as they should be. We published, the other day, a letter on this topic signed by the archbishops of Canterbury and York and by other distinguished members of the church of England Funeral and Mourning Reform association. According to this letter, our old funeral observances "help to create a mistaken view of death." What a correct view of death may be it is perhaps not easy to ascertain. But the writers of the letter probably mean that our funeral pomp gives an idea of hopeless gloom, which is certainly neither beautiful nor human nor consistent with either the hopeful Christian or the resigned pagan theory of the close of mortal existence. The writers go on to point out that the bereaved are often unable to resist the tyranny of custom or fashion. These demand in all ranks a heavy tax to Mr. Mould to be paid on the decease of a kinsman. Even when well to-do people have sensibly insisted on a plain, quiet, funeral, the poorer classes (especially the Scotch and Irish poorer class) often feel it their duty to expend comparatively large sums on "waking" and otherwise doing honor to the departed. The Homeric custom of a funeral feast, though no longer followed by athletic sports, prevails among the poor in many parts of these islands. Scotch tradesman are not unacquainted with "burial port," and the vintage served out at the funerals of the poor is neither old nor crusted nor expensive, though undoubtedly "very curious." "The people at large," say the reformers, "still cling to the old so-called 'handsome funeral,' with, in various parts of England, much feasting and treating, entailing often absolute want, and conducing to permanent pauperism." This is true, and lavish bad taste in these mortuary matters is not confined to the poor. Look at our funeral monuments in cemeteries and churchyards, look at our style of mourning in dress, look at our plumed hearses and abominable hearse-horses and mutes. Can anything be more hideous and degraded than the mass of our funeral art? While people confine themselves to flowers and crosses they can do little harm. But they aspire to veiled urns, broken columns, photographs under glass on the tomb, and a crowd of incongruous allegorical images such as may be observed in Brompton cemetery. As to mourning raiment, the taste of most races, from that of the Australians, who daub themselves blacker, is in favor of black; white and yellow are the exceptions. Black is not unbecoming, but it is hot and heavy. Many women with large family circles are martyrs to ponderous, uncomfortable, and expensive crape. For mutes and hearse plumes nothing can be said except that they are survivals from ages even more costly than our own in gloomy funeral arrangements. They are like the horse led behind the soldier's bier—a survival from the time (not so very far distant) when the horse was actually sacrificed and buried with the warrior. The touching relic of that sacrifice, as it exists in certain military funerals, no one would abolish. But the reformers have plenty of work before them in teaching economy and taste. That they will help to popularize cremation, the most sanitary and the noblest manner of disposing of the dead, is more than likely.

The great expense traditional at obsequies no doubt arises from a wish to honor the dead. The old way of honoring the dead was to fill their tomb or funeral pyre with all manner of precious things. Thus when Hectors's body still lay in the Achæan camp his friends in Troy burned many of his costly possessions. The idea was that the spiritual forms of these objects, like the ghosts of the slaves slaughtered besides the pyre, accompanied the departed lord into hades. People had not learned that, as they entered this world naked, so they departed. They brought nothing with them, and carried nothing away. But the human spirit revolted against this inflexible rule. His slaves, his dogs, his horses were buried with the Greek, or Scythian, or Scandinavian prince; the child carried her toys into the sunless gardens of Persephone. In the "Philopseudes" of Lucian (the report of a meeting of a Greek psychical society), one of the characters tells how he burned all his dead wife's finery. But the unsatisfied shade of the dead lady haunted him, till he found and burned one of a favorite pair of gilt slippers, which had fallen behind a chest and so escaped the general conflagration. Beliefs like this have been of the utmost service to history, because we now find in the barrows and tombs of the dead examples of all the objects they prized in life. Christianity discouraged and almost destroyed the practice among her early converts. By a curious inconsistency, however, the dignitaries of the church and the heads of the state were still buried in canonical costume or in royal robes, with croizers and rings. Other and humbler Christians have usually been buried with no sacrifice of portable property. Thus prevented from sacrificing to the honor of the dead in one way, the world clung to another ancient usage, and expended needless sums of money in hideous trappings of mourning and in wakes and funeral feasts. "I dinna care for your marriages; gie me a good solid burial," said the old Scotchman, expressing a sentiment which has a still stronger ho'd on the Irish.

All our funeral customs show a gloomy, hopeless view of death which wiser peoples have not encouraged. The northern nations have a curious love of poring on corruption, on skulls, skeletons, cross-bones, all the hideous emblems of country church-yards and of the Danse Macabre. There is hardly a skeleton to be found in all Greek funeral art. The stelæ, or pillars over the dead, show us the departed as he was in this life—the man about to mount the horse of Hades, the lady at her toilette. Sometimes we find representations, as is supposed of friends meeting again in Elysium. The Etruscan dead are represented as lying at endless feasts, "enjoying each the other's good." The Egyptians were with Osiris in a peaceful and happy place. Such are the usual Pagan representations of death. But what did they really believe about death? There was no consistent or orthodox doctrine. Hell was painted on the walls of the Lesche at Delphi—hell with a blue-black fiend, Lurynomous, the color of a carrion fly, devouring the damned. Other souls were at the endless tasks of Sisyphus, of Tantalus, of the daughters of Danaus. The blue-black fiend may still be seen on the painted tomb walls of Etruria. Thus there was a belief in a place of torment, crowded by demons like those we see in old mediæval missals and psalters. But was the belief in such a place common? In the "Republic" one of the characters marvels at Socrates when he speaks of a future life among just men made perfect. "These things are old wives' fables," says the skeptic, apparently an orthodox gentleman of Athens. Socrates' myths of heaven came like a new gospel to his hearers, a gospel attested only by the vision of Er, the ancient Dante, who had beheld the homes of men departed. Again, the people of Greece believed (as the story of Cupid and Psyche shows) in a home of future life exactly analogous to what Ojibbeways and Solomon islanders believe in—a shadowy, formless place, guarded by monsters. There was thus no one orthodox view of death. Annihilation, immortality in our sense, purgatory, a survival of the hades of savages, a theory of absorption into the divine, all these notions had their disciples. But vague as his beliefs were, the Greek treated death, when he had to deal with in mortuary art, with a manly pious resignation, not hopeless, but devoid of fear. English mortuary art is far indeed from this admirable example.—London Daily News.

WIT AND WISDOM.

The best thing out—Out of debt.

It takes a clever man to conceal from others what he doesn't know.

Diamonds are a good deal like hens. Much depends upon their setting.

When a young lady refuses a marriage proposal, it is a case of slight of hand.

Trufe am mighty, but use it in small doses, in criticising the acts of yo' friends.

The power to do great things generally arises from the willingness to do small things.

The amount of pin money required by a woman depends on whether she uses diamond pins or rolling pins.

It is in harmony with the eternal fitness of things that a man should turn pale when he "kicks the bucket."

There is no disgrace in being poor; the thing is to keep it quiet and not let your neighbors hear anything about it.

The man who says that woman has never invented anything should listen for a few minutes at the key-hole of the sewing society.

The latest dude story is that a farmer saw a couple of these agonizing specimens on the street, and exclaimed: "Gosh! what things we see when we don't have a gun."

So—commenced the study of music only when he was sixty. We recommend this fact to the young lady who lives in the opposite house, and has begun practicing the "Maiden's Prayer" before she is twenty.

A Michigan youth, aged 19, had a flare-up with his girl, and out of revenge married the latter's aunt—fair, fat and forty. It is the first time aunty has been utilized as a cure for a broken heart.

Weakly Children.

No subsequent care can fully atone for neglect of proper physical training and development in childhood. Some parents are so tender of their children that they hardly allow them to go out of their sight. They keep them in school nine months in the year, and under more or less restraint and confinement during the other three months. The result is that neither mind or body reach their full development; and they are children at twenty, and weaklings the rest of their lives. The perfection of manhood is a sound mind in a sound body." Most of the business of the great cities is in the hands of country-bred men, while those born and brought up in affluence in cities, are, as a occupying inferior positions. This condition of things will not always remain thus; parents are beginning to appreciate the cause and to seek the remedy. Early last summer I went up among the hills of Sussex County, N. J., and stopped for a day or two with some friends who reside on a large farm a mile from the beautiful village of Newton. A delicate lad of ten years of age from Brooklyn had been sent to spend the summer with this family. When he came he had but little appetite, his eyes were weak and he could endue but little fatigue; but he entered into rural life with great gusto, and when he was sent for at the end of a month, he begged to remain longer. Another delicate boy about the same age was sent up from the city later in the season, and the two are full of business; racing over the hills, riding bare back or in the farm waggons, and developing health and strength all the time. I met one of the family in October, and was told that I would then hardly recognize these boys, so brown and rugged had they become. It is reasonable to say that this summering has added five or ten years to the lives of these children. The family above referred to are people of education and refinement, so that the influences under which the children are brought are the very best. The children become greatly attached to the family who allow them much freedom, and thus the farm-house is known as "Liberty Hall." We wish there were many such summer resorts for city boys who are suffering for the want of fresh country air, and the fresh milk and butter and bread and fruits that abound here. If the thousands of people who visit the fashionable watering places, leaving their children at home in hot, dusty cities, or bringing them with them to be pampered by rich food and fatigued by late hours, would seek for them homes for the summer at farm-houses in healthy localities, permanent benefit would result. There are plenty of such places to be found; and among the recollections of a child's life, none would be brighter or more satisfactory to look back upon than his rural experience. The highest joys and pleasures of childhood are lost in the walls of a great city.

The drum we beet ourselves duzzat sownd so loud as the drum our nabur beets.

STIFLING TIMES IN RUSSIA.

The Social and Political Life of the People Extinguished by the Government.

"Oh, this stifling, horrible reaction!" gasp intelligent Russians. "We are dying for fresh air." Meanwhile the government creatures are shouting: "Everything is all right in the czar's country, it is the nicest place on the globe." For the time being there is no life at all in this huge country—I mean social and political life. Like school children, the czar's subjects are constantly bidden to keep still. All the functions of the autocratic government seem to be concentrated on the hushing up process. I heard a witty Russian say that nowadays the czar does not issue a ukase, but simply "Hush, No.—." Earn your daily bread and eat it—that is, if the imperial tax-collectors do not snatch it from you. Such is the whole code of daily life for the Russians now.

The czar as usual does nothing. He is merely a figurehead for his country. In order to fill up his time his ministers make him sign "hushes," and give audience to civil and military office-seekers who presumably come "to lay at the feet of his majesty their loyal feelings." There are thousands of regiments in Russia, and each regiment has its own patron saint. The patron's day is the greatest holiday of the Russian soldier, and the present czar has made it his rule to give them a treat on that day. Besides vodka he gives half-a-rouble to each man, a rouble to each under-officer, and a dinner to the officers. And here ends the czar's "daily and nightly care about the needs and wants of his beloved country."

The ministers are certainly less idle than their master. Each of them has daily many orders to sign and a crowd of office-seekers to see. But what particularly keeps them busy is the competition in making up hushes or ukases. Queer, indeed, are some of these documents. Here, for instance, the minister of public instruction proposes to behead all the Russian universities by establishing a state board of examiners, having sole power to confer degrees upon students. The trouble is that over three-quarters of the nihilists were university students, and the professors were satisfied with them so long as they were proficient in their studies. But the state examiners would issue diplomas only to those who were undoubtedly loyal, and thus there would be fewer chances for nihilists to penetrate into the imperial service.

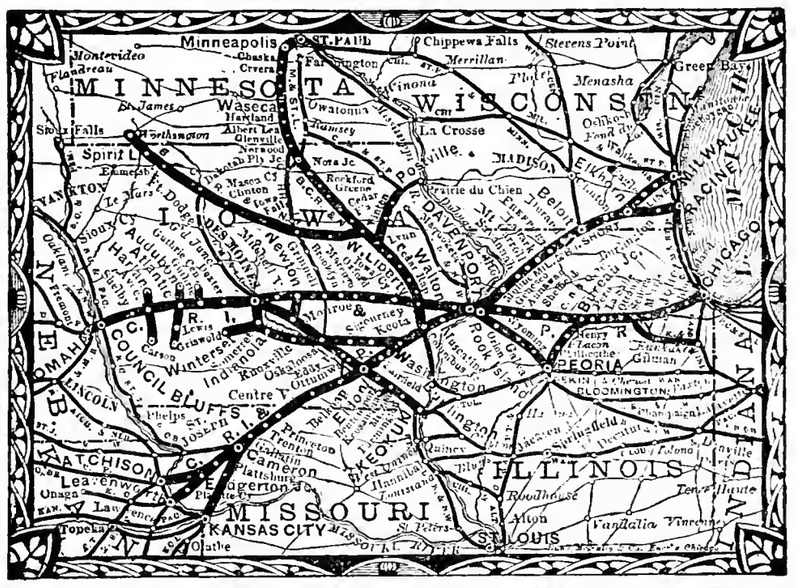
Then the minister of the imperial household proposes that there shall be no nobles by the autocrat's grace. According to Russian law, all subjects who, while in the czar's service, attain the rank of general or receive the cross of St. Vladimir, become ipso facto nobles of the empire, and all their descendants preserve the title. According to this new project no man, however much he might deserve from his country, could become a noble unless he pleased the czar or his government. Such a system would create a nobility which would be anything but noble.

Next comes the minister of the interior, boasting that he had succeeded in beheading Moscow. During the last coronation the head, or mayor, of the city of Moscow, Prof. Tchicherin, made a speech in which he urged the new-crowned czar to follow his late father in the way of reform. "Only substantial reforms can cure the gaping wounds of our fatherland," he said. For that speech the mayor of Moscow was removed. From that day to this the ancient czar's capital has remained headless, for no new candidate elected by the city has suited the minister. This is the way the autocrat repays Moscow for her hospitality to him during the coronation.

The minister of justice also shines with wisdom. Recently a Russian, who was called before the court as a witness, refused to take the formal oath, which begins thus: "I swear by God Almighty." "The bible forbids me to swear by God," he said, "though I am ready to swear before God." The case was referred to the minister. Count Leo Toistoi, the foremost Russian novelist of the day, being called to serve on a jury, excused himself on the ground that his religious views forbade him to judge men. This case was also referred to the minister. The decision of the Russian minister was as follows: "Count Leo Tolstoi shall be counted among absent jurors, and, as such, shall be fined 100 roubles. As to the witness objecting to the legal form of oath, it must be understood that the imperial government is not going to change the laws of the empire to accommodate individuals."

The chief procureur of the holy synod has recently ordered that The Religious and Social Messenger, being too radical in its religious views shall be submitted to religious censor. In compliance with this order, The Messenger sent to the censors all its religious articles, but not articles of a lay character. The journal received a new reprimand, for in the procureur's order there was no discrimination made between religious and lay news. So now the reverend censors, who are all monks, are perusing even the financial articles of The Messenger in search of heresy.

What can people do under such a government? They can play cards and billiards, give dinners and balls, arrange masquerades, and go to the theatre, and so they do. Vodka and champagne are flowing, dancing parties and light music last through the night, ballets and low plays which have always the same theme, that "the lover is lovely and the husband is a fool," provoke thunders of applause, and above all this babel is heard the so-called Russian national hymn: "Boje, czaria hrani" (God save the czar).



By the way the fiftieth anniversary of that hymn was recently celebrated here. On that occasion its origin and history were fully explained. Up to 1833 there was no national hymn in Russia, and the czars were usually contented with the English anthem, "God Save the King." After his trip abroad, in 1832, the Czar Nicholas ordered Mr. Lvoff, a famous Russian musician, to compose at once a Russian national hymn, for his majesty, while in foreign courts, had been much inconvenienced on account of the lack of one. Mr. Lvoff set to work, and soon the music was ready. Poet Joukovsky furnished the words. The hymn pleased the czar, and in 1833 it was first played in the Grand theatre of this city. Such was the origin of the hymn. True, its music is rather national, but the words are anything but the Russian people's prayer:

God save the czar!
Mighty autocrat,
Reign for our glory,
Reign for our enemy's fear.
O, orthodox czar,
God save the czar!

It is an official hymn, and is not known at all to the majority of Russians.—St. Petersburgh Cor. New York Sun.

A MAN

WHO IS UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THIS COUNTRY, WILL SEE BY EXAMINING THIS MAP, THAT THE

CHICAGO, ROCK ISLAND & PACIFIC R'Y,

Being the Great Central Line, affords to travelers, by reason of its unrivaled geographical position, the shortest and best route between the East, Northeast and Southeast, and the West, Northwest and Southwest.

It is literally and strictly true, that its connections are all of the principal lines of road between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

By its main line and branches it reaches Chicago, Joliet, Peoria, Ottawa, La Salle, Geneseo, Moline and Rock Island, in Illinois; Davenport, Muscatine, Washington, Keokuk, Knoxville, Oskaloosa, Fairfield, Des Moines, West Liberty, Iowa City, Atlantic, Avoca, Audubon, Harlan, Guthrie Center and Council Bluffs, in Iowa; Gallatin, Trenton, Cameron and Kansas City, in Missouri, and Leavenworth and Atchison in Kansas, and the hundreds of cities, villages and towns intermediate. The

"GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE,"

As it is familiarly called, offers to travelers all the advantages and comforts incident to a smooth track, safe bridges, Union Depots at all connecting points, Fast Express Trains, composed of COMMODIOUS, WELL VENTILATED, WELL HEATED, FINELY UPHOLSTERED and ELEGANT DAY COACHES; a line of the MOST MAGNIFICENT HORTON RECLINING CHAIR CARS ever built; PULLMAN'S latest designed and handsomest PALACE SLEEPING CARS, and DINING CARS that are acknowledged by press and people to be the FINEST RUN UPON ANY ROAD IN THE COUNTRY, and in which superior meals are served to travelers at the low rate of SEVENTY-FIVE CENTS EACH.

THREE TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and the MISSOURI RIVER.

TWO TRAINS each way between CHICAGO and MINNEAPOLIS and ST. PAUL, via the famous

ALBERT LEA ROUTE.

A New and Direct Line, via Seneca and Kankakee, has recently been opened, between Newport News, Richmond, Cincinnati, Indianapolis and La Fayette, and Council Bluffs, St. Paul, Minneapolis and intermediate points.

All Through Passengers carried on Fast Express Trains.

For more detailed information, see Maps and Folders, which may be obtained, as well as Tickets, at all principal Ticket Offices in the United States and Canada, or of

R. R. CABLE,
Vice-Pres't & Gen'l Manager,

E. ST. JOHN,
Gen'l T'k't & Pass'r Ag't

CHICAGO.

The Standard.

MARKDALE FEB. 14, 1884.

CHEESE FACTORY.

We are glad to learn that practical preparations are being made, and that with good prospects for success, for the establishment of a Cheese Factory in the vicinity of Markdale. Messrs. Thos. Elliott, jr., and J. H. Carson have drawn up an agreement to build and operate the factory a mile and a quarter North-East of this village, to be ready for operation the coming spring, provided the milk of 200 cows will be guaranteed for three years. They have now ——— on their list and a meeting will be called soon for the purpose of electing officers to transact the business of the company. This will be a boom to the farmers of this district and we hope to see them give it their unanimous support. The uncertainty of success in raising grain crops is becoming more evident from year to year, and will compel the agriculturist to turn his attention to stock and darying, and we have no doubt the time is not far distant when this country will be dotted with cheese and butter factories, thereby greatly diminishing the labor of farmers and their wives, and at the same time increasing the profits of farming. We understand some of our well-to-do farmers purpose doubling the number of cows they have kept in the past, in view of the cheese factory, and we have no doubt the results will be satisfactory. We have known Mr. Elliott (one of the proprietors) for a number of years and can vouch for him as a man of undoubted integrity, and wish him success.

[Since the above was in type the number of cows necesssary have been promised and a meeting is called for Saturday, 23rd February, in the Orange Hall, Markdale, at 2 o'clock sharp, for the purpose of organizing and electing officers for the management of the business.]

PUBLISHERS MEETING.

According to notice a meeting of the fourth estate took place at the Markdale House, in this village, on Friday last. The attendance was not as large as could have been wished, however a majority was present and many of those absent signified their willingness. either by card or telegram to abide by the decision of those present. An association was therefore organized to be known as the Counties of Grey & Dufferin Publishers Association, and the following officers elected: John Rutherford, job printer, Owen Sound, President; W. L. Smith, Shelburne Economist, 1st vice President; Mr. Grier, Thornbury Venture, 2nd vice president; J. Townsend Grey Review, Durham, Secretary; C. W. Rutledge, Markdale Standard, Treasurer.

After adopting the rules and tariff laid down in the Bruce Co. Association, consisting almost en blocke, the meetting adjourned to meet at the call of the executive committee.

Local Pointers.

Mr. Cherry is in possession at the Revere.

J. H. Hull, is going into the coopering again.

Square timber is coming freely to the station.

Also cordwood.

The school is well attended.

Very little sickness in the neighborhood.

Except bad colds.

Who ever had a good one.

It's time the hens were getting to business.

Making provisions for Easter.

Which comes on the 13th April.

Sleighing has been excellent the past week.

And the weather mild.

A number of Publishers of Grey and Bruce met in Markdale last Friday.

PHRENOLOGY.

Phrenology as a system of mental philosophy; is no longer looked upon by intelligent men as an occult science, or a study of the mystics. It is preeminently adapted to be the mental science of the people. All the old school systems of metaphysics and anthropology appeared to regard mind and body as if they had little or no essential relations with each other. They treated of mind as if it were in its commonest manifestations and operations, in its relations to this life as well as in its higher activities, something so purely spiritual as to be wholly independent of material organs or physical conditions. The authors of the various works on these subjects did not agree among themselves as to the number and nature of the innate mental faculties; they gave us no guide in predicating character. Their teachings were of no practical utility and were little known or noticed beyond the circles of college teachers and certain classes in the professions. Phrenology studies the brain as the instrument of the mind. It maintains that the mind, however spiritual in itself, operates in this life only by means of material organs. In this phrenology appears to be correct, for it is certain that the mind can never work efficiently and continuously when the brain is not properly supported by a plentiful supply of vitality, furnished by an abundance of pure, healthy blood. It is well known that the nerves of motion and of the senses centre in the brain, and convey to it all the impressions made on them.

The distinctive doctrine of phrenology, however, is that of the plurality of the organs of the mental faculties; that the brain is not a unit but is composed of as many different organs as the mind has distinct and inherent faculties. This principle appears to have claims to due notice and consideration, for, this being true, we perceive that one faculty may be strong and another weak, that is in phrenological language, one organ large and another small in the same brain, and this agrees with what is found in actual life. Some men have been known to possess good intelligence and common sense, even a high order of talent in many of the pursuits of life, while as regards the faculty of calculation for example they could not comprehend the multiplication table. George Combe, of Edinborough, was a case in point. Sir Walter Scott, though a genius in poetry and belles lettres, was so defective in the faculty of tune that he could scarcely distinguish Yankee Doodle from Old Hundred.

Few well informed men of the present day will venture to assert that it is of no significence whether the head be large or small, high or low, broad or narrow, or whether it be prominent or receding in the forehead. Some persons, however, seem to think there are two sides to the question. The people naturally look to professional men and especially physicians for their opinion, these look to the universities. The universities opposed Dr. Gall when he announced his science of brain and mind, the professors of those universities ridiculed him, but we must remember that they laughed at Dr. Harvey when he announced his discovery of the circulation of the blood, at Galileo when he asserted that the earth revolves on its axis. The circulation of the blood, when the idea was pooh-poohed by the learned (?) professors, was nevertheless as much a physiological fact as it is to-day, and phrenology is as much a truth to-day as it shall be when Harvard and Yale, Oxford and Cambridge, with all due dignity and decorum will give their dictum in its favor, and pronounce it a science. Professional men will then, of course, hasten to proclaim their belief in it, and declare that they always believed it.

Let us then hear this subject discussed by all means, and let us know what is in our heads. Effeminate dandies may suppose that the head was intended for a hat block, and belles may lisp that "it wath made to hang curlth on," but men of sense believe that the head indicates the size and configuation of the brain, that on the conditions and developments of the brain depend the powers and manifestations of the mind; that the brain has as many organs as the mind has faculties, and that those faculties may be increased or diminished in activity and power, and this appears to be in brief the sum of phrenology.

Personals.

Mr. Wm. Norton, Deputy Reeve of Holland, gave us a call on Monday.

Mr. James Scott, of Innisfil township, is visiting friends in Glenelg.

Mr. Fuller, Artist, was in town over Sunday.

Mr. & Mrs. J. W. Elliott, of Chatsworth, were in town last week.

Mr. Popham, of Toronto, is visiting friends in Markdale.

Always Ahead.

Our enterprising townsman Mr. W. J. McFarland, is having his large establishment lit with gas which will in a few days take the place of the present host of coal oil lamps. There will be 33 jets which will no doubt add very materially to the appearance of his fine premises. This is the first time and place gas has been introduced in Markdale.

Sad Accident.

On Monday morning Miss Hazard, a young woman of about 20 years, daughter of Mr. John Hazard, of Artemesia, while on her way to Flesherton Station to take the morning train, was overtaken on the track by the early express in a cut near the above station. It appears she was unable to leave the track owing to the heavy snow cut, and not being yet day light the driver did not see her in time to stop the train, which passed over the unfortunate young woman, severing one of her legs near the knee. She now lies in a critical condition under the care of Dr. Christoe, who has hopes of her recovery.

IMPORTED NOTICE.—Post office positevely closed at 7 o'clock p. m. Any person calling for mail matter or stamps after that hour will be refused. W. J. McFARLAND, postmaster.

AN ANSWER WANTED.

Can any one bring us a case of kidney or liver complaint that Electric Bitters will not speedily cure? We say they can not, as thousands of cases already permanently cured and who are daily recommending Electric Bitters, will prove. Bright's disease, diabetes, weak back, or any urinary complaint quickly cured. They purify the Blood regulate the bowels, and act directly on the diseased parts. Every bottle guaranteed. For sale at 50 cents a bottle by A. Turner & Co., Markdale. 1

NEIGHBORS are very considerate in Norway. When a baby is born a placard is nailed up on the door informing the community of the fact. Those who wish to move out of the vicinity are thus enabled to do so in good season.

Credit Sale Register.

FRIDAY FEB. 22.—Mr. Thomas Mann, on lot 1, con. 8, Euphrasia, town line Artemesia 2½ miles from Markdale, large quantity of Stock, Implements, choice seed oats (Egyption,) Hay &c., &c. Terms, sums over $5 ten months credit on approved joint notes. Sale to commence at one o'clock. Geo. Noble, Auctioneer.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12.—At lot 1, con. 4, Sydenham. Extensive sale of bred horses, cattle, sheep, also implements &c., sale to commence at 12 o'clock noon. Terms, 12 months credit on approved paper on sums over $5. Mr. Geo. Inglis, proprietor; W. J. Shepherdson, auctioneer.

MARKDALE

HARNESS EMPORIUM

ESTABLISHED 19 YEARS.

THOS. MATTHEWS, Proprietor

Nothing but good stock used and the best mechanics employed. A stock of Double and Single, Heavy and Light Harness always on hand. Also Whips, Trunks, Valises, Blankets, Robes, &c., always in stock.

Market Reports.

MARKDALE.

Fall Wheat	$0 60	to	$1 00
Spring Wheat	0 40	to	1 00
Barley	42	to	60
Peas	60	to	66
Oat	25	to	27
Butter	15	to	17
Eggs	22	to	00
Potatoes	30	to	00
Hay	7 00	to	0 00
Pork	7 00	to	7 50
Flour	4 75	to	5 00

FLESHERTON.

Fall Wheat, $0.60 to $1.00; Spring, $0.40 to $1.00; Barley, 35c; Peas, 60c; Oats, 20c Butter, 17c; Eggs, 20c; Potatoes, 40 c; Hay, $7 .50 Pork, $7.00 to $7 25

TORONTO.

Fall Wheat, $1.00 to $1.06; Spring, $1.11 to $1.13; Barley, 62c to 69c; Oats, 37c to 38c Peas, 72c to 74c; Hogs, $7.59 to $8.00; Potatoes, per bus. 60c to $65c; Butter, dairy, 18c to 19c; eggs, 22c to 25c.

DON'T

. READ

THIS.

Having purchased the Grocery and Liquor business of A. McIntyre, Markdale, I have added a fresh and complete stock of

Groceries AND Provisions

Consisting of fine Teas, Sugar, Tobacco, Dried Apples, Cheese, Flour, Fruit, Confectionery, Mince Meat, Jams, Jelly, Pickles, canned Fruit, Glassware, Crockery, &c., &c.

Also the best brand of

LIQUOR AND CIGARS

alwaws in stock.

A share of your patronage respectfully solicited.

NORMAN McINTYRE

Proprietor.

W. P. PATERSON,

Manager.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,

CASKETS,

SHROUDS,

and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia, for the year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

NOTICE.

All parties indebted to the undersigned are hereby requested to pay the same to A. Turner, Markdale. He is the only person in Markdale authorized to receive monies due me and to give receipts therefor.

175-77. T. S. SPROULE, M.D.

FOR SALE.

Dwelling House, shop Suitable for grocery store, or other business with dwelling above, and stable on the lot on mill street, corner lot, good business stand apply to S. DAMUDE, Flesherton, or C. W. RUTLEDGE, Markdale.

LOGS WANTED.

The undersigned is prepared to buy all the Baswood, Butternut, Ash, Hemlock and Maple saw logs perfectly sound, to be delivered at Davis' Mill, Meaford Road, for which the highest price will be given in cash. Parties bringing custom logs can get them cut either on shares or by the thousand, satisfaction guaranteed as the proprietor has engaged a first class sawyer.

EDWARD DAVIS,

Proprietor.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are cleared and under cultivation. Lot 8 part 15, con. 12, Holland, 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg, 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,

Markdale.

Oct. 16. 1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 118, con. 1, West T & S. R., Artemesia, containing 50 acres, more or less, all cleared and under cultivation. A good bank barn, and dwelling house on the premises, also a thriving young orchard just commencing to bear situated about 2¼ miles from the thriving village of Markdale. For Terms and particulars apply at this office or to

JOHN HAZARD,

Flesherton Station

FARM FOR SALE.

To sell or rent Lot S ½ 14, Con. 9, Euphrasia, 8 miles from Markdale and 3 from Rocklyn, containing 100 acres, 70 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation, fit to run reaper and mower and balance hardwood bush with sufficient cedar for fencing. Well watered with never failing spring only 10 rods from barn. Has a young orchard, house barn and stable. There is a new steam saw mill on next farm to it. Clear deed can be given. For further particulars apply on the premises to

SAMUEL WRIGHT.

Rocklyn P.O.

CLYDESDALE STALLION FOR SALE.

That splendid Clydesdale Stallion "Scottish Champion," from imported stock, and the property of Wm. Shepherdson, will be sold cheap. The horse stands 16½ hands high, is 5 years old, jet black in color and a sure foal getter. Any one wishing to get a bargain should take advantage of this offer. Stock taken in part payment. Also a few pure bred Cotswold Rams and a fine Berkshire Boar for sale. Address to the undersigned, Lot 23, Con. 11.

W. J. SHEPHERDSON,

Blantyre P.O.

Franco - Chinese War.

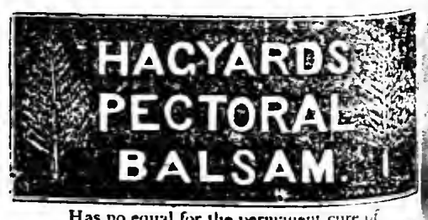
Notwithstanding the desolating war now raging in China it will not increase the price of Teas at the

Belfast House, Markdale.

Having imported prior to the opening of hostilities, a sufficient quantity to supply 20,000 MEN for a period of 12 months. In other departments of the Grocery trade the BELFAST HOUSE has KILLED BY THOUSAND those who assume to transact business by purchasing of small dealers exorbitant rates of interest on long credit. Our imports of

PRESERVED MEATS, SALMON, LOBSTERS, SARDINES, HAMS, BACON, ASSORTED PICKELS

and every articles in the grocery trade



LIQUORS

Of the best brands and quality. Wine for Sacramental purposes warranted pure. Brandies direct from the manufacturer and all other kinds of liquors. Coffees, Teas and Tobaccoes cannot fail to give satisfaction. Oranges, Lemons, &c. Family Flour supplied at Lowest Rates.

THOS. McNEA.

BELFAST HOUSE, - MARKDALE

Feb. 6th, 1884.

Has no equal for the permanent cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and all Lung Diseases.

Every bottle guaranteed to give satisfaction.

T. MILBURN & CO., Proprietors Toronto.

STANDARD TIME.

A fine assortment of watches Clocks, Rings, Chains, Setts, Buttons, Specks, Charms, &c. Also an extra line of Electro-plated goods for table use.

Watch and clock repairing personaliy, attended to and guaranteed. Honest charges.

W. A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

MARKDALE.

Local and Other Items.

NOTICES in these columns intended to benefit any individual or Society will be charged ten cents a line for the first insertion and five cents a line each subsequent insertion.

GLASCOTT correspondence came too late for this week.

REMEMBER the social to morrow evening (Friday) in the Methodist Church.

FIFTY CORDS four-foot wood wanted at the Markdale Planing Factory, Geo. Grant & Co.

MRS. ELIZA BROWN had a cow and two calves drowned while watering at a pond on her farm recently.

AN X-L-N-T time is expected at the young peoples' social, Friday evening, at the Methodist church.

FRESH groceries and provisions at N. McIntyre's, also Choice Liquors, See adv. in another column.

ACCORDING to the Bureau of Industries, Grey had the largest wheat production last year of any county in the Province.

TAYLOR & MORRISON'S soap factory in Toronto, was destroyed by fire on Tuesday night. Loss $50,000, insured for $30,000.

FRIEND WILCOX, of Silver City, will please accept thanks for $1. for STANDARD for '84. also Mrs. A. Milton, Long Rapids, Mich.

MR. JAMES ALLEN, lately elected Reeve of Amabel, was presented with a handsome chair on his return from the County Council.

WHY is a newspaper like a tooth brush? Do you give it up? Because every one should have one of his own, and not be borrowing his neighbor's.

WHAT you need madam said a distinguished physician to a lady in delicate health, is a cup of McFarlan's pure Japan tea three times daily.

PROF. CAMPBELL, Phrenologist, will please accept the thanks of Mr. Norris, head teacher, for a number of complimentary tickets to his lecture, for the best boys in the school.

THE party who found a horse blanket at Ebenezer church, town line Artemesia and Euphrasia on the 5th February, will please return it to Wm. Hutchinson and oblige.

WE HAVE just measured a bunch of wool pulled from a lamb belonging to Mr. W. J. Shepherdson, sheep breeder of Euphrasia, which measures 18½ inches. It pays to raise good sheep and Mr. S. knows it.

W. J. SHEPAERDSON, auctioneer, has an extensive sale of high grade cattle for Mr. Donald McNaughton, lot 1, con. 8, Euphrasia. The proprietor is retiring and the sale will be a genuine one, to take place on the 3rd of March.

BUCKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

The best Salve in the world for cuts, bruises sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns, and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay required. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For Sale by A. Turner & Co.

THE Carnival number of the Star has sold like hot cakes, over 150.000 copies have already been disposed of, every person should have one, Mr. Brown, news agent, has ordered a large number which will be to hand next week, be sure you get one, only 10 cents each. It is magnificently illustrated.

PROFESSOR CAMPBELL, the celebrated Phrenologist, (20 years practice) has taken rooms for professional examinations in practical Phrenology at the Markdale House, where he will stay for a few days only. Terms moderate. Lectures at Orange Hall this week. See posters.

FOR FIRST class axe handles go to Finnerty's shop, Elizabeth st., opposit the bank, Markdale. You can bring your own timber and have them made to order, or you can get them ready made at the shop. Sign of the Big Axe Handle. 179-85

TWENTY-ONE load of cord wood were driven through the village in a string, Wednesday, when one fellow, determined to reach the station first and in a bold attempt to drive past his companions, dumped his load in the Ditch, so the first was last and the last first.

MR. GRIER, of the Thornbury Venture, lost a fine horse while attending the meeting of publishers in this village last Friday. The animal took inflammation and died in a few hours.

OUR copy of "Mother Home and Heaven," purchased from Mr. D. K. McPherson, is to hand and is all that is said of it, in the numerous testimonials produced in the STANDARD last week from the best authorities. We doubt if there is a book in the English language better adapted to elevate and refine the character of the reader than this.

A STARANGER was in Markdale this week selling a book of ninety pages, "Kendall's Spavin Cure," for prices varying from 30 to 50 cents. We have a stock of the same at the STANDARD office which we will sell at 15 cents each, or give one with the STANDARD a year, for $1, cash.

A PROFITABLE INVESTMENT.—A subscriber informed us that he saved $3 in the following manner, by reading our paper: A cheap trip to Toronto was advertised in the STANDARD last summer which he would not otherwise have known. Having business in the city he took advantage of the cheap fare and thus saved enough to pay for the paper three years.

DR. CAMPBELL, Professor of Phrenology is delivering a series of lectures in the Orange Hall and is drawing crowds. He is master of his subject, which is a most interesting one, and is a pleasent and fluent speaker and commands deep attention and high respect. Those who miss these lectures will not likely have the opportuniy of such a rare treat for many a day.

WE MAILED last Saterday a parcel of printed matter to Williamsford Station. It was delivered with other mail matter on the noon train going north and did not reach Williamsford Station Post Office until the following Tuesday. What we would like to know, is where the parcel was all this time.

OWING to heavy rains the Ohio river has risen and overflowed the Ohio valley causing great destruction of property and in many instances loss of life, thousands are left without home or shelter, a great portion of some villages are swept away, and desolation and want is the portion of multi-multitudes. The Arkansas river is also rising.

THE SONS.—The Ebenezer church lodge of the Sons of Temprance held an open lodge on Tuesday evening the 5th inst., when they had a crowded house. The entertainment consisted of readings, recitations, music &c. which was rendered in a very creditable manner. This lodge numbers 35 members, and five more applications received.

WHY is $1. paid for a newspaper subscription often considered a greater investment than the same amount for anything else? Because you are reminded of it every time you take up the paper to learn the news of the district and the world throughout the year, while the dollar spent for drinks or such like is gone and you have nothing for it, to remind you of the cost.

THE Holland Centre lodge of the Canadian Order of Oddellows will give an intertainment in the town hall at that place on Wednesday evening Feb. 20th, Tea will be served from 6 to 7 o'clock. The Grand Master and Deputy Master will address the audience, also Rev. J. Hart, and others. The committee are determined to make it a success. Tickets 25 cents.

THE young people of the Methodist church of Markdale will give a Social in the church on Friday evening the 15th. Our young friends are making vigorous efforts to make the entertainment a success and we have no doubt they will succeed. The program will consist of Music, Readings, Resitations, Addresses &c. doors open at 7, refreshments at 7.30. Admission 15 cents. A cordial invitation is extended to all.

L. O. Co. L. SOUTH GREY.—The annual meeting of L. O. County Lodge of South Grey was held in the Orange Hall, in the town of Durham, on Tuesday Febuary 5th, when the following were elected officers for the current year, vis:—W. C. M, Bro. J. Edge; D. C. M, Bro. R. Aljoe; C. Chaplain; G. Rutherford; Secretary, W. Brigham; Treasurer, W. A. Anderson; D. of Cer. J. McArdle; Lecturer, C. Brodie; P. C. M, Bro. I. Brodie.

THE SOCIAL under the auspices of the ladies Association of the Presbyterian church held at Mr. Thos. Murray's, came off very successfully. The roads were good the weather fine. consequently the house was crowded, quite a large number drove out from Markdale. A plesent and enjoyable time was spent. During the evening a large three story fruit cakewas presented and Miss Logan, of Markdale, and Miss Donnelly, of Glenelg, nominated as candidates, a spirited contest followed resulting in a victory for the latter. Proceeds of social $31.

WANTED A HANDKERCHIEF.—On Saturday night last at the auction sale on Poulett-street, an urchin named Thistle, who saw everything going so cheap, thought he would take a silk handkerchief without going through the form of bidding on it. Mr. Trimble, however, objected, and the youth with the æsthetic taste will occupy an apartment for a week at the mansion on Bay-street provided by Her Majesty for such high-toned ducks.

L. O. COUNTY LODGE.—The annual meeting of this Lodge was held in the Council Chamber, Owen Sound, on Tuesday last—upwards of sixty members being present. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—Robt. Hoath, C. M.; Thos. Henry, D. C. M.; Rev. J. S. Corcoran, Chaplain; Jas. H. Deleree, Sec.; Robt. Malcom, Treas.; Thos. Gilray, D. of C.; John Elliott, Lecturer; A L. Henry and George Fleming. Assistant Lecturers. The semi-annual meeting will be held at Chatsworth. O. S. Times.

WE ARE glad to note that our esteemed friend, Mr. Robt. Freeborn, of lot 41, 1st West, T. & S. Road, Holland, has purchased from Mr. G. S. Brown, of Meaford, two thoroughbred cows in-calf to the St. Vincent Stock Company's bull. He has also two bull calves with registered pedigree, purchased from the same party, one of which he wishes to dispose of. Mr. Brown has purchased from R. Freeborn his stallion, "Young Marquis of Lorne," which Mr. Jas. Sproule so successfully travelled the season before last. Mr. Brown's health necessitates a trip to Florida and he will dispose of the above stallion.

Abstract Statement

—OF THE—

TREASURER'S RECEIPTS and EXPENDITURES

—FOR THE—

TOWNSHIP OF GLENELG.

FOR THE YEAR ENDING 31ST DECEMBER, 1883.

RECEIPTS.		EXPENDITURES.
To Balance from 1882	$ 150 77	By County rate	$2425 87
" Assessments	9097 23	" Roads and bridges	1450 08
" Licence Fund	179 17	" Salaries	597 70
" Clergy Reserve Fund	43 10	" School moneys	4501 21
" Land Improvement Fund	352 73	" Sinking Fund	1000 00
" Interest	3 00	" Election expenses	69 50
" Non-resident from Co. treasurer	430 75	" Taxes refunded	14 30
" Miscellaneous	4 75	" Charities	34 84
		" Printing, post and stationery	95 54
		" Law fees	1 53
		" Miscellaneous	53 90
		" Balance on hand	17 03
Total	$10261 50	Total	$10261 50

We, the undersigned auditors, certify that we have examined the Treasurer's books for 1883, of the municipality of Glenelg, and found them correct, and in accordance with vouchers produced. Balance on hand 31st December, 1883, as above.

And we would also recognize the very efficient manner in which the Treasurer keeps the books and accounts of the township, and the great responsibility resting upon him in the discharge of his duties.

GEO. BINNIE,
JOHN McDONALD, } AUDITORS.

PRIZES were awarded the children of Ebenezer Sabbath School on the 10th inst. Special prizes were offered by some of the friends at the commencement of the year, which were won as follows: For punctuality, Jas. Nelson; general proficiency, 1st, Delena Stinson; 2nd Nettie Richardson; 3rd Jas. Stinson. On reviews, 1st, Delena Stinson; 2nd, Nettie Richardson; 3rd James Stinson. School prizes, intermediate class, (girls,) 1st, Delena Stinson; 2nd Mary, Gould; 3rd, Nettie Richardson. (Boys,) 1st, James Stinson; 2nd, Geo. Sewell; 3rd, Alphinus Milligan. Juvenile class, (girls,) 1st, Elsie Richardson; 2nd, Mary Freeman, 3rd Mable Gould. (Boys,) 1st, Richard Douglas; 2nd, Robt. Sewell; 3rd W. Shears. Infant class, Maggie Heath. Average attendance, thirty-one.—COM.

HAMILTON'S

PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY

MARKDALE.

OVER THE STANDARD OFFICE.

Fine work executed in all the latest sizes and shapes, fully equal to city work. Special attention given to

FRAMING

A large stock of moulding to choose from.

Call and leave your measure for a picture.

Jas. Hamilton.

2,000,000

SUBSCRIBERS

Want it for 1884. The AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST to-day is better than ever before. We have increased our corps of Editors and Artists, enlarged and added to our Departments until the Periodical is now the recognized leading Agricultural Journal of the world, presenting in every issue 100 Columns of Original Reading Matter from the ablest writers, and nearly 100 Original Illustrations It is to the interest of every one whose subscription has expired or who changing his place of residence, or moving West, has for the time being dropped out of our Great Army of Subscribers to

COME BACK

and accept of our unparalleled offer of the

AMERICAN AGRICULTURIST

For 1884 A $4 Periodical.

A 600-PAGE DICTIONARY,
1000 ILLUSTRATIONS.

"FOES OR FRIENDS?"
MORRIS' 11x18 SUPERB PLATE ENGRAVINGS

"IN THE MEADOW"
Dupre's 12x17 Superb Plate Engraving.

—OR—

12 PIECES OF SHEET MUSIC,
In Place of the Dictionary,

ALL for $1.70
POST-PAID.

Active Canvassers Wanted.

Send two 2-cent stamps for a Sample Copy, and see what a Wonderful Paper it is now. Address

Orange Judd Co.

751 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

David W. Judd, PRESIDENT.

WINES AND LIQUORS

CHOICE BRANDS.

Brandy in Hogsheads.
Scotch and Irish Whiskey in Qr. Casks.
Holland Gin in Qr. Casks.
Jamacia Rum in Qr. Casks.
Fine Old Port and Sherry in Qr. Casks.
Native Wine in Qr. Casks.
Five-year-old Rye Whiskey in Barrels.
White Wheat Whiskey in Barrel.
Rye and Malt Whiskey in Barrels.
Domestic Whiskey in Barrels.
Liquors in Cases.
Bottled Ale and Porter

H. PARKER,

Druggist, - DURHAM.

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKERY.

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand.

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS - TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169 90.

Burdock BLOOD BITTERS.

WILL CURE OR RELIEVE

BILIOUSNESS, DYSPEPSIA, INDIGESTION, JAUNDICE, ERYSIPELAS, SALT RHEUM, HEARTBURN, HEADACHE, DIZZINESS, DROPSY, FLUTTERING OF THE HEART, ACIDITY OF THE STOMACH, DRYNESS OF THE SKIN,

And every species of disease arising from disordered LIVER, KIDNEYS, STOMACH, BOWELS OR BLOOD,

T. MILBURN & CO., Proprietors, TORONTO.

DUELLING IN THE DARK.

Famous Midnight Meetings on the Field of Honor—The Affair of the Due de Richelieu and Prince De Lixen —Jackson's Last Duel.

Night combats have been frequent in Europe, and also in the United States. In 1821, in London, England, a barrister, named Christie, and the editor of The London Magazine, Mr. Scott, fought a duel, so-called, at Chalk farm, and the latter was killed. The original trouble occurred beween Mr. Scott and Mr. Lockhart, the latter-named gentleman at that time editor of Blackwood's Magazine; and, it seems, Scott, who had been challenged by Lockhart, and who had declined to accept, was called upon by Christie, and the two quarreled, and subsequently agreed to meet the same evening to adjust their difficulties according to the "code of honor." The fight took place at 10 o'clock, during the full of the moon, and Scott fell mortally wounded at the first fire. Christie was arrested and charged with willful murder by a coroner's jury, but at the trial a short time afterward he was acquitted.

In 1721, Capt. Chickley and Lieut. Stanley, while disputing in a mess-room in a town near Dublin (Ireland), agreed to fight with small swords in a dark room the following evening. Stanley was an adroit swordsmen, but was run through the body by his antagonist in a few minutes after the commencement of the fight.

Maj. Campbell and Capt. Boyd, officers of the 21st foot (British army), fought a duel, without seconds, in the parlor of an Irish inn at Newry, a short time before midnight, in January, 1807. During the dispute Campbell challenged his brother officer to fight at once, but Boyd prefered that the meeting should take place next day. Campbell then taunted his comrade, and insinuated that he was displaying the white feather. The result was that they left the garrison where they were quarterd, unaccompanied by friends, and fought as stated, Capt. Boyd receiving a mortal wound, from which he died in a day or two. Campbell was convicted of murder on the 13th of August following, and executed on Oct. 2. His wife, who belonged to a family of high standing, made a desperate effort to secure royal clemency, but, as is known, without success. Boyd's last words were: "Campbell, you are a bad man; you hurried me in a most wanton way, and have mortally wounded me in a fight of your own making and not according to established rules. I wanted to wait and have the matter put into the hands of friends, and you would not let me." This terrible arraignment by the ing man was as effective as the death-warrant itself, and carried convict on before indictment. In a letter which Campbell left for publication he said: "I suffer a violent and ignominious death for the benefit of my countrymen, who, by my unhappy exit, shall learn to abhor the too prevalent and too fashionable crime of duelling." The writer once met a gentleman who was present at the execution of Campbell, who said he (Campbell) was one of the handsomest and bravest officers of the 21st British foot. While of an excitable nature when angered, it is said of him that he was generally far more amiable and much less disagreeable than Boyd, although they had long been on terms of mutual dislike of each other. The night before the execution Mrs. Campbell had managed to perfect methods of escape, as it was pretty generally understaod that, although no royal mercy could be extended, no particular means of vigilance had been adopted. His noble wife, who had planned the escape, reminded him of his heroic conduct in Egypt, of his family name, and of the unheeded recommendation of mercy by the jury which pronounced the fatal words. But he only replied: "The greatest struggle of all is to leave you, my darling; but I am still a soldier, and shall meet my fate like a man." And so he refused to further dishonor himself, although the guard was asleep, the doors of the jail were unlocked, and horses and confederates were close at hand. He passed the following morning in prayer, and at the proper time ascended the stairs of the execution-room with firm step and without escort. There stood before him nineteen thousand sympathising men with heads uncovered, and among them the fusileers, with whom he had intrepidly charged the enemy upon the burning sands of Egypt. The hum of a single bee might have been heard in that respectful crowd, as Campbell addressed it, "Pray for me," was all the poor soldier said; and, while the diapason of an impressive "amen" went up unbroken by a single other vociferation, or even whisper, the unfortunate man let fall his own cambric handkerchief as a signal that he "was ready," and simultaneously he dropped through the dreadful trap, and went off on that uncertain pilgrimage to the legendary beyond.

The notorious Duc de Richelieu, of France, who fought so many successful duels, and who seemed to wield a magician's sword, met the Prince de Lixen—whom he had purposely insulted on account of the hatred entertained for the latter by Mme. du Rosiere—near the trenches of Philipsburg, in 1879, at midnight, during a storm, by the light of torches held by brother officers. As the story goes, De Lixen, who was a general in the French army (and a very tall man), had had a horse shot from under him during an engagement; and seeing a pony near, jumped upon him and rode into the presence of De Richelieu (who was also a general at the time), who burst into a loud laugh and exclaimed: "No wonder we lost the day when we have mountebanks for generals. Behold the horsemanship of the great Prince de Lixin, who keeps his feet close to the ground for fear of falling from his saddle." The Prince heard De Richelieus's voice and laugh, and too well knew what it meant, and the source of its inspiration. "I'll insult the villain in no uncertain way upon the first opportunity," murmured De Lixen. The next day Richelieu whose command had been the last to retreat from Philipsbourg, came into the presence of Prince de Conti, the commanding officer, with disheveled hair, powder-stained face, and deranged toilet. His rival took this occasion to carry out his quiet threat of the day preceding, and said sarcastically: "It is a matter of much surprise that the Duc de Richelieu should come into the presence of gentlemen with the air and dress of a masquerader." "I did not retreat so hurriedly from the field as some of these officers who appear here in toilets more elaborately prepared, your highness," exclaimed De Richelieu, and then turning to De Lixen, he continued: "I shall go now and purify myself, prince, and in an hour you shall hear from me." And so he did, in the shape of a challenge, which was accepted; after which arrangements were made and agreed upon that the two gentlemen should meet each other in the trenches at midnight. They met and crossed swords at exactly 12, and in ten minutes the magical weapon of De Richelieu had flashed through the heart of his twentieth victim, and the survivor, stepping over the dead prince, said: "Let us carefully bear his noble body with all honor to camp. It is the fortune of war, gentlemen, and may be our turn next." In a short time afterward De Richelieu went to Paris to acquaint his inamorata with the intelligence that he had removed one of her troubles from the world forever. But what was his astonishment to discover that the frail and faithless Mme. du Rosiere had fled with an English nobleman to London. Quien sabe?

Some few years ago Maj. Ben. Perley Boore, then Washington correspondent to The Boston Journal, sent that paper the following account of a midnight duel foughf upon an island in the Savannah river:

Among the many bloody duels on record as having been fought by congressmen was one in which James Jackson, of Georgia, who had been and who was afterward a United States Senator, was the challenged party. He was an Englishman by birth, but he went to Savannah when a lad, studied law, was a leading Freemason, and fought gallantly in the Revolutionary war. He killed Lieut.-Gov. Wells, of Georgia, in 1870 in a duel, and was engaged in several other "affairs of honor," until he finally determined to accept a challenge on such terms as would make it his last duel. So, upon his next challenge, which was from Col. R. Watkins, also of Georgia, he prescribed as the terms, that each party, armed with a double-barreled gun loaded with buckshot, and with a hunting-knife, should row himself in a skiff to designated points on opposite sides of the Savannah river. When the city clock struck 12 each should row his skiff to a small island in the middle of the river, which was wooded and covered with underbrush. On arriving at the island each was to moor his skiff, stand by it for ten minutes, and then go about on the island till the meeting took place. The seconds waited on the main land until 1 o'clock, when they heard three gunshots and loud and angry cries. Then all was still. At daylight, as had been agreed upon, the seconds went to the island and found Jackson lying on the ground, insensible from the loss of blood, and his antagonist lying across him, dead. Jackson recovered, but would never relate his experience on that night, nor was he ever challenged again. He died in Washington city while serving his second term as United States senator, March 19, 1806

In 1728 a young gentleman named Benjamin Woodbridge was killed in a duel with swords, late at night, on Boston common by Harry Phillips, after a short combat. Phillips, who was not hurt, made his escape from the city next day, and later turned up in Franre, where he died in 1729.

Eugens Bonnemere, in his "Histoire des Paysans," tells the story of how a peasant by the name of Lebre, who lived in the south of France, got more than even with a sergeant of the royal guard, which was quartered near Lebre's cabin. It was towards the end of the seventeenth century, and the sergeant, presuming upon his gallantry and manly beauty, and knowing the proverbial weakness of some women for even non commissioned officers of his profession, took occasion to pay marked attention to Lebre's young and pretty wife; which, while being strictly agreeable to pretty Mrs. L—, was highly unsatisfactory to the incensed husband, who, at last, gave Mr. Segt. Duprez a piece of proper advice, and was promptly knocked down for his pains. Lebre at once challenged his antagonist, who declined to recognize a common peasant as his equal, and shutting Lebre out of his own cottage, took immediate possession of it and its pretty matron. In a day or two the sergeant quit the place for good, and Lebre returned, sold all his effects, packed the erring madame off to her father's, enlisted in the army, and was seen no more in that neighborhood for more than eight years. He fought through two campaigns bravely, but without a scratch, and by gradual promotion reached the rank of sergeant. "Aha!" cried Lebre joyfully, at the end of six years service, "Sergt. Duprez, Sergt. Lebre is your equal! I shall seek you out, you villain, and punish you for the wrongs which I suffered at your hands six years ago." Lebre was two years in finding his man. And when he did find him they were at the point of sitting down at the same dinner table with a dozen other officers of about uniform rank. As soon as the repast was over, Lebre arose, and addressing Duprez inquired: "Suppose, sir, a man should give you a blow, what would you do?" "I would return it, and challenge him to fight," responded Duprez. "Take that, then!" exclaimed Lebre, dealing his old enemy a tremendous blow, which staggered him considerably; and then addressing himself to his other comrades, he recapitulated the story of how Duprez had knocked him down for defending his wife, and thereafter refusing to fight him on the ground that he was not Duprez' equal. "Now, Sergt. Duprez," ejaculated that fellow's assailant, turning around and facing his enemy, "you and I are equal. I have returned the blow you gave me eight years ago, and now challenge you to fight for your life." And as quick as lightning the two sergeants drew their weapons, and Duprez was killed in three minutes, the duel taking place by candlelight.

In 1719, in London, England, Capt. William Aldworth, of the army, and Owen Buckingham, member of parliament, met and dined, and quarreled, and fought, all in one evening. It was so dark they could not see each other, and they were so thoroughly well intoxicated that it did not make much difference whether they did or not see each other; but all the same, there was one less member of parliament the following morning for Buckingham was found by some friends shortly after the fight, pierced to the heart with his antagonist's rapier, and Aldworth near by, very drunk, and covered with wounds.

University place, New York, N. Y., was the scene of a fatal duel, one cold, snowy night in the winter of 1804, the parties to the combat being William Coleman, editor of The New York Evening Post (an organ of the federalists), and Capt. Thompson, harbor master of the port of New York. Thomson, who had made quite an effort to provoke Coleman, remarked freely that he had no fight in him, and that if slapped well on one side of his face he would only be too happy to present the other side for similar treatment. Coleman, after making sure that Thompson had used the language attributed to him, challenged the offender, designated pistols as weapons, and named 11 o'clock as time of meeting, and at or near University place the scene of battle. Each party had surgeons and seconds, and agreed, as it was snowing at the time, to fire at twelve yards. Both fired the third time, when Thompson was heard to exclaim: "My God! I have got it!" and, reeling sideways, fell mortally wounded into the snow, and died a short time after having been conveyed to his residence. The dying man made a statement in the presence of a number of friends to the effect that the duel and his death were the consequence of his own quarrelsome character and rashness, and his last words were forgiveness to Coleman, whom he believed had no intent to kill.—Alta California.

A Famous Bout.

Although the beginnings of New York gastronomy were substantial, they could scarcely be called artistic. If we turn to the pages of Brillat Savarin, whose "Physiologie du Gout" has been recently so ably translated into English by Mr. Henry Van Laun, we shall find a full, true, and particular account of a dinner partaken of toward the end of the last century or the beginning of the present one, at what was then a celebrated "coffee tavern," kept by a Mr. Little and whither Brillat Savarin, who had been driven into exile by the revolution, was wont to repair to enjoy a basin of turtle soup in the forenoon, and in the evening to entertain himself and friends with Welsh rabbits, ale, and cider. There he met Mr. Wilkinson, a Jamaica planter, who invited him and two of his French friends, the Vicomte de la Massue and M. Jean Rodolphe Fehr, an ex-broker from Marseilles, to dinner. Mr. Wilkinson brought an English friend to dine with him, and the party thus consisted of five. The object of the two Britons was to outdrink the three Frenchmen; and, prior to sitting down to table, the cautious Brillat Savarin advised his fellow-countrymen to eat very slowly and methodically, to drink with even greater discretion, and, while he was engaging the attention of their antagonists, to throw away as much liquor as they could. Then they shared between them a plate of bitter almonds, which Savarin had heard praised for their quality of moderating the effects of the fumes of wine. The banquet consisted of "an enormous piece of roast beef, a turkey cooked in its own gravy, vegetables, a salad, and a jam tart, washed down with plenty of claret." After the claret came port, and then Madeira. Brillat's two friends contrived, without being observed to empty several of their glasses into "a beer-pot which stood at the end of the table;" but Brillat, who had an excellent stamina, and what the Scotchman admiringly called "a vast capaacity for leequor," held his own unflinchingly. Spirits were then proposed; but Brillat Savarin called for a large bowl of punch, and the end of it was that the three Frenchmen, or rather their leader, drank the two Englishmen fairly under the table, Mr. Wilkinson having previously and ignominiously failed in an attempt to sing "Rule Brittania."—London Telegraph.

Official Stupidity.

A most extraordinary miscarriage of justice appears to have taken place in the case of Morris Nicholson, who was sentenced in 1881 to seven years' penal servitude for manslaughter. Another man has confessed to the crime, and is actually anxious to give himself up, but the police—or, at all events the inspector at Hoxton police station—refused to take the charge! An application was made last week by a solicitor to Mr. Hannay to order the man who had made the confession to be arrested and brought to the court; but the magistrate said he did not like to interfere. The solicitor said he had applied in vain to the home office, and Mr. Hannay; somewhat facetiously I fear, recommended him to apply to the public prosecutor. This is certainly one of the most singular combinations I ever heard of. A man is in penal servitude for a crime of which another man declares he is guilty, but no amount of prayers and entreaties can prevail upon the authorities to take No. 2 into custody and investigate the truth of his statement.—London Truth.

The Eccentric Queen.

I hear that the queen has decided to close the rooms at Windsor castle which were occupied by John Brown during the last few years of his life, and they are to be kept permanently shut up as a sort of tribute to the memory of "the Highlander." It is intended to place a large brass plate in his sitting room, which will bear an inscription recording his virtues and deploring his loss.

About two years ago the queen erected a very pretty Swiss chalet in Ballochbuie forest, near Balmoral. It has never yet been occupied by her majesty, and she has only visited it once or twice in order to drink tea there. The queen has sent orders to her head forester at Balmoral to have the chalet taken to pieces, as she proposes to show it at the international forestry exhibition, which is to be held in Edinburgh. Her majesty will also exhibit a number of specimens of Scotch firwood from Balmoral "policies" and from Ballochbuie forest.—London Truth.

A glass of beer costs the consumer five cents, 640 glasses to the barrel, thirty-two dollars per barrel. No wonder the brewers and saloonist get rich and wax fat. Save your money, men, and let the spigot-turners go to work. Outlaw the traffic.

"My son," asked a school-teacher, "what do you know of the proverb regarding people who reside in glass houses?" "I don't know nothin'," was the reponse, "about the proverb, but I know that people who live in glass houses ortent to lay abed in the mornin' unless they pull down the blinds."

A leap year society, for the protection of young men, is about to be organized. Many a young man whose mother would not board himself and a wife will this year be lassoed by some ardent young woman and dragged down to matrimony. The society can not get to work a moment too soon.

FOREIGN NOTES.

The Kobe Shinpo, of Japan, says that some swindling foreigners in Yokohama are importing low-class Chinese tea and repacking it for export to America. They then palm off this rubbish as the product of Uji, Shigaraki, and other places celebrated for growing the finest teas. The government are making inquiry, with the object of exposing the abominable fraud.

So mild is the weather in North Wales that primroses, honeysuckle, snowdrops, and roses are to be found blooming in the valleys and on the hillsides. Vegetation in low-lying districts is also fast springing into life, and in the vale of Llangolden fruit-trees are in bloom. On Jan. 14 roses were in full bloom, and the ripe blackberries were gathered from the hedges on the roadsides.

Complaints have been rife for many years with regard to the enticing of English girls to Belgium for immoral purposes. Hitherto the police have decided as the application of the communal regulations relative to prostitution. In the ministry of the interior a bill is now being framed by which an appeal to the public tribunals will be permitted against the decisions of the police.

Cremation is to be tried in France, permission having been given by the perfect of police, on the recommendation of Dr. Brouardel, to burn the remains of hospital subjects, provided a satisfactory apparatus be constructed in one of the Paris cemeteries. A society for the propagation of cremation is in existence in Paris, the president being M. Koechlin-Schwartz, the mayor of one of the arrondissements.

It is a little startling to the foreigner landing at Yokohama to discover a race of half-clad men. But the Yokohama coolie is overdressed as compared with his brethren in the interior. If when he is running the country coolie, in addition to a loin cloth of narrowest limits, wears a blouse coming down to his waist, he has sacrificed much on the altar of decency. It is quite as common to meet one with nothing on but a pair of sandals and a pocket-handkerchief girt about his loins.

The Empress of Austria has appointed seven new ladies of the palace—a title of honor giving precedence, but only entailing attendance upon great occasions. Among those selected are the Countess Bylandt-Rheydt, wife of the Minister of War; the Countess Coronini, wife of the leader of the middle party in the lower house of the Reichsrath, and Mme. de Kallay, wife of the common Minister of Finance. All those appointed must have sixteen degrees of nobility on both sides.

The photograph of Hugo Schenk, the murderer of servant girls, has been placed in the Vienna police album. In spite of his brutally criminal life he looks quiet and almost good-natured. In connection with this case it may be mentioned that Schenk's wife, whom he married in 1879, has for the last two years lived as governess in the house of a hop-dealer in Bohemia. She has been separated from her husband for the last two years, but is quite broken down by the exposure of his crimes.

The Eastern Morning News has received from a Berne correspondent the following statement: During last summer an inhabitant of Hull, while staying at a Frankfort hotel, fell down-stairs and broke his arm. He was carefully attended to by a Frankfort surgeon, Dr. W., to whom he promised a handsome present if he was able to use his arm again and play cricket. A day or two ago the doctor, who had quite forgotten the affair, received from Hull a letter inclosing £2,000, and containing an invitation to visit his ex-patient at the latter's villa, near Hull.

The Teheran correspondent for the London Standard states that the shah has ordered in Prussia three river steamers for the Karum, two to ply below and one above the Ahwaz rapids, thus connecting Shuster with Mohammerah by steam navigation. From Shuster a carriage-road is to be made by a Persian company through Khorremabad and Burujird to Koom, whence a road has already been nearly completed in Teheran. If the project is efficiently executed it will, it is stated, greatly help British trade to compete from the south with the Russian from the north.

There is in the Glasgow Western infirmary a Highland woman from the island of Skye who has slept healthfully for eighteen months without once waking up. She is 35 years of age, and the mother of three children. She lies on her back, and never moves a muscle save those which are exercised in the act of breathing. Her pulse is 80, her breathing fair, and she gets food three times a day by means of the stomach-pump apparatus. It is believed that she will recover, and the worst results of her long sleep will be those arising from her unavoidable neglect of her household duties.

People, observes a Japan contemporary, who have visited Japan will remember the pleasant retreat of Mianoshta, about forty miles distant from Yokohama, where the tourist had all the advantages of commodious hotels well kept and furnished, baths filled from the thermal springs, and all the comforts of home. At 10 p.m. on the 11th inst, fire broke out in one of the village houses. It spread rapidly, and in less than an hour the large hotels known as Fujiya's and Naraya's, and, in fact, the entire village were destroyed.

West-end London is expecting every day a conclusion or an exposure of what is now becoming known as the gamble-house scandal. In the parallelogram of London, formed by St. James street, Pall Mall, Waterloo place and part of Oxford street, there are now houses and clubs which are known to be the scene of gaming of an extravagant and dangerous character. It is no secret, says the Manchester Guardian, that the attention of the home office has been of late a good deal directed to the possibility of a more stringent enforcement of the law with reference to gambling-houses and clubs, but the matter is from easy to deal with.

Some excitement has been caused at Ramsgate, England, by a singular elopement. The Rev. Thomas E. Cushing, Congregational minister, of Sandwich, who has a wife and two children, suddenly disappeared with Miss Bradley, daughter of a deceased Mayor of Sandwich, who had been an influential member of the Congregational body. They first came to Ramsgate, then went to Margate. They were again seen in Ramsgate at the London, Chatham and Dover railway station. They proceeded to London and then went on to Liverpool, where they embarked for America. Much symyathy is felt with the wife and children, who have been left unprovided for, Mr. Cushing having taken all the available money.

CHIT-CHAT.

"I have a ridiculous weigh about me," says the fat woman of the show.

Charlie—"How did you get married the second time?" Ed—"Same as the first—minister, ring, $10.

Speaking of the matter of close observation, did it ever occur to you that women were clothes observers?

When a man declares his love in deeply-drawn breathing, young lady, put it down as only a sighed show.

A New Jersey widow has just been awarded $9,000 as a balm for a broken heart. This patches up the scars until it is almost as good as new.

A woman doesn't consistently use profane language, but the way she says "Gracious!" when she slips down, is full of subtle meaning and inherent force.

"O, professor!" exclaimed sentimental old Mrs. Fishwhacker, during a private organ recital in her new music-room, "do pull out that sweet nux vomica stop once more.

One month of leap year has nearly gone, and as the girls do not propose very freely it is shrewdly suspected that they are waiting to have their honeymoons come in the season for spring bonnets.

"Where is the girl of long ago?" sings Joaquin Miller. We saw her the other day, Joaq. But she isn't a girl any more. She had gray hair and a wart on her nose, had no teeth, and wore specks.

"Doctor, my darling seems to be getting blind, and she is just getting ready for her wedding. Whatever will she do?" "Let her go on by all means. If anything can open her eyes marriage can."

"A farmer's wife" wants to know if we can recommend anything to destroy the "common grub." We guess the next tramp comes aloug could oblige you, if the family can't stand your cooking.

The ladies should always have consideration paid them on account of their sex, and it is no more than proper that leap year should have one extra day to give the girls all the time they need to propose in.

"Madam, you have destroyed $5 worth of merchandise," angrily remarked a dude to a lady, as she seated herself in a chair in which he had deposited a new Derby hat. "Serves you right," she replied, slowly rising from the ruin; "you had no business to buy a $5 hat for a 50 cent head."

Cruel—Effie (to Mrs. Bellweather, who has just been speaking to Mr. B.): "Why, Mrs. Bellweather, I thought you hadn't any husband!" Mrs. B.: "Why, of course I have, Effie. Do you mean to say that you don't know Mr. Belweather?" Effie: "Yes, but I didn't suppose he was you husband. I thought you hadn't any. Papa said you married for money and that was all you got."

"Do you know," said an infatuated youth to a young lady who preferred his room to his company—"do you know that the comet of 1812, now visible, is travelling away from us at the rate of many millions of miles a day?" "No, I dfdn't know it; but I wish a certain young man would imitate the comet and travel off at the same rate." He travelled—but not quite so rapidly as the comet.

A well-known Detroit lady who is a thrifty provender, saw a load of pork, and concluded to purchase a couple of fine porkers, for which she settled with the dealer on the spot. She forgot, however, to give him her address, and an hour later as she stood conversing with some of her aristocrat friends, the man of pork approached, and nudged her mysteriously with the butt end of his whip The lady turned in amazement. "Shzay, shzay!" he asked in a loud voice, "vos vos de voman dot belongs to dem hogs?"

The Use of Tobacco.

My debut as a smoker was like everybody's. My first pipe made me very ill, and it was only by degrees that I managed to become a third-rate smoker—that is, I disposed of eight or ten pipes a day without inconvenience. But whenever I exceeded that average I suffered from violent sick headaches, ushered in by the indistinctness of vision, and numbness of one side of the face, the tongue and one arm, most often on the left side. These preliminary symptoms lasted about ten minutes, after which the headache came on in full force. The most refractory organ, however, was my stomach. After having smoked too much, I used to experience the symptoms known as pyrosis or heart-burn to a very trying extent, though as any alkaline water speedily caused these phenomena to vanish I did not care to give up my tobacco.

About a year ago, having smoked for some months more than usual, I suddenly found myself affected by a peculiar and terrific pain over the region of the heart; in short, I had a violent attack of angina pectoris. It put a stop to my smoking, as, though I have tried once or twice, I have always found my cigar or pipe detestable, and, to sum up am radically converted. I do not wish to discuss scientifically the nicotinic origin of my sufferings, but am sure that they all sprang from the same cause—excessive use of tobacco. Degeneration of the cardaic muscle is often caused by tobacco. So long as the rest of his organism remains in good working order the smoker only experiences intermittent palpitation, and the grave injury done the heart remains unperceived until some trifling cause brings into relief the irremediable disorders caused by the prolonged use of tobacco.

THE RICHEST OF ALL.—"Pa," said Rollo, looking up from "Roughing It," "What is gold-bearing quartz?" "Well, my son," said Rollo's father, who was glancing in a troubled manner at the milkman's bill for October, "when a man sells diluted water for ten cents a quart, I think he has struck better gold-bearing quartz than ever Mr. Mark Twain dreamed of."

NEWS SUMMARY.

Interesting Items of News from all Parts of the World.

CANADIAN.

Masonic Grand Master Spry, who has been ill for a few days is convalescing.

Barley is being shipped west from Belleville at the rate of twelve cars daily.

Polling will take place on the Scott Act in Oxford county on the 20th March next.

Ed. Woodhouse, town clerk of Dundas, was knocked down and robbed of $500 recently.

Miss Christina Cameron, daughter of the late Hon. M. Cameron, died at Sarnia recently, at the Hon. A. Vidal's residence.

The Parliamentary library at Ottawa contains seventy thousand books. Very few American institutions of the same sort surpass it.

The cost of constructing one mile on the Canadian Pacific north of Lake Superior, is $300,000. This will give some idea of the huge undertaking that our plucky people are engaged in pushing through to a successful completion.

A writ has been issued to collect $200 from Rev. W. G. Lane, Methodist Minister of Halifax, for marrying a soldier and a girl without a license. It seems the groom had neglected to procure a license, but promised that he would procure one the following morning. He did not secure the license, and now repudiates the marriage on account of the informality.

The heaviest man in Paris, Mr. Jos. Smith, died on the 23rd ult., at the age of 60 years. For several months past he had been confined to his house, previous to that he weighed 320 lbs. and has been gaining ever since that time, so it is thought his weight could not have been less than 350 lbs. when he died. He was buried on Monday, and owing to the width of the required coffin it was found necessary to dispense with a hearse.

UNITED STATES.

Reports from various portions of California indicate a bad condition of the crops.

During the past year 2,623 new buildings were erected in New York City at a cost of $41 301 638.

Texas cattle are dying in large numbers from a strange diseaae, which appears to be incurable.

The Brigham Young Academy at Provo City, U., a Mormon school with 400 students, was burned.

In three years 135 telegraph companies with $225 000,000 capital have been incorporated in New York.

AUBURN, N. Y. — A boy here recovered a verdict against the New York Central for $10,500, for the loss of a foot.

In Massachusetts an attempt is being made by the temperance men to raise $10,000 to aid in the temperance movement.

The season's ice harvest on the Hudson river amounts to over 3,000,000 tons, the largest crop ever housed in any one year.

The revenue receipts of the United States Government for the first half of the current fiscal year, amounted to $60,500,000.

The frigate Colorado, which has cost $1,410 503, has been condemned at the Brooklyn navy yard, and she will be sold at auction.

The New York pet stock show contains 1 000 Plymouth Rocks, 1 000 pigeons, and 1 000 Asiatics, including Brahmas of all kinds.

Wendell Phillips, of Boston, the orator and prominent abolitionist, died at his residence, Boston, after a week's illness, aged 72 years.

A syndicate of New York and Philadelphia capitalists has invested very heavily in the securities of the Northern Pacific system.

A Chicago Life Insurance Association has just come to grief, its outstanding policies amounting to $300,000, and its cash funds to 37 cents.

TITUSVILLE. — Oil reports say that 228 wells were completed during January with a production of 3,146 barrels daily. Twenty dry holes were drilled.

Prices of eggs in Boston market are higher than they have been quoted before since '65, and it is conjectured that the hens have struck for higher wages.

The bill making the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet officer has been favorably reported by the Agricultural committee of the U. S. House of Representatives.

The Senate of Massachusetts has voted to abolish the annual "Election Sermon," a customary observance that has descended to us from the earliest days of the Puritans.

New York fruit dealers deny that frost has hurt the orange crop, or that the California corner will affect prices. There are upwards of 10,000,000 new bearing trees this year.

Great floods have prevailed along the Mississippi river, doing an immense amount of destruction. It is reported that at Pittsburgh alone not less than five thousand families were left homeless.

Marquis De Mores, who shipped 12,000 sheep last July to Montana, reports that 55 per cent. died. The animals swell up and bleed at the nose before death. Post mortem examination disclosed a disease heretofore unknown.

The United States Senate has passed a resolution providing for each Senator who is not the chairman of a committee, a private clerk or secretary at a salary of $6 per day, and now the Representatives are hankering after the same privilege.

At the recent fisheries exhibition at London, twenty-six foreign and colonial Governments were represented. Out of all the awards the United States head the list with 49 gold, 47 silver, and 29 bronze medals, and 24 diplomas, equal to more than one-fifth of the entire number awarded.

Cornell University has a mummy on the way from Egypt. His name, some thousands of years ago was "Perpi." His views on the "College Fetich" question would be valuable if we could only get at them, and probably not much further behind the times than some which have been recently maintained by several other college Dons.

It is considered almost certain that this Congress will not appropriate money to build any more steel cruisers, and possibly may refuse to complete those that have been bgun, for it is believed by some naval men, that if completed they will be failures. A member of the Naval Committee says that no guns in the country can be placed in them, neither is there a foundry where they can be cast, and to construct a plant where such guns could be made, would cost a million dollars.

The Grange interests were never more prosperous in New Hamshire than they are at present. The State Master has visited the granges at Goffston, Dunbarton, Campton, Stoddard, Antrim, and Andover during the past week and is in the field for ten days to come. At Andover on Saturday evening there was a large gathering, with a banquet and speeches. Secretary Batchelder of the State Grange, the retiring local Master, was presented with an elegant sash and Past Master's jewel.

At Sackett's Harbor, N.Y., a war ship wascommenced during the time of the war of 1812, to cruise on Lake Ontario. When peace was proclaimed the framework of the ship had just been completed, and work on it was stopped. A building was afterward erected over it and there it has stood ever since. It was recently sold for $400 and taken down. Some of the timbers are a good deal decayed and were sold for firewood. The most of the cedar is good however and has been disposed of for other use. The contractor nets about $4,000 out of his purchase.

An Italian Estimate of Bismarck.

An interesting historical essay on Bismarck has just appeared in Italy. It is written by Gaetano Negri, and consists chiefly of two lectures, which the author has given at Mailand, on the German chancellor. Speaking of Bismarck as a man, Signor Negri sayes:—"He is one of the most interesting and incomprehensible characters that have appeared in the history of the world. Imagine an East Goth, inoculated with the culture of the present time. Seen from the one side, he appears as one acknowledging only the worship of power, violent, harsh, and merciless. On the other hand, we see in him the man endowed with the greatest moral gifts, open to the influences of purest and highest sentiments. The contradictions in his character are passing strange; marvellous is the wealth of his intellect and unique his capacity for satisfying the most contradictory claims. . . . All through he is a man of the north. In him lives the poetic spirit of the northern races; the spirit of Shakespeare is within him; at the same time he is grave and jovial, rough and graceful; and he has a depth of religious feeling unknown to the Latin peoples. Bismarck is on of the most powerful speakers that ever have spoken from the parliamentary tribune. His eloquence, however, is not that of a Cicero, enlarging on a given subject in smooth, harmonious figures of speech; his is an eloquence like an arrow shot from a bow—rough, passionate, irony, springing, as it were, upon his subjects and penetrating into their innermost depths. With Bismarck we are never in the world of words, but always in the world of facts. It is the mighty objectivity of his speeches which makes them attractive, even if considered quite apart from the circumstances under which they are made, and from the passion which inspired them. He always leads us into the real-drama of life, into the fight for existence, in the collision of men and things Added to this his imagination, in itself extremely lively and supported by a rich and varied knowledge, which brings to his mind the most surprising pictures and comparisons, and it is easy to understand that this combination of gifts stamp Bismarck's eloquence with the greatest originality. But nowhere do we see him more attractive, and, as it were more human, than in his letters to his wife and sister. They are mostly notes from his tours abroad, short epistles on his state of health and his occupations, all full of grace and life. They show partly that in the midst of the heaviest troubles the elasticity of his spirit, the clearness of his views, the ironical contemplation of all things human, the sense of the beauty of nature, are still preserved. In some of these letters he gives way to a deep poetic sentiment, and it is here that his best and noblest side is seen." Pall Mall Gazette.

Charcoal and its Uses.

Charcoal, laid flat while cold on a burn, causes the pain to abate immediately; by leaving it on for an hour the burn seems almost healed when the burn is superficial. And charcoal is valuable for many other purposes. Tainted meat surrounded with it is sweetened; strewn over heaps of decomposed pelts, or over dead animals, it prevents any unpleasant odor. Foul water is parified by it. It is a great disinfectant, and sweetens offensive air if placed in shallow trays around apartments. It is so very porous in its "minute interior," it absorbs and condenses gases most rapidly. One cubic inch of fresh charcoal will absorb nearly one hundred inches of gaseous ammonia. Charcoal forms an unrivalled poultice for malignant wounds and sores, often corroding away dead flesh, reducing it to one quarter in six hours. In cases of what we call proud flesh it is invaluable. It gives no disagreeable odor, corrodes no metal, hurts no texture, injures no color, is a simple and safe sweetener and disinfectant. A teaspoonful of charcoal, in half a glass of water, often relieves a sick headache; it absorbs the gases and relieves the distended stomach pressing against the nerves, which extend from the stomach to the head. It often relieves constipation, pain or heartburn.

A FINE MORNING.—"Fine morning, your honor," affably remarked the man who was arrested the night before for being drunk and disorderly, "Yes, indeed," heartily responded the justice; "quite a fine morning; in fact, a $10 fine morning." After this little pleasantry the gentleman was booked for the "Black Maria" and the business of the court went on as usual.

Where Cigar Boxes Go.

"What becomes of the empty boxes?" was the question put by a reporter to a retail cigar dealer, who does a thriving business.

"I'm sure I don't know," was the reply. "Some of them are given away, a few, perhaps, are sold by some of the dealers, but the great bulk are broken to pieces and used as kindling wood. You see Uncle Sam makes it a punishable offence to use the same box twice for cigars unless every particle of the revenue stamp is removed, and a new stamp placed on the box. Now, a complete removal of the stamp would spoil the box and make it unfit for further use for cigars."

"Is not that a considerable loss?" inquired the reporter.

"Hardly so. Cigar boxes are very cheap. A good workman, I understand, will nail nearly a thousand boxes in a day, and the wood is abundant in this country. If you never saw a cigar box factory you had better visit one, and you'll see some interesting sights."

The reporter followed the advice, and climbed up five flights of stairs in one of the largest blocks in the manufacturing district of the city, where the largest cigar box factory is located.

A part of the large floor was occupied by the strips of wood, cut to the requisite thickness, one dimension for the bottom, sides and cover, and another for the ends. The strips of wood are run through a ripsaw, sawed in long strips, and cut into the required lengths by a second machine. The ends are then planed as smooth as the sides, and the pieces are ready to be made into boxes. Lids and sides have to pass through printing presses, of the same pattern as used in ordinary job rooms, but much heavier, to have the brand, trademark, etc., printed pon them with indelible ink. Then the pieces go to the nailer, who uses a machine for his workThe nailing machines are somewhat similar in appearance to type-setting machines, and require but little experience to be quite dexterously handled.

The nails are fed into a hopper on the top, passing through small brass pipes into little tubes at the proper distances for the parts to be nailed together. By the pressure of the foot on the foot-board of the machine, the operator forces the nails out of the tubes into the wood, and accomplishes with the aid of the machine six times as much work as the most experienced workman could do with hand and hammer; besides the work is of necessity done far more accurately. The first operation is the nailing together of an end and head piece, which are placed in large piles, and then two of those pieces are nailed together, forming the sides of the box. Boys nail on the buttons and girls tack on the cover temporarily, while while other girls paste on the cloth hinges. The half-completed boxes are then piled up until they are perfectly dry.

An experienced nailer averages about 850 boxes per day, receiving twenty-five cents for 100 boxes, while the boys and girls are paid by the week, earning from four dollars to ten per week.

After the boxes are dry, they are brought under a rapidly revolving planer, which removes all over-hanging wood-work, while whirling sand wheels smooth off the edges. A large force of girls is employed in putting on the finishing touches, which means to paste on the edgings, inside labels, linings and flaps. For this work the girls are paid eighty cents per hundred, and they earn from five to nine dollars per week.

The lumber used in the manufacture of cigar boxes is, with but few exceptions, either bass-wood or red cedar. Bass-wood grows in almost unlimited quantities in Michigan, Minnesota, and the northern part of Wisconsin. It is shipped to this city in rough boards, which are re-sent, planed and stained by a peculiar process, so that it closely resembles cedar wood, from which it is different in color, and lacking in that sharp, pungent odor which is deemed of particular value for the packing of cigars. Bass-wood boxes are used for the ordinary quality of cigars. The red cedar grows in Mexico, Cuba and Central America, and forms an important article in the exports of these countries. Cedar costs in Chicago in the neighborhood of forty dollars a thousand lineal feet of the ordinary lumber dimensions.

An important item in the manufaeture of cigar boxes is the label, which costs from sixty cents to six dollars a thousand. A few especially fine labels, made for special brands, cost nine and ten dollars a thousand. The larger box factories have a printing room attached to their establishments, and print the ordinary quality of labels themselves, while the more elaborate qualities of more or less artistic design, and printed in from three to a dozen colors, are made by the large lithographic establishments, where designers for this particular branch of work are kept steadily at work. It is a noticeable fact that in a great many cases one may judge of the quality of cigars by the kind of label attached to the box. The "loud" label with flaming colors, presenting all kinds of impossible birds and flowers, or females more or less decollete, does not, as a rule, speak favorably for the quality of the cigars.

The habitual smoker knows his label, although some of the favorite brands of "three-for-a quarter," or "straight ten", such as "Corona," "Professor Morse," "Mark Twain," "La Rosa," "Henry Clay," and others, are sold in numerous imitations. The better quality of cigars, like the better quality of men, do not "show off" in a very elaborate style; they have a well-designed and artistically executed albel, in unobtrusive colors, and some of the very best cigars have very plain packing. Cigars for private sales are generally packed in boxes which are fastened with brass clasps instead of the old-fashioned silk-ribbons.

There is one firm of lithographers in this city who do nothing else but print cigar labels; and there are eight box factories, employing 250 hands, and a capital of $100 000, while the annual production is valued at $400,000.—Chicago Tribune.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere

"Freddie, did you go to school to-day?" "Yes'm." "Did you learn anything new?" "Yes'm." "What was it, my boy?" "I got on to a sure way of gettin' out for an hour by snuffin red ink up my nose."

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,
Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

The Emperor of China's 200-year old bedstead must have absorbed a great deal of "rough on bugs" in its lifetime. That and the 200-year old pair of socks found in an Egyptian tomb would make a boom for a dime museum.

The colors of the Triangle Dyes are so beautiful, and their use so simple, they lead the dye market of the country. 10c.

It was nothing but the benign influence of Christmas time that made China talk peace and good will to France.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-St. West, Toronto Canada.

"Lo! I am with you," is a text for a missionary among the Indians to use.

PECTORIA! Pectoria Pectoria! the great remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Influenza, Hoarseness, and all affections of the Lungs and Throat or Chest. Pectoria loosens the phlegm and breaks up the Cough. 25 cents per Bottle. Don't give up until you have tried Pectoria; all Druggists and General Storekeepers sell it.

A. P. 164

100 BEAUTIFUL SONGS. 15c.

A new collection, embracing a number of the most popular songs of the day. Among them are, We Never Speak as we Pass By;—Over the Garden Wall,—Kerry Dance,—Warrior Bold,—Blue Alsatian Mountains,—Only a Blossom from her Grave,—Three Old Maids of Lee,—Flirting in the Starlight,—Grandmother's Old Easy Chair,—Don't Drink my Boy To-night, and 90 others, comprising Home songs, Comic Songs, Sentimental songs, Children's songs, etc. All are printed on nice paper, and are bound in a book with colored cover. Remember, we send the entire collection of 100 Songs for only 15c., three books for 30c., 1 doz., 1.00; 11c. or 3c. stamps taken.

JAMES LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

THE QUEEN'S

LAUNDRY BAR.

ASK FOR IT AND TAKE NO OTH

TRADE MARK.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

— MADE BY —

THE ALBERT TOILET SOAP CO.

BEST BOILER PLATE.

For sale low, the following sizes suitable for Boilers, Safe Flumes, Tanks, &c., &c., 5-16 inch thick, 6x3, 8x3 9x3, 10x3, 6x2½, 7x2½ 8x2½ 9x2½.

SEND FOR PRICES

Copland & McLaren,

Corner Wellington & Grey Nun Sts., Montreal.

ELM CITY HARNESS OIL

BASED ON NEATS FOOT OIL.

Is the finest harness dressing made. It softens and preserves the leather, and gives it a fine finish. Ask your saddler for it.

F. F. DALLEY & CO.,
HAMILTON, ONTARIO.
Sole Agents for the Dominion

F. E. DIXON & CO.,

Manufacturers of Star Rive

Leather Belting!

70 King Street, East, Toronto

Large double Driving Belts a specialty. Send for Price Lists and Discounts.

RENNIE'S SELECT Field, Garden AND Flower SEEDS ARE THE BEST

THE HANDSOMEST AND MOST COMPLETE CATALOGUE FOR 1884 FREE TO ALL INTENDING PURCHASERS.

WM. RENNIE, TORONTO.

$11. 90 —FOR— 35c.

Extraordinary Bargain.

On receipt of only 35c we will mail, postpaid, 34 pieces comprising 48 pages of full size sheet music, bound together in one volume. Names of Vocal pieces:—All on account of Eliza; A Warrior Bold; The Country Lad; Nancy Lee; Chorus of Charity Girls; Drummer's Song; The Judge's Song; The Love-Sick Boy; Whoa Emma; Two Bad Men; Man in the Moon; Johnny Morgan; The Gleaners; Torpedo and the Whale; I Saw Her in the Violet Time; Five O'Clock in the Morning; My Love She's but a Lassie Yet; Adieu, Dear Home; Dame Babble; and 15 pieces of Instrumental Music, comprising new and popular dance music, selections from different Operas, Marches, &c., &c. All the above and our handsome new Chromo Lithograph in colors of the Lord's Prayer and 10 Commandments, sent post-paid for 35c. As a holiday offer we will also send free 10 Christmas Cards, 50 money making receipts and a pack of Age Cards. Order quick. You get all the above for 35c, or 5 lots for $1.25; 1 doz. for $2.00. Cut this out and return with order

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P.Q.

M. W. DUNHAM

HAS IMPORTED

90 PER CENT OF ALL HORSES

Ever Imported

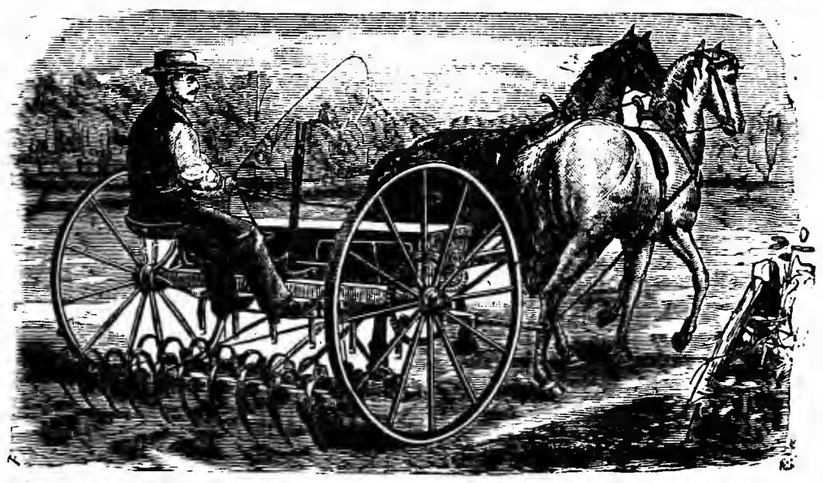
From France to America,

Whose Purity of Blood is established by their Recorded Pedigrees in the Percheron Stud Book of France, which is the only Draft Horse Record of that country.

Mr. Dunham has just published a 25,000 edition of his handsomely illustrated 140 page catalogue for 1884, containing descriptions and pedigrees (many for 10 generations) of

450 STALLIONS & MARES

Now on hand. All Stallions Guaranteed Breeders. Catalogue free. Address, M. W. DUNHAM, Wayne, Du Page Co., Illinois. (35 miles west of Chicago, on C. & N.-W. Ry.



FUN AND MYSTERY

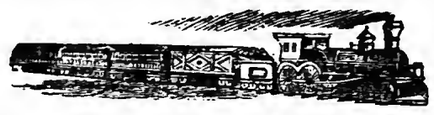
ENDLESS AMUSEMENT FOR ONLY 30 CTS.

Have you seen it? The greatest collection of Games, Cards, Tricks, Puzzles, Songs, etc., ever offered for anything like the money. AMUSEMENT FOR A WHOLE SEASON, for the old or young. Our NEW BUDGET contains the following; Heller's Conjuring Pack: the Mystic Oracle: Guide to Flirtation: 10 new Evening Games: Set of "Hold to Light Cards;" 1 Set Comic Chromo Cards; the Star Puzzle; 25 Ways to Get Rich; the "13" Puzzle; 5 Beautiful Face Pictures; Language of Jewels and Flowers; 101 Selections for Autograph Albums; 11 Popular Songs with Music; 13 New Tricks in Magic; Pack of Fun and Comic Cards; 1 Chinese Block Puzzle; the Roman Cross Puzzle; Great $5 Prize Puzzle; 1 set Transformation Pictures, change color right before your eyes, and Games of Fortune.

ALL FOR 30 CENTS, IN ONE OR TWO CENT POSTAGE STAMPS. By mail, postpaid. Two Packages for FIFTY CENTS, five for ONE DOLLAR. Send at once and get the greatest bargain ever offered. Return this with order to avoid mistake.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

ALWAYS AHEAD



MANN'S

BROADCAST SEED SOWER & HARROW COMBINED.

RECEIVED FIRST PRIZE WHEREVER EXHIBITED!

Farmers, remember that it is the Best Machine in use. It will work on rough land, in any kind of soil, destroy quack grass. It will sow all kinds of grain and grass seed. Nothing about it to get out of order. A boy can operate it. Is durable and light of draft. Buy no other until you have seen it. Send for catalogue.

THE J. W. MANN M'F'G. CO ROCKVILLE, ONT.

T. G. & B. RAILWAY.

TIME TABLE.

Change of Time.

On and after Monday, June 18th, 1882, trains will run as follows:

GOING NTH. GOING SOUTH

Read Down.			Read Up.
A.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.
7 30	4 25	Toronto	10 45	9 10
9 05	6 00	Cardwell Junc.	9 05	7 31
9 55	6 45	Orangeville...	8 27	6 50
12 20	8 44	Mount Forest..	6 30	4 30
2 25	10 15	Teeswater	5 00	2 45
11 50	8 0	Flesherton	6 43	4 47
12 06	8 45	Markdale,.....	6 27	4 30
1 30	9 55	Owen Sound....	5 15	3 10
P.M.	P.M.		A.M.	P.M.

A Mixed Train will also run between Toronto and Owen Sound. See Time Table.

D. McNICOLL, General Pass. Agt. EDMUND WRAGGE, General Manager

JOHN NOBLE,

MARKDALE.

GENER'L BLACKSMITH

HORSE SHOEING

SPECIALTY.

SAY!

If you want to hire a good livery rig, go to Benson.

325 ACRES | Fonthill Nurseries | 325 ACRES

THE LARGEST IN THE DOMINION

Salesmen Wanted.

Steady employment at fixed salaries to all willing to work. Men and Women can have pleasant

WORK THE YEAR ROUND.

Good agents are earning from $40 to $75 per month, and expenses. Terms and outfit free. Address

STONE & WELLINGTON,
161-75 Toronto, Ont.

EUGENIA

Grist, Saw and Lath Mills

Having made eqtensive improvements in my Grist Mill I feel confident I can give good satisfaction.

GOOD FLOUR ALWAYS ON HAND

Chopping Done Every Day.

Custom Sawing and Bills Filled on the shortest notice.

LUMBER AND LATH ALWAYS ON HAND.

Cherry, Butternut, White Ash, Black Ash Basswood, Pine and Hemlock Logs wanted

69ly. M. AKITT, Eugenia.

J. G. IRVING,

MARKDALE,

Manufacturer of all Kinds of

PUMPS.

Drop Valve, Cylinder, Force, and Cistern Pumps.

All kinds of

IRON - PUMPS

SUPPLIED.

NATIONAL PILLS SUGAR COATED. PURELY VEGETABLE

Highly recommended for Biliousness, Head-Ache, Constipation, Indigestion, Dizziness, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Loss of Appetite, Jaundice, Loss of Memory, Sour Stomach, Liver Complaint, or any illness arising from the Stomach, Bowels or Kidneys. They are safe, mild and thorough in their action. From 1 to 3 pills is a dose. PRICE 25c. PER BOX.

FIRST CLASS

OAT MEAL

for sale at

J. W. FORD'S

FLOUR MILL.

$5 pre Barrel.

Monthly Fairs.

Markdale—Saturday before Flesherton.

Chatsworth—Monday before Durham.

Dundalk—Tuesday before Orangeville.

Flesherton—Monday before Orangeville.

Orangeville—The second Thursday in each month.

SUBSCRIBE

NOW, FOR THE STANDARD,

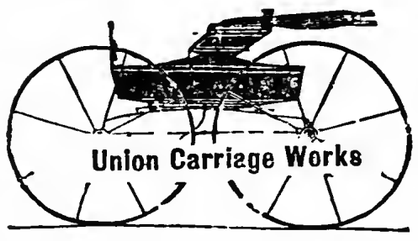
—ONLY—

$1.00

PER YEAR IN ADVANCE

A COPY OF THE CELEBRATED



HORSE BOOK

A Treatise on the Horse and his diseases,

—BY—

DR. B. J. KENDALL,

Given as a premium to new subscribers who pay in advance.

Union Carriage Works.

All work manufactured from

FIRST CLASS MATERIAL

In the Latest and Best Improved Style, and finished with

English Varnish.

Painting & Trimming Rigs

will receive prompt attention.

All Repairs executed in the shortest possible time consistent with good workmanship.

GOOD WORK A SPECIALITY.

Remember the Shop, opposite the Cheapside

D. J. SHANAHAN, Proprietor

Markdale, Dec. 2nd, 1881. 64.

ALEX KAY

BOOT & SHOE

MAKER,

Mill Street, - Markdale

A GOOD INTRODUCTION.

J. Kennedy, a merchant in Dixie, about three years ago introduced Haggard' Pectoral Balsam to his customers by trying it in his own family for coughs and colds. Being pleased with results, large sales followed, and it is now the favorite remedy in the neighborhood.

"Why don't you get up as early as you used to a few days ago?" angrily asked a wife of her lazy husband. "Because, my dear, it's sleep year," he grinned, as he turned over for another snooze.

James Brayley, Hamilton, says: "I read the testimonials for McGregor's Speedy Cure and found that I had not to go to New York, Philadelphia, Louisiana or Texas to find living witnesses of its value, we have plenty of persons right here to prove its merits I got a bottle and it helped me right away. I was as bad with Bilious Fever and Indigestion as I think any one could be, I have taken three bottles and am nearly well and can eat any kind of food without it hurting me. I may say that I am better than ever I expected to be. Free trial bottles at Hill Bro's F. & M.

Light-minded young men in a bathing suit:—"Surely Aunt Margaret, you are not going to wear your spectacles in the water?" Aunt Margaret—"Indeed I am. Nothing will induce me to take off another thing."

A WONDERFUL RESULT.

A single bottle of Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup has frequently destroyed from 100 to 200 worms. It is pleasant to take—no other cathartic being required. Tape worms have also been removed by it, of 15 to 35 feet in length. It is effectual for all varities of worms afflicting both children and adults.

OUR PATRONS who wish to subscribe, or renew their subscaiption for any of the following publications will do us a favor by handing the amount in to us at the STANDARD office, viz. Weekly Mail, or Globe, Family Herald and Weekly Star, monthly Farmers Advocate, Americau Agriculturist, any of the above with the STANDARD for $2.00 or singly for one $1. except the Agriculturist which is $1.50.

PROF. LOW'S SULPHUR SOAP is highly recommended for the cure of Eruption, Chafes, Chapped Hands, Pimples, Tan, &c.

LARDINE MACHINE OIL

Is Manufactured Solely by McCall Bro's. & Co. Toronto, and is the only popular Machine Oil to-day in use by all mill men and farmers, Try Lardine.

FREEMANS WORM POWDERS require no other purgative. They are safe and sure to remove all varieties of Worms.

BAD DRAINAGE.

There is nothing more productive of disease in a neighborhood than bad drainage. Open the culverts and the sluiceways and purify the locality. The obstructions in the human system may be remedied in a similar manner by Burdock Blood Bitters, which opens all the outlets of disease through the Bowels, Liver, and Kidneys.

ANOTHER WITNESS,

A. Chard, of sterling, testifies to the efficacy of Haggard's Yellow Oil, which he used for a badly injured knee joint. It is the great household remedy for inflamation, pain, soarness, lameness, etc., and is used both eternally and externally with infaliable success.

KRAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known. Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat ar acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

NATIONAL PILLS acts promptly upon the Liver, regulate the Bowels and as a purgative are mild and thorough.

A QUERY ANSWERED.

People often ask when is the best time to take a blood purifier? We answer, the best time is now. Burdock Blood Bitters does its work of purifying, regulating, and toning the system at all times and all seasons. Purity in all thing is always in order when required.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

John R. Vert, Hamilton, says: "McGregor's Speedy Cure for Dyspepsia and Indigestion is cheap at fifty times the price asked for it. I am a commercial man, and travel continually, and would no more think of leaving home without a bottle of McGregor's Speedy Cure in my valise than I would of leaving my team at home and going on foot." Free trial bottle at Hill Bros. general store. Regular size, fifty cents and one dollar.

DR. LOW'S WORM SYRUP has removed tape worm from 15 to 30 feet in length. It also destroys all kinds of worm.

MERIT PROVEN.

Dollar upon dollar is frequently spent on the faith of recommendations for articles entirely worthless. Not so with McGregor's Speedy Cure; you are not asked to purchase it until its merits are proven. Call at Hill Bro's and get a free trial bottle, and if not convinced it will cure you of the worst forms of Dyspepsia, Complaint, etc., no matter of how long standing, it costs you nothing. Sold in 50c. and $1 bottles. See testimonials from persons in your own town. F. & M.

Robt. S. Rae,

TAILOR,

SYDENHAM STREET,

MARKDALE.

WM. HOGG,

FLESHERTON STATION,

Respectfully announces that he has received a large supply of

New Goods!

—IN—

Dry Goods, Winter Clothing, Boots and Shoes, &c

As these Goods were bought to the best advantage they will be sold very low in price, and will be found well worthy of an inspection by the general public, also on hand a full stock of Fresh Groceries, Provisions, Crockery, &c., all of which will be sold cheap for cash or farm produce.

I offer for sale or to let my water power Saw Mill at Little Falls with about 400 acres of timber land. A good man liberally dealt with on either purchasing or leasing the place.

WM. HOGG, - - Flesherton Station.

Nov. 1st, 1883.

—Good Work Guaranteed—

—AT—

Bulmers Photograph Gallery

FLESHERTON.

Call at once and see samples of work which we are not ashamed to show.

All kinds of Framing done cheap at

JAS. BULMER'S, FLESHERTON.

New FALL Importations

—arriving daily at—

R. J. SPROULE'S

FLESHERTON.

Opened this week large stock of Ladies' Coats and Mantles in all the latest designs and patterns and very cheap.

Also in large variety Black and Colored Silks, Velvets, and Velveteens from 35cts. up, also Ladies' Clouds, Bonnets and Hats, Trimmings and Shapes, Ladies Collars in all the latest styles.

In Boots and Shoes our stock is complete and selling fast and cheap.

Another lot of that Famous 20ct. and 50ct. TEA just received.

Also a full stock of Nails, Putty, Glass, Hinges and builder's hardware of all descriptions selling at the lowest possible prices.

A full stock of Preserving Sugars cheap, also preserve and Gem Jars in endless variety.

Notwithstanding the incessant grumbling of merchants generally, of dull times R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton says his business is increasing daily, having more business than he can possibly get through with with his large staff of hands.

Markdale Standard

VOL. 4.--No. 21. MARKDALE, ONT., FEB. 21, 1884. No. 180

PATRONS OF HUSBANDRY.

GREY DIVISION GRANGE NO. 2.

REPORT OF SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING HELD AT ROCKLYN ON MONDAY FEB. 4TH, 1884

ROCKLYN, Feb. 4, 1884.

Grey Division No. 2 opened in due form: Worthy Master in the chair.

The following officers being absent the W. M. appointed others pro tem: Bro. Goldsmith, Overseer; Bro. Bowes, Chaplain; Bro Gifford, Steward; Bro. Yelland, Gatekeeper. Grange elected Bro. H. Reid, auditor, as Bro H D Irwin was not present.

The minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Bros Bowes, Richardson, and White were appointed a committee on credentials.

Bros Armstrong, Buskin, and Best were appointed a committee to strike standing committees.

Report of committee on Credentials presented by Bro Bowes. The report was adopted.

Report of Committee on Credentials:

334, Markdale; S. Douglass, G. Richardson.

312, New England; J. Yelland, C. Morword.

458, Artemesia Centre; G. Buskin, G. Stewart.

525, Beehive; D. Robertson, W. McIntosh.

15, St. Vincent; B. White and Sister White, H. Palmer.

855, Derry; L. Goldsmith, MrSutherland.

364, Hawthorne; H. Reid, D. Armstrong.

259, Artemesia; J. Weber, J. I. Graham.

13, Georgian; A. Gifford, J. Long.

548, Harkaway; E. W. Moore and Sister Moore, P. Smith.

421, Owen Sound; R. J. Doyle and Sister Doyle.

14, Sydenham; J. M. Rogers, D. Jack.

JAS. BOWES, Chairman.

Moved by Bro White, seconded by Bro Graham, that Bro Bond be a delegate instead of W M of Grange No. 25, who was absent.—Carried.

Bro A Gifford presented report of committee on Grading Barley.

To the W M and Members of Grey Division Grange:

We, your committee appointed to report on the system of Grading Barley, beg leave to submit the following: We find that there is ample ground for the complaints made by dealers, that there is no uniformity in the present system. Cases occurring where barley carefully purchased with a view to securing a grade No. 1, as compared with samples furnished buyers, have been graded by the Inspector as only "No. 3 extra." Such a discrepancy your committee think impossible with proper inspection. The effect of the present system is to prevent local buyers from purchasing Barley on its merits, as if they do so, the chances are that it will be graded down by the Inspector and result in loss. Your committee can see no means of remedying this difficulty of inspection, so long as the present mode of selling continues. The only effectual preventation or remedy being to store the grain in local warehouses and sell direct to consumers and shippers who would then inspect for themselves.

A. GIFFORD,
GEO. RICHARDSON.

Moved by Bro A Gifford, seconded by Bro G Richardson, that the report of committee on Grading Barley be received and adopted and engrossed on the minutes.—Carried.

Report of committe on Standing Committee presented their report.

Worthy Master:

We, your committee on Standing Committees, report as follows:

On Implements—Bros Palmer, Reid, Brodie and Richardson.

Horticulture—Bros Doyle, Gifford, Robertson and Weber.

Education—Irwin, Gifford, White, Weber.

Municipal Law—Bros Bowes, Richardson, Reid and Buskin.

Stock—Bowes, Armstrong, Clark, Best.

Jurisdiction—Bros Moore, McIntosh Doyle and Inkster.

Seed Grain—Bros Bond, Denton, Armstrong, Long.

The first named in the above committees to be chairman.

Domestic Industry—Sirters Doyle, Gifford, Bowes and White.

Temperance—Sisters Doyle, Bowes, Best, Graham, Gifford, Robertson, McKnight, Moore.

Moved by Bro Armstrong, seconded by Bro. Buskin, that the above report be adopted.—Carried.

Moved by Bro Armstrong, seconded by Bro Buskin, that Bro A Gifford be added to the committee on Municipal Law.—Carried.

Moved by Bro. Richardson, seconded by Bro Buskin, that Bros McIntosh and Palmer be added to the committee on Stock.—Carried.

Moved by Bro A Gifford, seconded by Bro G Richardson, that we adjourn until 2 o'clock.—Carried.

Grange resumed business at two o'clock.

Report of committee on Seed Grain presented by Bro M Denton.

To Members of Grey Division Grange:

Your committee beg leave to report as follows: In regard to Spring wheat your committee are of the opinion that the Russian and White Fife are the best kinds to grow. But we would recommend the White Fife as the better of the two, for both marketing and milling. Regarding oats, white, we are of the opinion that the Egyptian variety, as far as your committee are aware, is the best for general purpose, as they seem to stand up well and ripen early. As to black oats, we are still of the opinion that the Tartarian is the best kind. Barley: We would recommend the six rowed barley for general purposes, and for feeding purposes we are of the opinion that the two rowed is the best, on account of its growing a heavier crop, stands up well and therefore easier harvested. With regard to peas we would still recommend the Golden Vine as a general crop. We would recommend that Patrons growing new varieties would report result to this meeting, and how much, if any for sale. All of which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) MATTHEW DENTON,
Chairman of Committee.

Moved by Bro Denton, seconded by Bro Armstrong, that report be received adopted and engrossed on the minutes.—Carried.

There was considerable discussion on this report, the majority seemed to favor the Fleming wheat. The following parties have it for sale: James Bowes, Strathnairn P. O., grown on clay loam; Jas. Doubledee, Meaford, sandy soil; J. Martin, Oxmead, sandy soil; J. D. Montgomery, Meaford, clay soil; R. & J. Laturney, Meaford, hard clay.

Report of committee on Horticulture presented by Bro A Gifford.

To the Master and Member of Grey Division No. 2:

We, your committee on Horticulture beg to submit the following: We find the time at our disposal altogether too limited to do justice to a subject of so much importance in the running of a well eqipped farm. Your committee feel assured that all will agree that no farm is complete where an orchard is lacking. Undoubtedly many deterred from investing money in fruit trees from their experience of the impositions practised upon buyers by unscrupulous agents, who in many cases have palmed off on their patrons stock at high prices which is utterly valueless. Your committee would suggest that every member of this Grange at once give their attention to the establishment of an orchard, as we are convinced that fruit can be profitably grown in every part of this county, to say nothing of the health and pleasure afforded by its liberal use. In commencing an orchard the first point is the selection of a site, which if not naturally dry, should be thoroughly drained; a northern aspect is no detriment. Having selected a suitable site see that it is well fenced and cultivated for the reception of the trees. Then with the catalogue of some reliable nurseryman in hand make your selections of apple, plum, pear, and cherry trees. And right here we would suggest that while a large number of trees may be required, that every order be for as few varieties as possible. The climate and exposure in this county varies a good deal, so that some varieties which will prove good in the neighborhood of the bay, would not be suitable for the southern parts. For apples your committee believe that for the southern parts of the county and away from the river the following varieties will prove satisfactory and be all that any farmer would require, viz: Duchess of Oldenburg, Red Astrachan, Wealthy, Ben Davis, Peewaukie, Rambo and Golden Russetts. For the vicinity of the bay and river farmers can safely add the Northern Spy, Rhode Island Greening, and Baldwin. For plums we believe that the Lombard can everywhere be depended upon. For pears we think the following will prove satisfactory: Dearborn Seedling, Bartlett, F. Beauty, Dutchess DeAngoulemie, Vic of Wakefield. For cherries the Early Richmond can be depended upon. With reference to plums and cherries we would strongly depricate the planting of suckers or stock that has been grafted upon suckers, as it appears to increase the tendency to black knot, which is becoming alarmingly common, and should be carefully guarded against. After the trees are planted give your orchard the same care you would any other crop from which a liberal return was desired. In addition to trees no orchard should be considered complete without a supply of small fruits, such as strawberries, raspberries, currants, and gooseberries.

Your committee would gladly have devoted some consideration to the special cultivation of the various classes of fruit to secure the best results, but find the time will not permit. Would say that under no circumstances should fruit of any kind be planted unless the intention is to give it plenty of fertilizers and cultivation. All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. GIFFORD, Chairman.

Moved by Bro A Gifford, seconded by Bro. J. Weber, that the report of committee on Horticulture be received adoped and engrossed on the minutes.—Carried.

Moved by Bro. Armstrong, seconded by Bro. Richardson, that Patrons having new grains be requested to bring a sample of such to division meetings for inspection, fall grain in the summer and spring grain in the winter meetings.—Carried.

Sister Doyle presented report of Committee on Temperance.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

To the Worthy Master, Officers and Members of Grey Division Grange.

Your Committee beg to report that a petition has been laid before them by the Womans' Christian Temperance Union, asking the aid of the Grange in assisting them to secure the introduction of Temperance Literature into the public schools.

Your Committee beg to report that they would recommend this Grange to authorize the Master and Secretary to sign the petition to that effect on behalf of this Grange.

Your Committee are of opinion that no ratepayer who is conscientiously opposed to the manufacture, use, or sale of spirituous liquors should be called upon to pay for the administration of justice, caused directly or indirectly by the use of spirituous or malt liquors; and your Committee would recommend that this Grange instruct its delegates of this Division to bring this subject before the Provincial Grange of Ontario and advocate the principles as set forth in a draft of a proposed equitable liquor law and published several years ago, and adopted by the North-Western Temperance Alliance, all of which is respectfully submitted.

Sister Doyle, Bro. E. W. Moore,
Bro. John Best, Sister W. E. Bowes
" G Richardson " M. J. White,
" J. S. Graham.

Moved by Bro. Palmer, Seconded by Bro. Ellis, that the report of Temperance Committee be received, adopted and engrossed on the minutes.—Carried.

Moved by Bro. Armstrong, seconded by Bro. Bowes, that this Grange pay to the caretaker of this hall, $1.50. Carried.

Moved by Bro. Jas. Bowes, seconded by Bro. D. Armstrong, that in the opinion of this Grange the Government should not grant the petition of millers asking a reduction of the duty on wheat, and the petition of the ex. Committee of the Ontario Provincial Grange is hereby endorsed.—Carried.

Moved by H. Reid, seconded by D. Armstrong, that the Grey Division Grange No. 2, having considered the offer of Mr. Donald S. McKinnon, of Hamilton, to furnish the Co-operative Sewing Machines to Granges at greatly reduced prices and to manufacture sewing machines for the Grange, to be sold directly by the manufacturer, are of opinion that Mr. McKinnon should receive the united support of the Grange in carrying out so worthy an object, and that the Secretary be instructed to forward a copy of this resolution to Mr. Donald S. McKinnon.—Carried.

(Signed) R. J. DOYLE,
Master Grey Div. Grange No 2.
JOHN WEBER.
Sec. Grey Div. Grange No. 2.

Moved by A. Gifford, seconded by H. Reid, that whereas since the last meeting of this Grange petitions have been sent to the sub. Granges asking for the adoption of Torrens Land Transfer System have been largely signed and placed in the hands of representatives for presentation to the Legislature, and whereas this Grange approves of the principle embodied in the said petition. Therefore be it resolved that the Secretary be hereby instructed to prepare a memorial to the Government to be signed by himself and the Worthy Master, and the seal of the Grange attached thereto and forwarded to the Hon. the Attorney General of Ontario.—Carried.

Auditors report presented by Bro. Palmer.

Secretaries Financial Report.

RECEIPTS.

Bal. on hand from last year	$ 20.91
Dues from sub Granges...	243.01
Total,.....	$263.92.

EXPENDITURES.

Provincial Grange dues.....	$135.41
To Treasurer.....	74.00
Printing.....	10.80
Blank Reports, postage and Registration.....	11.93
Cash on hand,.....	31.78
Total.....	$263.92.

We have examined the above accounts with vouchers for same and found them correct.

H. REID,
H. PALMER, } Auditors.

Moved by Bro. Palmer, second by Bro. H. Reid, that Auditors Report be received, adopted and engrossed on the minutes.—Carrried.

Report of Committee on stock presented by Bro. Palmer.

To the Worthy Master and Patrons of Grey Division Grange No. 2.

Your Committee on Stock beg to report as follows: We, your Committee on Stock although not advising a specialty in stock raising under all circumstances believe it absolutely necessary to continued successful farming to keep a considerable amount of stock. And believe in order to make stock raising profitable attention must be given to breeding no matter what kind of stock be adopted, and also to insure the best results, liberal feeding from the beginning is indispensible as we have the united testimony of all practical men, especially as regards cattle for beef. If a beast be matured at two years of age there is much more profit than by keeping till a greater age. We also consider it advisable for neighborhoods to co-operate as much as possible by going generally into one kind of stock. In the matter of dairying it is absolutely necessary and neighborhoods that have large quantities of beef or mutton to dispose of at once find their advantage in being able to secure the attentions of a better class of dealers who can afford to give more per head in proportion to the quantity they can secure in a given length of time. All of which is respectfullysubmitted.

H. PALMER, Chairman.

Moved by Bro H Palmer, seconded by Bro D Robertson, that report be received adopted and engrossed on the Minutes.—Carried.

Bro Palmer presented report on Implements.

To the Worthy Master and Patrons of Grey Division Grange No. 2.

Your Committee on Implements beg to make the following rport: We your Committee believe on account of the high price of labor it is absolutely necessary for farmers to avail themselves of all labor saving machines practicable. Binders are now brought out by a number of firms all having their peculiar excellencies, but most of them being serviceble. Although your Committee don't believe it would pay for every small farmer to buy one, it would still be possible for small farmers to avail themselves of their advantages by a number co-operating in procuring one as one would be able to do the work on several farms by a little forethought of their owners. In the matter of draining, stumping and stoning machines your Committee believe some or all of them are necessary in many localities, and as it would pay few or any to buy one or all of these machines, still co-operation would be available for all to take advantage of them All of which is respectfully submitted.

H. PALMER, Chairman.

Moved by Bro H Palmer, seconded by Bro D Robertson, that the report be received, adopted and engrossed on the Minutes.—Carried.

Moved by Bro A Gifford, seconded by Bro Palmer, that we now proceed to elect officers for 1884.—Carried

The following were elected officers for 1884:

Bro. R. J. Doyle, Master.
" J. Yelland, Overseer.
" John Weber, Vandeleur P.O., Sec.
" James Brodie. Treasurer.
" H. Reid, Lecturer.
" H. Palmer, Chaplain.
" D. R. Ellis, Steward.
" A. Bond, Assistant Steward.
" G. Richardson, Gate Keeper.
Sister Doyle, Ceres.
" Moore, Pomona.
" White. Flora.
" Bowes, L. A. Steward.
Auditors, Bros. Reid and Bowes.
Ex. Com., Reid, Rogers and Palmer.

Moved by Bro. James Brodie, seconded by Bro. D. Armstrong, that this Grange adjourn for tea.—Carried.

Grange resumed business at 8 o'clock p.m.

Moved by Bro. J. M. Rogers, seconded by Bro. Jas. Brodie, that the delegates be paid their expenses to this meeting, and that the W. M. appoint a committee to pass the accounts.—Carried.

Moved by Bro D. Armstrong, seconded by Bro G. Richardson, that the Treasurer be paid $10 for his services, and that the Secretary be paid his expenses to attend Executive Committee at Owen Sound.—Carried.

W. M. gave valuable information regarding salt enterprise.

Moved by Bro Jas. Bowes, seconded by Bro A. Gifford, that the Secretary be paid the sum of $40 for his valuable service for 1883.—Carried.

Moved by Bro Jas. Bowes, seconded by Bro M. Denton, that our next meeting be held at St. Vincent Grange.—Lost.

Moved by W. M., seconded by Bro Gifford, that the next meeting be held at Judsonville.—Carried.

Moved by Bro Reid, seconded by Bro. G. Richardson, that our next meeting be held at Chatsworth.—Lost.

Moved by Bro A. Gifford, seconded by Bro Bond, that the Ex. Com. fix the time for holding our next meeting, and that the rule be suspended for that purpose.—Carried.

Moved by Bro Jas. Bowes, seconded by Bro M. Denton, that our next meeting be held on the 4th Tuesday in June.—Lost.

Moved by Bro A. Gifford, seconded by Bro D. Armstrong, that we elect a delegate to represent us in Provincial Grange.—Carried.

The following nominations:—John Weber, George Stewart, H. Palmer, D. R. Ellis, A. Bond, J. M. Rogers. After balloting for the same, Bro. John Weber was elected.

(Continued on ...

IN GOLDEN BONDS.

CHAPTER XV.—CONTINUED.

Presently we heard that the drag had arrived, and there was a little flutter among the ladies at our stall. As for me, I knew that these gentleman, who seemed to be thought of so much consequence, would not want any of the things I had to sell; so I went on quite quietly serving the village-women, with whom I was doing very good business. However, when the gentlemen did lounge in, one of them, who was tall and had a long fair moustache, looked for a long time at the things at my end of the stall and asked the price of a tea-kettle. I thought he was amusing himself; but he bought it and carried it off; and presently two more gentleman came into the marquee and straight up to my corner, and bought, the one a gridiron and the other a soap-dish.

Then the first one came back and asked the price of so many things that he took too much attention from my village customers; and at last I told him he would find some ties and cigar-cases and gentlemen's things further up the stall. But he put up his eye-glass and looked at me gravely, and said he could not afford to spend his money on trumpery—he wanted something useful; and could I oblige him with a toasting fork? Then he was so long making up his mind between a penny one and a sixpenny one that I told him he had better buy them both, and, when he had settled which he liked best, he could give the other away. But he said, "That is an extravagant way of going to work," and took the penny one.

When he had gone away, Laurence came up again, and I told him, laughing, about the funny purchases they had made. But he was not at all amused; he said it was tomfoolery.

They came again, though, and some more of them too; and at last the first one of all returned a third time and said he had been entrusted with a sovereign to lay out to the best advantage for a young couple who were setting up housekeeping. I had done such good business with the village women and these unexpected customers that I had not a sovereign's worth of ironmongery and crockery left; so he bought up all I had, including two pair of pattens and a number of mouse-traps, and made up the money in holland pinafores.

Presently he came in again with Lady Mills, who asked Mrs. Manners if she could spare her another helper; and, looking down the stall, and seeing me with only a few aprons and children's clothes left to sell, she asked if the little lady in white at the end could come; and Mrs. Manners, looking at me gravely and anxiously, as if she was sending me into a lion's den, asked me to go. But the other ladies at our stall did not like it at all.

The other marquee looked like fairy-land. The two stalls had so many beautiful bright things on them, besides a quantity of flowers, and the ladies behind them, in their light dresses, looked so pretty. The village people did not buy much here, but came in shyly in twos and threes, and talked in whispers. But there were all Lady Mills' party, and a lot of Beaconsburgh people, and members of most of the rich families in the neighborhood. And there was a great deal of laughing and talking going on; and this marquee was altogether a much more amusing place than the other.

Lady Mills, who I thought had sweeter manners than any lady I had ever seen, thrust a big basket of flowers into my hands and told me to walk up and down and ask people to buy them. "Ask the gentleman," she whispered, with a pretty smile. But I did not like to do that; so I stood with my basket in a corner until the tall fair man who had bought so many things of me came up and gave me half-a-crown for one little bud: and I thought how silly it had been of him to make such a fuss over the toasting-forks when he was ready to give so much for a flower. And then Laurence found me out, and he walked up and down with me, holding my big basket; and I sold my flowers quickly, and was very happy indeed, for Laurence talked and whispered to me, and looked at me all the time as we moved among the crowd, and never once left me while we were in that tent. He told me everybody said I was the prettiest girl there which of course was nonsense; but it was very nice to hear him say so. When I had sold all the flowers, he whispered—

"Now let us slip out, and we can talk."

So we tucked my basket under one of the stalls, and went out of the tent and away into a lane near the field; and Laurence's face grew very anxious and unhappy as I asked him what was the matter.

"I shall have to go away, Violet," said he looking at me very intently.

"Go away! Why—why?" said I, the tears rushing to my eyes. I had not expected anything so dreadful as that.

"My mother has decided—has been persuaded—that she must go away to the Riviera to escape the wet season we are threatened with and I shall have to go with her."

"But you will come back? You will soon come back, won't you?"

"I don't know. I don't know what may happen while I am away. I don't know what the plots and plans may be of the person who has caused me to be sent away,"

"What do you mean! What person, Laurence? Your mother—your sister?"

Laurence looked at me without answering, in the same searching intent way as before, for a minute or two; then he said—

"Listen, Violet. You are such an innocent little thing that I don't know how to tell you what I must."

I could not help looking rather frightened at this opening; and he stopped a little while to comfort me before he went on—

"Last night, when I had left you and gone home, I found Mr. Rayner just leaving the Hall."

Mr. Rayner! Then he must have gone on there from the Vicarage, and he must have come straight from the Hall when he passed me to go to his room, as I crouched in the shrubbery. Laurence continued—

"I went straight into the study to speak to my father. You know there is more sympathy between him and me than there is between any of the rest of us, so I went straight ahead and told him all about you, and what a sweet little thing you were; and I asked him to find me some occupation in an office, or on a farm or something, at once for I must have a home to take you to before the year was out. And the dear old dad said you had a good sweet face, and he should like to have such a daughter; but what would the mater say? You know my mother rules him with a pretty tight hand; and he may say 'Yes' to anything when her back is turned, but he doesn't say 'No' to her to her face. And my mother has strong prejudices, and wants me to marry some one with money, 'to improve our position in the country.' And I told him I was twenty-four, and old enough to know my own mind, and I didn't care what she wanted. But he begged me not to offend her, and then said, 'She has just been in to say something that may have a bearing on the matter. It seems she has set her heart on going to the Riviera, and insists on your going with her. Now supposing I stock a farm for you while you are away, you can step into it directly you come back—I suppose she won't want to be gone more than a couple of months—and you can try your hand at farming for a year or two, and keep it warm for Jack, who wants to take to it, he says. When you are living away from us, you will be more your own master, and your mother will have to submit to your marrying whom you like. So don't say a word to her or to your sisters—you know they always side with her—till you come back.' I didn't much like this; but I could not say 'No' to my father—he has been so good to me—and I couldn't refuse to go with my mother; nevertheless I was half mad all the same, for I know who has persuaded her to this."

"Do you? Who?"

"Mr. Rayner. Haven't you noticed how he has been steadily getting round my mother for the last few weeks, till he rules her as surely as she rules my father; I've watched him, and tried to put her on her guard; but I am no match for him. I wondered what he was doing it for; now I see."

"But I don't Laurence. Why are you so prejudiced against Mr. Rayner—when he has been so kind to me too? What should he persuade her to go away for?"

Laurence looked at me earnestly,

"To get me away."

"To get you away? Why should he do that?"

Laurence began to speak, but got very red, and stopped.

"He doesn't like me, Violet., and he doesn't want me to have you."

"Oh, indeed you are mistaken, Laurence! He has often praised you."

"Yes; that is his cunning. But I tell you he would stick at nothing to prevent my marrying you; and as long as you are under his roof I shall never know a moment's peace," said he excitedly. "He is a bad man——"

"Oh, Laurence, you shouldn't say that! I know him better than you do, and I know that he is goodness and kindness itself."

"Violet, you are no wiser than a child. How can you see the way he treats his wife, and yet call him good?"

"His wife! Ah, I know all about that, but—I must not tell you. Indeed he is not cruel to her, as you think, Laurence. I know all about it; I do indeed."

"Well, then, since I must say it, what do you think of the way he treats you? Doesn't he show he cares for you more than for her? Can't you see he is making love to you?"

"Laurence!" cried I, aghast. "How dare you say such a thing? What have I done that you should think so ill of me as to think I would let a man who is married make love to me? How could you tell me you loved me, thinking that? I will never speak to you again."

I turned sharply from him, and was back in the field among the people before he could stop me. Tea was being given to the children, and I went to help; but the enjoyment of the day was gone. In a dazed state I was still handing about cake, too miserable and excited to know quite what I was doing, when Lady Mills and Mr. and Mrs. Rayner came up to me. This lady, who had charmed me so much, had in return taken a fancy to me, and had begged Mr. and Mrs. Rayner to let me go home with her to stay until Monday; and they had consented. At another time this invitation would have made me half mad with delight, but now it seemed only to overwhelm me with terror at the thought of going among so many strangers. However, they sent me home to prepare what things I wanted, and told me to make haste.

As I was packing a muslin frock I had never yet worn, and wishing I had something handsomer for the occasion. I suddenly thought of the paste pendant Mr. Rayner had given me. That would look quite dazzling peeping out of the muslin and lace round my throat. So I packed that and a piece of black velvet to wear it on; and I was scarcely ready before Jane came up to say that Lady Mills' carriage was at the gate waiting for me.

But just outside the hall door I met Laurence, with a rose in his hand.

"Violet, Violet, don't go without a word to me! Here—throw away that rose and wear mine."

"I will wear yours," said I; but I can't throw away this one till it is dead. That would be ungrateful,"

"Did Mr. Rayner give it you?"—"Yes."

He snatched out of my hand the rose I had just taken from him, and flung it away.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Christie, for my presumption in thinking you would accept mine after his. Good evening."

He strode off towards the plantation path, and he would not turn round when I called "Laurence, Laurence!" I could not stay to run after him, even if I had been able to overtake him; so, with tears in my eyes, I plunged into the flower bed where his rose had fallen and picked it up, and put Mr. Rayner's gently on the ground instead. It was an ungrateful thing to do; but I must do what Laurence wished, even if he did not know it.

And so with a very heavy heart I ran up the path to the carriage, and started on a visit that was to be strangely eventful to me.

CHAPTER XVI.

There were four ladies already in the carriage which was waiting for me at the gate—Lady Mills herself, with another matronly-looking lady by her side, whose name I already knew, was Mrs. Cunningham; and on the opposite seat were a younger lady with a rather sharp expression, named Mrs Glowes, who was considered very clever, and an unmarried one some years older than I. I made the third on that seat; but there was plenty of room for us all. We drove back first to the High Field, that Lady Mills might tell the rest of the party to make haste, or they would be late for dinner. There were some ladies on the drag, waiting for the gentlemen, who were now amusing themselves selling off by auction some of the things remaining on the stalls, while the grooms were busy packing into the inside of the drag the curious collection of purchases made by the whole party. There was a dog-cart waiting, with a gentleman in it smoking; and standing by the horse's head, also with a cigar in his mouth, was the tall fair gentleman whose face I now seemed to know the best of all. As soon as we drove up, he came to the side of the carriage.

"You are horribly crowded in there; let me take Miss—Miss Christie in the dog-cart."

"And what will you do with Charlie, Tom?"

"I'll put Charlie behind."

"Charlie is getting used to being put behind," said the eldest lady of all, looking at Mrs. Clowes, and laughing.

"Proper place for a husband, Mrs. Cunningham," said the fair gentleman.

I afterwards found that the gentleman they called "Charlie" was Captain Clowes.

"Well, will you come, Miss Christie?"

"No, Tom; Miss Christie is better where she is."

"She couldn't be better off than with me," said he, in a gravely innocent tone.

Everybody laughed.

"Take my part, Mrs Clowes. Don't all jump upon me at once when I want to make an impression. Could Miss Christie be safer than with me?"

Everybody glanced rather mischievously at Mrs. Clowes; and I saw a faint color rise in her cheeks.

"Not with Charley behind," said she; and everybody laughed more than ever.

I was glad Lady Mills would not let me go, though, for I did not care much about the gentleman they called "Tom," and Laurence did not like him either. It was about seven miles from Geldham to Denham Court. The drive seemed to me beautiful, though the country was flat; the rains had kept everything very green, and the sinking sun warmed the landscape with a golden tint. I looked about me and listened to the ladies' talk, but did not say much. Some one said I was silent, and some one else said "Tom" would make me talk; but indeed their conversation was so different from any I had ever heard that I could not have joined in it very well, even if I had known them better. Some of them said things which would have sounded quite wicked if they had said them seriously; but they were all in fun, and they seemed to laugh at everything. They laughed a good deal at Sir Jonas, who was Lady Mills' husband, and she herself imitated the way he would rub his hands and stare up at the ceiling, and say in liltle jerks he "hoped they had—enjoyed themselves—fine day. Stupid things, bazaar—but bring young people together."

"And keep the old ones away," said Mrs. Clowes, in her sharp tones. And everybody laughed very much.

Denham Court was a pretty place built on the side of a slight hill, with the river Doveney running not far from the foot of it. I was shown up into a room that looked out upon green houses and cucumber-frames, and from which I had a view of the river, just a point where it widened out into a broad expanse like a lake. Just then I had not much time to grieve about my quarrel with Laurence and his cruel conduct about the rose; but I did shed a few tears, and wondered whether he would write and ask me to make it up, and thought that I should not be able to enjoy myself at all in this pretty place without him. Then I shook out my muslin frock and put it on, and, when I had fastened the black velvet round my throat, with the beautiful flashing pendant on it, and pinned on one side of the lace edging, a little lower down, the red rose Laurence had flung away and I had meekly picked up again, I looked so much nicer than I had thought it possible for me to look that I could not help feeling that life was not quite a blank, and wishing that Laurence could see me.

I had left my room, and was going along the corridor, when I met a man the sight of whom made me start and turn quite cold. For he looked so much like the mysterious visitor at the Alders whom Mr. Rayner had described as "a gentleman," and whom I had seen two nights before going into the stable with Tom Parkes and Sarah, that I thought it must be he. But this man stood aside with the stolidly respectful manner, not of a gentleman, but of a servant; and I hurried past him, feeling quite shocked by the strength of the resemblance; for of course a friend of Mr. Rayner's however familiarly he might choose to speak to Tom Parkes and Sarah, would not be a manservant at Denham Court.

In the hall I met a maid who showed me into the drawing room, which was empty; so I walked to one of the windows which led into a conservatory, and peeped in. The flowers were so beautiful, the scent so intoxicating, that I crept in step by step with my hands clasped, as if drawn by enchantment; and I had my face close to a large plant with white blossoms like lilies, when I saw peeping through the big fan-shaped leaves of a plant behind it the fair moustache and eye-glass of the gentleman they called "Tom." He was looking intently, not at me, but at the ornament sparkling at my throat. He looked up when I did, and came round to me.

"Nice kept place, isn't it? Sir Jonas is proud of his flowers."

"I never saw any like them. Look at these. Are they lilies?"

"I believe this is called 'Euchaoistis Amazonia;" if not, it is something like that. Shall I cut you some?"

"Oh, don't, don't! It would be such a pity!"

"I suppose you wouldn't condescend to wear them?"

"I shouldn't dare to do so. What would Sir Jonas say if you spoilt his beautiful plants?"

"Sir Jonas wouldn't say anything; he never does. Even the gardener, a much more important person, wouldn't say anything to me. I'm a spoilt child here, Miss Christie; so you had better make friends with me, and I'll get you everything you want."

"Make friends! Why, I'm not your enemy, am I? said I laughing.

"Not at present; but you must be careful. Now I will tell you who is my enemy"—and he stopped and looked at the flower at my throat—"the man who gave you that rose."

I started, and his mouth twitched a little, as if he wanted to smile.

"How do you know it was a man?" I asked, blushing."

"Never mind how I know. I am a magician, and I am not going to give you lessons in the black art for nothing. But look here! I'll tell you how I know, if you will give it to me in exchange for any flower you like to choose in this place."

I shook my head.

"I don't want to exchange it; and I don't care to have lessons in your black art, thank you."

"Now that is your nasty pride, Miss Christie. But I suppose one must not expect humility from a lady who wears such diamonds;" and he glanced again at my pendant, as he had done several times while we talked.

"They are not real diamonds," said I, laughing, and rather pleased for the moment at his mistake. "They are only paste."

He raised his eyebrows.

"Then allow me to congratulate you, Miss Christie, on possessing the very best imitation of the real thing that I have ever seen. I know something of diamonds, and I never was deceived before."

I was looking at him curiously, for he seemed to speak as if he did not quite believe me.

"Look! I will go to the door," said I, for the light was fading, "and then, as you are such a good judge, you will be able to tell."

I walked to the door, and he bent his face down close to mine and examined my pendant carefully. Presently he gave a slight start.

"Am I taking too great a liberty in asking if there are initials on the other side of that?"

"Yes, there are," said I, surprised.

"And will you tell me what they are?"

I hesitated. If this gentleman persisted in thinking the ornament was made of diamonds, he would think it a very strange thing if he found out that it was Mr. Rayner who had given such a costly present to his child's governesss; so I said quietly—

"I would rather not tell you."

"I beg your pardon. Will you forgive my curiosity? I have seen only one ornament set exactly like that before; but it was in real diamonds"—and again he looked at me. "I was wondering if it had been exactly imitated in paste by the jeweller who set it, and if the sham twin-brother had, by some curious coincidence, come into your possession."

"How lovely the real one must be!"

"No lovelier than yours I assure you."

"Then doesn't it seem a pity to spend so much money on real ones?" said I. "What do you think the real one was worth?"

"About fifteen hundred pounds, I believe."

"And you thought I had on an ornament worth fifteen hundred pounds?" said I, laughing heartily. "Oh, if the persen who gave it to me could know, how he would laugh."

He caught at my words.

"He would laugh would he?"

I was annoyed with myself, for I had not ment to let out even the sex of the giver of my pendant. He continued—

"He would be pleased, I should think, to have his paste taken for diamonds."

I did not answer, but only laughed again.

"Have any of the ladies seen it yet, Miss Christie?"

"No; and, for fear they should make the same mistake that you have made, I shall not let them," said I.

And I had raised my hands to take it off when Mrs. Cunningham and another lady came into the conservatory. The elder lady's eyes fell upon the unlucky trinket at once.

"What are you taking that off for, my dear? It is just what you want round the throat."

"Because I have been teased about wearing diamonds, and they are only sham ones; and I don't want to be teased any more," said I, rather tremulously.

"Never mind Tom, my dear. Don't take off your pretty pendant for him. They are certainly very like, though," said she, looking first at them and then into my face. "Here, put them on again and snap your fingers at Tom."

I raised the velvet obediently, and the gentleman called Tom came softly behind me and took the ends from my trembling fingers, and fastened them himself around my throat again. He first pretended that he had not got them straight, though, and held the velvet a little way from me to try to look at the back of the pendant. But I was prepared for that; and I put my hand round it, as if fearing it might fall, and would not let him see the initials.

After this first experience of the sensation caused by my one ornament, I watched rather curiously its effect upon the rest of the party, as some of them strolled into the conservatory, and when I met the others in the drawing-room and in the general gathering at dinner. Every one looked at me, the one stranger, a good deal, of course; but I noticed that, while my pendant attracted the attention of the ladies, the gentlemen looked more at me myself, and were not scandalized by my unlucky ornament. Sir Jonas, who was a kind gray-haired gentleman, and looked nearly old enough to be Lady Mills' father, took me into dinner; and, although he did not talk much, he encouraged me to chatter to him, and tell him all about the school-treat, and tried to make me drink a great deal more wine than I wanted.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Nubar Pasha.

"Nubar," observers a Times correspondent, "is practically an Englishman." What "practically" means I do not know. He is, in fact, an American, who has acquired an enormous fortune by stealing a good deal of the money paid by Englishmen and Frenchmen for Egyptian bonds, and of late years he has lived much in Paris. M. Barrere, the French consul general, had far more to do with his appointment than Sir Evelyn Baring. Barrere married his niece, an American lady given to political intrigue. Nubar and Gambetta were the official witnesses to the marriage.

FOR THE

Kidneys, Liver, and Urinary Organs.

THE BEST BLOOD PURIFIER.

There is only one way by which any disease can be cured, and that is by removing the cause—wherever it may be. The great medical authorities of the day declare that nearly every disease is caused by deranged kidneys or liver. To restore these, therefore, is the only way by which health can be secured. Here is where WARNER'S SAFE CURE has achieved its great reputation. It acts directly upon the kidneys and liver, and by placing them in a healthy condition drives disease and pain from the system. For all Kidney, Liver, and Urinary troubles; for the distressing disorders of women; for Malaria, and physical troubles generally, this great remedy has no equal. Beware of impostors, imitations and concoctions said to be just as good.

For Diabetes ask for WARNER'S SAFE DIABETES CURE.

For sale by all dealers.

H. H. WARNER & CO.,

Toronto, Ont., Rochester, N.Y., London, Eng.

ADVICE TO CONSUMPTIVES.

On the appearance of the first symptoms, as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough, prompt measures of relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs; therefore use the great anti-scrofulous or blood purifier and strength-restorer, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists. For Dr. Pierce's treatise on Consumption send two stamps. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

If eggs keep on getting much higher, price millionaires will wear them as shirt studs.

"SIGH NO MORE, LADIES!" for Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" is a prompt and certain remedy for the painful disorders peculiar to your sex. By all druggists.

Bismarck making war against the American hog will find that the pen is mightier than the sword.

WOMAN AND HER DISEASES is the title of a large illustrated treatise, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., sent to any address for three stamps. It teaches successful self-treatment.

Watertown, Mass. Cashier First National bank, Canada. Jan. 26. Thirty-one thousand dollars.

Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops. The prescription of an old Canadian Practitioner. The best remedy for the Lungs, in large bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

Shakespeare said: "There's good in everything." William had evidently never tackled a railroad-restaurant turnover.

Catarrh—A New Treatment whereby a Permanent Cure is effected in from one to three applications. Particulars and treatise free on receipt of stamp. A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 King-st. West, Toronto, Canada.

Chinese try to smuggle opium into San Francisco by putting it into the soles of their shoes. Shall the heathen be allowed to thus trample on our laws?

Beware of that Cough! it may kill you; cure it at once with Dr. Carson's Pulmonary Cough Drops, it never fails. Large Bottles at 50 cents. For sale everywhere.

A perfect rush of Italian artists with their attendant original dudes is expected in America in a few days. The organ-grinders are to be banished from Paris.

A.P 167

SEED! 1881 Change Grasping Monopolies. Find Prices. JAMES RENNIE.

FOREIGN STAMPS. SEND 3c. FOR circulars and 3 stamps. Agents wanted. Good commission. Circulars free. Address CANADIAN STAMP CO., Montreal, P.Q.

FOR SALE—ONE SET 40 INCH CARDS new; One Crompton Loom, 3 box; Two plain and one drop box stafford, narrow. One wool picker, duster and custom roll card. All in excellent order. Address E. F. EGLESTON, Ancaster, Ont.

DAKOTA — PARTIES DESIRING INFORMATION relating to free homes, with correct maps, circulars, and reliable facts, free of charge Apply to HARRY MERCER, Travelling Emigration Agent C. M. and St. P. railway, Chatham, Ont.

COMMON SENSE STILL TRIUMPHANT. Fiske's "Common sense" Brace. No straps on pants or shoulders. Requires NO BUTTONS on the pants. Sent to any address, by mail, on receipt of price, 75c. FISKE and Co., 277 King St., West, Toronto.

DO NOT ALLOW YOUR CHILDREN to grow up deformed or crippled, but call and examine our appliances for the treatment of Club Feet and Diseases of the Spine, Hips, Knee and Ankle. Remember the world is progressing, and more can be done to-day than at any former period. We also manufacture Artificial Limbs, Trusses, and appliances for the relief and cure of all kinds of deformities. Will show at Toronto, Guelph and London Exhibitions. AUTHORS & COX, 91 Church street, Toronto.

BOON TO FARMERS.

Circulars free, of new and most productive varieties known of Seed Grain. Testimonials of 110 bushels per acre of Boyds Egyptian Oats. Samples of 2 oz., 20 cents. JAS BOYD JR, Cedar Grove, Ont.

THE LILY

is a perfect gem, equa to an imported French Corset; fits like a glove to the figure; very stylish, elegant in appearance, and approved of by the most fastidious. Manufactured only by

THE CROMPTON CORSET CO.

78 YORK STREET, TORONTO.

A FAIR OFFER.

If you will send us with this slip 25c., or 9 three cent stamps, we will mail you, post-paid, a sample package containing 100 useful articles, which are required in every house, with instructions by which you can make from $2 to $4 per day. Suitable for both sexes. This is no humbug, as the samples are well worth the money, and may be returned if not satisfactory. Show this to your friends.

JAS. LEE & CO., Montreal, P. Q.

HE

Urinary Organs.

D PURIFIER.

ch which any disease is by removing the . The great medical ere that nearly every d kidneys or liver. is the only way by ed. Here is where has achieved its ll certify upon the nducting them in a isease and pain from ys, Liver, and Urin- ressing disorders of physical troubles has no equal. Be- ions and concoctions

V. ARNER'S SAFE

ER & CO., , N. Y., London, Eng.

SUMPTIVES.

the first symptoms, of appetite, pallor, d by night-sweats ures of relief should is scrofulous dis- ire use the great ver and strength- olden Medical Dis- iver oil as a nu- a pectoral. For od, and kindred . Sold by drug- treatise on Con- WORLD'S Dis- SOCIATION, Buffalo, g much higher in ear them as shirt

E, LADIES!"

ite Prescription" is medy for the painful r sex. By all drug-against the Ameri- e pen is mightier

ER DISEASES

s rated treatise, by N. Y., sent to st mps. It teaches

Bishier First Nation- n. 26. Thirty-one

Drops. The prescrip- The best remedy for ents. For sale every There's good in al evidently never rant turnover.

reatment whereby a ed in from one to s and treatise A. H. Dixon & t. Toronto, Canada cle opium into Sin into the soles of their ion be allowed to y cure it at once Or pay it never fails. ywhere.

ists with their is expected in The organ-grinders Carts.

A.P 165

ng Monopolies. JAMES RENNIE.

PS. ND 3c. FOR Circulars free. Montreal, P. Q.

INCH CARDS ne, Two plain and with locker, duster- rder. Address

DESIRING IN- ree homes, with cor- s, free of charge. ravelling Emigration Ontario, Ont.

ILL TRIUMPH- ience. No strain No Crosses on the on receipt of price. Wier, Toronto.

UR CHILDREN rippled, but call and ent of Club Feet, s and Ankles. Re- can be done We also manufacture pliances for the relief ases. Will show at Tor- ctions. AUTHORS & productive varieties mounts of 110 bushels per samples of 2 oz., 20 cents. Ont an imported French the figure; very styl- e, and approved of manufactured only by CORSET CO. T. TORONTO.

FARMERS.

LILY

OFFER.

his slip 25c., or 9 three ts, post-paid, a sample ful articles, which are with instructions by 2 to $4 per day. Suit- is no humbug, as the money, and may be re- Show this to your

Montreal, P. Q.

FOR THE LADIES.

Plain Wool Dresses.

For every-day dresses dark cashmere, plaid wools, and flannels or cloth dresses are made in the ways just noted for richer fabrics, and many mothers who object to the use of velvets and satins for children's dresses find these soft wool stuffs nice enough for all occasions. White wool, either of cashmere or nuns' veiling, trimmed with lace, will be the evening or dancing-school dress for girls this winter, but otherwise white dresses will be little used. Even very small girls, of eighteen months or two years, will wear guimpe dresses of dark cashmere, or of pale blue, or rose-color. These guimpe dresses take the place of the Mother Hubbards, and are really low in the neck, with short puffed sleeves worn over a high waist of silesia that is covered at the top in square yoke shape with tucks of the cashmere, and has cashmere sleeves. The loose full dress fastens behind, is square in the neck, and its fullness is held in five box plaits each an inch wide from the neck down nearly to the foot, alike in front and back; some fine tucks and a hem or embroidery are at the foot. These will be generally worn by girls from two to six years. For larger girls are domestic wools like lady's cloth in dahlia, plum, golden brown, navy blue, garnet, or dark green, made up for the entire dress, or else in combination with plaid or checked wool that has a bright color contrasted with the sombre hue of the waist. The plaids are in the skirt only, are cut bias and are in wide box plaits all around, or else they are plaited precisely as boys' kilts are, with a wide plain space in front. The plain cloth dresses and those of flannel are made with loose princesse fronts, not clinging, and with straight effect in front, while the back is curved in slightly by side forms to give a nice shape. Four tucks each an inch wide are down the fronts, turned toward a double row of small buttons the color of the dress, and there is a satin or velvet ribbon sewed in the side seams at the waist line and tied in front. The middle back forms have two double box plaits, and there are arrow-points in two of the seams. The edge of the dress is cut out in leaf points or in square tabs, and the plaiting that represents the skirt is sewed beneath. A velvet collar and cuffs add to the beauty of the cloth dresses, but for flannel some rows of black mohair braid are more suitable trimming.—Harper's Bazar.

About the House

I think the principal strain upon a housekeeper of moderate means is the necessary three meals—the ever recurring demand, "What shall we have for breakfast, and dinner, and tea?" "If one could only cook enough to-day to last a week," I heard a tired matron sigh; and she would try to accomplish that desirable condition of the larder only to find that her bread became mouldy and stale, her pies mouldy, and meat unpresentable before the thire or fourth day. "Cold mutton," said a gentleman, when it came on the table the second time. "It is enough to drive a man to a hotel. As hotels are not considered beneficial for domestic husbands whose homes are within a stone's throw, the wife, whether ill or well, makes the preparation of these her chief care and anxiety.

"He can live without love—what is passion but pining,
But where is the man who can live without dining?"

I often think of this when I call upon a neighbor who does her own work with the assistance of a char-woman, and is a most excellent cook. If I go to visit her on any ordinary occasion and remain to dinner (for I live too far away to return between meals) I find everything perfect. She has a small family, her children are at school, the dinner is choice and well appointed. But if my call happens to be when the husband is from home, we sit down to a cozy cup of tea for our mid-day meal, with bread and butter, and any confection, or cold meat, that is handy. "John is away," she says, "and I don't take the trouble to get dinner; and I know you don't care;" and I don't, but if I did, that sigh of relief would compensate me for the loss.

Of course, there is a great deal of management, and it is every woman's duty who has to do her own work, to save trouble to her self as much as possible. Train up the family to eat fresh fruit for dessert instead of pie, and to be satisfied with plain and simple food. Have a regular written routine as far as possible, and cress out of it by degrees all cooking that requires backach-ing service; and if he loves you and wishes to help you over the rough places of your pathway, I am sure he will be content.

Crime, Tyranny and Small Feet in China.

A large proportion of the throng at the Baptist minister's meeting recently were women assembled to hear Miss Adele Fields, for eighteen years a missionary in or near Swatow, China, speak of her experience among the Chinese women. Miss Fields said the progress of Christianity among the women of China had been slow, but the difficulties encountered at every step were enormous. Infanticide was a terribly common crime among them, and it was very hard to persuade them that it was sinful to kill a girl baby. One women, long after she had become a Christian and a zealous worker for the church, was smitten with the conviction of her guilt in having destroyed her five daughters within an hour of the birth of each. She went to Miss Fields and asked if she might hope to be forgiven.

The bandaging of the feet of Chinese girls to stop their growth was a horrible evil, and one that the missionaries had striven hard, and with some success to check. The practice dated back 900 years. A very brutal man once told Miss Fields that if the women were not thus crippled they would be as strong as the men, and the latter would no longer be able to beat them.

There is very little marital felicity in China. The girl has no voice in the choice of a husband. She was simply carried to her intended father-in-law's house and there introduced to the bridegroom. "What did you think of him when you first saw him?" was a question Miss Fields had often asked, and the reply almost invariably was, "I hated him." Except among the Christians, wife beating was carried on in every family. A friend of Miss Fields who had gained the affections of a Chinese wife, was approached by the latter, who whispered in her ear: "Does your husband often beat you?" "I am sorrow he is dead," said a widow, referring to her deceased husband. "He was very good to me. He seldom beat me." Their standard of happiness was not to be beaten often. None had an idea of what it was not to be beaten at all.—New York Sun.

The Siamese Queen.

Within the palace, amid a number of European chairs profusely gilt and lined with yellow damask, stands a slight girlish figure, in a white muslin jacket and bright green scarf, a short purple skirt, mauve stockings, and black leather shoes with high heels. It requires all the quiet dignity of the queen's attitude and bearing to convince us that this slender little brown fairy can really be a 21 year-old-sovereign and the mother of four children. The hand which she extends to us is so tiny and fragile that I feel as if touching a fine piece of brittle filagree, which may break at any moment. Her dark hair is cut close, parted in the middle and slightly raised on either side. Her face, though not actually pretty, is decidedly pleasing, the only drawback being the inky blackness of her fine and regular teeth, caused by the national custom of chewing betel nut, which is so universal that every Siamese dignitary from the king downward is attended on public occasions by the carrier of his betel-box. Altogether, there is something touching in the idea of this tender and child-like little creature being singled out to share the throne of this troubled and semi-barbarous realm, though it is consolation to learn that the king is far more attentive to her than many European sovereigns are to the royal objects of their conjugal hatred. Through the prince's interpretation we pay our compliments to the queen, who tells us that she has heard of our coming, asks a few questions about our former travels, and seems pleased when we express ourselves much entertained with all that we have seen in Bangkok, after which we bow ourselves out of the royal presence.

A GREAT SHEEP RANGE.

How 80,000 Sheep are Herded and Sheared.

The little schooner Santa Rosa arrived in San Francisco from Santa Barbara a few days go. She comes up to that city twice a year to secure provisions, clothing, lumber, etc., for use on the Santa Rosa Island, being owned by the great sheep raiser, A. P. Moore, who owns the land and the 80,000 sheep that exist upon it. The island is about thirty miles south of Santa Barbara, and is twenty-four miles in length and sixteen in breadth, and contains about 74,000 acres of land, which are admirably adapted to sheep-raising. Last year Moore clipped 1,014 sacks of wool from these sheep, each sack containing an average of 410 pounds of wool, making a total of 415,740 pounds, which he sold at twenty-seven cents a pound bringing him in $112 499 80, or a clear profit of over $80,000. This is said to be a low yield, so it is evident that sheep raising there, when taken into consideration that shearing takes place twice a year, and that a profit is made off the sale of mutton, etc., is very profitable. The island is divided into four quarters by fences running clear across at right angles, and the sheep have not to be herded like those ranging about the foothills.

Four men are employed regularly the year round to keep the ranch in order and to look after the sheep, and during shearing time fifty or more shearers are employed. These men secure forty or fifty days' work, and the average number of sheep sheared a day is about ninety, for which five cents a clip is paid, thus $4.50 a day being made by each man, or something over $200 a day for the season, or over $400 for ninety days out of the year. Although the shearing of ninety sheep a day is the average, a great many will go as high as 110, and one man has been known to shear 125. Of course every man tries to shear as many as he can, and owing to haste frequently the animals are severely cut by the sharp shears. If the wound is serious the sheep immediately has his throat cut, and is turned into mutton and disposed of to the butchers, and the shearer, if he is in the habit of frequently inflicting such wounds, is immediately discharged. In the shearing of these 80 000 sheep a hundred or more are injured to such an extent as to necessitate their being killed, but the wool and meat are of course turned into profit.—San Francisco Call.

Chinese Telegraph.

Owing to the peculiarity of the Chinese characters, each of which represents a word, not a letter, as in our western tongues, the Danish Telegraph Company (the Great Northern) working the new Chinese lines have adopted the following device. There are from five to six thousand characters on words in ordinary Chinese language, and the company have provided a wooden block of type for each of these. On one end of this block the character is cut or stamped out, and on the other end is a number representing the character. The clerk receives a message in numbers, and takes the block of each number transmitted and stamps with the opposite end the proper Chinese character on the message form. Thus a Chinese message sent in figures is translated in Chinese characters again and forwarded to its destination. The sending clerk, of course, requires to know the numerical equivalent of the characters or have them found for him.

Destroying Cannibalism.

"Fifty years ago," said Earl Cairns, at a meeting of the Church Missionary Society, "if a man had been shipwrecked on some of the islands of the Pacific, he would have been killed, cooked, and eaten; whereas, if a man were shipwrecked there now, he would receive Christian hospitality. Miss Gordon Cumming, who is not a missionary, and who did not write for the purpose of crying up missions, declared that, while in 1838 the people of Fejee were cannibals, there are now 400 churches and 1,400 schools there. Lady Brassey writes that anybody who wants to see the last traces of heathenism in Japan had better go soon, as they are rapidly giving place to Christianity."

FOREIGN ECHOES.

Another trial of three members of the commissariat service for offenses committed during the Turkish war is about to begin at St. Petersburg.

Richard C. Hewitt, the well-known Australian cricketer, was recently sentenced to four years penal servitude at Adelaide, Australia, for uttering a forged check.

In England two weeks ago butterflies were numerous, peas were above ground, and fuchias and roses were in leaf, some of the former having made vigorous shoots from four to six inches long.

The fires of London in 1883, compared with those of 1882 show an increase of 218, and, compared with the average of the past ten years, an increase of 446. The number of lives lost by fires during the year was 39. The number of actual fires was 2,144 of which 184 resulted in serious damage, and 1,960 in slight damags.

Much sensation has been caused at Vienna among the lower classes by some alleged supernatural occurrences. In a house in a western suburb the furniture flies about, china is broken, pictures drop from the walls, tables fall, and lamps are broken, all by unseen agency. The police has interfered three times, and as the occurrences have been repeated the family has gone elsewhere, and the lodging has been locked up and sealed.

An elopement is reported to have taken place from Dublin within the last few days. The lady lived in the suburbs, and is the possessor of £300 per annum in her own right. Her father is owner of considerable property, and was in favor of her union with a gentleman of means; but the proposed match did not meet with the daughter's approval, and she disappeared from Dublin in company with the object of her affections, a shop assistant in the city.

The Novoe Vremya, on hearing that the Russian ministry of education has given permission for young Jews in the middle-class schools to have a holiday on the Hebrew Sabbath, publishes another of those unreasonable and narrow-minded outbursts that have of late stamped this journal as the chief anti-Semitic organ in Russia. The most curious part of it is that several of the best writers on this newspaper are Jews, who are often the writers of its most violent anti-Jewish articles.

A determined case of suicide by drowning recently occurred off the Semaphore, Australia. A passenger on the steamer "Tiverton," named James Byrns, said "good-bye" to some fellow-passengers, and jumped overboard near the bell-buoy. A life-buoy was thrown to his assistance, but he made no effort to gain it. A boat was lowered and pulled to the spot where the man was last seen, but the body had disappeared. His luggage was overhauled, and as no money was found it is thought the rash act may have been committed owing to pecuniary difficulties.

Another family tragedy has taken place in the Margarethen suburb of Vienna, a shoemaker having killed his son in a fit of passion. It appears that the father is an honest man, and generally respected in the neighborhood, while the son was most dissipated and universally disliked, owing to his brutality and roughness. Recently he returned home late at night and demanded money, which his father refused. He then became so violent that his father, in a moment of excitement, seized a stick and struck his son, injuring him so severely that he had to be transported to the hospital, where he died.

A St. Petersbug telegram to the London Times says:—There is no truth whatever in the sensational reports, published abroad, that Gen. Grosser, prefect of St. Petersburg, has been shot at; that the assassins of Col. Soudaikin have been captured; that Col. Soudaikin's murder has caused any great alarm in St. Petersburg,—for society here has become quite apathetic in regard to such Nihilistic feats,—or that the emperor was about to appoint a commission for the elaboration of certain reforms, when the reappearance of the revolutionists on the scene caused him to change his mind. There is surely sensation enough in the real state of affairs in Russia without any exercise of the imagination.

There seems to be some more tolerable land in Australia, since Mr. Forrest reports, as the result of his exploration of the Kimberly district, north-west Australia, that there is abundance of timber, coarse grass and water, and that it is well adapted for cattle and horses, but not for sheep, acclimated merinoes excepted. The timber—eucalpytus, cajeput, baobab, palms and ferns—is scarcely fit for building. The natural yield of grass on the extensive plains near the Meda could not be be less than three tons to the acre. The Lennard rises in the Leopold ranges, and about thirty miles from the sea forms a delta, the northern branch of which is called the Meda, and the southern the May.

On taking his seat in the Mansion House, two weeks ago, tha Lord Mayor of London read a letter from Sir Moses Montefiore inclosing a check for £99 as a contribution to the funds of the poor-box. The letter is as follows: "Very many, I fear, are the cases of destitution which, as chief magistrate of the City of London, come before your Lordship, and knowing the kindly feeling which you ever evinced toward those who are in need, I am induced to trouble you with the inclosed check for £99 which I beg you will do me the favor to add to the funds of the Mansion House poor-box. Permit me to avail myself of this opportunity to render to your Lordship my heartfelt felicitations and good wishes for the year 1884, and to express the hope that health, happiness, and every blessing may attend your esteemed lady mayoress and your family."

It appears from statistics just issued that divorce is slightly on the increase in Scotland. Last year the decrees granted in the court of session showed an increase of eight over the previous year. During the ten years subsequent to 1864 the average number of decrees granted was 35. In the five years ending 1879 there was an average of 59. During the year of 1880 no fewer than 81 decrees were granted; but there was a decrease in the two following years, the number being 78 for 1881, and 63 in 1882. The number for 1883 was 71. In 1881 decrees were granted in 36 cases in which the wife was pursuer. In 1882 the female pursuers were 34 and the husbands 29. In 1883 decrees were given in 34 cases at the instance of the wife, and in 37 at the instance of the husband. In the cases brought against hesbands 24 were on the ground of unfaithfulness, and 10 for desertion; while in the cases raised by husbands, 32 were in respect of infidelity, and 5 on the ground of desertion.

A St. Petersburg telegram to the London Telegram says:—The ceremony of blessing the waters of the ice-bound Neva—a custom which has its counterpart on the feast of the Epiphany in every other town and village of the orthodox provinces—was performed with the usual accompaniments—namely, the reception of the diplomatic body, a sumptuous lunch spread in the Arabian and concert halls of the palace, a parade of select detachments of the guards within the palace, and a salute of 101 guns The figure of Count Herbert Von Bismarck, the German chancellor's oldest son, in light blue dragoon uniform, was the chief object of attraction among the diplomatists. Information reaches us from Archangel that the blessing of the water in that port was not offered in the open air, in the usual way, in consequence of the extreme cold, and that the crowd assembled round the pavilion on the ice, called in Russian, "the Jordon," and vented their rage and disappointment on this wooden structure. It is the first time that Russian clergy have been known to refuse to perform this ceremony on account of the cold.

Queer Freaks of Watches.

Decidedly, watches are very queer things. They possess some unaccountable peculiarities. For instance, some time about the beginning of last summer, when there had been a succession of the fine displays of the aurora borealis, it was estimated that in a single night in the city of New York, the mainspring of not less than three thousand watches broke. This estimate is based on actual inquiries. Fine, sensitive watches are particularly liable to be affected by electrical atmospheric disturbances. During the months of June, July, and August, when these phenomena are most frequent, there are more mainsprings broken than during all the remaining months of the year. They break in a variety of ways, sometimes snapping into as many as twenty-five pieces.

It is a fact that since the introduction of the electric light has become so general, a large number of watches, some of them very fine ones, have become magnetized. While in this condition they are useless as time-keepers. This defect used to be considered incurable, and because of it, thousands of watches have been thrown away, after much money had been spent on them in vain attempts to persuade them to keep good time. Among the methods resorted to were washing the parts in garlic juice, refinishing and passing them through the fire. But all these devices were entire failures, or only in part effective.

A man who had a fine and valuable movement, which kept excellent time, transferred it from a silver case to a second-hand gold one. Immediately it lost all its characteristics of steadiness and reliability, and, in fact, did not keep time at all. Then replaced in the silver case it kept good time again. The owner, a jeweller, puzzled himself and experimented in vain to discover the cause of this strange partiality on the part of his watch for silver. At length he sent it to an expert. He discovered that the lifting spring of the gold case had become magnetized. On substituting another for it, the watch kept as good time in the gold case as in the silver case.

There are occasions when it is a very serious matter to have your watch magnetized. Captain W. R. Smith commands the steamer Deleware, which plies between New York and New London. Before putting to sea on a recent voyage he was invited to inspect an electro dynamo machine, and examined its parts closely. Soon after getting on board the steamer, he noticed that the compass became strangely affected when he approached it. Whether he stood on the right or the left, or immediately in front of the compass, the needle would invariably point to him. The compass was worse than useless when he came near it. It was dangerous, and might wreck the ship.

This phenomenon alarmed and puzzled Captain Smith not a little. At length he recalled his visit to the dynamo machine, and the true solution of the eccentric behavior of the needle flashed upon him. His watch had become magnetized. When he removed it the needle assumed its constancy to the polar star. On his return to New York he took the watch to Mathey Brothers & Mathey, who demagnetized it for him. This firm has invented some machine, the mechanism of which is a secret, by which they can demagnetize a maguetized watch speedily and effectually.

Watches frequently get magnetized in iron mines or machine shops, where they are incautiously brought near swiftly running belts.

It is a well-known fact among horologists, that no watch will keep the same time with two people. The cause has not yet been definitely ascertained, but it would seem that in some mysterious way a watch is affected by the temperament of the wearer. The mere physical difference in gait and movement between different people is not sufficient to account for all the variations that have been observed.

Complaining.

There is much complaining that it is not pronounced in character, and that seems to have a somewhat fair show of reason in it. There are real trials and disappointments, vexations and failures, which often appear to us to warrant open complaint or silent depression, and there are seasons when gloom seems to overwhelm us like a thick cloud, which all our powers fail to penetrate or chase away. One idea however that is common to all complaints, whether small or great, reasonable or unreasonable, is that something or some one else is to blame for our unhappiness. If we could be convinced that we ourselves were the chief authors of it; that it sprang not from outward events or from the conduct of others so much as from something within our own breasts; that it was, in fact, chiefly our own fault, and not other people's, and was what we brought to the world instead of what the world brought to us, our complaints would have but little force, and would soon give place to self-examination and self-discipline.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. R. B. Hayes is attaining new distinction as the owner of the best poultry yards west of the Alleghenies.

The health of Mr. Spurgeon, the noted Baptist preacher, is restored. He resumed his pulpit ministrations.

The health of Jefferson Davis is extremely poor this winter. His eyes give him much trouble and his step is feeble.

It is asserted that, notwithstanding all the grand new telescopes, the palm for size still belongs to Lord Rosse's in Ireland.

Oscar Wilde will not much longer caper around with a sunflower in his button hole. A married man generally has something more on his mind.

Among the stained glass windows that have arrived from France for St. John's Church in the city of Washington, is one ordered by President Arthur as a memorial to his deceased wife.

Although she had eight competitors among the most distinguished of the place, Dr. Annie Clarke was chosen for an attending physician of the Birmingham Children's Hospital, England.

It is a subject of common remark at Cambridge, it is said, that Prince Albert Victor, eldest son of the Prince of Wales, though a very nice young man and very popular with the students, is very dull.

The Right Rev. Dr. Sullivan, Bishop of Algoma, was present at the consecration of Canon Barry in Westminister Abbey, as the representative of the Anglican Church. Dr. Sullivan was amongst the prelates who assembled to receive the Primate.

Eight years ago a poor New York mechanic invented the glove fastener—a piece of cord about six inches long and a dozen little hooks or buttons. He now owns a block of houses that would sell for $500,000.

Careful estimates place the value of William H. Vanderbilt's outfit, when he drives, at $150,000. This includes horses, sleigh, harness, diamonds, and the sealskin garments with which he envelops his whole frame.

The Right Hon. Sir John Barnard Byles, member of the British Privy Council, and an ex-Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, has died in the 33rd year of his age. He was the author of several works of high repute on legal questions. In 1857 he was made Queen's Sergeant, and on his elevation to the bench he received the honor of knighthood.

Ten Prime Ministers were educated at Eiton, to which Lord Coleridge recently compared Yale—Sir Robert Walpole, the Earl of Chatham, Lord North, Lord Grenville, C. J. Fox, George Canning, Earl Grey, Viscount Melbourne, the Earl of Derby and Mr. Gladstone—six Liberal and four Tories. Lesser Ministers have been contributed in about equal numbers.

The Earl of Huntingdon, who, with his son, Lord Hastings, is visiting this country in the interest of the Florida Land Purchase Company, of which he is chairman, though third on the roll of English Earls, his peerage dating from 1529, may be regarded as an Irishman, as he was born in that country, and his mother was of an old Irish family. He married, too, the only child and heiress of a celebrated Irish sportsman, the Hon. Jack Westenra, of Sharavogue, King's county, of which he was M. P. for many years. He was owner of a noted Irish race horse, Freney, and an accomplished performer on the Irish pipes.

The great heiress of England at present is Miss Hamilton, whose mother, Lady Nesbest Hamilton, has just died. The large estates in Haddingtonshire and Lincolnshire, the annual income of which is estimated at $620,000, have been for some years, owing to the lady's incapacity, under the management of the Scottish courts, and an immense sum has accrued. Miss Hamilton's father, whose original name was Dundas, had the agreeable fortune to adopt no fewer than three additional family names—Christopher, Nisbett, and finally Hamilton—each change bringing a large increase of fortune. Her mother, just deceased, had been first married to the Earl of Elgin, father of the Earl of Canadian memory, and of Sir Frederick Bruce, Minister at Washington, but was divorced from him.

Eating Lemons.

A good deal has been said through the papers about the healthfulness of lemons. The latest advice is now to use them so they do the most good as follows:—Most people know the benefit of lemonade before breakfast, but few people know that it is more than doubled by taking another at night also. The way to get the better of a bilious system without blue pills or quinine is to take the juice of one, two or three lemons, as appetite craves, in as much water as makes it pleasant to drink without sugar, before going to bed. In the morning, on rising, at least half an hour before breakfast, take the juice of one lemon in a goblet of water. This will clean the system of humor and bile with efficiency, without any of the weakening effects of calomel or congress water. People should not irritate the stomach by eating lemons clear; the powerful acid of the juice, which is always corrosive, invariably produces inflammation after awhile, but properly diluted so that it does not burn or draw the throat, it does its medical work without harm, and when the stomach is clear of food has abundant opportunity to work over the system thoroughly, says a medical authority.

The Lowah Clawses.

I confess it is late in the day for a story about Oscar Wilde, but I think this is worth telling nevertheless:

Some time after his arrival here Oscar said to a friend one day:

"I received such a chawming present this mawning."

The friend naturally inquired what it was.

"Upon my arrival here," Oscar proceeded to explain, "I received a request from a tradesman for the honor of measuring me for a pair of boots. I granted him permission and he departed. Thinking it probably a vulgah trick of the fellah's to obtain a free sight of me I supposed that was the last of it, but this mawning I actually received from him a beautiful pair of boots—quite the fit too."

Then after a pause, quoth Oscar:

"This appreciation from the lowah clawses is very pleasant."

The Standard.

MARKDALE FEB. 21, 1884.

NOTICE.

Subscribers for the STANDARD who have in the past called at this office for their paper, together with those in the village whose papers have heretofore been delivered, are hereby notified that after this week (21st Feb.) all such papers will be delivered in the post office. This will doubtless be more satisfactory both to publisher and subscribers, as the latter have to call at the P. O. for other mail matter and can therefore kill the two birds with one stone.

MENTAL SCIENCE.

We had thought that intelligent people had ceased to object to phrenology on the ground that it teaches that the emotions and affections are manifested through the instrumentality of the brain, and do not originate in the heart. Yet we find this old objection still revived occasionally, and sometimes it comes from a source that we had thought to be better informed. This objection is so weak and futile that a majority of writers on phrenology and physiology do not think it worth their notice, for they know very well that really educated men never commit themselves to such an absurdity as to oppose phrenology for any such reason. We have before us a rather voluminus defence of phrenology published in Leipsig Germany, by a talented and learned author, Dr. Gustavus Scheve, in which we find that he does not once mention this point; another from that elegant and classical writer, George Combe, we have carefully examined with the same result. The opponents of these men, as also all medical men and all others who know enough of anatomy and physiology to have a right to say anything authoritatively of the structure of the human system and its functions, know very well that the heart has a different duty to perform, that it is the centre of the arterial or venous system, the principal blood vessel, a muscular structure admirably adapted to its office as the principal instrument in the circulation of the blood.

The heart has two vital properties irritability and contractility; by the first of which the stimulus of the blood is perceived, and by the second of which the muscular fibres of the heart shorten themselves, or in other words, contract and close the cavity. It may in fact be considered as two hearts, a right and a left. By the right heart the blood is sent to the lungs, by the left to the arteries. Each of these consists of two muscular sacs; the venous, or dark blood, is poured into the first sac of the right heart, called the auricle, this, when filled, closes like a sensitive plant and forces the blood into the right sac, called the ventricle, the ventricle then contracts and forces the blood through tubes into the lungs. Here the blood is vivified, and rushes into the left auricle or first cavity, of the left heart, which contracts and forces it into the second cavity or the left ventricle, this contracts and forces it into the great canal for the conveyance of arterial blood, whence it is distributed to all parts of the body, supplying nourishment. It returns through other tubes called veins, is received into the right auricle and passes through the same route as before. The body contains, it is supposed, from twenty-five to twenty-eight pounds of blood, and it is estimated that two ounces pass through the heart at every beat, according to which all the blood must pass through the heart every three minutes. This is the only function of the heart, which is principally a muscular organ. Perhaps the wiseacres who think it is an organ of mental action, believe that muscle is better adapted to be the instrument for the exercise of affections and emotions of the mind, than nervous structures such as we find in the brain. They quote scripture in support of their views, not knowing that in scripture and in poetic language the word heart is used when the inner nature, the disposition, the actuating principle in the individual is meant without any reference whatever to any particular organic structure located in any part of body or brain.

To teach the sciences of anatony and physiology was not in the mission of the sacred writers. If they were inspired to know and teach religious truth that does not imply that they should be inspired as well to know and teach that the earth revolves on its axis, that the sun is some ninety five millions of miles distant from the earth, or to be acquainted with the physiological fact of the circulation of the blood. of which the world never heard until the time of Dr. Harvey, about the year 1616 of the Christian era. Besides if we were to suppose that these men were favored above others of their time with knowledge such as we find since developed slowly by scientific research, what should we think of their wisdom were they in teaching religious truth and reformation to begin by making war on the opinions and notions of the people in matters not in any way affecting religious belief. "That the religious and moral objections against the phrenological theory are utterly futile, I have from the first been fully convinced" says the learned and pious Richard Whately D. D., Archbishop of Dublin.

We hope soon to find at least those who assume to become teachers of the people in sacred things, cease to bring such futile objections against scientific truth, for in so doing they work only against the great cause they advocate, that of religious and moral elevation; they furnish arguments to the skeptically inclined and certainly a persistence in this course would justify the language of the French cavillist, when he spoke of certain men as "ignorant" teachers of this weak world.

The Franchise Question.

Both in the Dominion Parliament and the Provincial Legislature the franchise question will be considered this year. There can be no doubt but the Governments in each case, will propose a considerable extension of the franchise. The race appears to be which will outdo the other in liberties in this respect. Sir John evidently appears to be a good deal ahead in one particular at least,—in extending the franchise to women of two classes. Mr. Mowat's only chance now is, if he intends to establish his reputation as the leader of the most liberal party, will be to include women of all classes, so long as they possess the necessary property qualifications. Sir John proposes to place the franchies in the hands of widows and unmarried women possessing a certain amount of property, but witholds it from other wives and mothers, even though possessed of a large amount. There is an anomaly in the proposal which the opposition will be sure to make the most capital out of, but will the opposition propose to remove the anomaly by urging the extension to all classes? Time will tell.—Truth

Capt. Webb's widow is now compelled to maintain herself and her family by doing service as a book-keeper in a Boston book store. There is nothing discreditable to her in thus earning an honest living by honest industry; it is certainly much more creditable than passing round the hat amoung her husband's old friends and admirers, but it certainly is not very creditable to the man himself that he should so recklessly jeopardise his own life when he knew the position his wife and family would be placed in, should his venture fail, as it did. Men who have given hostages to fortune are certainly not warranted in being reckless about health or personal safety. The unfortunate Captain was no doubt a very plucky man, and many admired him because of his pluck, but now that his wife is a widow the admiration of the world is of precious little value.—Truth.

Fewer Representatives.

Representation by population was the great cry a few years ago. It was to be the great panacea for all the ills political in Canada, so said the reform press. We have gotten it, and to-day both the Dominion and Ontario houses are crowded with representatives, so much so that there are rumors to the effect that both houses will have to be enlarged to accommodate the members. Now instead of enlarging the buildings, we suggest that the number of representatives be reduced, thus saving, not only the expense of enlarging, but the sessional allowance, etc., now foolishly spent in upholding that bugbear, rep. by pop. We believe that one-half the number of representatives would do the work in a shorter time, and much better than is now done. Two representatives from each county, one for either house, is all that is needed, and would be a saving of thousands of dollars annually. That is what we want.—Truth.

District Dashes.

Mr. H. Durie, of Owen Sound, who has been connected with the T. G. & B. nine years has resigned his position as station agent and gone into the costom broking and general insurance and vessel agency business.

Owen Sound is to be the terminus of the C. P. R. steamers, and the Government propose granting an additional sum of from $20,000 to $30,000 for harbor improvements.

The new Presbyterian church at Flesherton is to be opened the 16th March.

Meaford is having an additional Government grant of $5.000 for Harbor improvements.

Prof. Morgan and wife, of Durham, were injured by a runaway team of horses at Mt. Forest recently. Mrs. Morgan received a wound on the head.

Mr. James Brown, of Mt. Forest, took wrong medicene and was nearly poisoned last week.

The police Trustees of Dundalk hold regular meetings and report proceedings in their village paper, Prefectly right.

DR. LOW'S WORM SYRUP has removed tape worm from 15 to 30 feet in length. It also destroys all kinds of worm.

Dundalk.

From our own correspondent.

Dr. McWilliams intends to build a place of busines during the coming summer.

Mr. Teeple, blacksmith, has given up business, having sold out to a party by the name of McArthur from Euphrasia.

Mrs. C. H. Jewell, arrived on Tuesday evening, and was met at the station by her friends. The newly married couple have our best wishes for their future prosperity.

Fair day was Tuesday last, the attendance was larger than for some months. Quite a number of cattle changed hands at very fair prices.

Our township council do not intend to hold so many meetings as were held last year. Injustice of the late County Valuators to the poorer townships is felt very much in Proton.

Business has been brisk during the past week. Large quantities of grain have been brought in from the township of Osprey and Melanchton. The station yard is well filled up, hunderds of cords of wood, piles of ties, paving timber etc. having been brought in. The failure of the crops, owing to the frost, drives the farmers to the necessity of using the products of the forest, to raise the needful.

(The above was mailed in Dundalk on Wednesday the 15th, and reached us the following Saturday. Ed.)

There is some talk of a foundry being established here soon.

The station yard has been a busy scene during the past week. Trains have been busy taking away products of Proton and Melancthon forests, such as ties, wood, etc.

The former deputy-reeve of Melancthon feels sore at his defeat, and threatens to have the new survey seperated from the old, and a new township formed of the latter.

The residents in the flourishing settlement of Shrigley and Badgeros are highly pleased with the promptitude with which Dr. Sproule attended to the matter of the change of mail route. As you are aware Mr. Editor, under the present arrangements, it takes nearly a week for a letter to reach either of the above places, though only a few miles distant. To reach Shrigley, 7 miles away a commnnication requires to travel, about 40 miles and be 4 days on the road. But through the aid of our M. P. we are now to have triweekly mail from Dundalk via Shrigely and Badgeros to Maple Valley.

Williamsford.

From our own correspondent.

Mr. J. L. Patterson has sold his blacksmith business to Mr. G. W. Dunbar, who now wields the hammer.

Mr. John Deever, is to leave tomorrow, Thursday, for Havana, Ill., to look after a legacy left him.

Rev. J. Hart is going to Illinois, on a visit, this week, he will return in about ten days.

Mr. N. Handley, has purchased the property formerly occupied by W. Vogan, as an hotel, from R. Givens. Mr. Handley has opened a flour and feed store.

Miss Blades will open a millinery and mantle making establishment the 1st March. She appears to be well posted in her business and will likely do well.

Quite a number of park and other lots have recently changed hands, and prospects are brightening for Williamsford. Our station yard is now full, it is not near large enough to accomodate the place. There is a bad hole in it which if filled would greatly improve and enlarge the yard. We hope the R'y. Company will make the neccessary improvement.

A fire broke out in the hardware store and dwelling of S. Watson about noon on Wednesday. The fire originated in a partition from a defective chimney and was soon got under control and subdued, considerable damage was done to the house as also the furniture, and to add to the misfortune $12 was stolen from a bureau drawer which was carried out. The person who did it would do anything.

A GOOD COSMETIC.

The best cosmetics are good soap and water to obtain purity of the skin; while for boils, blotches, obstinate humors and impurities of the blood, Burdock Blood Bitters is the best of all purifiers.

KRAM'S FLUID LIGHTNING

Cures Toothache and Neuralgia quick as flash, relieves any pain instantly, the cheapest and quickest application known. Why suffer with toothache, Neuralgia, Headache, Rheumatism, Lumbago, Sciatica, Sore throat ar acute pains of any kind when you can go to Hill Bros. general store and get a perfect and instantaneous cure for twentyfive cents. Ask for Kram's Fluid Lightning.

MARRIAGES.

Notices of Births, Marriages, and Deaths, twenty five cents.

ROWLSTON—FANNING.—At the residence of the brides parents, on Wednesday the 20th inst., by Rev. J. Hart, Mr. Joseph Rowlston, to Miss M. J. Fanning, all of Holland.

ALLISON—RADLEY—By the Rev. C. Shaw, on the 13th inst., Mr. Joseph Allison, to Miss Annie E. Radley, all of Osprey.

Market Reports.

MARKDALE.

Fall Wheat	$0 60	to	$1 00
Spring Wheat	0 40	to	1 00
Barley	42	to	60
Peas	60	to	66
Oat	25	to	27
Butter	15	to	17
Eggs	22	to	00
Potatoes	30	to	00
Hay	7 00	to	0 00
Pork	7 00	to	7 50
Flour	4 75	to	5 00

Credit Sale Register.

FRIDAY FEB. 22.—Mr. Thomas Mann, on lot 1, con. 8, Euphrasia, town line Artemesia 2½ miles from Markdale, large quantity of Stock, Implements, choice seed oats (Egyption,) Hay &c., &c. Terms, sums over $5 ten months credit on approved joint notes. Sale to commence at one o'clock. Geo. Noble, Auctioneer.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12.—At lot 1, con. 4, Sydenham. Extensive sale of bred horses, cattle, sheep, also implements &c., sale to commence at 12 o'clock noon. Terms, 12 months credit on approved paper on sums over $5. Mr. Geo. Inglis, proprietor; W. J. Shepherdson, auctioneer.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5th.—At Mr. Joseph Henderson's, Lot North half of 5, con. 7, Euphrasia, commencing at 12 o'clock, Farm Stock, Implements, Grain, &c. Terms, 10 months on approved paper. W. J. Shepherdson, auctioneer.

MERIT PROVEN.

Dollar upon dollar is frequently spent on the faith of recommendations for articles entirely worthless. Not so with McGregor's Speedy Cure; you are not asked to purchase it until its merits are proven. Call at Hill Bro's and get a free trial bottle, and if not convinced it will cure you of the worst forms of Dyspepsia, Complaint, etc., no matter of how long standing, it costs you nothing. Sold in 50c and $1 bottles. See testimonials from persons in your own town. F. & M.

CRUELLY MURDERED.

In the Province of Ontario every year thousands are being slowly murdered by taking unsuitable, untried nostrums for such complaints as Costiveness, Indigestion Liver Complaint, Kidney Troubles, etc., who might easily regain lost strength and energy by using McGregor's Speedy Cure. To convince them that such is the case we will give them a free trial bottle at Hill Bro's Price 50c. and $1. See testimonials from persons in your own town. F. & M.

ON MONDAY foernoon a powder explosion took place in Hobbs, Osburne & Hobbs hardwere establishment, London, completely destroying this fine establishment and killing three men, Origin accidental; loss $50,000, the report was heard 11 miles distant.

All over the land are going into ecstasy over Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. There unlocked for recovery by the timely use of this great life Saving remedy, causes them to go nearly wild in its praise. It is guaranteed to positively cure Severe Caught, Colds, Asthma, Hay Fever, Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Loss of Voice, or any affection of the Throat and Lungs. Trial bottles free at A. Turner, & Co's Drug Store. Large size $1.00 2

A BLESSING TO ALL MANKIND.

In these times when our Newspapers are flooded with patent medicine advertisements, it is gratifying to know what to procure that will certainly cure you. If you are billious, Blood out of order, Liver inactive or generally debilitated, there is nothing in the world that will cure as so quickly as Electric Bitters. They are a blessing to all mankind, and can be had for only fifty cents a bottle at A. Turner & Co's Drug Store. 2

SEEDS SEEDS — IMPORTED —

FIELD AND GARDEN SEEDS

The place to buy your Seeds is at

PARKER'S,

Drugstore, - DURHAM.

GEORGE WILSON,

Wholesale and Retail

BUTCHER!

BEEF, PORK OR MUTTON SUPPLIED. from a single pound to a whole carcass, at the lowest market prices.

FISH & FOWL IN THEIR SEASON

Farmers having Fat Cattle, Sheep, or Pigs to dispose of will do well to call.

Markdale, Oct. 25th, 1881

SUFFOLK BOAR.

One of the finest animals ever brought into this district for service at Lot 6. Con 7, Euphrasia. Age, year past. Terms, $1 at time of service.

171-80 D. R. ELLIS.

FOR SALE.

Dwelling House, shop, Suitable for grocery store, or other business, with dwelling above, and stable on the lot, on mill street, corner lot, good business site, apply to S. DAMUDE, Flesherton, or C. W. RUTLEDGE, Markdale.

LOGS WANTED.

The undersigned is prepared to buy all the Baswood, Burch Ash, Hemlock and Maple saw logs perfectly sound, to be delivered at Davis' Mill, Meaford Road, for which the highest price will be given in cash. Parties bringing custom logs can get them cut either on shares or by the thousand, satisfaction guaranteed as the proprietor has engaged a first class sawyer.

EDWARD DAVIS,
Proprietor.

FARMS FOR SALE.

Lot 117, con. 1 west, T. & S. Road, Artemesia, containing 50 acres, 40 of of which are clearsd and under ultivation. Lot S part 15, con. 12. Holland 63 acres, 40 cleared; all necessary buildings thereon. Lot 13, con. 13, Glenelg. 100 acres all bush. For terms and particulars apply to

J. G. IRVING,
Markdale.

Oct.16.1883. 16

FARM FOR SALE.

Lot 118, con. 1, West T. & S. R., Artemesia, containing 50 acres, more or less, all cleared and under cultivation. A good bank barn, and log dwelling house on the premises, also a thriving young orchard just commencing to bear, situated about 2½ miles from the thriving village of Markdale. For Terms and particulars apply at this office or to

JOHN HAZARD,
Flesherton Station.

FARM FOR SALE.

To sell or rent Lot S ½ 14, Con. 9, Euphrasia, 8 miles from Markdale and 3 from Rocklyn, containing 100 acres, 70 acres cleared and in good state of cultivation, fit to run reaper and mower, and balance hardwood bush with sufficient cedar for fencing. Well watered with never failing spring only 10 rods from barn. Has a young orchard, house. barn and stable. There is a new steam saw mill on next farm to it. Clear deed can be given. For further particulars apply on the premises to

SAMUEL WRIGHT.
Rocklyn P.O.

CLYDESDALE STALLION FOR SALE.

That splendid Clydesdale Stallion "Scottish Champion," from imported stock, and the property of Wm. Shepherdson, will be sold cheap. The horse stands 16½ hands high, is 5 years old, jet black in color and a sure foal getter. Any one wishing to get a bargain should take advantage of this offer. Stock taken in part payment. Also a few pure bred Cotswold Rams and a fine Berkshire Boar for sale. Address to the undersigned, Lot 23, Con. 11.

W. J. SHEPHERDSON.
Blantyre P.O.

Franco - Chinese War.

Nothwithstanding the desolating war now raging in China it will not increase the price of Teas at the

Belfast House, Markdale

Having imported prior to the opening of hostilities, a sufficient quantity to supply 20,000 MEN for a period of 12 months. In other departments of the Grocery trade the BELFAST HOUSE has KILLED BY THOUSAND those who assume to transact business by purchasing of small dealers exorbitant rates of interest on long credit. Our import of

FRESH MEATS, SALMON, LOBSTERS, SARDINES, HAMS, BACON, ASSORTED PICKELS and every articles in the grocery trade

LIQUORS

Of the best brands and quality. Wine for Sacramental purposes warranted pure. Brandies direct from the manufacturer and all other kinds of liquors.

Coffees, Teas and Tobaccoes cannot fail to give satisfaction. Oranges, Lemons, &c. Family Flour supplied at Lowest Rates.

THOS. McNEA.

BELFAST HOUSE, - MARKDALE

Feb. 6th, 1884.

PATENTS

MUNN & CO., of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, continue to act as Solicitors for Patents, Caveats, Trade Marks, Copyrights, for the United States, Canada, England, France, Germany, etc. Hand Book about Patents sent free. Thirty-seven years' experience. Patents obtained through MUNN & CO. are noticed in the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN, the largest, best, and most widely circulated scientific paper. $3.20 a year. Weekly. Splendid engravings and interesting information. Specimen copy of the Scientific American sent free. Address MUNN & CO., SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN Office, 261 Broadway, New York.

A. HILL,

Fashionable Tailor,

OVER MACFARLAND'S STORE.

A PERFECT FIT GUARANTEED.

ANDARD TIME.

fine assortment of watches
hs, Rings, Chains, Setts, ons, Specks, Charms, &c. an extra line of Electro-
ed goods for table use.
Watch and clock repairing onally, attended to and anteed. Honest charges.

.A. BROWN,

The Jeweller,

ARKDALE.

al and Other Items.

s in these columns intended to benefit idual or Society will be charged ten line for the first insertion and five line each subsequent insertion.

Thornbury Venture was part- newsy last week.

STRONG's steam turning factory working full blast.

R. TORRY, of Glenelg is prepair- erect a brick dwelling house.

JOHN CONNOR wants 10,000 saw his new saw mill on the 11th Spirasia.

PAY 10 cents per pound for when you can get four lbs at re's for 25 cents.

EL WILSON, Providence Bay, ulin will please accept thanks for STANDARD '84.

RY HAMILTON has moved to the of Markdale. He had 18 of stuff including a quantity n.

AL bargains at Trimble & s this week, previous to stock

LANDERKIN, M.P., will please our thanks for a list of the mem- the House of Commons for 1884, ound in a beautiful cover.

beautifull spring like weather early part of this week was ly changed on Tuesday night her cold dip with high winds.

E who have not yet renewed bscription for '84 will probably waiting another month and pay a 25 cents. The terms are when paid in advance, or within months, otherwise $1:25 per

FIRST class axe handles go to y's shop, Elizabeth-st., opposit k, Markdale. You can bring u timber and have them made , or you can get them ready t the shop. Sign of the Big ndle. 179-85

CKLEN'S ARNICA SALVE.

t Salve in the world for cuts, bruises ers, salt rheum, fever sores, tetter, hands, chilblains, corns, and all ptions, and positively cures piles or required. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction, or money refunded. cents per box. For Sale by A. Co.

E.—That notorious uncolored Tea has this week been reduced cts to 25cts in 1 or 10 lbs lots ble & Wrights.

Row stock of picture frames. gs, just opened at Hamiltons allery Markdale. A splended d assortment to choose from, and shapes made to order moderate prices.

SE COMMISSIONERS.—The Ont. contains the appointment of owing gentlemen Commis- nder the provisions of "The Act of 1876," in and for the of South Grey :—Archibald n, James Brown, Thomas

NDAY School teacher once "What bird is large enough off a man?" Nobody knew; ittle girl suggested "a lark." n she explained :—"Mamma wouldn't be home till Mon- use he had gone off on a who have promised wood ut for their subscription will deliver it before the 15th dont be deceived, expecting ring it in summer time or we will allow you a higher an if delivered now, if you ing the wood now, send in It will be very acceptable.

MR. LAUDER IS DEAD.

SPECIAL TO THE STANDARD.—A. W. Lauder, M. P. P. for East Grey, died at his residence, Parkdale, to-day (Wednesday,) at 12-10 p. m., from conjestion of the kidneys.

MR. R. S. RAE, is this week attending the annual meeting of the Grand lodge of A. O. U. W., at Guelph.

THE Government at Ottawa have been sustained in their additional grant to the C.P.R. by 70 of a majority.

MRS. W. M. TOTTEN, of Big Bay, wife of the Reeve of Keppel, and Miss Boyd of the same place, are visiting friends in Markdale.

S. WARDELL has been drilling through the rock in a well on Kough's lot corner of Mark and Queen St's Markdale, and struck a heavy stream of water at 30 feet in the rock.

WE ARE pleased to learn that Mr. McPherson is meeting with the success, in the sail of that splended book "Mother Home and Heaven," which it deserves.

TRIMBLE & WRIGHT'S great clearing sale is now going on, and will continue until their entire stock is sold out as we are giving up the general business.

A LONG TIME.

Fifteen years of suffering from the tortures of Dyspepsia is indeed a long time. A. Burns, blacksmith, of Cobourg, was thus afflicted, but it only required four bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters to completely cure him.

DR. CAMPBELL has just concluded a very successful course of lectures here on Phrenology, hygeine &c., and next visits Flesherton, where it appears he has been well and favorably known in former years. He has given good satisfaction here and we wish him success.

WILL have in stock next week, some fine Waltham movement, key and stem wind, at lower rates than previously offered. As the factory have made some reduction in price I desire to have patrons profited thereby. Get my prices ere purchasing and save a few dollars. W. A. Brown, Jeweller, Markdale.

IN DIXIE'S LAND.

J. Kennedy, dealer in drugs, &c., Dixie, Ont., recommends Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam to his customers, it having cured his wife of a bad cough. it is the safest and surest remedy for all Throat and Lung troubles, such as Asthma, Bronchitis, Whoopine Cough and most pectoral complaints

WHY is $1. paid for a newspaper subscription often considered a greater investment than the same amount for anything else? Because you are reminded of it every time you take up the paper to learn the news of the district and the world throughout the year, while the dollar spent for drinks or such like is gone and you have nothing for it, to remind you of the cost.

C. O. O. F.—The Holland Centre lodge Canadian Order of Oddfellows gave their first entertainment in the Town Hall, in that place, on Wednesday evenieg last. There was a good attendance, the hall being well filled, full justice was done in supplying the wants of the inner man, after which an interesting and varied program was entered upon and carried through successfully by the following : Mr. C. Price, Chairman ; Mr. Calcutt, instrumental music on banjo ; C. W. Rutledge, recitation ; Mr. Kempt, song ; Mr. Hare, recitation ; Messrs. Bush, Calcutt and Kempt, instrumental trio; Mr. Spears, speech ; Mr. Bush, song; Mr. Kempt, song. Owing to a disappointment in foreign talent expected, the committee were somewhat short taken, yet they did remarkably and an enjoyable time was spent.

THE young peoples' social which took place in the Methodist Church on Friday evening was well attended and in every way a success. Refreshments were served up in usual good quality and abundance after which Mr. Mark Armstrong took the chair and called the meeting to order, when a very interesting program was entered on and carried through very creditably. The following took part, Miss Mary Large, Ed. Rutledge, Miss Christoe, Miss Stewart, J. W. Whitby, J. Richards, Miss Millie Lyons, Mr. & Miss Henry, ably assisted by the choir. This social was gotten up and managed throughout by the young people whose effort, we are glad to say was crowned with success, and reflects credit on our junior friends. Proceeds $17.75.

PIMPLES AND BLOTCHES.

Call at Hill Bros. general store and get a package of McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. It is composed of Vaseline, Carbolic Acid and Cerate, and has never failed to remove Pimples, Blotches, Ulcerated Sores Rough Skin. It cures when all others fail. Try it.

Legal.

Frost & Frost,

BARRISTERS, AND ATTORNEYS-AT Law, Solicitors in Chancery, Conveyancers, &c., Owen Sound, have resumed at Flesherton, Office open every Thursday, as heretofore.

ALFRED FROST, J. W. FROST, LL. B.
County Crown Attorney. 1

J. MASSON,

BARRISTER, MASTER AND DEP. REG in Chancery, Notary Public, Conveyancer, &c.

A NUMBER OF FARMS FOR SALE.

OFFICES—Owen Sound, in Vicker's Block Poulett St.; Branch office in Markdale, over McFarland's Store, on Friday and Saturday every week. 57-ly

Creasor & Morrison,

BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, CONVEYANCES, &c. &c.

OFFICES in Owen Sound, Dufferin Block, over W. F. Wolf's Store and in

MARKDALE;

Over W. J. McFarland's Store on Thursday and Fridsy of each week.

Funds to lend on reasonable terms.

JOHN CREASOR, Q. C. DUNCAN MORISON
Markdale, March 15, 1882. 79-ly

Alexander Brown.

ISSUER of Marriage Licenses, Fire and Life Insurance Agent. Commissioner in B. R. &c. Conveyancer and Licensed Auctioneer for the County of Grey. Farmers, Merchants, and Land Sales, Punctually attended to and charges made very moderate.
Priceville, Sept. 17. 1880. 1-y

Wm. Brown,

ISSUER OF MARRIAGE LICENSES, &c Commissioner in B. R. &c.

Conveyancing in all its branches promptly attended to and carefully executed.

N. B.—Money to Lend on Real Estate security.

W. G. RICHARDS,

BUILDER, CONTRACTOR, & ARCHITECT.—Residence on Mill Street, Markdale.

Markdale, Jan. 24th, 1883. 124ly

William McLeod,

BOOT AND SHOEMAKER,

MARKDALE.

Orders promptly attended to. Sewed work a specialty. All our work guaranteed. Terms strictly cash. Remember the stand, opposite Revere hotel.

159-3m

SAMUEL WARDELL,

WELL DIGGER AND DRILLER. ALL orders promptly attended to. Residence—Snider's Hill Owen Sound 122-35

Hotels.

REVERE HOTEL,

MARKDALE.

JOHN CHERRY,

PROPRIETOR.

THIS popular Hotel has changed hands and the above will cater to the wants of the public. Good stabling and attentive hostlers. The best brands of liquor and cigars, good meals and comfortable rooms, large commercial room. Barber shop in connection. 130-ly.

CHATSWORTH HOUSE

(LATE MORROW HOUSE,)

CHATSWORTH, Ont.

TUCK & McLEOD PROPRIETORS.

The best brand of liquors and cigars always in stock. Good meals and comfortable rooms guaranteed. Good stabling and attentive hostler. 114

COMMERCIAL HOTEL.

PRICEVILLE, Ont.

Large and commodious Sample Rooms Good Bed Rooms, &c. The Bar and larde well supplied with the best the market affords ; good Stabling and attentive Hostler's
THOS. ATKINSON, Proprietor

MARKDALE HOUSE,

MARKDALE, - - ONT.

MRS. RUTLEDGE, PROPRIETOR.

Medical.

THOS. CARTER M. D.

Physician Surgeon, &c.

Residence MARKDALE HOUSE.
MARKDALE.

B. Ghent, M.D., M.R.C.P. & S., O.
Physician and Surgeon, Priceville,
Graduate of University. Vict. College.
" " New York, and
Hon. Graduate, of the same,
" " Ayleth Medical Institute.
" " Opthalmic Hospital, N.Y.
Member Coll. Physicians & Surgeons, O. 104

J.P. MARSHALL, L.D.S.

DENTIST,

GRADUATE OF TORONTO SCHOOL of Dentistry, will be at Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, on the 1st and third Wednesday of each month and also at Munshaw's Hotel. Flesherton; the day following the third Wednesday in each month for the practice of his profession.
January 9th, 1883. 122-74.

DON'T READ THIS.

Having purchased the Grocery and Liquor business of A. McIntyre, Markdale, I have added a fresh and complete stock of

Groceries AND Provisions

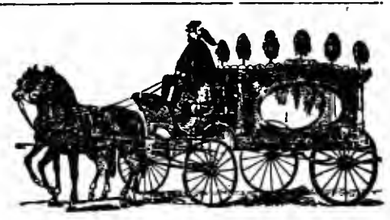
Consisting of fine Teas, Sugar, Tobacco, Dried Apples, Cheese, Flour, Fruit, Confectionery, Mince Meat, Jams, Jelly, Pickles, canned Fruit, Glassware, Crockery, &c., &c.

Also the best brand of

LIQUOR AND CIGARS

always in stock.

A share of your patronage respectfully solicited.



NORMAN McINTYRE
Proprietor.

W. P. PATERSON,
Manager.

HAGYARD'S YELLOW OIL CURES RHEUMATISM

FREEMAN'S WORM POWDERS.

Are pleasant to take. Contain their own Purgative. Is a safe, sure, and effectual destroyer of worms in Children or Adults.

ROBT. ASKIN,

MARKDALE,

Has opened out a First-Class

UNDERTKING ESTABLISHMENT,

And therefore has supplied a want long felt,

COFFINS,
CASKETS,
SHROUDS,
and all

FUNERAL FURNISHINGS

supplied on the shortes notice.

A Splendid Hearse

for hire at moderate rates.

—All kinds of—

PICTURE FRAMING

Done on short notice.

ROBT. ASKIN.

JOSEPH GIBSON

CONTRACTOR.

Contracts taken for all kinds of

BRICK AND STONE WORK,

Plain Ornamental Plastering.

Calsomining in all Shades and Colors.

Charges moderate and satisfaction guaranteed. Orders left at the STANDARD office will receive prompt attention.

Markdale, Feb. 6th, 1883. 126-ly.

THE KEY TO HEALTH.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS

Unlocks all the clogged avenues of the Bowels, Kidneys and Liver, carrying off gradually without weakening the system, all the impurities and foul humors of the secretions ; at the same time Correcting Acidity of the Stomach, curing Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Headaches, Dizziness, Heartburn, Constipation, Dryness of the Skin, Dropsy, Dimness of Vision, Jaundice, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, Fluttering of the Heart, Nervousness and General Debility ; all these and many other similar Complaints yield to the happy influence of BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

Sample Bottles 10c ; Regular size $1.

For sale by all dealers.

T. MILBURN & CO., Proprietors, Toronto

JOHN MONTGOMERY

BAKERY.

Begs to tender his thanks to the inhabitants of Markdale and surrounding country for their patronage for the past eleven years and to intimate to them that he is now prepared to supply the public with

FRUIT, POUND & PLUMB CAKES

either plain or iced and ornamented and a large variety of other CAKES always on hand.

Also Biscuits of every description from the best manufacturer in Ontario.

A Large and Varied Assortment of Confectionery and

CHRISTMAS : TOYS,

BRIDES' CAKES

supplied on the shortest notice and got up in the best style that can be this side of Toronto.

Apples, Oranges & a variety of Nuts always on hand.

Tea meetings, Socials and other parties supplied on the shortest notice and on the most reasonable terms.

169-90.

HAMILTON'S

PHOTOGRAPH GALLERY

MARKDALE.

OVER THE STANDARD OFFICE.

Fine work executed in all the latest sizes and shapes, fully equal to city work. Special attention given to

FRAMING

A large stock of moulding to choose from.

Call and leave your measure for a picture.

Jas. Hamilton.

2,000,000

SUBSCRIBERS

